M.DCC.XXX.

TO ALL

TRUE ENGLISHMEN,

Preſent Happy Conſtitution.

IT is about twenty Years ſince I was deſir'd by ſome Perſons of Eminence, who were very much in your Favour, to undertake the Defence of your Happy Conſtitution againſt the furious Attacks of a Powerful Faction, who, in the latter part of Queen Anne's Reign, by falſe Doctrine, falſe Argument, by wicked Arts, and deluſive Pretences, ſubverted the beſt Adminiſtration you ever liv'd under; and would have ſubverted your Religion, Liberty and Laws, had not the good Providence of God interpos'd for your Deliverance, as it had done wonderfully at the Revolution.

In the Proſecution of this Work, I was obliged to look back into the Practices of the Enemies to the Conſtitution of ENGLAND, ever ſince the Death of Queen Elizabeth; for till then Engliſhmen had no Enemies but Foreigners and Papiſts, and I found all thoſe Practices to be ſo many Warnings to us to guard againſt them for the future.

Scarce was that glorious Princeſs cold in her Grave before there broke out a flaming Zeal for what thoſe Men were then pleas'd to call the Church; by which they, in truth, meant no other than the Tyranny of the High-Commiſſion Court, and the inferior Spiritual Courts under their Protection.

To make this paſs with the Prince, their Doctors every where preach'd up the boundleſs Prerogative of the Crown, the ſlaviſh Obedience of the Subject, and the Bleſſings of Arbitrary Power and Servitude; which in a limited Proteſtant Government, could not but create ill Blood, as ill Blood always creates Diſtempers, which become obſtinate by Continuance, and are not to be cur'd, but by Remedies equally violent and dangerous.

What then? Muſt the Patient die for fear the Phyſick ſhould gripe him? Your Fathers, when the Diſeaſe was likely to become mortal, never fail'd of applying a Cure, and never fail'd of Succeſs; tho' the Editors of Lord Clarendon's Hiſtory, and Archdeacon Echard, repreſent them as ſo many Empiricks, who knew neither the Diſeaſe nor the Cure, but adminiſter'd the Poiſon, inſtead of the Antidote.

The Acceptance which ſome of my former Endeavours for your Service found with you, in the MEDLEY, The SECRET HISTORY OF EUROPE, and other Treatiſes, too numerous to be inſerted, inſpir'd me with Ambition to produce ſomething more worthy that Honour.

I could think of nothing ſo neceſſary, as to diſcover the Errors in the Hiſtory of the Rebellion, and Mr. Echard's Hiſtory; and having ſo done, to ſet the Facts in the four Stuarts Reigns in a true light, that the glorious Principles and Practices of your Anceſtors, might no longer lie under the Reproach of REBELLION; but be Examples of a brave and neceſſary Defence of their Religion and Liberty to all Generations.

——nec dicier Arma Senatus

It is true, we are ſo happy as to live under a Government, which has the ſame Foundation with our Liberty, and the joint Security of both is inſeparable. But we ſee every day, eſpecially of late, many wild and inſolent Attempts made to blanch the Characters of all the Princes, who in the the laſt Century attempted to deſtroy our Religion, Rights, and Privileges, to ſet them off as ſo many Patres Patriæ, and to blacken Your Patriots and Champions, as ſo many Villains and Scoundrels; the Terms that are made uſe of, with a traitorous Intent to promote the Intereſt of a pretended Heir to thoſe Princes, who doubtleſs inherits their Love to your Religion and Liberty, with the Advantage of having never liv'd in any Country, but where Tyranny and Popery were triumphant; and who conſequently can have no Conception, that Heaven has any other Happineſs in ſtore for either Prince or People.

You have given me reaſon to believe, that the Critical Hiſtories of England, and the Compariſon of Clarendon with Whitlock, diſcover'd the Errors of the above-mention'd Hiſtorians to your Satisfaction; and to encreaſe it, I have farther examin'd them en paſſant in this Work: after which, I hope neither the preſent Age nor Poſterity will be in danger of being impos'd upon and corrupted by them, as it is very plain they would have been, had the Counſels and Actions of your Anceſtors been handed down to them with ſo much Miſrepreſentation, Partiality and Malice, without Remark and Animadverſion. If the Miſchief intended by theſe Writers is prevented, I leave to you to judge of the Importance of the Service, and I can no more doubt of your doing it Juſtice, than of your Affection and Attachment to the Welfare of your Country.

Some ill Men have maliciouſly aſpers'd the Author, as if he had been hired by a Party to write, what otherwiſe he had no Concern about: But the Baſeneſs of this Aſperſion will appear in almoſt every Page of his Writings, where the Reader will ſoon ſee the Heart ſpeaks with a Sincerity and Ardor, that are not to be bought and ſold; and as to the Hire, were it decent for him to explain himſelf, he could prove the Falſhood of that Charge to a degree not eaſily to be imagin'd or believ'd.

When you have gone thro' the following Reigns, and are come to their Diſſolution, in the Acceſſion of King William and Queen Mary to the Throne, will you not look back upon them, as Voyagers do on the boiſterous Ocean, after having eſcap'd Shipwreck, when they ſtand ſafe on the ſolid Shore? Will you not dread the like Tempeſt, and promiſe yourſelves never again to tempt the Dangers of the Deep? Will you not be deaf to all Perſuaſion and Flattery, and reſolve, as far as in you lies, to enjoy the Calm and Safety you live in, with contented and grateful Minds? Will you not then abhor thoſe reſtleſs mutinous Spirits, who endeavour to diſturb that Calm, and endanger that Safety? Will you not perceive their pernicious Views, however they diſguiſe them? Will you not diſtinguiſh Names from Things, Truth from Falſhood, and adhere firmly to the Leſſons left you by your Fathers, for the Preſervation of the Proteſtant Religion and Liberty, which ſo many of them ſeal'd with their Blood? If I could flatter myſelf that the remembring theſe things here, would have ſo good an Effect, how ſhould I rejoice in the Succeſs of my Labours?

But be that as it will, I ſhall never ceaſe to pray that your Happineſs in the preſent Conſtitution, Eccleſiaſtical and Civil, may be tranſmitted to your Sons, and their Sons Sons, to the End of Time.

I am,

Your moſt Humble,

Moſt Faithful,

PRE-

PREFACE.

IT were to be wish'd that the Divisions among us in England, and the Mischiefs they have occasion'd since the Death of Queen Elizabeth, were bury'd in everlasting Oblivion; that all Names and Notions of Distinction among Englishmen might be no more heard of, and that a Spirit of Peace and Union might spread over the whole Nation.

It is the Duty and Interest of all Men to contribute to this Blessing to the utmost of their power, and why this is not done, is very easy to be observ'd.

Particular Parties support themselves by particular Views, and no Persuasion or Argument can reconcile them to the General Good, if those Views are lost by it, and the Happiness it would procure is to be in common. A mean and ruinous Way of Thinking, unworthy a wise and generous People! But it has prevail'd so long, and taken so deep root, that it is not to be eradicated by Precept; and if Example has any Prevalency, some benefit may accrue by turning over the following History, where the fatal Effects of Division and Discord will appear in almost every Page, as well before and after the Civil Wars, as during those miserable Times of Devastation and Slaughter.

Yet what Hope is there of succeeding in any Attempt to unite Men's Minds, their divided Opinions and Interests, and reduce them to one sound Principle, that of Liberty Spiritual and Temporal, as long as there is so little Disposition in them to look on things with an impartial Eye, and to judge without Prejudice and Passion?

Perhaps I may myself be thought guilty of that Passion and Prejudice, and to be mis-led by the same Weakness I condemn in others. It is therefore necessary to consider what is, or ought to be understood by the Word Party; and I wish what I have to say on that Subject were worth the Reader's Attention: for if my Conceptions are right, as I must think they are, till I am bettter inform'd, I cannot justly be deem'd a Party-man, or pass under that Censure with Men of Reason and Candour, however Appearances may at first sight make against me.

If we have any such thing as a Constitution, and that Constitution is the Bulwark of our Ecclesiastical and Civil Liberties, Rights and Properties, whatever is said or done in defence of it, is for the Advantage of the Commonwealth, of every one in particular, and of all in general; which sure is not a Party, no one Man, nor no Set of Men, having any more Concern in it than another, but in proportion to the Interest he or they have in the Whole.

If this Constitution is founded in the Protestant Religion, a due and impartial Execution of the Laws, a just and equal Administration of Affairs; then all contrary Courses are contrary to the Constitution, and he who adheres to it, cannot be said to be of a Party, because the Constitution is the Whole; and those only are Party-Men, who divide from it, by setting up an arbitrary, partial, unequal, illegal Government, and an Interest separate from that of the Publick. It follows then, that those who stand up in defence of this happy Constitution, when any Breaches are attempted to be made in it, are no more Party-Men, than those who shou'd, in case of Invasion, stand up in defence of their Country; especially since domestick Enemies are more dangerous than foreign, and Treason more to be fear'd than Power.

It will appear plain enough by the History of the Stuartine Kings, that they were continually making Breaches in this Constitution, and endeavouring utterly to subvert it: Those therefore that adher'd to them in such unlawful Endeavours, of course separated from the general Interest, and supported a particular mistaken one, in opposi- tion to it, which render'd them the worſt ſort of Party-Men; while their Opponents were the only true Sons of the Common-wealth, good Proteſtants, and good Engliſhmen, adhering to their Birthright, their Religion, Liberties and Properties, which thoſe Princes, and their Adherents, in ſo many Inſtances invaded and violated.

The Facts in the following Hiſtory being the Proofs of this Aſſertion, the Queſtion is brought into a narrow Compaſs; for if the Facts are true, the Argument deduced from them muſt be ſo too; upon which Iſſue I leave it.

I expect that ſome Perſons of too much Indifference in matters of ſo very great Importance, will be apt to cenſure this Undertaking, as if it was a reviving antient Animoſities, and giving a new Ferment to that ill Blood, which occaſion'd the Diſtempers in the laſt Century: But theſe Perſons do not conſider what great pains have lately been, and are now every day taken to vilify the Principles and Practices of thoſe brave and wiſe Men, the Hampdens, the Hollis's, the Pyms, the Seldens, the Onſlows, the Whitlocks, &c. who diſtinguiſh'd themſelves in Counſel and in Arms, by their Zeal for the Reform'd Religion, the Rights and Privileges of the People.

When the Nation was pretty well reconcil'd to the Principles of the Revolution in Queen Anne's Reign, and the Doctrine of Paſſive-Obedience and Non-Reſiſtance was become ſo much a Jeſt, that it was hardly nam'd, but in Ridicule; when the Cauſe it was to ſupport, was ſinking ſo faſt, that in a little time we were like to hear no more of Hereditary, Unalienable, Indefeaſible, Unalterable Right to the Crown, which are all only ſo many Names for the Pretender: Then did the Party, Enemies to the Revolution, and the Governments founded upon it, bring forth the Hiſtory of the Rebellion, under the great Name of the Earl of Clarendon; and the Prefacer told her Majeſty, That the induſtrious Propagation of the REBELLIOUS Principles of the laſt Age, (Pray obſerve he very decently calls the Houſe of Lords and Houſe of Commons REBELS) Render'd it neceſſary that ſhe ſhould have an eye towards them. The Tenour of the Hiſtory is to juſtify all the arbitrary illegal Acts of Government, which produc'd the Civil War, and to repreſent the Parliament that oppos'd them, as a Company of hot-headed factious Enthuſiaſts. But I deſire it may be remember'd, the Editors of it were not charg'd with reviving Animoſities: And coming out under the Protection of what they were pleas'd to call the Church, no body durſt queſtion the Truth of it, till it had done ſo much Miſchief, that the Malady became almoſt incurable. At laſt the Critical Hiſtories made way for this, as the beſt Cure that could be thought of; and as ſuch it is offer'd to the Publick, for whoſe Service it was written, and in whoſe favourable Acceptance the Author hopes to find a Reward for all the Labour, Trouble and Expence he has been at, under many Diſcouragements and Hindrances. The latter indeed ſeem'd affected, and that by Perſons, who, the world would think, ſhould rather have forwarded than hinder'd ſo uſeful and laudable an Undertaking.

But theſe Matters are too particular and perſonal, to concern the Reader any farther in them.

I have, in more than one Place of this Hiſtory, mention'd the great reaſon there is to ſuſpect that the Hiſtory of the Rebellion, as it was publiſh'd at Oxford, was not entirely the Work of the Lord Clarendon, who did indeed write a Hiſtory of thoſe Times, and I doubt not a very good one; wherein as I have been, I believe, well inform'd, the Characters of the Kings, whoſe Reigns are here written, were very different from what they appear in the Oxford Hiſtory, and its Copy, Mr. Echard's. I ſpeak this by Hearſay; but Hearſay from a Perſon ſuperior to all Suſpicion, and too illuſtrious to be named without leave.

I alſo humbly refer it to the Deciſion of another very honourable Perſon, whether there is not, to his Knowledge, ſuch a Hiſtory in Manuſcript ſtill extant; and to a Reverend Doctor now living, whether he did not ſee the Oxford Copy, by which the Book was printed, alter'd, and interpolated; and the Proofs of the printed Copy, and even the Reviſes of thoſe Proofs alter'd and interpolated, while it was at the Preſs.

To which I muſt add, that there is now in cuſtody of a Gentleman of Diſtinction, both for Merit and Quality, a Hiſtory of the Rebellion of the firſt Folio Edition, ſcor'd in many Places by Mr. Edmund Smith of Chriſt-Church, Oxon, Author of that excellent Tragedy, Phædra and Hippolitus, who himſelf alter'd the Manuſcript Hiſtory; and added, what he has there mark'd, as he confeſs'd with ſome of his laſt Words before his Death. Theſe Alterations, written with his own Hand, and to be ſeen by any one that knows it, may be publiſh'd on another occaſion, with a farther Account of this Diſcovery. In the mean time, for the Satisfaction of the Publick, I inſert a Letter entire, which I receiv'd ſince the laſt Paragraph was written.

To

SIR,

ACcidentally looking on ſome of the Sheets of your Hiſtory of England, during the Reigns of the Royal Houſe of Stuart, at the Bookſellers, I find that you mention the Hiſtory of Lord Clarendon; wherein you juſtly queſtion the Genuineneſs of that Book: In order to put that matter out of Doubt, I here ſend you the following Account.

Mr. Edmund Smith, a Man very well known in the Learned World, came down to make me a Viſit at  about June, 1710, where he continu'd till he died, about ſix Weeks after.

As our Converſation chiefly ran upon Learning and Hiſtory, you may eaſily think that Clarendon's was not forgotten. Upon mentioning that Book, he frankly told me, "That there had been a fine Hiſtory written by Lord Clarendon, but what was "publiſh'd under his Name was only Patch-Work, and might as properly be call'd "the Hiſtory of Al..... Small..... and Atterbury, for to his knowledge 'twas alter'd; "nay, that he himſelf was employ'd by them to interpolate and alter the Original."

He then ask'd me, Whether I had the Book by me? if I had, he would convince me of the Truth of his Aſſertion by the very printed Copy. I immediately brought him the Folio Edition, and the firſt thing he turn'd to, was the Character of Mr. Hampden, where is that Expreſſion of, "He had a Head to contrive, a Heart to conceive, "and a Hand to execute any Villany." He then declar'd it was foiſted in by thoſe Reverends.

SIR,

I have only to add this, That he not only underlin'd this Paſſage as a Forgery, but gave, during the ſhort time he liv'd with me, the ſame Remark to ſome Hundreds more.

I am, Sir, &c.

Tho' this Information differs a little from my former, mention'd in the Body of the Book, yet it, in the main, confirms it, and comes from a Perſon of ſo much Honour and Worth, as leaves not the leaſt room to doubt it. The Original of this Letter is and ſhall be forthcoming. It has been read by all my Bookſellers, and the Gentleman who wrote it, is ready to atteſt the Truth of it.

And now what a Farce was play'd in the Hiſtory of the Rebellion, its Dedication, and Prefaces, all which were publiſh'd, as was thought, ſeaſonably, to prevent Queen Anne's putting her Affairs into the Hands of thoſe Miniſters, who rais'd the Reputation of England higher than ever it had been perhaps in any preceding Reign, Plantagenet or Tudor? And what was their Reward? What the fatal and ſhameful Effects of ſhifting thoſe Hands, and putting in their Places—— our Enemies will tell the reſt with pleaſure, as ſaid the Right Reverend Father Biſhop Fleetwood?

It was the Hiſtory of the Rebellion, and the Preachments that were made upon it, which in a great meaſure rais'd that wicked Spirit which threw the Kingdom into Diſtraction and Confuſion in Sacheverell's Time, robb'd it of all the Fruits of ſo many glorious Victories, and reduced it to a State of Diſhonour and Contempt, like that of the Reigns we have been writing.

Was it not then neceſſary for Poſterity, The preſent Age, 'tis to be hoped, are made wiſer by ſuch late dear-bought Experience; I ſay, for Poſterity to have an Antidote for the Poiſon? An Antidote is in this Hiſtory, which we truſt will deſcend to them, and anſwer its End, notwithſtanding the Impediments it has met with.——Of which no more at preſent.

I am far from thinking that no part of the Hiſtory of the Rebellion was written by Lord Clarendon. The Fruitfulneſs of the Imagination, the Beauty and Variety of Colouring, and above all, the Redundancy of Expreſſion, are Proofs to the contrary, tho' they are all well imitated in the Alterations: but it appears at firſt ſight, that thoſe who directed thoſe Alterations were zealous for the Laudæan Hierarchy, the Honours and Emoluments thereunto belonging, which no Lay-Hand would have labour'd ſo much.

Beſides, it is not poſſible for an Hiſtorian, who treats of a Conteſt in a Nation divided into two Parties, to range all the Heroes on one ſide, and all the Poltrons on the other, with any regard to Fact and Truth. Heat here prevail'd over

Judgment, and who are the Hot Men when their Intereſts and Prerogatives are in queſtion, I leave to every one to judge.

The Wonder is very much magnify'd by the Editors ranging all thoſe Heroes on the ſide of Tyranny, the worſt Cauſe that can be, and all the Poltrons on that of Liberty, which is the beſt.

Lucan, in his Poetical Hiſtory, written almoſt 1700 Years ago, and 1200 Miles off, deſcribes the Parties engag'd in our unhappy Civil Wars, more juſtly and naturally than is done in the Hiſtory of the Rebellion. We find there the General of the Senate's or Parliament's Army thus haranguing his Soldiers the Roundheads of Old Rome:

O ſcelerum Ultores, melioraque ſigna ſecuti:
O vere Romana manus: quibus Arma Senatus
Non privata dedit, votis depoſcite pugnam.

Ye brave Avengers of your Country's Wrong,
You who to Rome and Liberty belong;
Whoſe Breaſts our Fathers Virtue truly warms,
Whoſe Hands the Senate's ſacred Order arms:
With chearful Ardor meet, &c.

ROWE.

He then charges Cæſar and his Followers, the Roman Cavaliers, with beginning the Civil War, as King Charles I. and his Cavaliers, were always charg'd by the Parliament, and by all fair and impartial Hiſtorians.

Jam tetigit Sanguis pollutos CÆSARIS Enſes:
Dij melius, Belli tulimus quod Damna priores,
Cœperit inde nefas. Nec dicier Arma Senatus
Bella ſuperba decet, ſed Patriæ Vindicis Iram.

Now CÆSAR's Sword with Roman Blood is ſtain'd;
The Fates this Field for our Defence ordain'd:
His Lawleſs Rage the Senate long did bear,
Patient of Ills, till he began the War.
Some other Term to their juſt Arms belongs,
A righteous Vengeance of their Country's Wrongs.

We have a very lively Image of the Armies of Greenvile and Goring in the Weſt, as they are left us in the Hiſtory of the Rebellion, and of the Sack and Slaughter at the taking of Briſtol, Leiceſter, &c. by the Royaliſts.

ROWE.

* The Puniſhment of Delinquents was declar'd by King Charles IId's firſt Parliament to be a juſt Cauſe for that War, which the Editors of Lord Clarendon's Hiſtory call the Grand Rebellion.

One thing more is observable in this Translation of Mr. Rowe's, and that is his Negligence of Decorums. He sticks not to call the Emperor Julius Cæsar MALEFACTOR, and his Adherents VILLAINS, a Term which is sufficiently warranted by the Example of the History of the Rebellion, and Archdeacon Echard's History, when they speak of the Lords and Commons assembled in Parliament, and their Adherents. Whoever reads Lucan's Pharsalia, finds a thousand Parallels for our Civil Wars as to Things; but as to Persons, the Character even of Cæsar's Romans can by no means be lower'd to that of our Cavaliers; tho' I think the Hampdens and the Pyms were as truly Roman, in Principle and Practice, as the Cato's and Scipio's.

If I have any where spoken of the Earl of Clarendon as the Author of the Oxford History, I spoke it when I had not had so good Information, and was in some doubt concerning it, tho' very little, for the Reasons here suggested, and its unparallel'd and undisguis'd Partiality.

Mr. Echard's History is a poor Copy of the History of the Rebellion. He has copy'd the very Foibles of it, the Overflowings of Fancy and Expression, as well as the Errors in Fact; and I could not make room for my own History, without removing the Rubbish which those Historians had laid in my way: a Work which, while I was upon it, put me often in mind of the Augæan Stable.

However, what I have said of those Historians, has no more Malice nor Rancour in it, than the Pleadings of a Lawyer, who, to make good his Cause, bears hard on his Antagonist, and perhaps dines with him as soon as the Trial is over; nevertheless with this difference, that the Author has made a Conscience of saying any thing which he believ'd was not true. A Scruple that, 'tis to be fear'd, is not always observ'd in Pleadings.

I have heard some Gentlemen express their Fears, that there would be too much Warmth in this History. If by Warmth they mean Spirit, their Apprehension of it were enough to make one vain; but since I'm afraid by Warmth they mean Scurrility and Virulence, it will require some Explanation.

If I had affected any such Indecencies, I should not think the Examples of the Author of the History of the Rebellion, and Mr. Archdeacon Echard, nor even those of King Charles I. and his Son King Charles II. would justify me, tho' the Parliament are often call'd Devils, Dogs, Villains, Vipers, Rogues; and Mr. Archdeacon descends so low as Son of a Whore, when he is taking to task the Evidence against the Papists about the Plot. But the Facts I was oblig'd to relate were sometimes so foul, that it was impossible to preserve always the Purity of Expression, or to meet with so much Injustice, Cruelty, and Insolence, as will here be met with, and not kindle a little with Indignation; which is not inconsistent even with Stoicism, when the Cause of our Country is in question. All the favour I desire in this case is, that the Reader will not leap over Mountains in their Histories, and stumble at Mole-Hills in mine.

. The Ancients had a very great Advantage over the Moderns in writing History; they had Liberty of Genius, and were under no Restraints but those of Truth and Decency: which, as to Decency was none at all, because with them what was true was decent. The Freedom of ancient Greece and Rome appear'd in all their Writings, and the Greatness of Soul in Greeks and Romans, a happy Effect of that Freedom, privileg'd every Citizen to speak and write what he thought would conduce most to the common Good, whether it reflected on Archons or Consuls, Senators or Priests. King Charles II. asking Vossius why it was, the Ancients wrote better than the Moderns, that Learned Critick reply'd, The Ancients wrote in Free Governments, where Learning only flourishes. When afterwards Rome had lost her Liberty, her new Masters, the Emperors, did not presently tie up the Tongues, and put Fetters on the Pens of the Romans; not only Augustus, but Tiberius bore even with the Invectives of those Historians, who could not bear the Slavery they impos'd upon them, nor forget the Happiness and Glory of the Republick. Tacitus, tho' Contemporary with the Tyranny of Domitian, blesses himself for the Privilege, which the Romans still enjoy'd, 100 Years after the Commonwealth had no more a Being, Rara Temporum Felicitate, ubi sentire quæ velis, & quæ sentias dicere licet. They think what they please, and speak what they think: And whenever that Privilege ceases, it is to be hop'd History will cease with it; for it must then degenerate into Flattery, and so misrepresent Persons and Things, that Posterity would know no more of past Times, than we could do of the Civil Wars, their Causes and Effects, by what we read in the History of the Rebellion, and Archdeacon Echard's; which disagreeing with Rushworth, Whitlock, and other fair Writers, so acknowledg'd by Mr. Echard, must be themselves unfair.

It is very probable I may be cenſur'd for ſpeaking freely of the Kings in the following Reigns, but I aſſure myſelf that Cenſure will be paſs'd by ſuch only as are not ſufficiently acquainted with the Rules and Manners of Hiſtory; as Mr. Archdeacon ſhews he is not, when he values himſelf on his conſidering thoſe Kings chiefly according to the Dignity of their Offices, which borders ſo near upon Nonſenſe, that it is ridiculous or unintelligible: For when Kings do not maintain the Dignity of their Offices, which is to govern according to Law and Juſtice, the Endeavours of an Hiſtorian to do it for them, will be vain and fruitleſs. He adds, He has been fearful of examining and expoſing their private Vices and Extravagancies. Decency commands to throw them into Shades. To ſearch into their Receſſes, is preſumptuous. Ought not an Hiſtorian to examine into the Waſte of the immenſe Treaſures ſquander'd by King Charles II. for fear of diſcovering they were conſum'd by the Ladies? Does Decency command us to throw his Double-dealing with God and Man, in pretending Zeal for the Proteſtant Religion, when he was a Papiſt, into Shades? Should we not ſearch into the Receſſes of his Negociations with France for a Penſion, to enable him to live without Parliaments, leſt we be guilty of Preſumption?

The Noble Lord Hollis, that Patriot and Confeſſor for the Cauſe of Liberty in two of the following Reigns, did not think it preſumptuous to ſearch into this Receſs, and to charge King Charles II. with conſpiring the Subverſion and Deſtruction of the Proteſtant Religion, as will be ſeen, p. 647. How idly then does the Archdeacon talk of treating that Prince, chiefly according to the Dignity of his Office? Had Lord Hollis ſo treated him, we ſhould never have known that he had enter'd into a League to ſubvert and deſtroy the Church of England, which muſt always be underſtood in the firſt place, when the Proteſtant Religion is mention'd, as it is by my Lord Hollis: For the True Church of England, ſuch as it was in the Days of King Edward VI. ſuch as it was under Archbiſhop Grindal, Archbiſhop Abbot, and many other pious primitive Biſhops even in the Stuartine Reigns, ſuch as it has been ever ſince the Abdication of King James II. and ſuch as it is now under her preſent Fathers, eminent for Learning and all Chriſtian and Humane Virtues; I ſay, this True Church of England, is the True Proteſtant Religion, and ſo acknowledg'd, and as ſuch reverenc'd by all the Reform'd in Chriſtendom.

I deſire the Reader to take particular notice, that Lord Hollis charges King Charles II. with a Deſign to ſubvert the Religion of his Country; and then to read what Dr. Welwood ſays of Cæſar. Lucan is not content, only to deliver him down to Poſterity, as the Subverter of the Laws and Liberties of his Country, which he truly was, and than which no greater Infamy can poſſibly be caſt upon any Name; but, &c. How afraid ſome Perſons have been, leſt I ſhould be too warm, as if Infamy could be too warmly dealt with! Lord Hollis and Dr. Welwood are my Counſel in this Caſe.

I know ſome ignorant Perſons among the Diſaffected, who abound with them, have objected, that to ſay any thing of the Princes of the Houſe of Stuart, is raking the Aſhes of the Dead, of whom nothing ſhould be ſaid but what is good; which is very juſt as to private Characters, De Mortuis nil niſi Bonum. If they offended, they will offend no more. They ſtood on low Ground, were little ſeen or obſerv'd. They and their Actions paſs off like a Dream. We ſhould be ſilent with reſpect to thoſe on whom Death has impos'd eternal Silence. To take advantage of their Mortality to inſult and defame them, is barbarous and impious. However, it is not ſo as to Princes, otherwiſe than as Defamation and Inſolence are always impious and barbarous. Their Vices are contagious, and infect whole Kingdoms. Their Actions live, and affect the Living, when they are mouldering in their ſuperb Monuments. They ſtood on the moſt lofty Ground, and their Examples are like glorious Suns, to enlighten and enliven all thoſe that come after them; or like Beacons, to ſhew when and where there is Danger, and warn People to be upon their Guard. If nothing but what is Good was to be ſaid of Emperors and Kings, we had never heard of the Fate of Uriah, or the Fortune of his Wife; and of the Twelve Cæſars, we had never had the Hiſtory but of three or four. Were there any thing in this Objection, it would damn all Hiſtory at once; which, being univerſally allow'd to be the moſt uſeful, as well as pleaſant Part of Literature, needs no Defence from us.

It is great pity Mr. Archdeacon had not inform'd himſelf better of the Duty of an Hiſtorian, before he took upon him that Character. He has not only conſider'd the Stuartine Kings chiefly according to the Dignity of their Offices, he has done the ſame by their Anceſtor Mary Queen of Scots, whom I have ſpoken of, according to the Truth of Hiſtory, prov'd by Mr. Anderſon in his Collection of Records; in defiance of which, Mr. Echard aſſerts, She was a Princeſs of ſingular Piety towards God: But,

But, as he ſometimes does, a Line or two after he contradicts himſelf, and ſays, It was believ'd her Misfortunes proceeded from the Vengeance of Heaven, for ſuch ſecret Crimes of her's, as Anderſon, who ſearch'd into the Receſſes of her Conduct, has made publick.

I beg leave to copy from the Critical Hiſtory a Paragraph or two on this Subject, ſince it very much behoves me to vindicate myſelf for not following Mr. Echard's Precept with reſpect to Decorums, tho' inſtead of a Vindication, I might have urg'd his not having follow'd it himſelf; but better Authority will be requir'd of me, and better I cannot have, than that of our late Proteſtant Queen Mary, whoſe adorable Virtues will make her Memory ever dear to all good Britons; who, tho' ſhe had more reaſon to reſent any hard Sayings againſt her Anceſtor Mary Queen of Scots, than all Mankind beſides, juſtify'd the ſpeaking of her more freely than I have done: for asking Dr. Burnet, when ſhe was Princeſs of Orange, why King James her Father was ſo ſharpen'd againſt Monſieur Jurieu? and the Doctor telling her, It was for ſome Indecencies ſpoken of Mary Queen of Scots, which caſt Reflections on them that deſcended from her: That divine Princeſs reply'd, Jurieu muſt ſupport the Cauſe he defends, and expoſe thoſe that perſecuted it in the beſt way he can; if what he ſays of Mary Queen of Scots be true, he is not to be blam'd, who made that uſe of it. Which is a full Anſwer to all that can be ſaid of [illegible] ſpeaking freely of that Queen or her Deſcendants; and I ſhall have reaſon to deſpiſe it, till a better Authority, than that Religious and Belov'd Princeſs who ſaid it, is produc'd againſt me. She was pleas'd to add, If Princes will do ill Things, they muſt expect the World will take Revenge of their Memory, ſince they cannot reach their Perſons. That is but a ſmall Suffering, far ſhort of what others ſuffer at their hands. Sentiments ſo juſt and angelical, as ſhew how much ſuperiour a true Chriſtian Spirit is to all Humane Wiſdom and Philoſophy. Upon another Occaſion, hearing ſome Hiſtorians blam'd for reflecting on the Memory of certain Princes, ſhe ſaid, If thoſe Princes were really ſuch as thoſe Hiſtorians repreſented them, they well deſerv'd that Treatment; and others, who tread their Steps, might look for the ſame; for Truth will be told at laſt. Theſe Leſſons having the Sanction of ſo Wiſe, ſo Virtuous, ſo Illuſtrious a Princeſs, need not be confirm'd by any other. Indeed all other would, after theſe, be poor and languiſhing. Thoſe that demand more, will find enough to convince them, if they are capable of Conviction, in the Introduction to the ſecond Volume of the Critical Hiſtory, where I have alſo diſcuſs'd this Matter, and where a greater Freedom of both Thought and Expreſſion than will be found in this Hiſtory, is warranted by both the Precepts and Examples of ancient and modern Criticks and Hiſtorians. A Reflection which will arm me againſt all arbitrary Deciſions, that the Work is too warm; for till the Reaſons and Authorities that are urg'd here and there for ſuch Freedom are anſwer'd, I ſhall not reckon myſelf touch'd in any ſuch Charge, nor be concern'd about it, but very reaſonably aſſure myſelf that thoſe who make it know nothing of the matter: eſpecially conſidering, that ſome who have ſeen part of this Hiſtory, have really thought it not warm enough; and how to ſteer ſafely between two ſuch Rocks, not warm enough, and too warm, was equally difficult and dangerous. A Writer in this caſe is to follow the beſt Light that offers; and the Reader will but do him juſtice, if he allows, that probably he who ſeriouſly ſtudy'd both Thought and Expreſſion, may as well be in the right, as he who runs them over curſorily for Amuſement and Pleaſure.

The next Hold the Enemies to this Deſign will endeavour to take of me, will be from thoſe Paſſages that ſpeak of Epiſcopacy, Biſhops and Clergy, which they will be ſure to call the Church, in the ſenſe Archbiſhop Laud and his Diſciples underſtood it; Altars, Images, Conſecrations, Tapers, Bowings, Forms, Mitres, Croſiers, Hoods, Titles, Territories, Courts and Revenues. In which ſenſe Biſhop Burnet ſays there's a Charm in the Word, which gives it all Shapes, and applies it to all Uſes: But I deſire to be permitted to underſtand Church in a Primitive Apoſtolical Senſe, a Congregation of Chriſtian Believers, met together to worſhip God in Sincerity and Truth; and if I have in any place given offence to that Church, I am inexcuſable, and at mercy. As this Definition is far from excluding Biſhops, who had Paſtoral Care of the Churches ſo early as the Apoſtles Days: ſo neither does it unchurch foreign Proteſtants, nor thoſe in England, Scotland, and Ireland, who are not under Epiſcopal Diſcipline; which being the Eſtabliſhment, requires the Reſpect and Homage that are due to the Law, when it is exercis'd with Prudence and Moderation, as we have ſeen it ever ſince the Revolution; and had the like Epiſcopa l'Diſcipline prevail'd in the Church, and had the like Reverend, Pious and Learned Fathers, the Biſhops, had the Exerciſe of it from the Beginning of the Reformation till now; the Church had never been in Danger, nor the State in any Trouble about it. But having conſider'd what may be objected on this Article in the Preface to the Critical Hiſtory before cited, I chuſe to borrow what is there ſaid, becauſe I have been inform'd, it has given Satisfaction to ſome who were prepar'd to take Offence at the bare mentioning of the Biſhops and Clergy.

" As it was neceſſary to name the ill Inſtruments made uſe of in carrying on " the bad Work, during the Reigns after Queen Elizabeth, and thoſe ill Inſtruments " conſiſting of Eccleſiaſticks, as well as Lay-Men, I could not avoid making frequent " mention of the former; not out of any Diſregard to the Sacred Function, but to " anſwer the Truth of Hiſtory, and lay the Miſchiefs which have happen'd to theſe " Kingdoms ſince that time, at the doors of thoſe that did them.

" I know very well that the Clergy of the Church of England are the beſt De- " fence and Ornament of the Proteſtant Religion, and that both in City and Coun- " try there are many, for whom one cannot have too much Deference. I muſt needs " own the Malignity has lain chiefly among the rural Prieſthood; but among them " have I alſo met with many Pious and Learned Miniſters, Men of good Senſe and " Worth, whoſe Minds have been larger, and more ingenuous, than to give into the " rigid Notions of ſuch as have been miſled by Pride, Paſſion, Intereſt, and Igno- " rance, as were the Laudæan Perſecuting Clergy, who, and who only, are ſpoken " of in the following Hiſtory with any Diſadvantage to their Character; and it " is with great Pleaſure that I have lately obſerv'd the Number of the latter to " be much diminiſh'd."

I cannot think any of thoſe good Men will apply to themſelves what is ſaid of ſuch as have not their Virtues and Abilities; or that thoſe who have given no Offence by their Conduct, will be offended at what is ſaid of thoſe who have. Let me have this Quarter from them, and I deſire no more.

I ſhall doubtleſs be cavill'd at by the ſmaller Criticks, for mixing ludicrous Expreſſions with the Gravity of Hiſtory. I know what they have been taught of its Dignity and Majeſty, that comparing it with Muſick, it muſt be all of the ſolemn Cathedral Kind: And as we are told by the Connoiſſeurs, that Muſick cannot deſcend lower than the Gay, ſo alſo Hiſtory cannot deſcend lower than the Pleaſant; that neither of them admit of Mirth and Laughter, and conſequently Jeſts ſhould be turn'd out of Hiſtory, as Jiggs out of Muſick. And in the general this is true; but as there are no Generals without Exceptions, ſo the Hiſtory of England, during the Period here treated, is an Exception to all Hiſtorical Rules, both Perſons and Things being the moſt out of the way of any that were ever thought worth remembrance.

Now, as Wickedneſs and Folly are conſtant Companions, among a great many wicked Acts we muſt neceſſarily find a great many fooliſh ones; and 'tis as natural for Folly to excite Mirth, as for Wickedneſs to move Terror.

The Steps which Fools take to carry a Point, will always bear the Marks of their Folly; their Pretences will be vain and poſitive, their Diſguiſes thin and apparent, their Aſſertions bold and abſurd, their Principles falſe and inconſiſtent: In all which is the Ridiculum, as much as in Falſtaffe or Foppington; and it is impoſſible to keep them company, and much leſs to ſhew them, without laughing. I need not ſay who are the Fools in this Hiſtory, their Actions will ſufficiently bewray them: and I muſt confeſs I could not help, amidſt ſo much Provocation, being ſometimes merry myſelf, and endeavouring to make the Reader ſo. To be always declaiming againſt cruel and illegal Acts of Government, exorbitant Taxes, Fines, Puniſhments, tyrannous Prelates and their Courts, ravenous Minions, Miſtreſſes and Miniſters, and whatever elſe is peculiar to theſe Reigns, would have been like beginning a Tragedy with the Cataſtrophe, and ſtaining every Scene with Blood, without any Relief to the Spectator; for the eaſe of whoſe Mind, it has been found convenient to have a Run of Farce, for which the Heroes of the Hiſtory of the Rebellion, have plentifully ſupply'd us with Materials. I have not avoided making frequent uſe of the Irony, tho' I was caution'd againſt it in an Apprehenſion that weak and wrong Heads wou'd not diſtinguiſh Jeſt from Earneſt. But no Author, I believe, propoſes to himſelf the Entertainment of wrong and weak Heads; if he does, he runs a great risk of entertaining no body elſe, and then I leave it to him to think how laudably he will ſpend his Time, and his Study. I could not be convinc'd that the Stile of Indictment would be always more agreeable and uſeful than that of Raillery, which is the ſureſt way to keep the Reader awake, who will be apt to fall aſleep under perpetual Declamation, and Remonſtrance.

As to the Scotiſh and Iriſh Affairs, I have not enter'd far into that Hiſtory: I ſhould have gone much farther, eſpecially as to the Affairs of Scotland, if I had been ſo happy as to have known ſome worthy Gentlemen, who could and would have aſſiſted me, ſo well before I had finiſh'd this Work, as I have done ſince. And as to Ireland, I knew little of the Tranſactions there, but what are in the common Memoirs. Beſides, in the forming of this Deſign, I had in view chiefly the Hiſtory of England, as the Title ſhews, and intended only to touch the Hiſtory of the other two Kingdoms as it came in my way; not out of Diſreſpect, for I ever regarded them as England's moſt dear Siſters, but for want of more Room and more Information.

The Helps I receiv'd towards carrying on this Work, by Manuſcripts and Information, were, as will be eaſily perceiv'd, very conſiderable from Perſons of Ability and Eminence, whoſe Names, tho' they wou'd do honour to my Hiſtory, I dare not publiſh without their Approbation: It wou'd be neither decent nor diſcreet, and might hazard the Loſs of their Good Will, and Good Offices on another occaſion. I do not examine what Reaſon there may be for any Shyneſs in this caſe, becauſe it ought to have affected me more than others, if it has really weight in it. Shou'd I be in an Error, 'tis ſo pleaſing a one, that I am as loth to come out of it, as young People are to awake out of thoſe Dreams, in which their Fancies took pleaſure.

The Aſſiſtance I had by printed Hiſtories, old Pamphlets, and State-Papers, was at leaſt as good as any Hiſtorian cou'd hope for, and it will be allow'd when it is known, that I was aſſiſted by Francis Bennet Eſq; of Mereſield in Dorſetſhire, and Dr. Fraſer of London, who had been fifty Years making Collections of Hiſtories, Pamphlets and Papers proper for my Subject. I might add many other Names of Gentlemen, who furniſh'd me with the like Materials; but many other Names wou'd come ſhort of thoſe two, and are therefore unneceſſary.

I have mention'd one great Advantage the Ancients had over the Moderns in writing Hiſtory, which was the Liberty of their Genius, and they had another, which was the Credit they were in with their Readers; we do not find the Margents of Thucydides and Livy crouded with Authorities. The Hiſtorian's own Word was taken, but now an Author muſt bring ſomebody to be bound for him; tho' if a Reader cannot truſt a Writer, he had better have no Dealings with him. If a Man's Conſcience will let him lye in Hiſtory, his Diſcretion will hardly reſtrain him. Quotations are no infallible Security againſt the Fraud and Artifice of an Hiſtorian, if his own Honour is not engag'd. However, I have mention'd my Authorities in moſt Places out of Complacency to the Infidelity of the Age; and when I have not ſo done, it is generally when the Facts have not been of much conſequence, or were ſo well known, that they atteſted themſelves.

There happen in this difficult Period many Events, which may be ſuſpected, and ſeveral Reflections, more proper for others to make than the Author; which has led him to the uſe of ſome Writers, of whoſe Merit he had no great Eſteem, tho' never but in Places where he thought what they ſaid was true, a Rule he ſet himſelf from the Beginning, and purſu'd it to the End of his Work and where they corroborated other Evidence. Of this kind are Peyton, Welden, Walker, Lilly, Coke. He has here and there not told the whole Truth, it being too ſtrong for weak Stomachs; tho' he ſhou'd have ventur'd to have reported, that Queen Anne of Denmark, Conſort to King James the Firſt, died a Papiſt, had he known it in time. It were to be wiſh'd Gentlemen had been earlier with their Communication, and wou'd be ſo for the future, if he writes the ſucceeding Reigns.

The Hiſtorian has, from the Freedom of his Thoughts and Expreſſion, reaſon to expect various Attacks from various Sorts of Perſons, every one of whom will miſtake him and his Meaning, if they interpret him in any other Senſe than that of the Proteſtant Religion, and Proteſtant Succeſſion; the Rights, Liberties, Properties and Privileges of Britons. But if any of theſe miſtaken People ſhall treat him as a Man who loves and endeavours to ſerve his Country deſerves to be treated, with Moderation and Decency, he will do his utmoſt to undeceive them; and if he is deceiv'd himſelf, own it, and ſincerely thank thoſe that ſhall ſet him right, where he is wrong. He has no where err'd willingly, or knowingly, and in caſe it ſhould ſo happen by Miſinformation or Miſunderſtanding, he wou'd be ſo far from being aſham'd of owning an Error, that he ſhou'd take a pride in it, as doing a Service to Truth.

Whatever Criticiſms are made on his Hiſtory, he hopes they will be according to the Rule of Horace and Longinus, thoſe great Maſter Criticks. Horace ſays,

———non ego paucis
Offendar Maculis; quas aut Incuria fudit,
Aut humana parum cavit Natura——

I will not quarrel with a ſlight Miſtake,
Such as our Nature's Frailty may excuſe. Rosc.

No Author ſhou'd be condemn'd for Slips and Negligences, which may have eſcap'd him thro' Incaution, or the Imperfection of Human Nature. Longinus explains this farther in his thirtieth Chapter. Of this kind are two or three Repetitions in theſe four Reigns; ſo alſo are was for were, is for are, their Contraries, and the like. Of this this kind are Errors in Figures, Dates, or Sums, which, as well as the others, are for the moſt part Print-Faults; and thoſe who wou'd quarrel with him on their account, muſt do it for quarrelling ſake, and be a Sort of People, with whom he wou'd avoid Contention, as much as with a litigious, vexatious Petty-fogger, or a ſnarling, cavilling Pedant. As theſe Overſights are eaſily perceiv'd, ſo they are eaſily corrected, and a ſmall Portion of Candour will excuſe them, conſidering ſo great a Number of Sheets paſt through the Preſs in little more than three Months. As for the Common Anſwerers, ſuch as fell immediately on Biſhop Burnet's Memoirs, and wait for the coming out of a Book, as Ravens and Crows hover over a Field of Battle for Prey; as for the Weekly Scriblers, &c. he will not trouble himſelf about them, and probably he'll never hear, as he never will care, what they ſay.

Some worthy Gentlemen have intimated, they ſhou'd have been better pleas'd, had the Hiſtory been continu'd to the Death of his late Majeſty King George, or at leaſt to that of Queen Anne, as the laſt of the direct Line of Stuart; but that wou'd have broken in upon my Deſign, which I ſet a ſort of value upon for its Simplicity, it being only an hiſtorical Plan of the Deſign of the Stuartine Kings to ſubvert the Conſtitution, in which the Female Branches had no Concern, and conſequently cou'd not regularly come into this Hiſtory: Beſides, the Reign of King Willam, who had the ſole Exerciſe of the Sovereign Power, put an end to that of the Royal Houſe of Stuart, which reviv'd again in Queen Anne, and again died with her.

I confeſs I have little hope that the Simplicity of Deſign, which I ſet ſuch a value upon, will have the like Merit with the Readers; for all Hiſtories which have hitherto been publiſh'd in Engliſh, have not the Appearance of any. They are for the moſt part a Confuſion of Method and Events, Journals, Annals, Biography, without regard to Conduct or Stile. The Stile of the Hiſtory of the Rebellion, as florid as it is, is as vicious in Hiſtory, as Muſick would be in a Sermon. 'Tis declamatory and verboſe to a Prodigy, and almoſt all other hiſtorical Stiles, are either ſo poor or ſo affected, that it is very plain the Hiſtorians were not Maſters of their Art.

There is a Difficulty in the firſt Thought of Undertaking the Reigns ſince the Revolution, which is hard to be got over; and that is, that the Events are recent, and the Perſons who tranſacted them either living, or their Sons, Grandſons, or Great Grandſons, who will take the Alarm at the very Sound of their Names.

We are all of us ſo jealous of our Glory, that we cannot bear any Report, which touches ever ſo little thoſe we are a-kin to, for fear it ſhou'd be any Diminution of it. A Report being true, is ſo far from juſtifying it, that it adds to the Offence, and if the Heroiſm does not deſcend with the Name thro' every Generation, the Hiſtorian is in peril of making the Race his Enemies. There is ſomething very ſilly and ridiculous in this Vanity, but that does not hinder its prevailing. It is no more a ſhame to me that my Father or Grandfather was a weak or ill Man, than that he was Crooked, or a Cripple, I cou'd no more help the one than the other; and no Man is accountable for what he cannot help: Yet I am afraid the remembring even bodily Infirmities wou'd be conſtru'd to be Scandal and Malice, and put an Author at variance with a whole Clan. Nay, I ſhou'd not have wonder'd if Banks the Poet had been proſecuted for bringing Lord Burleigh's Humpback upon the Stage, in his Earl of Eſſex. True it is, this was not the way of thinking in the Claſſical Ages; if it had, there had been no ſuch thing as Hiſtory: but there being two or three other things, in which we differ from the Grecks and Romans, we will dwell no longer upon this.

Will it be any Complement to the Age we live in, for their Underſtanding and Generoſity, that the ſecond Part of Biſhop Burnet's Hiſtory of his Times is not printed, becauſe ſome Paſſages in it reflect on the Conduct of certain Perſons, whoſe Sons and Grandſons might be offended! Is it poſſible to write the Hiſtory of any Nation and Time without ſuch Paſſages, unleſs one can ſuppoſe it was an Age of Gold, and all thoſe who liv'd in it were Heroes and Demi-Gods? It is a very whimſical Buſineſs, when 'tis a little thought of.

I have collected Materials for the Reigns of King William, Queen Mary, Queen Anne, and King George; and if I meet with no other Diſcouragement than this vain Humour, I ſhall continue my Hiſtory in another Volume to the Death of his late Majeſty, and take my Fate with Truth, which is great, and will prevail. In thoſe good Reigns there will be little need of Political Reflections, they are too full of Action and Glory to ſuffer any Interruption in the Narration, except a cloudy Interval or two in part of King William's Reign, and the latter End of Queen Anne's.

I begin the Year always with the firſt of January, as it has always been in uſe among Hiſtorians, a few Inſtances of Engliſh Writers excepted. The Computation from the 25*th of* March is peculiar to Law and Commerce, and that too chiefly in England; tho' I know not for what reaſon, it having already occaſion'd great Confuſion, eſpecially in Hiſtory.

INTRODUCTION.

NOTHING has more corrupted the Truth of Hiſtory, than the falſe Repreſentations of the ſeveral Reforms which have been attempted in the Chriſtian Church ſince it fell under the Tyranny of the Biſhop of Rome. The Reformers have always been charged with Hereſy and Schiſm, Sedition and Fanaticiſm, with broaching new Doctrine and novel Diſcipline: It being aſſerted, with the greateſt Aſſurance, by all Writers who uſurp the Character of Orthodox, that the Government of the Primitive Church was by Archbiſhops, Biſhops, Deans, and Chapters, Archdeacons, Chancellors, and the like, in the very ſame Form as at preſent in the Church of France as well as England; and that Presbytery was not ſo much as known till about the Year 1564.

Ech. Hindrances to the Progreſs of the Reformation.

It may ſeem ſtrange to begin a Hiſtory of England with Reflections on Eccleſiaſtical Government; but it will appear very natural, when the Reader obſerves, that all the Troubles and Misfortunes during the Reigns I am about writing, were owing ſolely to the Spirit that animated this Controverſy; which is really much more temporal than ſpiritual, and concerns the State much more than the Church: For take away the Dignities, Revenues, Courts, Privileges, and Prerogatives, which are all civil Matters, and Proteſtants would ſoon agree in the Eccleſiaſtical, as exhibited in the Apoſtolical Conſtitution.

But the temporal Part, thoſe Dignities, Revenues, Courts, Privileges, and Prerogatives, which were impoſſible to be eſtabliſh'd till the Empire became Chriſtian, are now aſſerted to be the very Eſſence of that Church, which had a Being ſeveral hundred Years before there cou'd be any ſuch Eſtabliſhment: The Powers of the World being then Enemies to the Kingdom of Chriſt; whoſe Subjects did not then underſtand, that Dominion and Lordſhips were the Inheritance he left them.

'Tis very eaſy to conceive, that worldly Things wou'd make a ſtrong Impreſſion on worldly Minds, and that thoſe who were in Poſſeſſion of them, wou'd not be willing to part with them, or to exchange Power for Purity, and Revenue for Reformation. And, on the other hand, that Men of Conſcience and Principle, convinced of the abominable Corruptions of the Church of Rome, wou'd abhor all her ſuperſtitious Innovations, and be zealous for a Reformation agreeable to the Goſpel and the Practice of the firſt Chriſtians. On the Side of the former, were Pride, Avarice, Bigotry, and Ignorance. On the ſide of the latter, were only Knowledge, Piety, and Conſcience. In ſuch a Conteſt, the moſt enlighten'd muſt needs be the leaſt prevalent, as long as Men are governed by their Senſes and Paſſions, more than by their Underſtanding and Reaſon; which, as it was from the beginning, is likely to laſt till the End of all Things.

The Princes of the Earth, from whom the ſpiritual Hierarchy derive their temporal Honours and Riches, have always been flatter'd by the moſt corrupt of them, with divine and unlimited Authority; in which they have, in return, been admitted to a Share to the Ruin of Religion, and the Oppreſſion of the People.

There have not in all Ages been wanting godly and zealous Men, who have born their Teſtimony againſt Superſtition and Tyranny: And they have, in all Ages, found Encouragement from thoſe noble and virtuous Perſons, who wou'd ſometimes protect as well as encourage them.

The Aggreſſors, therefore, from the beginning, are thoſe, who, rénouncing the ſacred Liberty of the Goſpel, ſubmitted to the Papal, more grievous than Egyptian, Bondage; and when Freedom was offer'd at the Reformation, ſtill retain'd thoſe Marks and Blemiſhes of Slavery, which were rejected by the far greater Body of reformed Chriſtians.

Is it not aſtoniſhing, that a Dignitary of our Church ſhou'd know ſo little of eccleſiaſtical Affairs, as to aſſert the Geneva Diſcipline to be novel, a Thing not heard of in England till many Years after the Reformation?

The reformed Church the ancient Church.

Not to inſiſt on the Government of the Primi ive Church, which is ſo fully explained in that admirable Treatiſe, entitled, An Enquiry into the Conſtitution, Diſcipline, Unity, and Worſhip of the Primitive Church, Had this learned Divine and Hiſtorian never heard of the Waldenſes, who attempted a Reform about 600 Years ago? And the firſt Article of their Religion was, according to Pope Pius II. or Æneas Sylvius; Romanum Præſulem reliquis Epiſcopis parem eſſe; inter Sacerdotes nullum Diſcrimen; Presbyterum non Dignitatem ſed Vitæ meritum efficere potiorem. Bohemica Hiſt. Waldenſes.

" The Biſhop of Rome is equal with other Biſhops;
" there's no Difference of Degree among Prieſts,
" and no Prieſt is to be eſteemed for any Dignity
" of his Order, but for the Worthineſs of his Life."

What was the Opinion of the Albigenſes, about the Year 1230, is not ſo well known; but Fox informs us, They profeſt chiefly againſt the wanton Wealth, Pride, and Tyranny of the Prelates. Yet, like the modern Reform'd, they were for Epiſcopacy, ſuch as that of Timothy and Titus, and ſuch as Archbiſhop Uſher's Reduction. For the Sophiſtry of the pretended Orthodox, lies in charging the Reformed with renouncing Epiſcopacy itſelf; whereas they never renounced any Thing more than what the Albigenſes had thrown off long before, tho' they retain'd Biſhops: And there is not a Calviniſt in Chriſtendom, but wou'd have retain'd the Order on the ſame Terms; it being moſt certain, that there were Biſhops and Presbyters in the three firſt Centuries, tho' it is not ſo certain what was Albigenſes the Difference between them; but it is moſt ſure, they were not Dukes and Counts, as in France and other Places.

Wicklivists. The next Reformer of Note, was our Countryman John Wickliff, about an hundred Years after the Attempt of the Albigenſes. What his Sentiments in this Matter were, may be conjectur'd by the Charge againſt him: That plain Deacons and Prieſts may preach without Licence of Pope or Biſhop; That in the Time of the Apoſtles, there were only two Orders, Prieſts and Deacons; and that a Biſhop doth not differ from a Prieſt: And what is moſt ſhocking of all in Reformation, That Prieſts of bad Lives ceaſe any longer to be Prieſts. Again; That the Church was not endow'd with any immoveable Poſſeſſions before Conſtantine; that it is no Sacrilege to take away Things conſecrated to the Church; that all beautiful Buildings of Churches, is blame-worthy, and ſavours of Hypocriſy. Theſe and many other Articles were preferr'd againſt him by Thomas Walden, a noted Doctor at Oxford; who, in a Letter to Pope Martin V. acknowledges, he was wonderfully aſtoniſh'd at Wickliff's moſt ſtrong Arguments, with the Places of Authority which he gather'd, with the Vehemency and Force of his Arguments, &c.

Full. Ch. Hiſt. 132.

Bohemians What were the Opinions of the Bohemians, one may gueſs by their being converted by the Waldenſian Refugees firſt, and confirm'd by Wickliff's Writings afterwards, which were tranſmitted to Prague in ſo great Numbers, that Subink the Archbiſhop burnt 200 of them at once, all excellently written, and finely adorn'd with Boſſes of Gold and rich Coverings, as the abovementioned Pope Pius II. writes in his Hiſtory; which gives ground to conjecture, that thoſe Books were ſent thither with the Privity of Queen Anne, a Bohemian, Wife to Richard II. then reigning in England. That Princeſs is commended even by the Archbiſhop of Canterbury in thoſe Days, for having Wickliff's Teſtament by her. And it was not only the meaner Sort of People who favour'd Wickliff, but Perſons of the higheſt Rank and Diſtinction; as the Duke of Lancaſter, Humphry Duke of Glouceſter, and his Dutcheſs; the Earl of Salisbury, the Lord Piercy, the Lord Latimer, the Lord Clifford, the Lord Montacute, &c. As alſo many learned Divines, as Reginald Pocock Biſhop of Chicheſter, Dr. Redman, Philip Repington, David Sautre, William James, Peter Payne, and others, Men eminent for Learning and Piety. Polydore Virgil informs us, that Wickliff went himſelf into Bohemia, where he was in high Eſteem, in magno pretio apud Bohemos fuiſſe; which is no more true, than that he was the Author of Wat Tyler's Rebellion, which he is accuſed of by Cope, and other ſuch Writers of Church Hiſtory; and nothing is more common with them, than to blacken all Principles of Reformation, as rebellious or ſeditious; in which they have been imitated by the Lord Clarendon and Mr. Echard.

Lollards. About the ſame Time flouriſhed Lollardus a German Reformer; from him the Wicklivists were term'd Lollards, according to Tallent. Others think the Name was given them by the Papiſts from Lollium, Tares among the Wheat; or from their calling often upon God, ſaying, Lord, Lord; which, tho' it is the Opinion of the Martyrologiſt, is not ſo probable, as the Derivation from Walter Lollard, the German or Auſtrian, whoſe Followers were alſo every where ſtigmatiz'd as Sowers of Sedition and Rebellion. For the ſuperſtitious Eccleſiaſticks being never able to prevail againſt Revelation and Reaſon by Argument, have always blended their private Intereſts with the Prince's, and born down all Oppoſition with Power, without which they cou'd never have ſupported their Domination. John Huſs and Jerom of Prague, maintain'd Wickliff's Opinions in Bohemia. The Sentence of the Council of Conſtance againſt Huſs, ſtiling him, The wicked Son of John Wickliff of damnable Memory. His Doctrine propagated extremely in ſeveral Parts of Germany, as well as Bohemia; many of the great Lords embracing it, as did a Multitude of the Commons. Sir John Oldcaſtle, Sir Roger Acton, and the Wicklivists in England, deliver'd their Senſe of the Papal Hierarchy in what Sir John ſaid, ſomewhat coarſely, to the Archbiſhop of Canterbury, touching the Authority of the Keys, the Archbiſhops, Biſhops, and other Prelates: The Pope is very Antichriſt, that is, the Head; the Archbiſhops, Biſhops, and other Prelates, be his Members, and the Friars his Tail, &c. The Bohemians publiſh'd an Exhortation to all Kings and Princes, to excite their Zeal in Defence of the Goſpel; wherein is this Article; When your Biſhops will ordain Prieſts, the Perſon to be ordained muſt have ſufficient Living by Inheritance or Benefice. Chriſt wou'd that Prieſts ſhou'd be poor, in as much as it is enough for the Scholar to be as his Maſter is, and for the Servant to be as his Lrod: But the Biſhops will they ſhou'd be rich upon Earth, which is unjuſt before the Almighty. This Exhortation was national, and the Huſſites, not a rude Rabble only, but of the moſt Noble, Wiſe, and Learned: They were not only the moſt godly, but the moſt brave and warlike among that People. The Pope fear'd them ſo much, that he iſſu'd out a Cruſade againſt them; in which the Emperor, the Duke of Saxony, and other German Princes engag'd; as did alſo a Prince of the Blood Royal of England, Henry Cardinal of Wincheſter. However, the Bohemians defended themſelves with equal Bravery and Succeſs, under Ziſca, Procopius, and Mainardus, till the latter betray'd them, and gave the Emperor an Opportunity to ſuppreſs them and their Religion in publick; for in private it ſubſiſted till Luther incited the German Princes to protect that Reformation which ſpread over all Chriſtendom ſeventy Years after. If it is pretended, that the Wicklivists and Lollards, are not look'd upon as orthodox by ſtaunch Churchmen, as indeed they are very much villify'd by Collier, Heylin, and the like: I refer to the Writings of the famous Dr. James of Oxford, in his Apology for John Wickliff, ſhewing his Conformity with the now Church of England, in anſwer to Parſons the Jeſuit, printed at Oxon in 1608.

Ib. 858.

The Lollards continu'd in England from their firſt Appearance, to the Vicegerency of Cromwel, in the Reign of Henry VIII. And what their religious Principles were as to Church-Diſcipline, we have ſufficiently made appear. 'Tis no wonder then, that before the Reformation was reviv'd, and after it was promoted by Authority, there were great Numbers of the Reform'd, who ſtrenuouſly oppos'd the retaining any of the Semblances of the Papal Hierarchy, Forms and Ceremonies; that there were many who inſiſted on a thorough Reformation, and a Conformity to the Proteſtant Churches abroad. Thus we have ſeen, and may ſee ſtill further, in all impartial Church-Hiſtories, of which there are not many, that for four or five hundred Years before King Edward VI. or Queen Elizabeth's Time, there were reformed Churches in Chriſtendom, ſome more publick, ſome more private, who made Profeſſion of the ſame Principles in Doctrine and Diſcipline, as were maintain'd by the Reformed in Swiſſerland, Geneva, France, the Palatinate, Germany, Bohemia, Hungary, Tranſylvania, Poland, the Netherlands, Scotland, and the moſt ſincere and pious of Engliſh Proteſtants. Few have had the Boldneſs to deny this. Indeed that ingenious and learned Hiſtorian Sanderſon, aſſerts, That the Majority of the Reform'd abroad, are for Epiſcopacy in its Altitudes; and to prove it, he names the Places where it is eſtabliſh'd; which I ſhall repeat as a very great Novelty: The Marquiſite of Badu, the Earldom of Heneberg, the Earldoms of Levings, Marisfelt, Stalburgh, Reveſtern, Swatenbourgh, Wertenbergh, Hannaw, Oeting, Glick, Leonſtine, the Baronies of Lenebergh, Schenckburgh, Wildenfield, &c. beſides thirty Cities, whoſe Territories, tories, ſays he, are as ample as Geneva. What an Advantage muſt any Cauſe have, which has ſuch a Champion? And truly the Cauſe he labours had never a better Hiſtorian than this Sanderſon, till Archdeacon Echard enter'd the Liſts; and has, I doubt not, as many more Names of the like Importance to be us'd on the like Occaſion. We muſt not therefore think it too daring in him to aſſert, That the Romiſh Hierarchy was never oppos'd, till a few wretched Enthuſiaſts ſet up Preſbytery in the Reign of Queen Elizabeth. It is to be hop'd, that theſe Hiſtoriagraphers do really know no better; and that we muſt impute their Confidence to Ignorance, and not Deſign. It being moſt true, that there are hardly any Names of Eminence among the firſt Reformers abroad, who were not entirely for the Geneva Diſcipline. At leaſt nine Parts in ten of the foreign Proteſtant Churches conform'd to it; and that there was the ſame Diſpoſition in England in the Dawn of the Reformation, is what muſt next be obſerv'd. And well there might be, if even among the Papiſts there is a truer Notion of Epiſcopacy than among many, who under the Name of Proteſtants are ſome of the beſt Friends to Popery; ſuch as Bancroft, Neile, Harſnet, Wren, Sheldon, &c. For in an Oration of the Cardinal of Arles at the Council of Baſil, his Eminence, a Title he truly deſerv'd, ſpoke as follows: The Chief and Principal of all Divines, St. Auſtin, on the Words of St. Matthew, where Peter ſays to Chriſt, I will give thee the Keys of the Kingdom of Heaven, notes, that by theſe Words the judicial Power was given not only to Peter, but alſo to the other Apoſtles, and to the whole Church, the Biſhops and Prieſts. The famous Doctor St. Jerom alſo agrees with St. Auſtin. His Words are upon the Epiſtle of St. Paul to Titus: Before that Difference was made in Religion by the Inſtigation of the Devil, or that it was ſpoken among the People, I hold of Paul, I of Apollo, and I of Cephas, the Churches were governed by the common Conſent and Counſel of Prieſts: For a Prieſt is the very ſame that a Biſhop is. How would Archbiſhop Laud have exclaim'd, if any Puritan Prieſt had ſaid as much as this Cardinal did? Again; Wherefore all Biſhops ought to underſtand that they are of greater Power than the Prieſts, rather by Cuſtom than the Diſpenſation of the Truth of God. Whence then came the Terms of Divine Right, Divine Permiſſion, Divine Providence, and the like? Again; Biſhops and Prieſts ought to rule the Church together; which we learn out of St. Paul to Titus, who makes ſo much Agreement between Prieſts and Biſhops, that he often calls Biſhops Prieſts, and Prieſts Biſhops. Had ſuch Doctrine as this of St. Jerom been preach'd in the Time of the High-Commiſſion Court, the Preacher had doubtleſs loſt his Ears for it, as well as Mr. Burton, who did not ſay more againſt the Uſurpations of the then Hierarchy. Can any one think that Montague, Manwaring, Sibthorp in former Times; that Pelling, Hicks, Hill, Sacheverel, Tr---p, and a whole Hoſt of ſuch Clergy in our own Times, had the leaſt Conception of this Equality between Biſhops and Presbyters, or knew what St. Paul, and his Commentators St. Jerom and St. Auſtin, had ſaid of it? I do not intend to enter into this Debate farther than is neceſſary to prove, that thoſe holy Men who were of St. Paul, St. Auſtin, and St. Jerom's Opinion in this Matter before and after the Reformation, deſerv'd not to be treated as Hereticks, Schiſmaticks, Fanaticks, and Rebels; and that thoſe who ſacrific'd the Peace of both Church and State to the temporal Dominion of the Prelacy, were neither good Chriſtians nor good Engliſhmen: As for Proteſtants, I do not ſuppoſe they valu'd themſelves on the Name, and therefore I omit it.

A Cardinal for Presbytery.

We will now ſee whether the Spirit of Reformation was ſo entirely dead when it was reviv'd in England, that none of the firſt Reformers were of the ſame Principles with the Reformed in other Parts of Chriſtendom; and whether, as Echard affirms, Presbytery was never nam'd here till after Epiſcopacy was eſtabliſh'd.

The next Man who ſeal'd the Truth of the Goſpel with his Blood, was Richard Hun, Citizen of London, in the Beginning of Henry the VIIIth's Reign. He was murder'd in Priſon, and then ſentenc'd to be burnt for an Heretick. A Charge againſt him being, that he had taught and preach'd that Biſhops and Prieſts be the Scribes and Phariſees, all things taking, and nothing miniſtring nor giving. Engliſh firſt Reformers no Enemies to it.

It muſt be always remember'd, that theſe good Men do not mean good Biſhops, ſuch as are now the Support and Ornament of our National Church; but ſuch Prelates as Bancroft and his Brethren before-mention'd. Sir Thomas More thought Mr. Hun conſiderable enough to employ his Wit againſt him; but the Subject was too tragical to admit of the Farce into which he would have turn'd it.

An Article againſt Mr. Bilney, Fellow of Trinity-Hall, Cambridge, was, That he ſaid the Pope has not Peter's Keys, unleſs he lives the Life of Peter; which I am ſatisfy'd will be allow'd to be ſchiſmatical, and to favour much of the Presbytery, by moſt of the Rural Prieſthood. This holy Martyr converted Biſhop Latimer to the true Religion, who before was a bigotted Papiſt. There were other learned Men in Cambridge, who thought like Bilney; as Dr. Foreman of Queen's College, Mr. Stafford Divinity Reader, Dr. Thiſſel, &c. The Place of meeting was from them called Hereticks Wall; and this was ſeveral Years before there was any Reformation by Authority of the State. Martyr. 226. Full. Ch. Hiſt. 102.

Whoever will turn over Mr. Fiſh's Supplication of the Beggars, preſented to King Henry VIII. will ſee no Proof indeed of his approving any other Church Government than what was Epiſcopal; but they will ſee alſo how he approved of Abbots, Prelates, Priors, Deacons, Suffragans, Archdeacons, Canons, Pardoners, &c. their Temporalities, Prerogatives and Powers. For as to their religious Function, every one will grant thoſe who live like Peter, have the Keys as much as ever Peter had. This is given up to them entirely; but this they will not be contented with, confounding Chriſt's Kingdom, and the Kingdom of this World, which is all that good Men have to ſay againſt any of them; yet whoever has any thing at all to ſay, is immediately guilty of Sedition, Schiſm, Saucineſs, and what not. Martyr. 280.

About the ſame time Richard Bayfield, a Friar, who had renounc'd Popery, was charged with Hereſy for ſaying, Every Prieſt ought to preach the Word of God by the Authority of the Goſpel, without running to the Pope or Biſhops for a Licenſe; which ſurely is downright Presbyterian Doctrine; eſpouſed alſo by James Baynham, Eſq; Son of Sir Alexander Baynham of Glouceſterſhire, who declar'd, That whoever preach'd the Word of God, and liv'd accordingly, had the Key that binds and looſes both in Heaven and Earth; which Key is the Scripture. Ask Mr. Archdeacon Echard, and he will tell you 'tis the Prieſt. Mr. Baynham was a Lawyer of the Middle Temple, noted for Piety, Learning and Humanity; but more noted ſtill for his patient Martyrdom ſoon after the Death of Bayfield. I mention theſe things, to ſhew that the Perſons who deſir'd a thorough Reformation, were not obſcure, illiterate Enthuſiaſts, as our Eccleſiaſtical Hiſtorians repreſent them. Ibid. 290.

The next Year another Martyr was ſacrific'd to the Rage of the Romiſh Prelates, Mr. Frith of Cambridge, a young Man, but of eminent Abilities and Learning, who was not examin'd as to the Conſtitution of the Church. The Articles againſt him concern'd chiefly the Sacrament of the Lord's Supper, which he believ'd after the manner of the Swiſs Proteſtants. A. Wood of Oxford, who ſeldom ſpeaks Truth when it makes againſt Popery or Papiſts, ſays Frith was converted to Lutheraniſm by Tyndal. Which is the Reverſe of the Fact; Frith being a profeſs'd Sacramentary, as the Term was then; and believ'd the Euchariſt as did the Zuinglians and Calviniſts, and not as the Lu-

Ibid. 308. therans: Adding, The Church has no Power and Authority to admit any thing as Matter of Faith, which is not agreeable to Reaſon, Than which nothing can be more ſchiſmatical, according to ſome modern Divines.

Thomas Bennet, A. M. of Cambridge, was martyr'd the ſame Year at Exeter. His Learning and Abilities were more than ordinary, as appears by his Defence in Latin; in which he declar'd, That Chriſt gave the Keys to all the Apoſtles, as well as to Peter; and Peter had no more antiently given him than they, or elſe the Churches planted in every
Ibid. 211. Kingdom are no Churches. He added, The Church which is built upon a Man is the Devil's Church, and not God's: And every Church this Day is appointed to be rul'd by a Biſhop or Paſtor, ordain'd by the Word of God, under the Prince the ſupreme Governor. To talk at a Country Viſitation of Ordination by the Word of God, would be truly ſpeaking in an unknown Language; as is what follows of the ſame Bennet: Where they are that confeſs the true Name of Chriſt, and where only Chriſt is the Head, and under him the Prince of the Realm, that is God's Church. Can any thing be more loyal, more agreeable to our Conſtitution Sacred and Civil? Again; What Biſhop ſoever he be, who preaches the Goſpel and maintaineth the Truth, is a true Biſhop. How would Laud, Sheldon, Mew, Ken, Atterbury, Biſſe, Gaſtrell, and other ſuch Prelates, have been ſtruck with Amazement and Horror at ſuch a Characteriſtick of a true Biſhop! Some of them indeed did preach, and very well too upon Occaſion; but they plac'd the Epiſcopal Character in the Title, Dignity, Power and Revenue; and wou'd as ſoon have allow'd Richard Baxter to have been the Meſſiah, as a true Biſhop; tho' he preach'd the Goſpel, and maintain'd the Truth before its mighty and moſt avow'd Enemies. Bennet's aſſerting the Prince to be ſupreme Governor of the Church, was a Year or two before King Henry aſſum'd that Title by Proclamation; nay, Stephen Gardiner, the Popiſh and cruel Biſhop of Wincheſter, in his Treatiſe De vera Obedientia, writes thus: The Prerogative was not given to the Fleſh and Blood of Peter, but to the better Part, that is, to the Spirit of Peter. An Interpretation of the Text, which the Diſpenſers of Abſolution do not generally ſubſcribe to. The Pardoners, as Mr. Fiſh call'd them 200 Years ago, apply the Prerogative to their very Perſons, their dear Fleſh and Blood; for if the Application was made only to the Spirit of Peter in ſuch as live like Peter, we cou'd certainly not be abſolv'd by every Vicar and Curate in England, as ſome of them now aſſure us we may be. Let us ſee what another ſuch Popiſh Prelate as Gardiner, his Contemporary Biſhop Tonſtal, ſaid of it. The Church is built not upon the Perſon of Peter, but the Faith of Chriſt. All which ſufficiently teaches us, that the Epiſcopal Function, and that of Presbyter, have the ſame Powers and Prerogatives by the Authority of the Scripture; and that the temporal Emoluments, Prerogatives and Powers are deriv'd ſolely from the Authority of the Laws of the Land, and conſequently are not of the ſame Nature with the Laws of the Medes and the Perſians.

I might, in the next place, mention Mr. Tyndal of Magdalen-Hall, Oxford, another of the firſt Reformers before the Reformation was eſtabliſh'd; the ſame who tranſlated the Bible; but his Opinions were the ſame with his Friend Frith's: and his Ibid. 342. Treatiſes of the Obedience of Chriſtians, of Prelates, the Parable of the wicked Mammon, his Revelation of Antichriſt, and other Works, ſhew plainly enough what were his Sentiments, as to the Dignities, Lordſhips, and Riches of Eccleſiaſticks. I have often ſaid, and may again ſay here and elſewhere, that the ſpiritual Character and Function are not what theſe pious Divines objected againſt, nor do I find that any Objection was ever made to them by religious and reaſonable Men.

But the moſt remarkable Declaration concerning the lordly Hierarchy, was that of the glorious Saint and Martyr Mr. John Lambert of Cambridge, whoſe Senſe of the Matter was as much Presbyterian as Cartwright or Travers; tho' the Learned and Judicious Archdeacon Echard affirms, that no ſuch Senſe was ever utter'd in England, till one Hallingham and Coleman, with two or three other ſuch obſcure Fanaticks, ſtarted it in Oppoſition to the Eſtabliſhment about 40 Years after. As to the Power of the Keys, ſaid Lambert, the Power by which Men are loos'd from Sin, is not the Prieſt's Power. Solus Deus remittit peccata, ſays Lambert; God only forgives Sins: Neither doth the Miniſtry of the Prieſt any whit avail to looſe any Perſon, unleſs he that ſhould be looſed has his Belief in the Word of God. 'Twere to be wiſh'd, that the Archdeacon laſt mention'd, or any other ſuch Orthodox Archdeacon, would own as much as this bleſſed Man Lambert did, the Miniſtry of the Prieſt availeth nothing. For it is commonly aſſerted, when the Matter is in Debate, that it availeth every thing As if the Abſolution in our Church-Service was like the binding in the Popiſh Sacrament of Matrimony, either Marriage or Fornication according to the Intention of the Prieſt. Of the Hierarchy the holy Lambert ſaid, and what he ſaid he ſeal'd with his Blood; Nothing ſo cuſtomable as thoſe to be called Prieſts, Presbyteri, who are ſet to be Prelates in the Church. And Prieſts thus called Presbyteri in the Primitive Church, when there were but few Traditions and Ordinances to lead us from the ſtrait Inſtitution made by Chriſt, were the very ſame, and none other but Biſhops, as I have ſhewn you by the Authority of St. Jerom. Paul alſo ſhews the ſame in the firſt to Titus, where you may ſee that a Prieſt called Presbyter, ſhould be the ſame that we call a Biſhop. Many of the The Church Prieſts that do miniſter now are elect by Biſhops, explain'd. otherwiſe than after the Manner of Chriſt's Inſtitution, and the Form of the Primitive Church. Was it not preach'd by a certain Doctor of Divinity in London, That the Church is nothing elſe but the Congregation of faithful People? You all are of the Church, as well as I or any other, if you be of God. Let us now conſider a little, what a vaſt Difference there is between a Miniſter ſpeaking the Sentiments of his Soul before his Perſecutors, environ'd with Racks and Fire, and another haranging an Audience in Hopes of Benefit and Preferment. What ſurer Way can a young Divine take to be preferr'd, than to court and flatter thoſe that can prefer him. And how hard is it for worldly Minds to give up their Pretenſions to the Things of this World? This Difference conſider'd, what Weight will there be found in every Word of our ſuffering Saint; how light will the Sophiſtry of intereſted and ambitious Men be in the Balance againſt it? And how natural then is this Reflection, That the latter in forcing ſcrupulous Conſciences to ſubſcribe to their Injunctions without Warrant from Scripture, are chargeable with all the Miſeries which have been occaſion'd by it? I hope the Reader will now perceive, that this Introductory Hiſtory is not at all foreign to the Reigns of the Houſe of Stuart. We ſhall therefore continue it a little farther.

Contrary to St. Paul, St. Jerom, Frith, Lambert, and all the holy Martyrs before-mention'd, the hiſtorical Archdeacon aſſures us, the Beginnings of Presbytery were after a ſchiſmatical Manner in Queen Elizabeth's Reign; and thoſe who ſuffer'd for it, deſerv'd the ſevere Perſecution they met with: It ariſing only from the Offence taken by Mr. Cart-

Mr. Cartwright of Cambridge, for that the Queen did not take ſo much Notice of him as he expected.

To the above Authorities I might add that of Dr. Barnes of Cambridge, thirty Years before Cartwright was heard of there; Mr. Jerom Miniſter of Stepney, Mr. Garret Miniſter of Honey-Lane; all Three Martyrs in the Year 1541. A. Wood calls Garret a forward, buſy Man. And indeed that Oxonian has hardly a good Word for any of thoſe holy Sufferers, who dy'd for the Goſpel in the bloody Reign of Queen Mary. Witneſs what he ſays of pious Biſhop Farrar, who was burnt at Carmarthen: One may eaſily perceive, that having a Woman to his Wife, was the chief Motive that drew him to the Proteſtant Religion, to which one may eaſily perceive, the Univerſity he was a Member of muſt needs be good Friends, by their permitting ſuch infamous Scandal to paſs with Impunity.

Wood the Oxonian, a Hater of Reformation.

We have ſhewn what was the Opinion of the moſt Learned and moſt Religious Men in King Henry the VIIIth's Time, with reference to the then Hierarchy; and there is no room to doubt of their Deſire to carry the Reformation farther than Dr. Laud and his Brethren wou'd have had it. Which Deſire of theirs was as earneſt among the Laity, among the Nobles, and among the People, encourag'd by the Countenance of two Queens, Queen Anne Bulleyn and Queen Katherine Parr; the Duke of Suffolk, the Earl of Hertford, the Earl of Bedford, the Earl of Huntington, the Lord Cromwel, the Lord Parr, the Lord Liſle, Sir Thomas Cardine, Sir Ralph Sadler, Sir Philip Hobby, Sir Anthony Denny, Sir George Blague, and many Lords and Gentlemen of the Court; as alſo many Court Ladies, as the Dutcheſs of Suffolk, the Counteſs of Suſſex, the Counteſs of Hertford, Lady Herbert, Lady Lane, Lady Tyrwhit, and others; whom I remember, to ſhew that the Friends to the Reformation at home, according to the Reformation abroad, were not of the Dregs of the People only, as they are miſrepreſented by ſome Eccleſiaſtical Writers; not a factious fanatical Rout only, but of the moſt honourable, as well as the moſt knowing. And what Deference was due to the Sentiments of ſuch a Party, founded on Scripture and the Practice of the Primitive Church, will be conceiv'd by all conſcientious and ſober Men.

The Origin of the Troubles in England.

Inſtead of this, the rigid Prieſthood ſtickled always for preſerving the old Mumpſimus, as King Henry VIII. called it, and furiouſly perſecuted all that would not comply with them; which, in truth, occaſion'd that ill Blood, and thoſe Diſtempers, that have been ſo troubleſome and dangerous to both Church and State.

Full. Ch. Hiſt. 403.

In the Reign of King Edward VI. thoſe that oppos'd the then Hierarchy and Ceremonies appear'd more openly, and ſpoke more directly. Hooper, nam'd to the Biſhoprick of Glouceſter, refus'd to wear the Epiſcopal Veſtments at his Conſecration; and the Earl of Warwick wrote a Letter to the Archbiſhop of Canterbury to diſpenſe with him in it; but it cou'd not be obtain'd, till the King himſelf commanded that certain Rites and Ceremonies, offenſive to his Conſcience, might be diſpens'd with. The Reaſons given by this godly Biſhop and Martyr, and thoſe other Divines of his Opinion, are in Fuller's Church Hiſtory, and prove that they did not think the Work of the Reformation compleat. Latimer, another holy Martyr, who had been depriv'd of his Biſhoprick of Worceſter for Non-Compliance with the Six Articles in the former Reign, would not be reſtor'd to his See, nor accept of any other Character than that of a Preacher. Fuller informs us, that the Diſlikers of the Liturgy in this Reign became a potent Party, bearing themſelves high on the Judgment of Calvin in a Letter to the Duke of Somerſet, then Lord Protector; which is all I am contending for. There was a great Number of ſincere, pious Proteſtants, who thought, as the laſt mention'd Hiſtorian obſerves, there was too much of the Serpent, and nothing of the Dove, to offend thoſe within to invite thoſe without to the Church, driving Proteſtants thence to draw Papiſts thither. Which was the Advice of Archbiſhop Cranmer, Biſhop Ridley, and other good Biſhops, who however were very far from eſtabliſhing their Religion by High Commiſſion Courts, and a Laudean Perſecution. P. 426.

Among the many Errors, ſome of Malice, ſome of Weakneſs, which contributed to the Loſs of the little Reputation Archdeacon Echard's Hiſtories once had, there is none more obvious and ill-grounded than where he boldly affirms, that the Riſe of Presbytery in England was owing to a Pique of Mr. Cartwright of Cambridge, becauſe Queen Elizabeth did not give him ſo much Money, nor look ſo ſmilingly upon him, as ſhe did on Mr. Preſton, ſix or ſeven Years after Epiſcopacy was eſtabliſh'd. Thence he, the Lord Clarendon, and other Hiſtorians of the ſame Stamp, take all Occaſions to charge thoſe who preſs'd for a thorough Reformation, with Love of Novelties. Whereas it is plain from the Writings of good Churchmen, that ſuch a Reformation was inſiſted upon before any Eſtabliſhment was made in Edward the VIth's Reign.

Dr. Fuller, ſpeaking of the Times 26 Years before Echard's Æra of the Riſe of Presbytery, writes thus: Come we now to the ſaddeſt Difference that ever happen'd in the Church of England; if we conſider either the Time, how long it continu'd, the eminent Perſons therein engag'd, or the doleful Effects thereby produc'd about Matters of Conformity. The Struggle between Purity and Ceremony began with the Reformation, according to Dr. Fuller; and not after its Eſtabliſhment, according to Archdeacon Echard. It was carry'd on, not according to him, by Mr. Cartwright, and ſuch obſcure Perſons as Button and Benſon, but by Perſons of Eminence, according to Dr. Fuller, who repreſents both Parties openly driving on different Intereſts under their reſpective Patrons: Not of the Vulgar, as Mr. Echard affirms; for they were not able to patronize any thing. He could not but know ſo much of Hiſtory as this; and therefore his Endeavours to aſperſe the Memory of thoſe eminent Perſons, ſome of whom we ſhall particularly name in this Introduction, are equally vain, malicious, and unwarrantable. Ch. Hiſt. 401.

If it is true, that thoſe of the Reform'd, who were for carrying the Work farther, were encourag'd and confirm'd in their Sentiments and Zeal by the Principles and Practices of foreign Proteſtants, and deſir'd only of their Opponents, if they would not hear them, to hear the Apoſtles; Who then ought to be charged with the Oppoſition and the Miſchiefs of it? Thoſe Reformers, who were for leaving nothing in the Church, which Scripture had not left there; or thoſe who were for leaving in it ſo many things, not left by Scripture, to tempt the Papiſts to conform to it; which was the beſt Reaſon at that time given for it? Fuller mentions ſome of thoſe things, as Surplices, Ornaments, &c. 'Twas ſaid they were indifferent; that they were neceſſary to Church Unity; that ſome decent Correſpondence with the Papiſts ſhou'd be continu'd; that removing them wou'd caſt a Slur on the Biſhops who had us'd them; and that ſtubborn Wills ought not to be indulg'd. Dr. Fuller gives us to underſtand, that this was all that was, or cou'd be ſaid for them; and what this all is, when put in the Scale againſt what was ſaid by the Reformers, will, we fear, be found to be very light in the Balance. The latter urg'd, The beſt thing that can be ſaid of them is, they are uſeleſs; otherwiſe they wou'd be ridiculous and ſuperſtitious. That grant them indifferent, left ſo by Divine Wiſdom, it was Preſumption in Man to ſtamp Neceſ-ſity upon them. That as to bringing over the Papiſt, it had too much of the SERPENT in it, nothing of the DOVE, to offend thoſe within, to invite thoſe without, driving Proteſtants out to draw Papiſts in; that the Credit of the Biſhops was not to be preſerv'd by deſtroying the Conſciences of others. As to the laſt, about indulging ſtubborn Wills, 'tis the Beginning of the Sophiſtry of the perſecuting Spirit. They firſt ſuppoſe the Conſciences of thoſe religious Perſons are not ſcrupulous; in a word, that they are Hypocrites and Idiots; and having arbitrarily determin'd their Wills to be ſtubborn, they give Judgment againſt a Toleration. Good Biſhop Hooper, who probably drew up the Anſwer to the notable Reaſons for Ornaments and Ceremonies, cloſes with this: I put myſelf on the Trial of the Searcher of Hearts, that no Obſtinacy, but mere Conſcience made me refuſe the Ornaments. It is pretended, that foreign Proteſtants diſapprov'd of the Oppoſition their Brethren in England gave to the Eſtabliſhment. This Pretence has not prevail'd much; the contrary being as well known, as that there are two ſuch Places as Rome and Geneva. However, ſince the Lord Digby ſaid in Parliament, That to his Knowledge the Government of the Church of England was admir'd by the moſt Learned of the Reformed Churches abroad, I will repeat Part of a Letter written by the Church of Geneva to their Brethren in England, in Anſwer to ſome Queſtions ſent thither by the latter. 'Twas dated the 24th of October 1559, and ſign'd by Beza, Coladon, Calvet, Dupleix, Simler, and others; wherein they ſay among other things, They do in God's moſt holy Name, and with Tears, beſeech thoſe who have ſucceeded in the Place of the Popiſh Biſhops, utterly to deſtroy that Tyranny, which hath caſt headlong the very Church. And tho' they were cautious of naming the Eſtabliſhment, they ſpeak broadly enough about it. But ſome will ſay, How ſhall we do in this Point? "Verily, if the Caſe was "ours, we wou'd not receive the Miniſtry upon "theſe Conditions if it were proffer'd; a great "deal leſs would we ſue for it". As to Copes and Ornaments, they ſay, We therefore flatly reply, That thoſe Men who are Authors thereof, do deſerve moſt Evil of the Church, and ſhall anſwer at the dreadful Bar of Chriſt's Judgment. The ſame being polluted and defil'd with infinite Superſtition. Of the Croſs in Baptiſm, they declare, We judge thoſe Men to have done aſſuredly well, that have driven this Rite out of the Congregation. Of Kneeling at the Sacrament, they ſay, It hath a Shew of godly and Chriſtian Reverence; yet becauſe out of this Fountain the deteſtable Uſe of Bread-Worſhip follow'd, it ſeems to us that it was juſtly aboliſh'd. Theſe Geneva Divines give their Reaſons and Authorities for what they write; but it is ſufficient for me that they gave their Opinion, ſince I am not entering into the Controverſy. Father Orleans, the French Jeſuit, aſſures us, Calvin complain'd to Bucer, that all the Maſs was left in the Engliſh Liturgy, and adviſ'd Bucer not to conform to it. He adds: So great was the Deference paid to Calvin, that moſt of thoſe things he found fault with were put out of the Liturgy; and the Parliament approv'd of it. We ſee by this, that ſome things which Calvin complain'd of, were left ſtill in the Common-Prayer Book; and the Reformation was ſo far from going forward afterwards, that Queen Elizabeth, ſays the Jeſuit, who lov'd Ceremonies, reſtor'd what had been ſtruck out. The Calviniſts then made a great Stir, but being as yet weak in England, there was little Regard had to their Complaints: Which is true enough. But it is as true, that a great Stir was made, at the firſt opening of the Reformation, for perfecting that Work, as Mr. Cartwright propos'd; and that Mr. Echard's aſſerting that Presbytery ow'd its Riſe to him, is equally partial, falſe, and abſurd; as is the Charge againſt him and his Brethren, that they were for Novelties in Diſcipline and Worſhip; which I cou'd eaſily prove, was this a Place for Debate; and was it not ſo well done already in the before-mention'd excellent Treatiſe, entitul'd, An Enquiry, &c.

Ruſhw. Part iii. 171.

In the cruel Reign of Queen Mary, moſt of the Martyrs were of the ſame Judgment with the Proto-Martyr Rogers, with Bradford, Samuel, Careleſs, Philpot, &c. The latter acknowledg'd before the Prelates, That the Church of Geneva was a true Catholick Church; and it was ever deem'd ſo, till Laud and his Brethren deſerted the Reformation, and endeavour'd to erect a Papal Tyranny. What do the Laudeans think of the Proteſtant Exiles in Germany, Geneva, Swiſſerland, and other Parts of Europe, during that terrible Perſecution, worſe than thoſe of Nero and Dioclefian? The Heathen then deſtroying the Chriſtians; who were now deſtroy'd by the Profeſſors of Chriſtianity; ſuch as Bonner, Gardiner, Brooks, Chriſtopherſon, Capon, Baines, Cotes, Morgan, all Brethren of the Popiſh Hierarchy; who did not ſtrain its Prerogatives more than Whitgift, Bancroft, and ſuch Sort of Prelates, before the Civil War, and after the Reſtoration.

Tho' many Worthy Fathers of our Church had at times accepted, as well as refus'd the Epiſcopal Dignity; they were well known to be Favourers of the Presbytery, and deſirous of a Conformity with the Reformed Churches in thoſe Parts where they had taken ſhelter: Of which Fuller writes thus; Thoſe that fled hence beyond the Seas, living in Cities of popular Reformation, ſuck'd in both the Air and Diſcipline of the Place they liv'd in, and renounc'd all Ceremonies, &c. No body, as has been often hinted, renounc'd them, according to Echard, till Cartwright came from Geneva many Years after. P. 404.

Proteſtant Biſhops in England before Laud's Time.

The moſt Pious and moſt Eſteem'd of the firſt Proteſtant Biſhops were Men of ſo much Moderation, that had the Sees of England been always fill'd with ſuch Prelates, there wou'd have been no more Controverſy about Eccleſiaſtical Government. Had Queen Elizabeth, otherwiſe a moſt Wiſe and Generous Princeſs, been leſs devoted to the Pomp and Grandeur of Religion, and more moderate in the Adminiſtration of her Supremacy; had not Biſhop Parker ſo ſoon forgot the Miſeries of her Siſter's Reign, and Biſhop Whitgift not rais'd a Perſecution of another Kind in her own, there wou'd have been no Separatiſts, no Diſſenters, no Diviſion, no Diſturbance, and none of thoſe Troubles, which prov'd ſo fatal to the Royal Houſe of Stuart. That Great Queen liv'd long enough to have eſtabliſh'd Purity and Peace in the Church, if the Counſels of rigid and bigotted Prelates had not driven the moſt conſcientious Men out of it.

As renown'd a Writer of Hiſtory as Mr. Echard is, he ſurely never heard of ſuch Men as Mr. Leaver, Mr. David Whitehead, Mr. Gilpin, Mr. Gilby, Mr. Crowley, Mr. Kingſmil, Mr. Withers, Mr. Huntington, Mr. Eaton, Mr. Sutton, Mr. Kelke, Mr. Fox, Mr. Kent, Mr. Kethe, Mr. Wood, Mr. Stanton, Mr. Cole, Mr. Chambers, Mr. Walton, Mr. Williams, Mr. Spencer, Mr. Whetnal, Mr. Mullings, Mr. Karvile, and a great Number of Divines more, moſt of whom were Fugitives at Zurich, Frankfort, and other foreign Cities. Were none of theſe Brethren of the Presbytery before Queen Elizabeth's Conformity Act? Let us ſee only what was the Form of Diſcipline and Worſhip eſtabliſh'd by the Engliſh Church at Frankfort, in the Year 1555, long before Mr. Echard allows there were any Objections to the Eſtabliſhment in England.

They choſe a Miniſter and Deacons for a Time only; they concluded, that the anſwering aloud after the Miniſter ſhould not be uſed.

To omit the Litany, Surplice, and other Ceremonies in Service and Sacraments, as ſuperfluous and ſuperſtitious.

A new Confeſſion of more Effect. Pſalms, &c.

Dr. Fuller ſays, they were a true Communion of Saints, who invited, by Letters, their fellow Sufferers to partake of it. The Doctor muſt certainly be out, when he tells us, the Exiles at Zurick excuſed themſelves on account of the Engliſh Common-Prayer, from which they were reſolv'd not to recede. Were Humphry, Chambers, Leaver, &c. ſo zealous for the Liturgy, as to break off Chriſtian Communion with their Proteſtant Brethren, rather than conform to the Service of the Church at Frankfort?

I need not here repeat the great Names of Bucer, Fagius, Oecolampadius, Martyr, Zwinglius, Calvin, Bullenger, Pellican, Bibliander, Simler, Zanchy, Golphius, Gualter, Lavater, Junius, Tremellius, and the Heads of the Reformation on the Continent. They are all well known to have erected their Churches on the Geneva Foundation; and if ſome Lutheran Dioceſes retained their Biſhops, they were but few in Number, and not of the like Eſteem in the Proteſtant World.

I do not repeat what Calvin wrote to the Engliſh Divines at Frankfort, concerning the Common-Prayer, out of Diſregard to it, or in Approbation of his Judgment; but to ſhew how vain thoſe Writers are, who pretend that no Men of Learning or Note ever objected againſt it, till it was paſs'd into a Law. I ſee, ſaid Calvin, there are many tolerable fooliſh Things. By theſe Words I mean, there is not that Purity which were to be deſir'd, &c. Then allowing that it might have been at firſt tolerated for a Seaſon, he adds, It behoves the Learned, Grave, and Godly Miniſters of Chriſt, to enterprize further, and to ſet forth ſomething more filed from Ruſt, and purer. This further enterprizing, is what Archdeacon Echard, and many other Archdeacons, have treated as a ſeditious whimſical Buſineſs, which never enter'd into the Heads of ſober, orthodox Men; and when it did, was the Effect of Diſtemper and Sedition, which deſerved to be ſuppreſs'd by Power and Puniſhment.

Had the Hiſtorian dealt with us as ingenuouſly, as might be expected from his Function and Character, inſtead of telling us, that a few nameleſs Fanaticks ſet up Presbytery ſix Years after Queen Elizabeth's Acceſſion to the Throne, he wou'd have told us, that as ſoon as there was a Talk of re-eſtabliſhing the Reformation, there were great Endeavours us'd to eſtabliſh the Presbyterian Diſcipline, and correct the Liturgy. Miles Coverdale, who had been Biſhop of Exeter, refus'd to accept again of the Epiſcopal Charge. Bernard Gilpin, the northern Apoſtle, did the ſame by the Biſhoprick of Carliſle, as the above-mentioned David Whitehead did by the Archbiſhoprick of Canterbury. But the Diſpoſition of the Queen, who was mightily taken with the Show and Shine of the Romiſh Church, with their Forms and Ceremonies, encourag'd ſome of the Prelates, who, no doubt alſo had the Dignities and Revenues in eſpecial Conſideration, to ſtickle for as much of all of them as cou'd be procur'd. However, while every one enjoy'd the Liberty of his own Thoughts, without ſubſcribing to the Thoughts of other Men, there was no Separation from the national Church, as has been already obſerv'd: And happy had it been, if the Jealouſy of thoſe Prelates, leſt the firſt Reformers ſhou'd preſs further, had not put them upon procuring Articles, Canons, and Statutes, to compel the Conſciences of ſcrupulous Proteſtants, who were then oblig'd to declare their Nonconformity, and worſhip God in their own Way.

No ſooner were the Thirty-nine Articles paſt in Convocation, but, ſays Fuller, the Biſhops, conceiving themſelves impower'd by their Canons, began to ſhow their Authority, in urging the Clergy of their Dioceſes to ſubſcribe to the Liturgy, Ceremonies, and Diſcipline of the Church: and ſuch as refus'd, the ſame were branded with the odious Name of Puritans, as a Company of Hypocrites, who pretended to more Purity than others. But Fuller does them the Juſtice to add, Some of them were ſo far from oppoſing the Liturgy, that they endeavoured, according to the Inſtructions thereof in the Preparative to the Confeſſion, to accompany the Miniſter with a pure Heart. But prophane Men quickly improv'd this Nick-name, therewith to abuſe pious People.

P. 76.

Puritan, whence the Name.

Ib. 16.

One of the firſt that was called to an Account by Authority of the Canons, was that eminent Confeſſor, and learned and laborious Antiquary, Mr. John Fox, Author of the Martyrology, who was ſummon'd by Archbiſhop Parker to ſubſcribe, that the general Reputation of his Piety, might give the greater Countenance to Conformity. Father Fox, as Queen Elizabeth us'd to call him, produc'd a New Teſtament in Greek, and ſaid, to this I will ſubſcribe; and the Canons being offer'd him, he refus'd Subſcription, ſaying, I have nothing in the Church, ſave a Prebend at Salisbury, and much good may it do you, if you will take it from me. However, there was not then Courage enough among the Perſecutors, to exerciſe their Severity on a Divine of ſo much Piety and Merit. But the ſummoning him to do a Thing againſt his Conſcience, when Smithfield was ſtill warm with the Aſhes of thoſe Fires that had ſo lately burnt their Brethren, and when they cou'd not but know, that Mr. Fox underſtood the Matter much better than themſelves, is a deplorable Inſtance of the bitter Spirit of Perſecution; the Fury of which, if accompanied with Power, may be likened to a Sword in the Hands of a Man who is both mad and blind: An Image which is always preſent to me, when I read ſuch Hiſtories as that of Bancroft, Laud, &c.

P. 16. Fox perſecuted.

We muſt not think that theſe Canons, and this Conformity, met with no Oppoſition but from a few ſcrupulous Divines; the moſt leading Members of both Houſes of Parliament, fell in with thoſe who were for indulging their Scruples, and, as Calvin ſaid, enterprizing further in reforming Church-Diſcipline and Worſhip. To name ſome of them:

The Lord Keeper Bacon.	Lord Howard.

Biſhop Jewel.	Dean Nowel.
Biſhop Parkhurſt.	Dean Sampſon.
Biſhop Bentham.	Dean Haines.
Biſhop Alley.	Dean Whitingham.
	Dean Humphreys.
	Archdeacon Renniger.

And

And a great Number of other ſuch illuſtrious Names, who, tho' they conform'd to the national Church, abhorr'd Perſecution for Conſcience ſake, and were always willing to hearken to any Propoſitions for promoting Reformation, Purity, Charity, and Peace. We read ſomething particular of Dr. Nowel Dean of St. Paul's, in the Sermon preach'd by Dr. Abbot, afterwards Biſhop of Sarum, at Oxford; of which, Mention will hereafter be again made; and there being ſome Reflections in it on that ſtupid and wicked Saying, ſo common in the Mouths of Country Curates and Foxhunters, I had rather be a Papiſt than a Presbyterian, I will repeat it entire. Now for this Speech, that the Presbyterians are as bad as the Papiſts; There is a Sting in it which I wiſh had been left out; for there are many Churches beyond the Seas, which contend for the Religion eſtabliſhed among us, which yet have approved and admitted the Presbytery; and this is to make them as bad as the Papiſts. Beſides, there have lived among us, long before Echard's Æra, many reverend and worthy Men, who have not rejected the Presbytery, taking it even for Lay-Elders. Dr. Nowel, late Dean of Paul's, in his larger Catechiſm, p. 29 and 71. affirms, That in every well govern'd Church, there was a Presbytery; and yet this Catechiſm, by the late reverend Archbiſhop of Canterbury, was commanded to be had in every Grammar School; which ſurely he wou'd not have done, if the Presbyterians were as bad as the Papiſts.

Mr. Morrice, one of the above-mentioned Gentlemen, Attorney of the Dutchy of Lancaſter, mov'd in Parliament for a Bill againſt the hard Courſes of Biſhops; 'tis Heylin who ſays it, againſt Ordinaries, and other eccleſiaſtical Courts, and proſecuting of learned and godly Miniſters and Preachers; againſt Oaths and Subſcriptions. The Act was ready drawn, as was alſo another Act againſt Impriſonment for Refuſal of Oaths. But Mr. Coke, afterwards Sir Edward Coke the Speaker, was ſent for, and admoniſhed not to admit of any ſuch Bills; which wou'd certainly have paſt the Houſe of Commons, and was at that Time the Senſe of the Nation. Other Parliaments made ſeveral Attempts to accompliſh ſo pious a Work; but the Protection of the Queen gave the more rigid Prelates a Majority, tho' her Miniſters were very ready to take off the Edge of their Rigor, which was ſo deſtructive to the publick Tranquility, as appears by the Lord Treaſurer Burleigh's, and the Lords of the Privy Council's Letters to Dr. Whitgift Archbiſhop of Canterbury, who firſt diſtinguiſh'd himſelf by Perſecution in a Proteſtant Church: Biſhop Parker, tho' rigid enough, ſetting Bounds to his Rigor; whereas Whitgift's was only reſtrained by the Laws.

The pious Lectures, and holy Lives of the Puritan Miniſters, made them very popular, and the Bent of the People was viſibly on their Side: To deſtroy which, the Prelates of Whitgift's Spirit tyranniz'd in the High-Commiſſion Court; and by means of that Archbiſhop's long Poſſeſſion of the Metropolitan Chair, there was ſo much Oppreſſion in eccleſiaſtical Government, that it created a general Diſatisfaction among all ſober Men in the Nation. Such another Prelate as Archbiſhop Grindal might probably have reſtored Peace to the Church, and quieted the Minds of the Diſcontented. And ſuch another might have been expected from the Education and Wiſdom of King James I. if his Wiſdom had really been ſo conſummate as his Flatterers, eſpecially among the Clergy, repreſented it.

We muſt now look back into the Affairs of Scotland, from whence we had our Kings of the Royal Houſe of Stuart. The firſt of them, King James, was of the very ſame Religion with that of the Puritans in England; excepting that it was ſtill more pure in the worſt Senſe of the Word. A Scotch Author will ſet this Matter in its true Light:

Mem. Ch. Scot. p. 2. "When King Henry the VIIIth aboliſh'd the Pope's "Supremacy, his Principle at that Time being ra-"ther politick than religious, he ſet his own Au-"thority up in the ſtead of it, calling himſelf Su-"preme Head of the Church in all Things, whe-"ther Eccleſiaſtical or Civil; a Thing ſince made "very ill uſe of, and improv'd to a Tyranny, "which neither in the Divine Original of it, cou'd "find any legal Foundation. When King Edward "VI. rejected the Pontificate of Rome, he erected "a Proteſtant Pontificate in its ſtead; which be-"ing oppoſed by ſome of the moſt eminent for "Piety and Wiſdom in the Reformation, quickly "begot a Diviſion in the Church."

This is too true, and too well known, to need more Words, how induſtriouſly ſoever ſome artful Perſons, whoſe Function ſhould teach them Simplicity and Sincerity, endeavour to diſguiſe it, and make us believe, that not the Noble and the Wiſe, the Sober and the Learned, but if any, which they hardly grant, the Ignorant and Obſcure, the Diſtemper'd and Illiterate, made the Oppoſition.

Duke Hamilton was at the Head of the Reformation in Scotland, where the Reformers went thorough with their Work at once; and it is well they did, for one may perceive by the Difficulties they met with in accompliſhing and preſerving it, that had they ſtop'd where the Engliſh did, they wou'd never have been able to go further afterwards: For even in Scotland, where Presbyterian Government was at firſt eſtabliſh'd, ſome Superintendents retain'd the Title of Biſhops, and the Title prevail'd generally in the ſeveral Dioceſes, after King James was advanced to the Throne in the Life-time of his Mother, the hereditary Poſſeſſor of it; yet they had no more Eccleſiaſtical Authority than Miniſters, being equally ſubjected to the Presbytery, Synod, and Aſſembly; and the Superintendency was under all the eſſential Articles of a Parity. This Subjection of Superintendents and Biſhops to the Preſbytery, was, with other Church Polity, regulated in their general Aſſemblies, and ſign'd by the greateſt Part of the Nobility and Gentry, before it had a Civil Sanction. Fourteen Years after, under the Regency of the Earl of Mar, there was an Attempt to reſtore the Government of Biſhops; which, ſays my Author, was brought in by the Head and Shoulders; but ſo fetter'd and ſhackled with Limitation of Power and Caſtration of Stipends, that there was little in it more than there was before in the Miniſters, who were called Superintendents, the Name and Dignities excepted; as appears by the Reſolution of the Aſſembly of the Kirk, A. D 1575. Biſhops ſhall not appoint Miniſters of the Province, nor Elders and Deacons, without the Peoples Conſent. The Archbiſhop of Glaſgow, the Biſhops of Dunkeld, Galloway, Brechen, Dumblaine, and the Iſles, were Members of this Aſſembly; and Archbiſhop Spotſwood, tho' a partial Writer on the Side of Prelacy, owns, Thoſe Biſhops did not ſo much as open their Mouths againſt this Reſolution. Two Years after it was ordain'd, That all Biſhops, and all other Eccleſiaſticks, be call'd by their own Names or Brethren only: Which Act was to continue, ſays Calderwood, till the Corruption of the State of Biſhops be utterly remov'd out of the Church. The next Year, in an Aſſembly at Sterling, the ſame Law was made perpetual, and all Biſhops then elected, were required to ſubmit. Thus, ſays the Memoir Writer, That Infant Mongrel Epiſcopacy, ſo it was then called, was voted out of the Church as a Nuſance. Yet in almoſt all our orthodox Writers, we are aſſur'd, that Presbytery, even in Scotland, is a novel Diſcipline, and that at the Reformation Biſhops were originally eſtabliſh'd in that Church: Nay, this Opinion is ſo univerſally receiv'd, that I queſtion whether there is one in an hundred of our Eſtabliſhment, but who thinks Presbytery an Innovation in the Kirk: I do not ſay of the bigotted Prieſthood only, I mean it of the Laity alſo, ſuch as the before-mentioned Sanderſon, a Writer much much admir'd and follow'd by Archdeacon Echard: Let any Hiſtorian tell me, ſays he, when, and how they ſtarted into ſuch a ſincere Reformation, as to have no Biſhops, as many wou'd pretend. You ſee how boldly he defies Calderwood, and every one of the Kirk Writers. Indeed he, and his Brother Authors, are the ſtouteſt Champions that ever enter'd a Liſt, when there is no Body to oppoſe them: But with all his Stoutneſs, his Parts and Credit are ſo ſmall, that he is not worth taking notice of. The Temper of this worthy Gentleman, and his Fellow-Labourers, is ſeen in the next Page or two, where he tells us, that Reverend Divine Mr. Gilby, before ſpoken of, of Chriſt's-College Cambridge, a Confeſſor for the Proteſtant Religion, and an Exile at Geneva, was gone to the Devil. This is the ſame learned Gilby, who is ſo highly commended by Biſhop Bale, his Companion in Baniſhment for the Truth of the Goſpel.

Calderwood, p. 86.

In the Year 1580, the Aſſembly of the Kirk paſs'd an Act, entirely abrogating the Office of a Biſhop, as unſcriptural, and having no Warrant or Foundation in the Word of God, but, in the Words of the Act, as brought in by the Folly and Corruption of Mens Invention.

I am not myſelf at all concerned in this Debate. My Intention is only to relate the plain Matter of Fact, and leave the Reflections to the Reader. I might add, that I do not think there is ſo great Streſs to be laid upon Church-Government, either as to Biſhops or Presbyters, as to juſtify a Diviſion about it among Proteſtants; and that the Law is the jus & norma, the Right and the Rule in this Caſe as well as others. But ſince every one cannot think in this manner, the Blame lies on thoſe who wou'd force other Men to do what they wou'd have them, tho' againſt their Conſcience; and rather than not impoſe their Non-Eſſentials on thoſe who agree with them in the Eſſentials of Religion, wou'd ſet the two Nations in a Flame; which they have done more than once ſince the Reformation.

K. James I. bred a Presbyterian.

'Tis evident, that King James I. of England, and VI. of Scotland, was bred up in that Kirk, tho' he had been baptiz'd by the Popiſh Archbiſhop of St. Andrews, who was hang'd for murdering his Father the Lord Darnly. 'Tis true, the Example of his Mother, and many of his Courtiers, gave him too favourable an Opinion of Popery; yet it is ſuppos'd he took the main of his Diſguſt to Preſbytery, which was approv'd and often confirm'd by his Authority, purely on Account of ſome Reproof the Miniſters ſolemnly gave him with regard to his Morals. There was a Deputation ſent from the Aſſembly to the King, to admoniſh him, in the Name of the Eternal God, to have Reſpect, in time, to the Eſtate of true Religion, to the many Murders and Oppreſſions daily multiplied thro' Impunity and lack of Juſtice, and to diſcharge the kingly Office in both, as he will eſchew the fearful Challenge of God, and avert his Wrath off himſelf and the whole Land, &c. The King never forgave them this Freedom, yet ſo well diſſembled he his Zeal for the Presbyterian Diſcipline, that he made this formal Speech to the Aſſembly, taking off his Bonnet, and lifting up his Hands and Eyes to Heaven, I praiſe and thank God that I was born into the World at a Time when the Light of God's Word ſhone clearly forth, eclips'd neither with the Miſts of Ignorance, or the falſe Lights of Superſtition. I bleſs God that has honoured me to be a King over ſuch a Kirk, the ſincereſt Kirk in the World; which he repeated three times; and to ſtrengthen it, fell out into very warm Expreſſions againſt other Proteſtants: The Church of Geneva, What are they? They keep Paſche and Yule. What Authority have they in God's Word? and Where is their Inſtitution? As for our Neighbour Church in England, their Service is an evil-diſpoſed Maſs in Engliſh; they want nothing of the Maſs but the Liftings. I charge you, my gude People, turning himſelf to every Side of the Kirk, Miniſters, Doctors, Elders, Nobles, Barons, and Gentlemen, to ſtand to your Purity, and to exhort my People to do the ſame. And I, forſooth, as long as Life and Crown be left to me, ſhall maintain the ſame againſt all deadly. Upon which, the Hiſtorian tells us, there was nothing heard for a Quarter of an Hour in the Aſſembly, but praiſing God, and praying for the King, who was at this Time ſo zealous a Presbyterian, that when Mr. Udal and Mr. Cartwright, two eminent Non-conforming Miniſters, were furiouſly perſecuted by Whitgift Archbiſhop of Canterbury, the former being condemn'd to die, and the latter in Danger, King James wrote this Letter to Queen Elizabeth in their Behalf, before it came to Extremity. His Letter to Q. Elizabeth againſt Perſecution.

How does the Speech to the Aſſembly, agree with the Dialogue at the Hampton-Court Conference, where the King ſpoke againſt the Kirk, if you will believe Archbiſhop Whitgift, by the Spirit of God? And how does this Letter agree with his ſuffering Archbiſhop Bancroft to tread in the Steps of Whitgift, and ſilence and ruin many hundred Proteſtant Miniſters and others on Account of Conſcience only?

I do not delight ſo much in the Hiſtory of this Monarch, as to enter further into it than is neceſſary for the Hiſtory of England during his Reign; therefore, with reference to the Scottiſh Affairs, I ſhall only add, that upon the Kirk's excommunicating ſome Popiſh Lords, and others of the Spaniſh Faction, he took them into his Protection, to give a ſolid Inſtance of his Wiſdom and Piety. Thoſe Lords being charged with Idolatry, Hereſy, Blaſphemy, Apoſtacy, and Perjury; and the Aſſembly directing a new Admonition to the King, with Complaints of his Conduct, his perſonal Sins, and the Sins of his Family, it was as ill-reliſh'd as the former; and the King, to be reveng'd of them, never gave over till he procur'd the Title of Biſhops to be reſtor'd and given to ſuch Miniſters as were impower'd to give their Vote in Parliament. This Point being gain'd, and the King in Poſſeſſion of the Crown of England ſoon after, thoſe Biſhops daily encroach'd on the Privileges of the Presbytery, in which they were encourag'd by the King, to the great Diſſatisfaction of the Majority of the People, who, for about forty Years, had known no other Church Government but that of their Paſtors, in their Congregations and Aſſemblies.

Mem. Ch. Scot. 128, 132.

We have ſeen what was the Conſtitution of the Kirk, that it was on the Geneva Bottom; that King James I. was not only a zealous Member of it, but a Favourer of their Brethren the Puritans in England. We had ſeen before, that thoſe Puritans, being a numerous Body of Engliſh Proteſtants, earneſtly deſir'd a greater Conformity with the Church of Scotland. And we ſhall now ſee, that when the ſame King James became Monarch of Great-Britain, inſtead of ſtrengthening the Proteſtant Intereſt in both Nations, by an Eccleſiaſtical as well as political Union, he not only deſtroy'd the Conſtitution of the Kirk in his antient Kingdom, but protected the Prelates in perſecuting and ruining their Brethren of the Reformation in his new one; which fine Stroke of Politicks acquir'd him the glorious Title of a ſecond Solomon, from many of our moſt orthodox Writers: For that it cou'd not be with reſpect to his Conduct in State Matters Civil or Military, will appear in the Hiſtory.

A Scotchman tells us, that on the Sunday before he left Scotland to go for England, he made this Speech to the People in the great Church, As God hath promoted me to a greater Power, ſo I muſt endeavour to eſtabliſh Religion, and to take away Corruption in both the Countries. He promis'd to viſit them every three Years, that every one from the greateſt to the meaneſt, might have Acceſs to his Perſon; but, ſays my Author, he ſcarce ever perform'd one Word of it all.

Mem. Ch. Scot. p. 155.

Before I cloſe this Introduction, I muſt obſerve, that it was King James's Misfortune not to have been very well belov'd in his own Country, while he liv'd there. His Double-dealing with the Kirk, gave them a Diſreliſh of his Government, inſomuch, that they refus'd to give God Thanks for his Deliverance from Goury's Conſpiracy, which wou'd have been a moſt unchriſtian, as well as uncharitable Act, if they had believ'd it to be true. Their Anſwer was, Nothing ought to be deliver'd in the Pulpit, where the Truth was not well known. The Murder of the Earl of Murray by Huntley, was ſaid to be with his Conſent. Not only Biſhop Burnet, but almoſt all Authors, intimate as much; and the Death of that popular Lord remaining unpuniſh'd, made very ill Blood in Scotland.

M. S. J. M. F.

I have it from the beſt Authority, that this King, who tho' born of the handſomeſt Couple in Europe, was far from being handſome, conceiv'd a mortal Hatred againſt the Earl of Murray, for an Expreſſion of his Wife Queen Anne, who, looking out at at Window, and ſeeing that Lord entering the Court, ſaid, He was the handſomeſt Man ſhe ever ſaw. What, ſaid the King, handſomer than I? And then ſwore he wou'd have his Life. Accordingly, to uſe Biſhop Burnet's Terms, he ſet on the Marquis of Huntley, who was Murray's mortal Enemy, to murder him: and by a Writing all in his own Hand, he promis'd to ſave him harmleſs. Huntley ſet the Houſe, in which the Earl was, on Fire, and Murray, flying, was follow'd and murder'd. Soon after, all who were concern'd in that Fact, were pardon'd, which laid the King open to much Cenſure. And this made the Matter of Gowry to be the leſs believed. Huntley, the Murderer, thought to be as well with King Charles I. as he had been with his Father, and came to Whitehall in the firſt Year of his Reign; but that King wou'd not ſee him, having been inform'd what a baſe, barbarous Murder he had committed to pleaſe King James; upon which Huntley produc'd a Warrant under the King's own Hand for that Murder, and the Matter was huſh'd up. The Gordons have that Warrant ſtill in their Archives, tho' probably they are too good Catholicks to give one a ſight of it. Sir Edward Peyton miſtakes the Earl of Murray for one Mr. Stuart a Relation of that Earl's, and tells us, he haunted the Queen's Chamber too ſedulouſly, which bred ſuch a Jealouſy in King James, as to get the Marquis of Huntley to diſpatch Stuart out of the way, who burning his Houſe, &c. After whoſe Death the Queen found others. Such was the Prince of whom Archbiſhop Whitgift, a few Years after, ſaid, he was inſpir'd by the Spirit of God. If Mr. Echard had had the Eloquence and Perſuaſion of a Tully or a Salluſt, cou'd he have impos'd ſuch a King upon us as a Bleſſing to a Chriſtian Church, or have made any Church the more happy for having ſuch a Head? We have elſewhere prov'd his Hiſtory to be ſtuft with bold Aſſertions, Hearſays, Reports, and trifling Tales. He ſays all at once: We are not to give Credit to Buchanan's Account, who, to ingratiate himſelf with the Earl of Murray, wrote moſt ſcandalouſly againſt the Queen; of all which he earneſtly repented, and acknowledged before his Death. Every Word of which is as falſe as the falſeſt Tale in his Hiſtory; and we cannot ſay any thing worſe of it. Let the Reader obſerve his Tone here; We are not to give Credit; whereas, in truth, we are to give Credit to what Buchanan ſays. And tho' I was well ſatisfy'd before of the Arrogance and Falſhood of this Aſſertion, yet now there are a hundred Records publiſh'd, proving that Queen to have been concern'd in the Murder of her Husband, more plainly than any one Fact ever was prov'd, which was endeavoured to be kept ſecret; and it is given up even by Papiſts, and ſuch ſort of Clergy as T--p, Biſſe, Swift, &c. who were the more loth to part with it on account of her Son's great Favour to ſuch a ſort of Prieſthood; and they wou'd be aſham'd of it, if they had Shame in them. There are extant three Letters of hers to the Duke of Norfolk, wherein ſhe herſelf owns that ſhe was acceſſary to the Death of her Husband: How then is it poſſible that Buchanan ſhou'd, at his Death, repent of having told the Truth, and die with a Lie in his Mouth, as he muſt do, if he ſaid ſhe was not? Buchanan, Lib. 18. Fol. 895. ſays, Cum ad ſecundum aciem perveniſſet concors ab omnibus clamor ſublatus eſt, ut meretricem ut Parricidam cremarent, erat in Militare quodam vexillo depictus Henricus Rex Mortuus, & juxta Filius Infans vindictam Parricidii adeo expoſcens. Id Signum duo Milites inter duas haſtas diſtentum quoque ſe verteret, ob oculos ei objiciebant. The Queen having "ſurrender'd herſelf to the Lords; the ſecond Line "of the Army us'd her very barbarouſly when "ſhe came among them, and cry'd out, a Har"lot, a Parricide, let us ſlay her; bearing in their "Standard the Picture of the murder'd King, and "his little Son lying by him, and diſplaying it be"fore her wherever ſhe turn'd her Eyes." This Fact, which Buchanan repented of telling, was, it ſeems, ſo well known, that the Soldiers carry'd about the Picture of it in their Colours. Buchanan, in another Place, aſſures us, She had before that given him Poiſon, which working before its Time, broke out all over his Body, and ſo Nature expell'd it. Whoever will give himſelf the Trouble to caſt an Eye on Anderſon's Collection of Records, where thoſe that are for her are printed, as well as thoſe that are againſt her, he will preſently be convinc'd ſhe was ſo wicked as to encourage Bothwel in his unlawful Love to her during her Husband's Life-time, and to encourage Norfolk in the like unlawful Love during the Life-time of Bothwel: And that what is ſaid of her lewd Commerce with Rizio the Italian Fidler, is too well grounded to be thrown by as a Fable. Father Orleans the Jeſuit, who does not a little flatter this King for ſuffering the Laws to be broken in favour of the Papiſts, owns, that the Concern Mary Queen of Scots was in at the ſight of Rizio's Murder, affected her Son then unborn ſo much, that 'twas the Cauſe of his Cowardice. Yet Echard, very piouſly, makes a Panegyrick on her ſingular Piety, out of Complement to her pious Son, for renouncing and perſecuting the Proteſtant Church he was bred in. If ſuch Things as theſe are thought partial, I ſhall give Reaſon enough to the Reader to think me ſo: But as in this, and all other the like Caſes, I am ready to prove them to be true when call'd upon; ſo I ſhall not alter my Method out of Complacency to thoſe who cannot, or do not diſtinguiſh Partiality from Truth. It is very happy for the Lovers of Truth, that Mr. Anderſon liv'd long enough to collect and publiſh his Records, for he dy'd ſoon after; and all that Buchanan ſays of Mary Queen of Scots, is prov'd to Demonſtration by thoſe Records. Yet the French Jeſuit above-mention'd, who had never ſeen any other Authorities than the Writings of Papiſts, and Eccleſiaſticks popiſhly affected, poſitively aſſerts, That the Matter contain'd in the authentick Collection of Anderſon, which is the ſame Authority that Buchanan had, is falſe; and that Poſterity will ne- ver forgive King James the Lenity he ſhew'd to an inſignificant Fellow, the great Buchanan his Preceptor. This Jeſuit's notable Book is introduced into the Engliſh World, with a Reccommendation by LAURENCE ECHARD M. A. Archdeacon of Stow; as if he had not had Falſities enough to anſwer for in his own Hiſtories, but muſt needs adopt that Popiſh Prieſt's Hiſtory, which contains hardly any thing elſe but Falſhood from the Beginning to the End, as I have prov'd, and can prove beyond Exception.

The Tragical Hiſtory of K. James's Family.

Before King James I. left Scotland, the Miniſters had ſo great Influence, that the Nation had generally no great Affection for his Perſon; yet what he did for the Proteſtants, made the Papiſts jealous of his Favour to them: And having no Dependance on his Sincerity, their Loyalty and Love were as little to be depended upon. True it is, his Friendſhip to them was much leſs affected, than his Kindneſs to the Kirk. But he was naturally ſo timorous, that he never ventured upon Extremities towards either Party. Whatever Prince gives his Subjects Reaſon to believe he wants Courage, he will certainly find they want Fear; and that Monarch who is not eſteem'd, will ſurely never be belov'd: The neceſſary Conſequence of which, is Oppreſſion on one ſide, and Oppoſition on the other.

The Writers of this Reign keep no Meaſures in their Panegyricks. I hardly know one of them who ſeems to have had the Facts before him when he was forming K. James's Character. I will avoid Flattery and Prejudice alike, and foreſee, that with all my Care in expoſing the naked Truth from the moſt authentick Hiſtorians, who ſhall every where be named, I ſhall be condemn'd as partial, for not putting it in the ſame Light as our Eccleſiaſtical Writers have done: Some of whom, and ſome Lay Authors too, have not ſtuck, among other Encomiums, to extol the Piety of this Prince, ſo agreeable to the ſeveral Admonitions he receiv'd from the Clergy of the Church in which he was educated, and to thoſe Execrations and Prophanations of the Sabbath, which are the Complaint and Lamentation of the Times we are about to write of.

The Subject of the following Hiſtory, is not that of the Stuarts, but the Hiſtory of England during their Reign here; ſo I ſhall not enter into the Genealogy of that Houſe, nor trace them from Banco down to Elizabeth Mure, and from that Lady to King James I. King of Great-Britain. There are too many Tragedies in that Story, and the Facts are of too little Importance, and are not free enough from Barbariſm to render it entertaining.

Before the Stuart Line was heard of in that Kingdom, there had been a long Succeſſion of Kings, ſome of them brave and great, and others of them no better than the Poſterity of Elizabeth Mure. Of the bad Kings, Dardanus the 20th from Fergus, Romachus the 36th King, and Alpinus the 68th, were all beheaded; and of the Poſterity of Elizabeth Mure, her Son John Stuart, called Robert III. broke his Heart, and dy'd of voluntary Abſtinence and Sorrow; and his Son James was kill'd in his Wife's Arms, A. D. 1436. James II. was ſhot dead by his own Soldiers, A. D. 1460. James III. was kill'd in a Battle againſt the Confederate Lords, A. D. 1488. James IV. was ſlain by the Engliſh at the Battle of Flowden Field; James V. died of Grief after a Rout. His Daughter Mary Queen of Scots was beheaded; and her Son James I. of England, brought along with him the ill Conduct and ill Fate of his Family.

My Deſign is to ſhew how much the Condition of this Kingdom was alter'd by that Prince's Acceſſion to the Throne; and how he and his Poſterity, by hearkening to the Counſels of Minions and Bigots, made this once flouriſhing and famous Kingdom, a Scene of Miſery and Diſgrace. In order to do this, let us take a ſhort View of the glorious Reign of Queen Elizabeth, and conſider her as ſhe was the ſupream Head both of Church and State.

As ſhe was Head of the Church, tho' there were ſome Things in her Government which were exceptionable, yet her Zeal for the Proteſtant Religion was moſt exemplary. She not only baniſh'd Popery out of England, but earneſtly endeavoured to promote the Reformation in foreign Parts, by powerfully aſſiſting the French and Belgick Proteſtants, and expoſtulating with Henry IV. upon his Apoſtacy, after ſhe had done him ſo many good Offices, and ſo ſucceſsfully ſupported him in his Succeſſion to the Throne of France.

Then as to her Management of the State, ſhe acquir'd more Glory than any of the Kings that had worn this Crown ſince the Reign of Henry V.

Queen Elizabeth's glorious Reign.

Her Siſter Queen Mary had loſt what was left of the Engliſh Conqueſts on the Continent. Calais was recover'd by the French, and by the firſt Treaty Queen Elizabeth made with them, ſhe oblig'd them to pay 500000 Pounds for it, which was as much as two Millions now.

She took upon her the Protection of the United Provinces, and enabled the Dutch to throw off the Spaniſh Yoke. The Cities of Brill, Fluſhing, and Ramekins, were yielded up to her as a Caution for the vaſt Sums ſhe lent them. Havre de Grace, in Normandy, was alſo ſurrender'd to her for the like Reaſon by the French, and the Terror of her Arms was ſo great upon the Ocean, that ſhe was ſtil'd the Queen of the North-Sea.

Nor did our own Seas confine her Dominion, ſhe made very ſucceſsful Enterprizes by her Admirals in America, overthrew the Spaniſh invincible Armada, and deſtroy'd the vain Hopes of Philip II. of Spain, who aſpir'd to the Univerſal Monarchy: She attack'd him not only in the Indies, but even in Spain itſelf, and reduc'd the ſtrong City of Cadiz.

She drove the French out of Scotland, and ſettled the Affairs of that neighbour Kingdom, as ſhe thought beſt for the Proteſtant Intereſt, to ſtrengthen which, ſhe enter'd into Alliances with the Princes of Germany.

She procur'd Peace for the Poles, diſtreſs'd by the Turks. She ſuppreſs'd the Rebellions of the Papiſts in England and Ireland, and brought the Scots Queen to Juſtice, in Defiance of the Menaces of all the Papal Powers.

As ſhe provided thus for the Security of Religion and Liberty, ſo ſhe extended her Royal Care to the promoting of Trade and Manufactures. She invited the Belgick Say and Serge Men into England. She eſtabliſh'd the Ruſſia Trade, the Portugal Trade, the Turkey Trade, and the Trade in both Indies, which commenc'd all in her Reign. She deſtroy'd Monoplies; and tho' ſhe was at an immenſe Charge in carrying on ſo many neceſſary and glorious Deſigns, ſhe was never in Debt.

The contrary to all which, are the Reigns we are entring upon; which, as inglorious as they be of themſelves, appear ſtill to be more ſo, by a Compariſon with that of this incomparable Princeſs.

Many againſt the Succeſſion of the Stuarts.

But before we enter farther upon this Hiſtory, it is convenient to remember, that there were many illuſtrious Perſons in England, who were ſo jealous of the Glory of the Nation, that they wou'd have prevented the Succeſſion of the Scots King, and had it ſecur'd to the Proteſtant Line in the Houſe of Suffolk; the Founder of which, Charles Brandon, had marry'd Mary the French Queen, younger Siſter to Margaret, Wife of James the IVth, King of Scotland; in whoſe Heirs remain'd the Hereditary Right, which has been ſo much to the Glory and Happineſs of England ſince they ſucceeded to this Crown.

The

The Lord Keeper Bacon, the Lord Treaſurer Cecil, and the wiſeſt Heads in the Adminiſtration, made the ſame Judgment of King James the Sixth of Scotland and Firſt of England, as did Henry the Fourth of France, who put a very great Affront on his Capacity, as will be mention'd in his Hiſtory. The Diſtractions in the Government of Scotland during his Reign in that Kingdom, his Inconſtancy and Diſſimulation, were ill Preſages of his governing this. The Misfortunes of the Royal Houſe of Stuart, of which, as has been obſerv'd, but two Kings dy'd a natural Death, ſeem'd to be attach'd to the Crown they wore; and it is no wonder, if wiſe Men were willing to prevent the Diſgrace and Danger with which they were threaten'd.

John Hales, Eſq; of Coventry, a very learned and polite Gentleman for his Time, wrote a Treatiſe in Favour of the Houſe of Suffolk, eſpecially of the Children of Edward Seymour Earl of Hertford, eldeſt Son of Edward Seymour Duke of Somerſet, according to A. Wood; whereas he had an elder Son, another Edward Seymour, from whom thoſe of that Name in Devonſhire are deſcended. The Earl of Hertford marry'd the Lady Katherine Grey, Daughter of Henry Duke of Suffolk, nearly ally'd to Queen Elizabeth, who diſcountenancing all Mention of a Succeſſor, Mr. Hales was ſent to the Tower for writing that Treatiſe. The Lord Keeper Bacon was near loſing the Seal for being privy to it, as was alſo the Lord Treaſurer Cecil; tho', ſays Wood, the Matter was ſo wiſely laid upon Hales and Bacon, that Sir William Cecil was kept free, and procur'd Pardons for the others. The Senſe of theſe great Miniſters was, one wou'd think, ſufficient to alarm the Nation; but the People ſo heartily wiſh'd the Life of the Queen, that they ſeem'd to believe ſhe was immortal, and troubled themſelves very little about a Succeſſor. Thus had our Firſt King James a very eaſy Poſſeſſion of the Throne; and had not fate there many Months before the People felt, as well as ſaw, the Effects of the Alteration.

Mr. Hales of Coventry writes againſt it.

Others favour it.

'Tis no Miracle, that the nearer Queen Elizabeth drew to the End of her Reign and Life, the Courtiers turn'd their View to the North, and endeavour'd to ingratiate themſelves with the Scots King. Sir Robert Cecil, Secretary of State, and Son to the late Treaſurer, was one of the firſt who made his Addreſſes to him; informing him of the Diſcourſe between the French Ambaſſador and himſelf; wherein the former attempted to intimidate the Secretary, by putting him in mind of the Death of the Queen of Scots, that King's Mother, which Sir Robert's Father had a great Hand in, and inſinuating the Danger of admitting her Son to the Succeſſion of England; which the Secretary not taking as the Ambaſſador wou'd have had him, the latter ſaid his Maſter did not intend to impeach the King of Scotland's Intereſt. This Information procur'd a kind Anſwer from King James; I lov'd your Virtues long before I knew you wou'd deſerve my Love of your Perſon: Which was ſome of the Cunning that was term'd King-Craft. Another Inſtance of his correſponding with the King of the Scots, was his concealing a Diſpatch he receiv'd from him in Preſence of the Queen; who taking the Air on Blackheath near Greenwich heard a Poſt-Boy's Horn, and enquiring from whence he came, it was ſaid from Scotland. Upon which ſhe commanded to ſtop the Coach to receive the Pacquet. Cecil being in the Coach with her, and apprehenſive of a Diſcovery of his Correſpondence, calls ſuddenly for a Knife to cut open the Pacquet, leſt Delay might beget Suſpicion; and having open'd it, told the Queen 'twas in a filthy Pickle, ſmelt ill coming out of ſeveral naſty Budgets, and ſhou'd be air'd before it wou'd be fit for her Majeſty to turn over. The Queen being very delicate as to Scents, enquir'd no farther about it; and the Secretary had time to ſhew what Part of the Diſpatch he pleas'd.

Wilſon, 2.

The Earl of Northumberland, the King's Neighbour in the North, gave him early Advice of Queen Elizabeth's Sickneſs, that he might make ſure of his Title, and be ready to take Poſſeſſion when the Time came; which was the 24th of March 1602. that Excellent Princeſs paſſing then from an earthly to a heavenly Kingdom. The News of her Death was firſt brought to Scotland by Sir Robert Cary, a younger Son of the Lord Hunſdon, the late Queen's Couſin-German, Son of Mary Siſter to Queen Anne Bullen. The Lords of the Council in England had commanded the Gates of the Palace to be ſhut, that they might be the firſt to give Advice of the Death of their late Sovereign by a Meſſenger of their own: But the Lord Hunſdon, Lord Chamberlain, found Means to let out his Son, who, ſays Sir A. W. moſt ungratefully caught her laſt Breath to carry it to the Scots King; and he was rewarded with a Barony for his Expedition, and afterwards made Governor to the Duke of York. The Privy Council hearing he was gone, complain'd to the King that he had done what in him lay to anticipate their Duty. They ſent their Letter by Sir Charles Piercy, Brother to the Earl of Northumberland; and not Thomas Somerſet, Son to the Earl of Worceſter. As ſoon as the King had read it, and knew that he had been proclaim'd King of England in the Cities of London and Weſtminſter, his Countenance chang'd, and the Lords who were with him fear'd he was taken ſick; when on a ſudden he left off reading, and lifted up his Hands and Eyes to Heaven, as if he pray'd; and giving the Letter to the Lord that was next him, ſaid, Read it, Man; the Queen is dead. After theſe Gentlemen came Lewis Pickering, Eſq; of Northamptonſhire, one of the Heads of the Puritan Party, who arriv'd within a few Minutes of the former, in hopes of recommending his Friends to his Majeſty's Favour. But Dr. Neville, Dean of Canterbury, who was ſent by that Archbiſhop, ſucceeded better in his Errand, as will be ſeen hereafter.

On Sunday, April 3. the King made the Speech in the great Church at Edinburgh, which has been already mention'd. And in Anſwer to the Letter of the Lords of the Council, acknowledg'd their dutiful Affections, and confirm'd all Officers Civil and Military. The Letter was carry'd to the Council by Sir Roger Aſton his Majeſty's Barber, whom he advanced afterwards to be Gentleman of the Bedchamber, and Maſter of the Wardrobe, having employ'd him in the Queen's Time as a Letter-Carrier between the two Courts. The Lords enquiring of him how he had liv'd in Scotland, being of good Extraction in England, tho' mean in Fortune? he reply'd, Like a poor Man wandering above forty Years in a Wilderneſs and barren Soil, now arrived at the Land of Promiſe.

On the fifth of April the King ſet out from Scotland, attended by thoſe Scottiſh Noblemen and Gentlemen, whoſe Company was moſt grateful to him; as the Duke of Lenox, whoſe Conduct in Scotland had render'd him odious to the Proteſtants; the Earls of Hamilton, Argyle, Mar, Kinloſs; the Lord Hume, Sir George Hume, Sir John Ramſey, &c. Of the latter, more will be ſaid in the following Hiſtory, which begins with this King's Entrance into the Kingdom of England; where he was receiv'd with as much Acclamation and Joy, as if he had brought in his Train, Piety, Riches, and Glory.

During the REIGN of

King JAMES the First.

*A.D.*1603.

K. James begins his Ill-Conduct at Berwick.

JAMES STUART, the first of that Royal House who reign'd in England, arriv'd at Berwick in his Way to London, to take Possession of the Throne, on the 7th of April, A.D. 1603; where, among other Lords and Gentlemen, there met him Henry Howard, Son to the Duke of Norfolk, who was beheaded for his treasonable Correspondence with Mary Queen of Scots, King James's Mother. This Lord was immediately sworn one of his Majesty's Privy-Council; a very wise Act, considering he was a Papist, and the King just come out of a Presbyterian Country into a Land of Puritans. The Lord Thomas Howard, the Duke's Brother, another Papist, was also made a Privy-Counsellor.

To Berwick came the Lord Cobham, who three Months after was imprison'd for a Conspiracy against him. Here his Majesty did the only military Act he ever perform'd in his Life, for he gave Fire to, and shot off a Piece of Ordnance; which Stow, the Chronicler, records as an heroick Action in so peaceable a Monarch, who, as Pere Orleans says, cou'd not see a naked Sword with swooning. Several other Persons of Quality paid their Complements to the new King at this Place, and many more waited on him at Durham and York; where he was receiv'd by the Lord Burghley President of the North, and a numerous Attendance of Noblemen and Gentlemen; the chief of whom was Sir Robert Cecil Secretary of State, that Lord's Brother; but his Train was so incommoded by the vast Concourse of People crowding every where to see him, that at York he issued out a Proclamation to prevent the Multitude's encumbring him in his Progress. The Inconstancy of the Great Vulgar, and the Small in so soon forgetting their belov'd Queen, was observ'd with Sorrow by Men of Ingenuity and Foresight, the Reason for their extravagant Joy having no Foundation in the King's Government of his antient Kingdom of Scotland; and it is very probable, that what a Scotsman said of the Adoration paid to his Master by the English, This People will spoil a gude King, was as much Flattery as the other. *Ch. His Cowardice.

His Journey to London.

Fuller tells us he was amaz'd at the Equipage of the Northern Lords who repair'd to him at York, especially the Earl of Cumberland's, admiring there shou'd be so many Kings in England; for less he cou'd not take them to be by the Number and Gallantry of their Attendants. If his Revenue in Scotland was in the whole but 50000 Pounds a Year, as we are told, the two northern Earls of Northumberland and Cumberland, had together an Income not much short of it. But, according to my Author, he soon found a Way, by Advice of the English Secretary Cecil, to abate the formidable Greatness of the English Nobility, by conferring Honours on many Persons. Thus was Nobility so spread abroad, that it became very thin, and lost much of its ancient Esteem. Instead of such sober Reasoning, Archdeacon Echard thinks it was for the Glory of the Kingdom, It was thought

Fuller.

A.D.1603. thought fit, thro' an Immenſity of Wiſdom, to give a free Courſe to the Paſſage of Honour, which during Queen Elizabeth's Reign had been ſo ſtopp'd.

His Majeſty ſtaid three Days at York, and then proceeded to Sir Edward Stanhope's Seat at Grimſton; thence to Pontefract, Doncaſter, and Newark, where he arriv'd the 21ſt of April, and exercis'd his kingly Office on a Cutpurſe, whom he commanded to be executed without Form of Trial; a very early Inſtance of that Wiſdom which acquir'd him the Character of a ſecond Solomon. However wiſe it was, the Juſtice of it was much queſtion'd, and it was hoped, when he had acquainted himſelf better with our Laws, he wou'd not have violated them ſo notoriouſly. Yet after he was ſettled at Whitehall, a Cutpurſe being taken in the Preſence, he commanded the Lord Garret, Knight Marſhal, to hang him up immediately, which was done; but the Knight fearing to be hang'd himſelf for ſo doing, eſcap'd by a Pardon under the Great Seal. The King was the longer on his Journey, for that he hunted all the Way, and banquetted at moſt of the Noblemen's and Gentlemen's Seats, every one ſtriving to gain his good Graces by Profuſion and Luxury.

Sir E. P. p. 109.

On the 22d of April he arriv'd at Belvoir Caſtle, a Seat of the preſent Duke of Rutland's, and the next Day at Burleigh near Stamford, a noble Seat of the preſent Earl of Exeter's. He tarry'd there two or three Days, and was royally entertain'd by the late Lord-Treaſurer's Son, the Lord Burghley. From thence he remov'd to Hinchinbrook near Huntington, a Seat of Sir Oliver Cromwel's, Uncle to the Protector, who has been often vilify'd for his baſe Extraction, by ſuch Hiſtorians as Heylin, Dugdale, Nalſon, &c. At Hinchinbrook his Reception was ſuch, as, ſays Fuller, in a manner made all former Entertainments forgotten, and all future to deſpair to do the like. All the Pipes about the Houſe ran with the choiceſt Wines, and every thing anſwer'd the Greatneſs of Sir Oliver's Fortune, then one of the greateſt in England. Hither came the Heads of the Univerſity of Cambridge in their Scarlet Gowns and Corner Caps; and their Orator Mr. Robert Naunton, afterwards a Knight and Secretary of State, made an eloquent Latin Oration, requeſting a Confirmation of their Privileges, which his Majeſty readily granted, and took particular Notice of Dr. Montagu Maſter of Sydney College, with whom he held much Diſcourſe.

P. 157.

At Godman-Cheſter, in the ſame County of Huntington, the Bayliff preſented him with ſeventy Teams of Horſes finely traced to as many new Ploughs, in Honour of Tillage; a Cuſtom of great Antiquity when the King paſſes through that Town, whoſe Inhabitants hold their Land by that Tenure. His Majeſty told them he lik'd their Air ſo well, and took their Gift ſo kindly, that he wou'd often viſit them, were it not ſo expenſive to them: And being told the Homage was only paid for the firſt Viſit, he perform'd his Promiſe to the Advantage of both Town and County.

Royſton was the firſt Place where he paid his own Expence. From thence he proceeded to Standon, the Seat of Sir Thomas Sadler; thence to Broxborn, the Houſe of Sir Henry Cook, Cofferer to Queen Elizabeth; where he was met by the Great Officers of the Crown, the Lord Chancellor Egerton, the Lord Treaſurer Buckhurſt, the Lord Admiral Howard, and moſt of the Lords of the Privy Council. At Ware the King came to Wiggen, ſo baſe a Cottage, that it begat a Saying, when a Thing was refus'd, You ſhall have it when the King comes to Wiggen.

On the 3d of May he arriv'd at Theobalds, Secretary Cecil's Seat, where he was moſt magnificently entertain'd for four Days, and added, the Duke of Lenox, the Earl of Mar, the Lord Hume, the Lord Elphinſton, and the Lord Kinloſs, to his Privy-Council, another wiſe Act in the Infancy of his Government, to let the Engliſh ſee that his Favour, and the Nation's Riches, were to run in other Channels. Nor was it leſs an Act of Wiſdom, to dub twenty-eight Knights in Sir Robert Cecil's Houſe, to ſhew betimes how different his Conduct wou'd be from Queen Elizabeth's, who ſcarce ever made ſo many Knights in ſo many Moons. A few Days after he dubb'd eighty more at the Charter-Houſe, and near two hundred before he reach'd Whitehall; by which he gain'd no more Love than the Knights got Honour, Knighthood being render'd too cheap to be in the Eſteem Queen Elizabeth left it. The Jeſt that was made of it, appears by this Queſtion, What need of ſo many Milites, when there's no War? But Mr. Echard, who is infected with the Wiſdom of this Reign, excuſes his Prodigality on account of the want of Knights to make Jury-Men at Aſſizes. Higher Dignities were diſpos'd of with anſwerable Profuſion. He created the following Scots Lords and Gentlemen, Peers of England and Scotland, as Sir John Ramſay, who murder'd Earl Gowry at the King's Inſtigation, Earl of Holderneſs, Sir James Hay Earl of Carliſle; Sir George Hume Earl of Dunbar, Sir Thomas Ereskin Earl of Kelley; and Sir Richard Preſton Earl of Kildare: And to qualify them for theſe Honours, the publick Treaſures were waſted in a moſt ſcandalous manner. Nothing, ſays Osborn, was made penal by Law in Church or Commonwealth, but was by the King granted to his Countrymen, and by them exacted to the uttermoſt Farthing. Many, in the mean time, venting their Spleen in Songs; of one of which I remember two Lines.

In Scotland he was born and bred,
And though a Beggar, muſt be fed.

Which caus'd a By-word, That the Exchequer reach'd from London to Edinburgh. The Grievance was the more crying, for that this King choſe thoſe of his own Nation for his Favourites, who had not one good Quality to recommend them to him, and were in no more Eſteem in their own Country than in England. One of the beſt of them was Sir George Hume, the new Earl of Dunbar, who was the reigning Favourite when the King came to England; and it is ſaid, he procur'd that Favour by concealing what he knew of Gowry's Conſpiracy. Sir Anthony Welden ſays, the Scots gave little Credit to that Story, and the wiſeſt of that Nation ſpoke ſlightly and deſpitefully of it. Sir Edward Peyton writes thus: The Queen found others to ſatisfy her unruly Appetite, as namely, the Earl of Gowry, a Lord of a comely Viſage, good Stature, and of an attracting Allurement; who, upon King James's Suſpicion of often Society with the Queen, converted the Friendſhip and Love of the Earl to the Poiſon of Hatred, cauſing Ramſey and others to murder Gowry in his own Houſe, giving it out for a Stale, that the Earl with others wou'd have kill'd him. And to make this Falſhood appear odious in Shape of Truth, the Fifth of Auguſt was appointed a ſolemn Day of Thankſgiving for his ſuppos'd Delivery, and in this he mocked the God of Heaven. Sir J. H. has this Expreſſion upon it, he blaſphemed God for his pretended Deliverance once a Year all his Life after. Mr. Osborn, who frequented his Court, tells it thus: "Among a Number of "other Novelties, he brought a new Holyday in- "to the Church of England, wherein God had "publick Thanks given him for his Majeſty's De- "liverance out of the Hands of Gowry; and this "fell out upon the 5th of Auguſt, on which many "Lies were told either at Home or Abroad, in the "Quire of St. Paul's Church, or the Long-Walk; "for no Scotſman you cou'd meet with beyond Sea, "but did laugh at it, and it was ſaid, the printed "Relation of it murder'd all Poſſibility of Credit." Wilſon is a little more cautious; Whether the Gowries attempted on the King's Perſon, or the King upon theirs,

A.D.1603. theirs, is variouſly reported. I will not ſay, the Celebration of this holy Day was Profaneneſs for Fame may be a Slanderer. Dr. Welwood, who was a Scotſman himſelf, a diſcreet Author, and well inform'd of the Fact, writes; Gowry's Conſpiracy was in itſelf ſo improbable, and attended with ſo many inconſiſtent Circumſtances, that 'twas disbelievd at the time it was ſaid to have been attempted. He then reflects on the Effects of the holy Day, which Bantroft and his Brethren celebrated ſo devoutly, and for which they had ſolemn Prayers: Poſterity has ſwallow'd for Truth what their Anceſtors took for a mere Fiction. Another Hiſtorian ſpeaking of the printed Relation upon which the Holiday was founded, ſays, I will not deſcant upon the many Abſurdities and incoherent Circumſtances couch'd under this Relation; but only tell you, moſt Authors who have mention'd it ſeem to turn the Tables, and lay the Aſſaſſination at the King's Door. Notwithſtanding all this, ſhall I be reckon'd partial by the inferior Clergy, and their Followers, for inſinuating, that a Prince, ſaid to have the Spirit of God in him, ſhou'd turn Religion into a Farce, and be capable of acting ſuch a Part in it.

Hiſt. Stu. 291.

On Saturday the 7th of May the King proceeded to London, being met on the Road by Sir Robert Lee Lord-Mayor, the Aldermen and Sheriffs. The Recorder, Sir Richard Martyn, made a florid Speech ſuitable to the Occaſion. His Majeſty ſtopp'd four Days at the Charter-houſe, a Palace of the Lord Thomas Howard's, where the Revellings and Rejoycings were continu'd; with which one wou'd think both Court and City might in much leſs time have been ſurfeited.

From the Charter-houſe he went privately to Whitehall, and thence by Water to the Tower; where on the 17th of May he made fourteen Serjeants at Law, and three Days after created four Engliſh Peers, Sir Robert Cecil Baron of Eſſindon, Sir Robert Sidney Baron of Penſhurſt, Sir William Knolles Baron of Grays, Sir Edward Wooton Baron of Morley. The Lord Henry Howard was created Earl of Northampton, and Thomas Sackville Lord Buckhurſt Earl of Dorſet. Henry Wriotheſley Earl of Southampton, who had been condemn'd for the Earl of Eſſex's Treaſon, and had been kept a Priſoner upon Reprieve in the Tower four Years, was diſcharg'd, and ſome time after made Knight of the Garter, Privy-Counſellor, and Governor of the Iſle of Wight.

The King had left the Queen and Royal Family in Scotland; and as ſoon as he was ſettled in England, he diſpatch'd John Spotſwood, afterwards Archbiſhop of St. Andrews, to conduct her into England, with a Train of Engliſh Lords and Ladies, who valu'd themſelves very much on the Honour of the Employment; as the Earl of Suſſex, the Earl of Lincoln, the Lord Compton, the Lord Norris, and Sir George Carew; the Counteſs of Worceſter, the Counteſs of Kildare, the Lady Anne Herbert Daughter to the Earl of Pembroke, the Lord Scrope's Lady, the Lord Rich's Lady, and the Lady Walſingham, one of the late Queen's Bedchamber: Theſe went by his Majeſty's Appointment. The Counteſs of Bedford, the Lady Haſtings, the Lady Cecil, the Lady Hatton, the Lady Harrington, and ſeveral other Perſons of Quality, went voluntarily to fill up the new Queen's Court, that ſhe might break forth from the North amidſt a new Conſtellation of Beauties, herſelf indeed not the moſt beautiful. Spotſwood had no Order to bring Prince Henry, bnt ſhe wou'd not ſtir without him. The Perſons with whom the Earl of Mar, his Governor, had left him in Charge, refus'd to deliver him without poſitive Command from the King, which threw her into a Fit of Sickneſs; which his Majeſty hearing of, diſpatch'd the Lord Mar to preſent the Prince to the Queen; who had ſuch an Averſion to that Lord, that when the King, to reconcile her to him, wrote her how much he was oblig'd to his Wiſdom and Negotiations for his peaceable Reception in England, ſhe ſaid to her Ladies, I had rather never ſee England than be beholden to him.

Queen ſent for from Scotland.

A.D.1603.

Such are the Events of this triumphant Reign; ſuch the Facts that are to inſtruct the Reader in the Hiſtory of King James the Firſt. The Queen, with Prince Henry then about 9 Years of Age, and the Lady Elizabeth, arriv'd at York the 11th of June. They reſted there a few Days; and on the 27th arriv'd at Eaton in Northamptonſhire, a Seat of Sir George Fermour's, where the King met them in Perſon, and having left the Princeſs Elizabeth to the Government of the Lord Harrington, they paſs'd from thence to Sir J. Forteſcue's in Buckinghamſhire: A very worthy Gentleman, who was ſo jealous of the Liberty of his Country, that he mov'd to have King James oblig'd to Articles before he was admitted. So did Sir Walter Raleigh, and other generous Spirits; but the Earl of Northumberland ſwore he wou'd bring him in by the Sword; and Cecil the Secretary, to have the Merit of his eaſy Admittance, fruſtrated all Motions of Articles.

Propoſals of Articles before he came.

The King's younger Son Charles Duke of Albany being not above three Years of Age, was thought too young to endure ſo long a Journey; but young as he was, and as much an Infant, he already diſcover'd a ſtrange Perverſeneſs and Obſtinacy of Temper; ſo incorrigible and inflexible was his Nature, that his Nurſes, and thoſe Gentlemen who attended him, cou'd very rarely deviſe how to pleaſe him, much leſs to reclaim that Intemperature of his natural Conſtitution; which, as the Gentlewomen themſelves have both often related and proteſted, ſo are there yet enough alive who will juſtify it, ſays my Author, as a known Truth, and of which his Mother Queen Anne wou'd often complain, uſually calling him her perverſe and obſtinate Son. This is told us by a Servant of his Father's, who liv'd in his Court till he was weary of it; and is confirm'd by his Actions, as will be ſeen in the Sequel of our Hiſtory. In the following Year, the young Prince was taken ill of a Fever; but recover'd by the Care and Skill of Dr. Atkins, one of the King's Phyſicians, who was ſent on purpoſe to Scotland; and in October conducted him to Windſor, where the Court then reſided.

A Plague.

As yet there is little Buſineſs done, but what conſiſted in Royal Progreſſes and Entertainments, Sports and Jollities in the midſt of a ſevere Plague, which had till then rag'd in England, no leſs than 3000 a Week dying in London and Weſtminſter. Theſe Feaſtings were follow'd by the Ceremonies of Embaſſies. The firſt that came was a ſolemn one from the States of the United Provinces, who flatter'd themſelves much with Hopes of his Friendſhip; and to do him Honour, ſent Frederick Henry de Naſſau, Brother to Prince Maurice, Counſellor of State, and General of the Horſe; Walrave de Broderode, John Olden Barneveldt, and James Valk, with a magnificent Train and Equipage. They arriv'd at London the 14th of May, and had Audience of his Majeſty the 27th, when they repreſented to him the Neceſſity of continuing the War with Spain and the Archdukes. They demanded the ſame Succours which Queen Elizabeth had furniſh'd them with, and Permiſſion to raiſe Recruits for the Engliſh Troops in the Service of the States. They propos'd to the King of Great Britain, as he was then ſtil'd, to enter into a League againſt the Spaniards, with other Powers of Europe, to hinder their acquiring the Univerſal Monarchy, to which they had a long time aſpir'd. They alſo inform'd him, that the late Queen having deſir'd them to ſet out a Squadron of Ships to join her Fleet, and act againſt Spain; they had accordingly equipp'd nine Men of War and two Brigantines, which were ready in the Downs. King James return'd them an Anſwer in general

Embaſſies to him.

*A.D.*1603. Terms only, That he was but newly come to the Crown, and cou'd not yet reſolve upon any thing; that he thought Peace was to be preferr'd to War: however, he was deſirous to preſerve Friendſhip with the States General. The Ambaſſadors eaſily enough gueſs'd his Meaning, and that no Succours were to be expected from him; whoſe Reign, ſays Monſieur Le Clerc, was a Series of Weakneſſes; he being a very timorous Prince, who minded nothing but his Pleaſures, tho' he made a Shew of Knowledge and Learning. Inſtead of Wiſdom, he is here charg'd with Weakneſs; inſtead of Learning and Knowledge, with a Shew of it; which, it ſeems, was as well known abroad as at home. Add to this his Inclination to Popery, which was very ſtrong; not, I believe, out of the leaſt Conviction that the Idolatry and Superſtition of the Romiſh Church were more agreeable to Scripture, than the Piety and Purity of the Reform'd; but either out of Fear of the Papiſts, or thinking their Religion the eaſieſt and beſt ſuited to a Life of Pleaſure, which he intended to lead. Father Orleans tells us, he had ſome Inclination to the Catholick Religion, and made ſome Steps towards being converted. A Prince in ſuch a Diſpoſition was not likely to be a hearty Friend to a Presbyterian Republick, as was that of the United Provinces. The foreign Negotiations in this Reign are ſo weak and inglorious, that they are not worth mentioning. Mr. Echard knew but little of them: Beſides, to relate them was not for the Credit of a King, whom he makes not only the Head, but the Support and Ornament of our Church.

P. 5.

In June an Embaſſy arriv'd from the Elector Palatine, who probably had ſo early an Eye towards an Alliance with his Majeſty, by marrying his Son to the Princeſs Elizabeth. From the Archduke, Governor of the Netherlands, came Count Aremberg, whoſe coming prov'd fatal to Sir Walter Raleigh. The King of Spain ſent the Conſtable of Caſtile, a Grandee of the firſt Rank; and his Errand was the moſt important, it being to make Peace with the Crown of England, which had been at War with the Spaniards almoſt thirty Years. Pere Orleans ſays, he immediately gave Order to conclude a Peace with Spain. And himſelf, and the Princes of his Race, from that time to the End of their Reigns, always took as little Care to maintain the Glory of England, as the Proteſtant Religion, which owes to it its beſt Protection. The Duke de Sully was Ambaſſador from Henry the IVth of France. The Duke of Tuſcany, and the Senate of Venice, ſent Embaſſies of Congratulation; and for their Reception with the more Pomp and Order, a new Officer was inſtituted by the Name of Maſter of the Ceremonies, who had more Buſineſs on his Hands than the Maſter of the Ordnance. Sir Lewis Lewkner was the firſt who held that Office.

Careleſs of the Honour of England.

Sir Robert Manſel, Vice-Admiral of England, was order'd to Graveline, to convoy the Spaniſh Ambaſſador; and Sir Jerom Turner to Calais, to bring over the French; who underſtanding Sir Robert Manſel, a ſuperior Officer, was order'd to receive the Conſtable of Caſtile, refus'd to go aboard Sir Jerom Turner, but put himſelf into the Calais Pacquet-Boat with a Flag a-top. Sir Jerom ſent to Sir Robert for Orders what to do; and he directed him to ſhoot, if he did not ſtrike the Flag. Turner ſhot accordingly, and the Flag was taken down; but the Ambaſſador made great Complaints, which however were not much hearken'd to, the Action being generally approv'd of by the Engliſh Nation.

Sir A. W. 26.

His Ambaſſadors abroad.

The King ſent Ambaſſadors abroad to return the Compliments he receiv'd. The Earl of Rutland carry'd the Garter to the King of Denmark, and ſtood Godfather to his firſt Son. The Lord Spencer preſented the Order to the Duke of Wirtemberg; and Sir Henry Wotton had the Embaſſy to Venice, where at that Juncture a Miniſter, who had more of his Maſter's boaſted Wiſdom, was wanted. *A.D.*1603.

Pope Paul the Vth had ſo highly provok'd the State of Venice, that at the Inſtigation of Padre Paulo, the learned Author of the Hiſtory of the Council of Trent, they ſeem'd reſolv'd to ſeparate totally from the Court and Church of Rome. King James promis'd Juſtiniani the Venetian Ambaſſador, not only to aſſiſt them with all the Forces of his Kingdom, but to engage all his Allies in their Defenſe. At Sir Henry Wotton's Arrival, the Breach between the Pope and the Republick was brought very near a Criſis. The Ambaſſador at his Audience offer'd all poſſible Aſſiſtance in his Maſter's Name, and accus'd the Pope and Papacy of being the chief Authors of all the Miſchiefs in Chriſtendom. This was receiv'd with great Deference and Reſpect to King James. And when the Pope's Nuntio objected ſomething as to that King's Orthodoxiſm, the Doge took him up briskly, and ſaid, The King of England believes in Jeſus Chriſt, but I do not know in whom ſome others believe. King James had ſent with Wotton his Premonition to all Chriſtian Princes and States, tranſlated into Latin, to be preſented to the Senate; which Padre Paulo, and the ſeven Divines of the State, more zealous for the Reformation than our Engliſh Ambaſſador, preſs'd might be done at his firſt Audience, telling him they were confident it wou'd have a very good Effect. But now for another bright Inſtance of this Monarch's immenſe Wiſdom, and that of the Miniſters he made uſe of: Sir Henry Wotton cou'd not be prevail'd with, alledging he had poſitive Orders to wait till St. James's Day, which was not far off. This Conceit of preſenting the King's Book on St. James's Day ſpoil'd all; for before that Day the Difference was made up, and that happy Opportunity loſt. When he had his Audience on St. James's Day, and preſented the Book, all the Anſwer he got was, They thank'd the King of England for his Good-will; but they were now reconcil'd to the Pope, and were therefore reſolv'd not to admit of any Change in their Religion, according to their Agreements with the Court of Rome. Becauſe the King was St. James's Nameſake, the Buſineſs muſt be deferr'd to be done on the Day of the two James's. Women and Children cou'd hardly have been guilty of any thing more whimſical. We ſhall find in a Year or two what Archbiſhop Whitgift ſaid of him.

In July were ſolemnly perform'd the Rites of St. George at Windſor, where Prince Henry, the Duke of Lenox, the Earl of Mar, the Earl of Southampton, and the Earl of Pembroke, were inſtall'd Knights of the Garter. Then alſo were created the Lord Thomas Howard Earl of Suffolk, the Lord Mountjoy Earl of Devonſhire, Sir Robert Cecil Baron of Eſſindon, Viſcount Cranbourn; Sir Thomas Egerton Lord Chancellor, Baron of Ellesmer; Sir William Ruſſel Baron of Thornhaugh, Sir Henry Grey Baron of Grobie, Sir John Petre Baron of Writtle, Sir John Harrington Baron of Exton, Sir Henry D'Anvers Baron of Dantſey, Sir Thomas Gerard Baron of Gerard Bromley, Sir Robert Spencer Baron of Wormleighton. Thoſe noble Dignities were beſtow'd ſo plentifully, that a Paſquil was put up in St. Paul's, to direct weak Memories to a competent Knowledge of the Nobility. My Author adds, By a Multiplicity of them, he made them cheap and invalid in the vulgar Opinion: For nothing is more deſtructive to Monarchy, than leſſening the Peerage; upon their Decline the Commons ariſe, and Anarchy increaſes. The Merit of the Lord Mountjoy, the new Earl of Devonſhire, was however diſtinguiſh'd from others. He brought over the old Iriſh Rebel Tyrone, who had ruin'd and maſſacred ſo many Engliſh Proteſtants; but having given his Word that he wou'd do ſo no more, he was not only pardon'd, but a Proclama-

Lord Cobham and Sir W. Raleigh in Diſgrace.

Soon after his Majeſty's Arrival at London, the Lord Cobham and Sir Walter Raleigh were forbidden the Court; their Diſgrace being owing, as ſome ſuppos'd, to the Malice and Suggeſtions of Secretary Cecil, who without any one of his Father's good Qualities had all his bad ones.

Raleigh's Plot.

The Plague continuing to rage at London, the King retir'd to Wilton, a fine Seat of the Earl of Pembroke's in Wiltſhire. While he was in this Retirement, a Diſcovery was made of that Conſpiracy, which goes by the Name of Raleigh's Treaſon, Sir Walter Raleigh being one of the chief Conſpirators. What the Treaſon was, no body cou'd then give a very good Account of; and much leſs now that it has been almoſt 130 Years a brewing by thoſe who hated Sir Walter's Memory for his making free with the Lands of the Church. There was no Foundation for it in Probability, whatever Fact was pretended to be prov'd on the Plotters. Was it likely that the Lord Cobham, Sir Walter Raleigh, and three or four Gentlemen more, ſhou'd attempt to alter a Government with which the People were ſo tranſported, or that a Man of ſo great a Genius as Sir Walter Raleigh ſhou'd give into ſo impracticable a Scheme? He was for binding King James to Articles, as has been obſerv'd; and that was a Crime not eaſily to be forgiven by a Prince, who lov'd Power as much as he hated War.

No Foundation for it.

Sir Walter Raleigh was doubtleſs diſguſted at the little Regard the King ſhew'd to his Merit; and being a Man of Spirit, might vent that Diſguſt in raſh and dangerous Expreſſions, before Perſons who made their Market of the Confidence he had in them. Sir Anthony Welden ſays, What the Treaſon was no Man cou'd tell; and it is left with ſo dark a Comment, that Poſterity will never underſtand the Text. It is true, ſome loſt their Lives; yet the World was never ſatisfy'd of the Juſtice. Dr. Welwood compares this Conſpiracy to that of Gowry's, ſaying, 'twas no leſs a Myſtery. Mr. Oſborn writes of it thus: A Treaſon ſo improbable to hurt others, or benefit themſelves, that if ever Folly was capable of the Title or Pity due to Innocence, theirs might claim a large Share. Another Hiſtorian; It was ſuch a Mixture, that nothing cou'd be viſible in it. Yet after the Lord Cobham's Brother Mr. Brook, and two Romiſh Prieſts, Watſon and Clerk, had been put to Death for it, Mr. Echard cries out, how uncommonly tender and merciful was this King?

Begins ill.

Such a Beginning of a Reign promis'd very little Good in the Courſe of it; but ſo much Care was taken to gild the Appearances that the Darkneſs had not its full Effect on the Minds of the People. It was not probable that two Churchmen, the Lord Cobham and his Brother, and the Lord Grey of Wilton, a Puritan, ſhou'd join with Sir Walter Raleigh a reputed Atheiſt, and two Romiſh Prieſts, to reſtore Popery, and ſet up a Spaniſh arbitrary Government; eſpecially conſidering what an advantageous Treaty the Conſtable of Caſtile was upon concluding with the King's Miniſters, of whom Cecil was the Chief. Welden obſerves, It was indeed thoſe that made the Peace, not thoſe that endeavour'd the breaking of it, that were the Traytors, and are to be curſt by all Poſterity. Sir Walter Raleigh oppos'd this Negotiation as detrimental and ſcandalous to the Intereſt and Honour of England. Cecil, amongſt all his Politicks, cou'd not penetrate ſo far as Raleigh, tho' the thing lay ſo near the Surface, or he was taken off by Spaniſh Money. As this Peace, ſays Osborn, was of infinite Conſequence to the Spaniard, ſo he ſpar'd for no Coſt to procure it. Howard Earl of Northampton built his Palace in the Strand with the Gold that came to his Share. And Cecil's Portion cou'd not be leſs, conſidering he was Prime Miniſter; but it is all huſh'd up; and one Reaſon of it may be his joining with the King againſt the Presbyterians at the Hampton-Conference, which was about this time.

Anill Peace with Spain.

Fuller, 21.

For this Peace, and others of the ſame happy Effect, King James had the amiable Title of Rex Pacificus beſtow'd upon him; and had the Peace he ſo inculcated been as much for his Honour as his Eaſe; had not his Fear of War been ſtronger than his Love of Peace, that Title wou'd have been as illuſtrious as thoſe of the Victorious and Invincible. Sir Walter Raleigh was a military Man, and therefore very unfit for a Favourite in this Reign; yet Cecil's Jealouſy of his Parts and Worth ſunk him deeper in the Conſpiracy than was in Reaſon, as well as Truth. Was it not extremely likely that Count Aremberg ſhou'd treat with Cobham for a Rebellion againſt the King, while the Conſtable of Caſtile was treating with Cecil for an Alliance between him and his Maſter the King of Spain; againſt which Raleigh wrote a Treatiſe, which he preſented to the King? Be it as it will, Henry Lord Cobham, his Brother George Brook, Thomas Lord Grey of Wilton, Sir Walter Raleigh, Sir Griffith Markham, Sir Edward Parham, Bartholomew Brokeſby, and Anthony Copley, Gent. were all ſeiz'd and impriſon'd about the Beginning of July for conſpiring the Death of the King, the Subverſion of the State, and ſetting up the Lady Arabella Stuart on the Throne. The latter a very wild Imagination, to deſtroy King James's Hereditary Right for the ſake of another female Reign. The Lord Grey was to raiſe 2000 Men under pretence of aſſiſting the Hollanders, and with theſe to ſeize both the King and Prince. Sir Walter Raleigh was to procure Supplies of Money from Aremberg out of the Archduke's Treaſury. Cobham was to go to Spain for the ſame Supplies; and when they had ſettled the Lady Arabella on the Throne, Watſon the Popiſh Prieſt was to be made Lord Chancellor; George Brook, the Churchman, Lord Treaſurer; the Lord Grey, a Puritan, Maſter of the Horſe, and Earl Marſhal of England; Sir Griffith Markham, a Papiſt, Secretary of State; and the others were to have the Places in the Kingdom upon the new Queen's Acceſſion to the Crown. But tho' they were apprehended in July, they were not brought to Trial till November; the Peſtilence raging ſo violently at London, that above 30000 dy'd of it this Year. The Term was deferr'd and kept at Wincheſter; as were the Exchequer Court, Court of Wards and Liveries, and that of the Dutchy of Lancaſter at Richmond.

The Plot.

But the Plague did not prevent the Royal Ceremony of the King and Queen's Coronation on St. James's Day: To prepare for which, beſides the above-mention'd Lords, the King made ſixty two Knights of the Bath; and dubb'd at once all the Judges, all the Serjeants at Law, all his Gentlemen Uſhers, and many others.

Coronation.

On the 25th of July, the King and Queen were crown'd at Weſtminſter by Archbiſhop Whitgift. The Lord-Mayor Sir Robert Lee, and twelve principal Citizens, were admitted to attend the Solemnity, but all other Citizens were ſtopp'd from paſſing either by Land or Water, for fear of Infection. Indeed ſome thought it an improper Seaſon to celebrate ſo glorious a Feſtival, and that it wou'd have been more decent, if not more religious, to have put off the Rejoicings for the Coronation, till there had not been ſo many Mourners in the Streets, and ſo many Doors ſhut up by the Deſolation of the Peſtilence. However, the Charge of the Ceremony amounted to thirty-ſeven thouſand Pounds. The King at his Coronation did not take the uſual Oath which all Kings were wont to do, Whitgift ſinking ſome Parts of it, as favouring too much Oath abridg'd.

*A.D.*1603. the Rights and Privileges of the People, as we are told by Dr. Cowel, Vicar General to Archbiſhop Bancroft, in his Treatiſe intitul'd the Interpreter; which was ſuppreſs'd by Proclamation for an Expreſſion in it, That the King's Prerogative was in ſome Caſes limited: tho' the Intent of the Book was to eſtabliſh arbitrary Power.

This great Expence, that of his Majeſty and Train in his Journey from Scotland, and on his Arrival at London, gave no Check to his Royal Bounty, much more boundleſs than his Treaſury; which, while he was in Scotland, receiv'd its beſt Supply from a Penſion the late Queen gave him of 15000 Pounds a Year. The Gentlemen he brought from Scotland with him, had a fair Harveſt in the Beginning of his Reign, and it laſted with very little Intermiſſion to the End, the King ſeeming not to diſtinguiſh between Engliſh and Scots Pounds.

King always giving.

What State-Affairs, other than ceremonial, were tranſacted in the Court of England, conſiſted chiefly in Proclamations, of which there were eleven iſſu'd in a few Months; the chief of them were that for quieting Mens Minds as to religious Matters, and that for ſuppreſſing Captain Thomas Tomkins the Pyrate, who robb'd near the Streights of Gibraltar.

Proclamations.

The 5th of Auguſt was the firſt Holy Day in England to thank God for his Majeſty's Deliverance from Earl Gowry, of which enough has been ſaid already. There were two Earl Gowrys, Father and Son, who were put to Death by this King, rather out of Hatred to their Principles, being Presbyterians, than Fear of their Deſigns. Earl Gowry, the Father, join'd with the Earls of Mar, Lyndſay, and other Noblemen, in the Year 1582, to deliver the King from his Popiſh evil Counſellors; ſuch as the Duke of Lenox, who, as the Biſhop of Salisbury aſſures us, was a known Papiſt; which Echard tells us, is ſaid out of Malice, and that he dy'd a good Proteſtant at Paris. Beſides the Anniverſary for the King's Deliverance from Gowry, there were Tueſday Sermons every Week for ſome Time; and can one, without Horror, think of the prophaning the tremendous Name of God in ſo ſolemn a Manner, to countenance a Caſt of State Policy. It is true, the Puritans imitated their Brethren in Scotland, who before the King left that Kingdom refus'd to give God Thanks for a Deliverance which they did not believe. What I read in another Hiſtorian, gives one a ſhocking Idea of all Anniverſaries ſet apart for Worſhip where the Foundation is not in Truth as ſure as that of the Goſpel. I pray God, ſays my Author, that the Effect of theſe Sermons in the Father's Time for that Service, produce no ill Effects, or be not one Cauſe of God's Anger with us in the Son's Reign.

Sir A. W.

Sir Walter Raleigh try'd.

We are now come to the Arraignment of Sir Walter Raleigh and his Fellow Conſpirators at Wincheſter, on the 4th of November. The Indictment was manag'd by the Attorney General Sir Edward Coke, Serjeant Hele, and Serjeant Philips. In the Management of it, Sir Edward Coke ſet a baſe Example to thoſe Lawyers, who have ſince ſupply'd the Deficiency of Evidence with Railery and Invective, and made the Fact foul by their foul Words and falſe Gloſſes. He may truly be ſaid to bait Sir Walter to Death; for after a very long Trial, wherein he defended himſelf with great Strength of Argument and Spirit, he was tir'd with the Length of the Proceedings, or fearing the Court was tir'd, threw all the Merits of the Cauſe on this ſingle Iſſue, Whether the Lord Cobham, as was urg'd againſt him, had given it under his Hand, that Sir Walter was guilty of Treaſon. Raleigh being conſcious of his own Innocence, inſiſted upon it, that Cobham had not done, and cou'd not do ſuch a Thing. This was what his Enemy Cecil wanted, for he had provided Proof to the contrary. Wade, the wicked Governor of the Tower, was Cecil's Creature, and he had employ'd him to tamper with his Priſoner Cobham to accuſe Raleigh, which Cobham refus'd with great Conſtancy, beyond what cou'd be expected from a Perſon of his weak Intellect: But Wade, impoſing on his Weakneſs, got him, by Surprize, to ſet his Name to a Blank, over which he himſelf wrote ſuch an Accuſation as Cecil wou'd have him. Being furniſh'd with this Evidence, the Secretary often demanded of Raleigh, at his Trial, Whether he wou'd ſubmit, if Cobham had really ſo accuſed him. Raleigh for ſome time ſtood out againſt this, ſaying, He knew not how far the Lord Cobham's Weakneſs might be wrought upon, therefore he wou'd not put his Life and Fortune on his Honour or Prudence. Yet, in the End, about nine a-Clock at Night, depending on the Impoſſibility of Cobham's knowing any ſuch treaſonable Matter of him, he conſented to be determined by what he had ſubſcrib'd concerning him, which was no ſooner ſaid, than Wade's counterfeit Paper was pull'd out, and the Contents of it proving the Treaſon, Sir Walter was convicted and condemn'd; but ſo little to the Satisfaction of the Jury, that many of them afterwards begg'd his Pardon on their Knees. Cecil and Raleigh had for many Years been in ſtrict League againſt the Earl of Eſſex and his Party; and Cecil, like his Father, did not at firſt publickly appear over-zealous for the Scots King's Succeſſion, to which Sir Walter never wiſh'd well, forſeeing that it muſt be attended with perpetual Diſadvantages and Diſgraces; and that nothing cou'd be more prepoſterous, than to ſet the Crown of England on the Head of a puſilanimous Prince: But Cecil having, by Treachery and Intrigue, ſecur'd an Intereſt in that King before he came to Whitehall, and being the greateſt Favourite of the Engliſh Courtiers, began to neglect, and afterwards to abandon his old Friends, which created Enmity between Raleigh and him; and that naturally produc'd Cecil's Endeavours to get rid of a Man of a much greater Soul and Abilities than himſelf, Court Craft and an extenſive Conſcience excepted. In Sir Walter's Trial there was a Book urg'd againſt him, which concern'd Mary Queen of Scots; wherein ſomething was ſaid derogatory to her Son King James's Title. Cobham confeſs'd he had the Book from Raleigh, and Raleigh ſaid he found it in Cecil's Father, the Lord Burghley's, Study, which he had ſearch'd for Coſmographical Manuſcripts of the Weſt-Indies, with leave of his Son. At his ſaying this, Cecil, who was upon the Bench, roſe up, and ſaid, I wou'd then have really truſted him as any Man, tho' ſince, for ſome Infirmities of Sir Walter, the Bonds of Affection were crack'd, and yet preſerving my Duty to the King, which may not be diſpenſed withal, by God, I love him, and have a great Conflict in myſelf, that ſo compleat a Member has fallen from the State. We muſt not wonder to hear a Secretary of State in King James's Reign ſwear in a Court of Juſtice: The King's Example made Swearing ſo faſhionable at Court, that hardly any one came thither who made a Conſcience of it. Cecil's Malice ended not here: He confirm'd his Creature Wade's Forgery with a like Fraud of his own. The Sentence, paſs'd on Sir Walter, was generally diſlik'd, the Nature and Proof of the Treaſon very much ſuſpected; and not long after, Queen Anne being cur'd of a deſperate Diſtemper by a Preſcription of Raleigh's, who was a learned and an experienc'd Chymiſt, he wou'd receive no other Reward than that his Majeſty wou'd cauſe certain Lords to be ſent to examine Cobham, Whether he had in Fact accus'd Raleigh of Treaſon, which the King commanded at the Queen's Deſire. This alarm'd Cecil, who, to prevent the ill Conſequence of ſuch an Examination, took upon him to be one of the Lords that were to examine him; the Duke of Lenox, the Earls of Worceſter and

Sir Anthony Welden proceeds: "By which you ſee the Baſeneſs of "theſe Lords, the Credulity of the King, and "the Ruin of Sir Walter Raleigh. I appeal now "to the Judgment of all the World, Whether "theſe ſix Lords were not the immediate Mur-"derers, and no queſtion ſhall be called to a ſad "Account for the ſame, unleſs Cecil atton'd by his Merit at the Hampton-Court Conference. But what Account muſt theirs be, who thirteen Years after put that Gentleman to Death by virtue of that Sentence fraudulently and wickedly obtain'd? As to the reſt of the Criminals in this formidable Conſpiracy, the Lords Cobham and Grey, George Brook, Sir Griffith Markham, Watſon and Clarke, were condemn'd; Parham and Brookesby were acquitted by the Jury. Watſon own'd he had drawn in all the reſt, holding the King to be no Sovereign till he were crown'd, and was himſelf drawn in by the Jeſuits, againſt whom, as a ſecular Prieſt, he had written. Watſon, Clarke, and Brook, were executed at Wincheſter. King James in his Warrant to Sir Benjamin Tichbourn, then High-Sheriff of Hampſhire, telling him in the Scottiſh Brogue, They vaire the principal Plotteris and Intiſaries of all the reſt to the embracing the ſaidis treaſonable Machinations. In the ſame Letter is a Warrant to reſpite Execution of the Sentence againſt the Lords Cobham and Grey, and Sir Walter Raleigh, to ſuperſede the Execution of the ſaidis two Noblemen, and bringe them back to their Priſon again qwhile our further Pleaſure be knowne; the like Courſe be alſo taken with Markham. However, Markham, Cobham, and Grey, were brought to the Scaffold, and paſt thro' all the Forms of Execution except the laſt dreadful one, the Blow; when, in the midſt of their Terrors and Agonies, the Reprieve was produc'd, and the Criminals remanded to Priſon, to the great Joy of the Spectators; but the Cruelty of keeping them in Suſpence to the very laſt Minute of Life, took off much from the boaſted Clemency and Tenderneſs in reprieving them; the Crime, make the worſt of it, having more Folly than Treaſon, and more Talk than Action. Some Time after Sir Griffith Markham was releaſed from Impriſonment, and going into voluntary Exile, dy'd beyond Sea in a mean Condition. The Lord Grey ended his miſerable Life in the Tower; the Lord Cobham was indeed releas'd, but his Liberty was no great Bleſſing to him, having nothing to ſubſiſt on but the Charity of a Fellow who had been once a Servant to him, in whoſe ſorry Cottage he dwelt, being forc'd to creep up a Ladder thro' a little Hole, to his Chamber; and not having Apparel and Linnen enough to keep him from Lice, tho' his Eſtate eſcheated to the King was 7000 Pounds a Year, and 30000 Pounds in Money. The Excuſe for the Inhumanity in ſuffering ſo great and rich a Lord to ſtarve, was, that his Majeſty had been cheated of the Forfeiture by his Officers, and had nothing to ſpare, except 'twas out of the Revenue of the Crown, which was ſquander'd away on his Scotſmen, the moſt odious and worthleſs of his Nation. Sir Walter Raleigh was ſhut up in the Tower, and remain'd there twelve or thirteen Years, improving his Confinement to the Advantage of Learning, by writing his Hiſtory of the World, the beſt of the Kind till the learned Dr. Howell's Univerſal Hiſtory appear'd. We have been the more particular in the Account of this Conſpiracy to ſhew the Juſtice, Prudence, and Piety of this Adminiſtration: If the Facts we relate are poor and diſagreeable it is the Fault of the Reign to afford us not better. Lord Cobham's Poverty.

We muſt now take a View of the State of Religion, which is not in ſo flouriſhing a Condition as our Eccleſiaſtical Writers repreſent. King James had forgotten the ſincereſt Kirk in the World before he came out of Scotland, and was grown much in Love with the Pope and his Hierarchy, tho' he cou'd not on a ſudden renounce his Calviniſtical Opinions. The Puritans flatter'd themſelves with Hopes of his Friendſhip when he was King of England, for that he pretended to be their Friend when he was King of Scotland; but his Majeſty ſoon undeceiv'd them; and being captivated with the Pomp and Luſtre of the Laudean Hierarchy, he gave himſelf up entirely to the Counſels of the Biſhops, who, unhappily for our Conſtitution Sacred and Civil, happen'd at that Time not to be the beſt that ever govern'd the Chriſtian Church. The Biſhops, in return, gave up the Liberty of the Subject to his arbitrary Will and ſovereign Authority. Unlimited Power was the Compliment they and their corrupt Clergy paid him. The Puritans talk'd of Law and Conſcience: Which of theſe Diſcourſes muſt be moſt grateful to a Monarch who doated on Empire as much as thoſe that cou'd acquire it by Conqueſt, is eaſy to imagine. State of Religion. Hampton-Court Conference. K. James turns for Epiſcopacy.

The firſt Occaſion his Majeſty took to humble the Presbyterians, and give the Prelates a Triumph over them, was at the Hampton-Court Conference between the Epiſcopal and Presbyterian Clergy; wherein the latter were only ſent for to be expoſed to the Inſults of the Biſhops; for the Cauſe was plainly decided againſt them before by the King and his Prelates. This Conference is repreſented as the moſt deſpicable Colloquy that ever was among Men of Learning to turn the Preſbytery into Ridicule; which however was attempted without either Argument or Wit. The Authority of the King, who talk'd more than all the Biſhops, and as little to the Purpoſe, bore down whatever was ſaid by the Presbyterian Miniſters. 'Tis ſuppos'd we have no fair Repreſentation of the Matter; but that written by Dr. Fuller, an orthodox Divine of the Church of England, ſeems to be the faireſt and moſt impartial.

Before this Conference was ſet a foot, the reverend and eminent Mr. Cartwright had preſented his Comment on the Eccleſiaſtes to the King, who had written to Queen Elizabeth in his Behalf; but his Reception at Court did not anſwer his and his Friends Expectation. He dy'd about a Fortnight before the Colloquy, or doubtleſs he wou'd have made another ſort of Figure there than his Brethren did. He had had a long Controverſy with Dr. Whitgift Archbiſhop of Canterbury, when the latter was Maſter of Queen's-College in Cambridge, and Cartwright was Lady Margaret Profeſſor. Fuller tells us, that the Offence taken by Whitgift, was, becauſe his own Lectures and Sermons were not frequented, while all flock'd after Cartwright, inſomuch, that when he preach'd at St. Maries, the Clerk was forc'd to take down the Windows. However, Whitgift, when he was Vice-Chancellor, made uſe of his Authority, theſe Men cou'd never do any thing without it, and flatly depriv'd Cartwright of his Lecture. Indeed I have obſerv'd, that ever ſince the Reformation, and long before in the Days of Popery, ſuch Prelates as Whitgift have always ſucceeded better by Power than by Argument, and better by Force than by Truth. Dr. Fuller confeſſes frankly, That the

For CONFORMITY,

For NONCONFORMITY, only

Dr. Reynolds, Dr. Sparks, Mr. Knewſtubs, Mr. Chadderton.

A.D.1604. The King nominated the Presbyterian as well as the Epiſcopal Clergy, and tho' theſe four Divines were Men of Eminence, yet there were many others who were able and ready to have appeared in this Cauſe, had his Majeſty been more equal in his Nominations. The Place of Meeting was the Withdrawing-Room within the Privy-Chamber, and the firſt Time, the 14th of January 1604, preſent the King, Prince Henry, and all the Lords of the Council. His Majeſty open'd the Conference with a Speech, too long to be repeated, but eloquent to Aſtoniſhment, as the Eccleſiaſticks teach us to believe. The King began with exclaiming againſt that Church which, in Scotland, he thank'd God he was bred in. Now it is, Bleſſed be God's gracious Goodneſs, who hath brought me into the Promis'd Land, where Religion is purely profeſs'd, where I ſit amongſt grave, reverend, and learned Men; not as before, elſewhere, a King without State, without Honour, without Order, where beardleſs Boys would brave us to the Face. This is Ciceronian. And I aſſure you, we have not called this Aſſembly for any Innovation; for we acknowledge the Government Eccleſiaſtical, as now it is, to have been approv'd by manifold Bleſſings from God himſelf. If ſo, What need was there for his Majeſty's exerciſing his Faculty of a good Phyſician to cure the Occaſions of Complaints? He declares before there are no Occaſions, and that he will cure nothing; curing and innovating being the ſame thing. Then comes more of Cicero's Eloquence: And if the Complaint be frivolous, he will caſt a Sop into CERBERUS's Mouth, that he bark no more. This is the very Eſſence of Oratory; and Archbiſhop Whitgift cry'd out, His Majeſty ſpeaks by the Spirit of God. This Archbiſhop fell down upon his Knees, and as to the firſt Point, Confirmation, aſſur'd his Majeſty, that St. Peter and St. Paul, and all the Apoſtles, were wont to confirm in the very ſame Manner himſelf and his Brethren practis'd Confirmation; which holy Biſhop Bancroft prov'd from that Text in the Hebrews, where the Apoſtle ſpeaks of Baptiſms, Laying on of Hands, the Reſurrection of the Dead, and Eternal Judgment. The Biſhop of Carliſle urg'd the ſame very learnedly and gravely; and the Biſhop of Durham ſaid there was ſomething in St. Matthew for Impoſition of Hands upon Children. This Matter ſo admirably clear'd up, the Archbiſhop proceeded to Abſolution, proving it to be free from all Superſtition, by ſaying It was ſo: And the Confeſſion and Abſolution being read, his Majeſty was inſpir'd to ſay, I like and approve both.

Fuller's Ch Hiſt. p. 8 9, & eq.

Short and pithy. And next comes the Argument; What you ſay is true. A.D.1604.

This Article being ſo unanſwerably demonſtrated to the great Satisfaction and Comfort of the Lords of the Council, the next concern'd Private Baptiſms; and here the King did not appear ſo thoroughly convinc'd as the Biſhops were, his Majeſty ſaying, The Words cannot but intend a Permiſſion for private Perſons to baptize. And thus all the Baptiſms of the Baptiſts wou'd be lawful, it it had not been added, in Caſe of Neceſſity. Now there can be no Caſe of Neceſſity, where an orthodox Miniſter is at hand; which reſtores Matters to the State the Archbiſhop wou'd have them in.

As to Excommunication, all Sides agreed to have it alter'd, but it remains as it then was to this Day, in the Hands of vicious and greedy Laymen.

The next Day, the 15th of January, the Conference was renew'd, and the Nonconformiſts were allow'd to ſpeak. Dr. Reynolds ſpoke firſt, but offer'd Things ſo unreaſonably, that Dr. Bancroft Biſhop of London cou'd not forbear calling him Schiſmatick even in the Preſence. Dr. Reynold's humble Propoſal was,

That the Doctrine of the Church might be preſerv'd in Purity according to God's Word.

That good Paſtors might be planted in all Churches to preach the ſame.

That the Church Government might be ſincerely adminiſter'd according to God's Word.

Biſhop Bancroft's Ribaldry.

Theſe monſtrous Demands ſet pious Biſhop Bancroft in a Flame; and he was not contented to call Dr. Reynolds Schiſmatick, he added, I wou'd feign know whether you do not think as Mr. Cartwright did, that we ought rather to conform to the Turks than the Papiſts? I doubt you do, by your Turkey Gown inſtead of Scholaſtick Habit. The King and his Nobles heard this Ribaldry without the leaſt Cenſure. Bancroft's Pun coming ſo ſoon after his calling Names, ſhews his Wit as well as his Piety, either of which I do not find was ever laid to his Charge. But for Ratiocination Dr. Reynold's cou'd not come near him, as appears by his Anſwer to the Doctor's ſecond Propoſal about good Paſtors. His Objection is vain, ſays Biſhop Bancroft, it being the Doctrine and Practice of the Church, that none but a licens'd Miniſter may preach, and conſequently every licens'd Miniſter is a good Miniſter. There was no ſtanding againſt ſuch forcible Reaſoning, eſpecially when it was ſeconded by the King, as thus: I diſſent from the Judgment of St. Jerom, that Biſhops are not of divine Ordination. Again; I approve the Calling and Uſe of Biſhops, and it is my Aphoriſm, No Biſhop, no King. It is becauſe it is. Here's the Argumentation. The French King's Reaſon at the End of his Charters is exactly like it; Car Tel eſt notre Plaiſir, For ſuch is our Pleaſure. This is a Conference with a witneſs. To what Purpoſe cou'd four grave Miniſters argue againſt, I diſſent, I approve, in the Mouth of a King.

Upon Dr. Reynold's Complaint of Popiſh Books, the Lord-Chancellor Egerton, the Lord-Treaſurer Buckhurſt, and Secretary Cecil, extenuated the Matter, and ſcreen'd the Biſhop of London for his Neglect in ſuppreſſing them. Mr. Knewſtubs ſaying, If the Church has Power to add ſignificant Signs, the Scruple is how far the Order of the Church bindeth; which was admirably well explain'd by his Majeſty, I will have one Doctrine, one Diſcipline, one Religion in Subſtance and Ceremony, never ſpeak more to that Point, How far you are bound to obey. Wou'd not a Proclamation with an I will have, &c. have done the Buſineſs better than a Colloquy?

Sir Philip Warwick, who underſtood Divinity as well as Hiſtory, or any thing elſe, aſſures us, He ſhewed P. 3.

A.D.1604. ſhewed his great Learning in over throwing the Arguments of learned Proteſtant Diſſenters, and his great Wiſdom in maintaining Biſhops; which made him appear a great Divine. Now let us ſee how he overthrew thoſe Arguments. The King again: If this be all your Party hath to ſay, I will make them conform themſelves, or elſe I will harrie them out of the Land, or elſe do worſe, only hang them, that's all: The very Language of the Holy Spirit, according to Biſhop Whitgift.

Such was the End of this famous Conference; in which it was remark'd, that Dr. Reynolds loſt much of his Character, and the other Miniſters came off ſtill worſe. True it is, they were Brow-beaten by both King and Biſhops; and it was complain'd, that Dr. Barlow Dean of Cheſter, who publiſh'd this Conference, did it partially and to their Diſadvantage. He is known to have been their Enemy; and, as Fuller obſerves, No wonder if he ſet a ſharp Edge on his own, and a blunt one on his Adverſaries Weapons. Tho' excepting the King's Laconicks and Menaces, and the Inſults of ſome of the Biſhops, I have not ſeen any thing that looks like ſharp from one end of the Colloquy to the other. If this King was one of the wiſeſt Princes that ever ſate on a Throne, as our Church Hiſtorians characterize him, and this was one of the wiſeſt Actions of this wiſe King, as they wou'd have us believe, how much is Osborn out in his Reflections upon it? "The Puritan Schiſm was "not any way dangerous till King James, more it "may be thought out of Oſtentation, to ſhew "ſuch Parts as are nothing neceſſary, than Reaſon "of State, only requiſite in a Prince, made it conſiderable, by putting it in Competition with the "Doctrine generally profeſs'd, in the Hampton-Court Colloquy. Till that diſhonourable Diſpute, "in which, ſays Echard, he ſhew'd ſuch Knowledge "and Readineſs, as rais'd no ſmall Admiration, who "ſhou'd command the Dioceſan or the Prieſt; none "did boggle at the Surplice, Croſs, Ring, and ſo "by conſequence the Common-Prayer Book, but "out of pure Conſcience, and therefore unlikely "to hurt any Body but themſelves; till the Number increaſing to ſuch a Proportion, made a viſible Profit appear to ſo many, as, wanting better Employment, cou'd but conform their Mode, "Words, and Looks, to theſe Preciſians. Nor "did the notorious Debauchery of the Epiſcopal "Clergy, add a little to the Breach." Wilſon tells us, that the Puritans were for a more clear Reformation; which the Biſhops oppos'd, as trenching too much upon them; and the King thought their diſſenting from the eſtabliſh'd Government of the Church, was but to get that Power into a great many Hands, which was now but in one, and that one had Dependance upon him. The Prelates diſtilling this Maxim into him, No Biſhop, no Monarch; ſo ſtrengthning the Mitre by the ſame Power that upholds the Crown. Sir Edward Peyton tells us, Dr. Reynolds and his Brethren had not Freedom of Speech, for all went on the Biſhops Side; a Cauſe England in all Parts after were depriv'd of pious Men, which were ſilenced, impriſon'd, and put out of their Lectures and Livings; ſo that want of teaching caus'd Prophaneneſs to get the Pre-eminence.

What is moſt to be lamented in this Conteſt, is, that tho' the Subject of it be ſpiritual, and concerns entirely the Salvation of Souls, and Life or Death Eternal, yet it turns wholly on Temporal Powers, worldly Riches, and temporary Greatneſs, which are ſo many Nothings in Compariſon with Peace of Conſcience and Piety of Mind. 'Tis great Pity ſuch ſimple and uſeful Sentiments ſhou'd eſcape thoſe Men who are by their Function ſet apart to inſtruct and direct us. The King perform'd his Menaces very punctually, and by Bancroft and his Brethren, harried the beſt Men in the Kingdom out of the Land; in which he was the wiſer, for that the People did generally love and reſpect them. This Diſpoſition prevail'd ſo far over the whole Nation, that a Parliament being ſuddenly to aſſemble, Archbiſhop Whitgift pray'd that he might not live to ſee it, fearing to be called to an Account for his Severities againſt the Puritans; and it muſt needs be an Inſtance of the King's almoſt infinite Wiſdom, to begin his Reign with giving Offence to the moſt ſober, induſtrious, and valuable Part of his Kingdom; and even in his Proclamation againſt Jeſuits, to expreſs himſelf ſo much devoted to the Pope, that no good Proteſtant can read it without a ſecret Indignation We acknowledge our ſelf perſonally ſo much beholden to the now Biſhop of Rome for his kind Offices, and private temporal Carriage towards us in many Things, as we ſhall be ever ready to requite the ſame towards him. Queen Elizabeth wou'd have kiſs'd his Toe as ſoon as ſhe wou'd have paid the Pope ſuch a Compliment.

A.D.1604.

The King compliments the Pope.

To balance the Proclamation againſt Jeſuits, another was iſſu'd againſt Nonconformiſts, who were unblameable in their Converſation, and therefore the more likely to make Enemies in a Court, where the Converſation was in every thing blameable.

His Court vicious.

About three Weeks after the Hampton-Court Conference, dy'd Dr. John Whitgift Archbiſhop of Canterbury; and, as another Inſtance of conſummate Policy, the King advanc'd the moſt obnoxious Prelate in England, Dr. John Bancroft, to that Metropolitan Chair. This Biſhop imitated St. Peter's military Faculty, and us'd the temporal as well as ſpiritual Sword. He arm'd his Servants and others when he was Biſhop of London, to oppoſe the Earl of Eſſex, and was never at Peace with the Puritans. We ſhall ſee how well he imitated St. Peter in his apoſtolick Capacity. Yet neither he, nor his Brethren cou'd be ſo wary, but ſome Courtier or other wou'd recommend a Preacher to the King, if they knew any one of excellent Parts: by which means ſome preach'd before him, who were only occaſional Conformiſts, ſuch as Mr. Burgeſs, who in his Sermon compar'd Ceremonies to the Roman Senator's Glaſſes, not worth a Man's Life or Livelihood: For, ſays he, this Senator invited Auguſtus Cæſar to a Dinner, who, as he was coming to the Feaſt, heard a horrid Outcry, and ſaw a Company drawing a Man after them who made the Noiſe. The Emperor demanded the Cauſe of that Violence, and was anſwer'd, their Maſter had condemn'd a Man to the Fiſhponds for breaking a Glaſs which he ſet a high Value and Eſteem upon. Auguſtus commanded a Stay of the Execution, and when he came into the Houſe, ask'd the Senator, Whether he had Glaſſes worth a Man's Life? Who reply'd, He had Glaſſes he valu'd at a Province. Let me ſee them, ſays the Emperor; "Accordingly he was brought into a Room "well furniſh'd: The Emperor allow'd them to "be beautiful to the Eye; but conſidering they "might be the Cauſe of much Miſchief, broke "them all, ſaying, Better all theſe periſh than one "Man." I leave, ſaid Mr. Burgeſs, to your Majeſty to apply. The Biſhops for this, and ſome other the like heinous Crimes, got him ſilenc'd; but he was reſtor'd again to his Miniſtry, and dy'd in a good old Age at Sutton-Cofield in Warwickſhire.

The King had been almoſt ten Months in England, but had not been ſeen much abroad. He naturally did not love to be look'd at; for, as has been ſaid, he was not very handſome, and had no Reliſh of the Formalities of State. Some attribute it not to the Diſagreeableneſs of his Perſon, but to the Shyneſs of his Temper, and ſome to his Timerouſneſs, there being more Danger in a Crowd than in a few Attendants.

Dr. Fuller, p. 25.

Having ſummon'd a Parliament to meet the 19th of March, he went on the 15th with his Queen and the Prince to the Tower, riding through the

*A.D.*1604. City amidſt the continu'd Acclamations of the Multitude, which did not affect him as they affected his Predeceſſor Queen Elizabeth. Whether it was that the Noiſe diſturb'd him, or that he did not think them real, 'tis moſt certain, when the People have been impatient of Acceſs to him, he has often had them diſpers'd with Force, and ſometimes with Curſes.

It was taken notice of, that in the Proclamation for ſummoning this Parliament, his Majeſty gave the Nation a Taſte of his Inclination to Arbitrary Power. Before his coming to the Crown, the Election of Members for the Houſe of Commons was ſo free, that Letters from the King, or any Nobleman, to chuſe a Knight, Citizen, or Burgeſs, was judg'd Cauſe ſufficient to render the Election void: But the King, by this Proclamation, gives order what ſort of Men, and how qualify'd, ſhou'd be choſen, concluding thus; We notify by theſe Preſents, that all Returns and Certificates of Knights, Citizens, and Burgeſſes, ought and are to be brought to the Court of Chancery, and there to be filed upon Record; and if any be found to be made contrary to this Proclamation, the ſame to be rejected as not lawful, and inſufficient, and the City or Borough to be fin'd for the ſame: And if it be found that they have committed any groſs or wilful Default or Contempt in the Election, Return, or Certificate, that then their Liberties, according to the Laws, are to be ſeiz'd as forfeited. And if any Perſon take upon him the Place of Knight, Citizen, or Burgeſs, not being duly elected and ſworn according to the Laws and Statutes in that Behalf provided, and according to the Purport and true Meaning of this our Proclamation; then every Perſon ſo offending to be fin'd and impriſon'd for the ſame. This was ſo bold a Stroke againſt the Rights of the People, and Privileges of Parliament, that it cou'd be little expected from a Prince of a pacifick Diſpoſition. But we have been taught, by woful Experience, ſince the Death of Queen Elizabeth, that thoſe Kings who are leaſt qualify'd to make Conqueſts on their Enemies abroad, make the moſt terrible Invaſions on the Laws and Liberties of their Subjects at home.

Coke, f. 52.

The King arbitrary.

From the Tower the King rode triumphantly, for ſuch were all the Triumphs of his Reign, to Weſtminſter; and open'd the Parliament with a long Speech, longer than many Sermons by our moſt eminent Preachers. The moſt remarkable Paſſage in it, is another needleſs Compliment to Popery; as much out in Fact, as in Policy: I acknowledge the Roman Church to be our Mother Church, tho' defil'd with ſome Infirmities. The Church of Rome can no more be Mother of our Proteſtant Church of England, than Chriſt can be Father of Antichriſt, or the Spouſe be the Whore of Babylon. This was a very wiſe Saying too, and produc'd in the Hearers, the ſage Senators of England, an Admiration of his Majeſty's Abilities, if we may believe Echard; and in Return for this gracious Declaration to them, they recogniz'd his Title to the Crown, and oblig'd themſelves, their Heirs and Poſterity to maintain it. In Compliance alſo with his Majeſty's earneſt Deſire for a Union between the two Kingdoms of England and Scotland, they paſt an Act for appointing Commiſſioners to treat with ſuch Noblemen and Gentlemen of Scotland, as ſhou'd by their Parliament be appointed for that Purpoſe. This Project came to nothing; and one Reaſon of it is thought to be the Offence which many took at a Paſſage in the King's Speech, where he ſeem'd to ſet up a ſort of Parity between the two Kingdoms. To promote this good Work as far as in him lay, the King caus'd himſelf to be proclaim'd King of Great-Britain. Scots Money was made current, and the Engliſh Ships had St. George's and St. Andrew's Croſſes quarter'd together in their Flags.

The Parliament.

The Reverence due to Parliaments wore off betimes in this Reign; ſeveral Members of the Houſe of Commons coming to hear the King's Speech in the Houſe of Lords, had the Door ſhut upon them, particularly Sir Herbert Croſts, who was repuls'd by a Yeoman of the Guard, with the uncivil and contemptible Terms of Goodman Burgeſs, you come not here.

*A.D.*1604.

We have ſeen how the King ſtretch'd the Prerogative in the Proclamation for calling the Parliament; and in their Proceedings he let them know in the Caſe of the conteſted Election between Sir Francis Goodwin and Sir John Forteſcue, to be Knight of the Shire for the County of Bucks, that he wou'd have Differences determin'd by his abſolute Power; and tho' the Commons voted Sir Francis duly elected, yet the King commanded them to let the Matter be heard before the Houſe of Lords and the Judges: But Sir Francis Goodwin, fearing it might cauſe a Rupture between the King and the Houſe of Commons, petition'd that a new Writ might be iſſu'd to elect a Knight for that County in his Stead; and accordingly Chriſtopher Pigott Eſq; was choſen, and ſoon after expell'd the Houſe. Mr. Brown Willis makes Goodwin to be unduly elected, which is contrary to the Vote of the Houſe, and to Sir Francis Goodwin's Petition. This happen'd about a Week after the Opening of the Seſſion, at the End of which, on the 16th of June, the Commons preſented the King with an humble Apology, ſetting forth the Breaches that had been made in their Privileges, and wherein they conceiv'd themſelves aggriev'd. This was a hopeful Beginning of the Royal Houſe of Stuart; and the King took their Apology ſo ill, that he never heartily lov'd our Conſtitution afterwards. The plain Truth from the Houſe of Commons little agreed with the Flatteries he was us'd to at Court; and he afterwards did his utmoſt to eſtabliſh an unlimited Authority founded on Jure Divino, in which fatal Enterprize he was flatter'd by the Clergy, whoſe Sermons were Lectures to teach Obedience rather to the Will of the Prince than the Goſpel of Chriſt. Mr. Osborn, who heard ſome of thoſe Sermons, writes of them thus: "The Court Sermons informing his Majeſty he might, as Chriſt's Vicegerent, command all; and that the People, if they deny'd him Supplies, or enquir'd after the Diſpoſure of them, were preſumptuous Peepers into the ſacred Ark of the State, not to be done but under the ſevereſt Curſe, though it appear'd likely to fall through the Falſhood or Folly of thoſe at the Helm." Can any thing be more plain, more ſelf-evident, than that it was ſuch ſort of Preaching which animated this mean-ſpirited Monarch in the bold Deſign to invade the Rights and Privileges of his Subjects: And his Son Charles I. imbibing this fatal Doctrine as it were with his Mother's Milk, the Luſt of deſpotick Power became as natural to him, as the Love of Liberty is to all true Engliſhmen; which Oppoſition cou'd not end otherwiſe than it did, in a Rupture between King and People, to prove which is the Deſign of this Hiſtory, that the Guilt and Folly of that Rupture may be laid at their Door who were the Occaſion of it. The Hiſtorian Echard overlooks this firſt Riſe of our Troubles in England ſince Queen Elizabeth's Death, and takes great Solace in the Act which paſs'd now to ſecure Church Lands; and the excellent Canons that were made at the ſame Time, being in Force even at this Day, as Echard ſays; and as Dr. Welwood, Theſe Canons did never receive the Royal Approbation, and therefore are in the ſame Caſe as if they had never been; which is a Diſpute that relates not to me, who am not ſollicitous whether they were or were not royally approv'd, as not looking upon them to be what Echard will have them, for the Honour and Eſtabliſhment of the Church, of which this King took

Dr. Fuller, ſpeaking of the ſame Honour and Eſtabliſhment, writes, Wiſe and moderate Men ſuppos'd ſo many Laws too heavy a Burden to be long born; and that it had been enough for the Epiſcopal Party to have triumph'd, not inſulted over their Adverſaries in ſo numerous Impoſitions. Theſe very Impoſitions, condemn'd thus by moderate and wiſe Men, drove the moſt conſcientious Miniſters out of the Church; and they were follow'd by the moſt conſcientious of their Flocks; which increaſs'd the Separation to a Degree, that in the next Reign produc'd a new Eſtabliſhment.

The Riſe of the Troubles.

A Motion was made in this Convocation for an Oath againſt Simony, which was warmly oppos'd by Dr. Rudd Biſhop of St. David's. His Reaſon was, he thought it unequal for the Incumbent to ſwear, and not the Patron; a moſt unreaſonable Thing. But might not the good Biſhop have conſider'd, that the Incumbent had his Vocation from the Holy Ghoſt, and therefore muſt be ſafe in ſwearing, whereas the Patron had nothing ſpiritual in his Compoſition, and therefore might bargain and ſell with a ſafer Conſcience? 'Twas demanded of him, Whether he wou'd have the King ſwear when he made a Biſhop or Dean? To which Biſhop Rudd had nothing to ſay.

Archbiſhop Bancroft's Character, p. 60.

Having made ſome mention of Bancroft Archbiſhop of Canterbury, who was the firſt and great Mover in Convocation-Buſineſs, let us repeat what Coke writes of him; "He was a Man of a rough "Temper, a ſtout Foot-ball Player, a zealous Aſ"ſertor of the Rights of the Church of England, "or rather a Faction of Churchmen, who arroga"ted to themſelves the Title, which is the Truth: "And it was King James's encouraging this Faction, "in Oppoſition to his Proteſtant Subjects, Puritans "and Presbyterians, that put him upon ill Terms "with his Parliament and People. Bancroft exhi"bited twenty-five Articles in the Name of the "Clergy, call'd Auriculi Cleri, which were deſir'd "to be reform'd in granting Prohibitions. Theſe "Articles were preſented to the King and Coun"cil, the Parliament, and even the Convocation "then ſitting: And as Bancroft in doing it, aſcri"bed an abſolute Power to the King, ſo it ſtruck "directly at the Conſtitution of Parliaments. The "Judges gave ſo clear and diſtinct an Anſwer to "them all, that the King did not think fit to "meddle in them; yet did not Bancroft reſt here." This Prelate's Zeal is the more extraordinary, for that his Morals were ſo very ordinary as to make him the common Subject of Satyr.

And, if I don't lie, his Soul is in Heaven;
I wiſh, from my Heart, it may be to his leeking,
Since all the World knows it was never his ſeeking.

Again;

Bancroft was for Plays,
Lean Lent, and Holidays;
But now undergoes their Doom;
Had Engliſh Ladies Store,
Yet kept open a Back-Door,
To let in the Strumpet of Rome.

Theſe Rhimes are in Osborn; and it is not below the Dignity of Hiſtory to inſert them, ſince they let us into the Character of a Biſhop who was at the Head of the Faction mention'd by Coke; and one may ſee very plainly, that whatever his Actions were, Religion and Piety cou'd not be the true Motive of them. We read in the Menagiana, that Satyrs and Lampoons are neceſſary to be read by an Hiſtorian who wou'd write ſincerely. Un Recueil des Vaudevilles eſt un piece de plus neceſſaire a un Hiſtorien qui veut ecrire ſincerement: Which will be ſome Information to thoſe who have no Conception of any ſuch Neceſſity. A.D.1604.

King James's firſt Parliament having for the firſt Seſſion ſate about fifteen Weeks, it was on the 7th of July prorogu'd to the 7th of February following.

This pacifick Reign was not ſo full of Bleſſings, that no Miſchiefs cou'd break in upon them. Our inbred Diſtempers, ſays Wilſon, lay upon the Lee, intermix'd with other groſs Dregs, which the Prince's Lenity, and the Peoples Luxury produc'd. The King minding his Sports, many riotous Demeanours crept into his Kingdom. The Sunſhine of Peace being apt for ſuch a Production upon the Slime of the late War. Divers Sects of vitious Perſons appear'd under the Title of Royſters, Roaring Boys, Bravadoes, &c. who committed many Inſolencies; and the Diſcontents in the Country between the Gentry and the Commonalty about Incloſures, grew in ſome Places to a petty Rebellion. Theſe Felicities, with the Tyranny and Oppreſſion exercis'd every where in Spiritual Courts, a perpetual Scandal to Religion and Law, the Waſte of the publick Treaſure on Scotiſh, and afterwards on Engliſh Favourites, cou'd not but expoſe this Nation to the Envy of all Nations, according to Archdeacon Echard, under the Government of ſo wiſe and ſo pious a Prince. Wicked and troubleſome Times.

Something has been ſaid of the Embaſſies from and to foreign Potentates, in the beginning of this Reign, and ſomething ſtill muſt be added concerning the Spaniſh Ambaſſadors, the Conſtable of Caſtile, the Conde de Villa Mediana, Mynheer Rabidius, and the Miniſters ſent by the Archduke Governor of the Netherlands, the Count d'Aremberg, the Preſident Richardot, and Secretary Warreskin, by whoſe joint Negotiations with the Engliſh Plenipotentiaries, the Earls of Dorſet, Nottingham, Devonſhire, Northampton, and Cecil, Lord Fſindon, a Peace with Spain was concluded, or rather ſold; for there was hardly a Courtier of Note who did not taſte of the Catholick King's Bounty either in Gold or Jewels; of which Sir Anth. Welden writes thus: It was ſo advantagious for Spain, and ſo diſadvantagious for England, that it and all Chriſtendom have ſince both ſeen and felt the lamentable Effect thereof. Mr. Osborn ſays, The King caſt himſelf as it were blindfold into a Peace with Spain, far more deſtructive to England than a War. The wonderful Wiſdom of it! And then the Honeſty. Hence all Princes may calculate the vaſt Difference that lies between a Counſel ſuborn'd and one free from Corruption. Sir Anthony Welden informs us further, that of all the Money taken for this bad Bargain, the Counteſs of Suffolk was the greateſt Gainer, who ſhar'd not only in her Lord's Intereſt, but in Secretary Cecil's; and from what both of them gain'd by the Spaniſh Treaty, ſhe rais'd the famous Palace of Audley-End, and other ſtately Structures. This Counteſs was Mother to the Lady Eſſex, and by her Gallantry ſet ſuch an Example to her Daughter, as has ſtain'd their Names with indelible Infamy. Peace with Spain. Diſhonourable to England. P. 26. P. 479.

In March following, the old Admiral the Earl of Nottingham was ſent Ambaſſador to Spain, attended with the prime Noblemen and Gentlemen of England, and a Train of above 600 Servants and others, who made ſo fine an Appearance, that the Spaniards were ſtruck with Aſtoniſhment, having receiv'd ſuch ill Impreſſions from the Reports of the Jeſuits, that they thought the Engliſh were all like the Picture they had made of Sir Francis Drake, half Man, half Dragon; and believing they were turn'd into Monſters, as a Puniſhment for caſting off the Pope's Supremacy. They now ſaw them with Looks rather of Angels than Devils; and their Beauty was magnify'd ſo much the more, by how much they had had a falſe and vain Conception of their Deformity. Sir Robert Manſel, Vice-Admiral, who convoy'd the Earl of Nottingham, A.D.1605.

A.D.1605. ham, had two or three Opportunities to diſtinguiſh himſelf by his Valour and Prudence: And his Behaviour did Honour to the Nation, whoſe Sovereign had ſent him to Spain. The Spaniards, ſays Mr. Echard, manifeſted great Satisfaction in the Engliſh Amity; and truly they had very great Cauſe ſo to do, having turn'd it all to their own Advantage, and made a faſt Friend of an Enemy, in whoſe Power only it was to deſtroy their ambitious and tyrannical Projects both in Europe and America, and ſecure the Liberty of Commerce in both the old World and the new. The Earl of Hertford was ſent Envoy to the Archduke Albert; and Sir William Monſon, who convoy'd him, meeting a Flemiſh Man of War in his Paſſage to Flanders, made a Signal to ſtrike, which the Fleming refus'd; and being fir'd at, fir'd again: the firſt Affront of this Kind offer'd to the Royal Ships of England in Time of Peace. But England is to learn to accuſtom herſelf to Affronts during the Reigns we are writing of. Monſon did not fight the Flemiſh Ship, giving for Excuſe that the Earl of Hertford charg'd him on his Allegiance to land him firſt; and being appointed to attend him, he thought it his Duty ſo to do; but afterwards he ſo repented it, that he wiſh'd he had been hang'd, rather than have been recorded for the firſt Engliſh Sea-Officer, who ſuffer'd ſuch an Indignity to paſs with Impunity. Sir A. W. who heard him ſay this, aſſures us 'twas all Affectation; that he was a Creature of the Houſe of Suffolk, of the Spaniſh Faction, and let the Flemiſh Ship go out of Reſpect to the King of Spain.

England in Diſgrace.

We ſee by this how ſoon the Engliſh Nation began to ſink in Reputation, after the Acceſſion of the Houſe of Stuart to the Throne; and how much they are indebted to the Caution and Indolence of a King, who, ſays Echard, was now truly ſtil'd Rex Pacificus, being now in Friendſhip with all the Princes of Chriſtendom: A Happineſs which few of his Anceſtors ever enjoy'd. And few of his Anceſtors wou'd have accepted of on Terms ſo diſadvantageous and ſo diſhonourable. He proceeds: In theſe peaceable Times this munificent King open'd the Fountains of Honour, and made Duke Ulrick, the Queen's Brother, and the Earl of Northampton, a Confident of the Counteſs of Eſſex, Knights of the Garter; Secretary Cecil, Lord Eſſingdon, Viſcount Cranburn and Earl of Salisbury; Thomas Cecil, Lord Burghley, Earl of Exeter; Sir Philip Herbert, younger Brother to the Earl of Pembroke, Earl of Montgomery; Sir Robert Sidney, Baron of Penſhurſt, Viſcount Liſle; Sir John Stanhope, Lord Stanhope of Harrington; Sir George Carew, Lord Carew of Clopton; Mr. Thomas Arundel of Cornwal, Lord Arundel of Warder; Mr. William Cavendiſh, Lord Cavendiſh of Hardwick.

Honours conferr'd.

The Papiſts obſerving that the Prodigality of the Scots render'd them odious to the Engliſh, endeavour'd to increaſe the Animoſities between them with Calumnies and Scandal, ſome true, ſome falſe. The Scots gave them too much Occaſion; ſome of them being ſo daring, as to counterfeit the King's Privy-Seal, and make Addreſſes by it to foreign Princes; as to the Archbiſhops of Cologne, Triers, and Mentz; the Duke of Cleves, and Count Palatine of the Rhine; of which one Thomas Douglaſſe was convicted, and being condemn'd as a Traytor, was hang'd, drawn, and quarter'd in Smithfield.

Wilſon, p. 28.

The King's Miniſters, eſpecially Salisbury, on whoſe crooked Shoulders the Burthen of the State lay, were well pleas'd with the King's frequent Diverſion of Hunting, for that it kept him out of Town, and left the Court clear to themſelves. Royſton and Newmarket Houſes were purchas'd for him, and Theobalds ſoon after. In which Salisbury made a fine Market, exchanging that Palace at 50 Years Purchaſe, for Lands and Houſes of the King's; and to preſerve his Station at Theobalds ſtill, he got himſelf and his Heirs to be appointed perpetual Keepers of the Houſe and Parks adjacent, while he rais'd the magnificent Pile at Hatfield for the Reception of himſelf and his Poſterity, when they were weary of Attendance at Court, and ſurfeited with Royal Favours. A.D.1605.

At the latter End of the Summer, the King and Queen viſited the Univerſity of Oxford, and were entertain'd with Feſtivals and rhetorical Speeches. Several of the Courtiers had Academical Degrees beſtow'd upon them; particularly Sir George Calvert, afterwards Lord Baltimore, who was then created Maſter of Arts.

Papiſts conſpire againſt the Government.

There is nothing more unaccountable in the Conduct of the Romiſh Faction, than their Plots againſt the Princes of the Houſe of Stuart who have reign'd in England, there not having been one of them who did not love or favour them. King James, the firſt of them, let no Occaſion ſlip to ſhew either his Fear of, or his Affection to them. But while he and his Succeſſors found themſelves under a Neceſſity to temporize with their Parliaments, and execute the Laws againſt them, tho' with viſible Regret and Moderation, they were always reſty and impatient, and hoping any Change of their own making wou'd be for their Advantage, they frequently enter'd into Conſpiracies to accompliſh it, to which they were doubtleſs inſtigated by the Leſſons and Promiſes they receiv'd from Rome, and the Hopes of Aſſiſtance from the Popiſh Princes.

Gun-Powder Plot.

Their firſt Conſpiracy in this Reign, (for I do not take Raleigh's to be theirs, or worth the Name) was the infamous Gun-Powder Plot, which I ſhall endeavour to trace from its Original, according to the beſt Helps I am furniſh'd with. It is ſaid, the Papiſts petition'd for a Toleration; and having depended entirely on the Good-will of the King, were extremely exaſperated at their being put off; and the moſt deſperate of them reſolv'd to be reveng'd on the whole Nation for their Diſappointment in the Conduct of the King. I do not believe this deviliſh Machination was ſo old as Pope Clement's Brief in Queen Elizabeth's Time, to have the Scots King excluded in the Succeſſion. There was no Prince in the Engliſh Succeſſion, who was fitter for their Purpoſe than this King; and the Powder-Plot muſt be rather the helliſh Device of the Deſperado's of Popery, than the general Senſe of thoſe of that Religion.

Plotters.

The chief of the Conſpirators was Robert Cateſbie, a Gentleman of a fair Fortune in Northamptonſhire, deſcended from that Catesbie, who was the wicked Inſtrument of Richard the Third's Tyranny and Cruelty. To him were join'd Thomas Piercy of the Northumberland Family, Sir Everard Digby, Francis Treſham, Robert Winter, Thomas Winter, John Wright, Chriſtopher Wright, Ambroſe Rookwood, Robert Keys, John Grant, and Guido Vaux. The Names of two of theſe Conſpirators, Rookwood and Keys, are the more remarkable, for that we find them again in the Popiſh Aſſaſſination Plot againſt King William 90 Years after. Moſt of the Plotters were Gentlemen of good Eſtates, ſet on by Garnet and Tiſmond, two Jeſuits; and the Plot was to blow up the Parliament Houſe with Gunpowder. Upon a Scruple at one of their Conſultations, that their Friends in both Houſes of Parliament wou'd be deſtroy'd with the reſt, Garnet the Jeſuit ſaid, It is lawful in ſuch a Caſe to kill Friend and Foe together. Other Difficulties lay in their way. Charles Duke of York wou'd not be preſent by reaſon of his Minority, and the Princeſs Elizabeth was in keeping of the Lord Harrington, by which means two of the Blood Royal wou'd eſcape, after the King and Prince Henry were blown up with the two Houſes of Parliament. To remove theſe Rubs, Piercy promis'd to poſſeſs himſelf of the Perſon of the Duke of York; and Catesbie under pretence of a Hunting-

*A.D.*1605. Match at Dunſmore-Heath in Warwickſhire, undertook to ſeize the Princeſs Elizabeth at the Lord Harrington's Houſe, which was not far from Aſhby, where himſelf dwelt. Then they conſider'd what ſhou'd be done when the Blow was ſtruck. And to turn off the Guilt of it from themſelves, it was reſolv'd to lay it on the Puritans. " Thus, " ſays Fuller, by transferring the Fact upon the " Innocent, they hop'd not only to decline the O- " dium of ſo execrable a Deſign, but alſo to a- " muſe all Men, that begetting a Diſtruſt one of " another, they might in that Perplexity work the " Deſtruction of all their Opponents, Confor- " miſts or Nonconformiſts". This horrid Contrivance of the Papiſts was imitated to Perfection in the Reign of King Charles II. when the Lord Clarendon and his Fellow-Miniſters laid ſo many ſham Plots on the Diſſenters, as will be ſhewn in the Hiſtory of that King. The Conſpirators drew up a formal Proclamation, charging the Puritans with the Plot. It was printed and ready to be publiſh'd, as we are inform'd by Du Moulin; but ſuppreſs'd on the Diſcovery of the Conſpiracy. Dr. Parker Dean of Lincoln, Sir William Ellis Recorder of that City, and others, ſaw and read that Proclamation. Mr. Pickering of Tichmarſh in Northamptonſhire, probably the ſame who rode Poſt to Scotland with the News of the Queen's Death, was to have been brought into this Plot, being a noted Puritan. One of the Plotters, perhaps Mr. Keys, his Brother-in-law, was to have borrow'd Mr. Pickering's Horſe; and when the Blow was given to have kill'd it in his Flight, and left it by the way as a Proof of the Owner's Guilt and Fear. Father Weſton, a Jeſuit, who was active in this Plot, ingenuouſly confeſs'd 30 Years after to Mr. Wilſon the Hiſtorian then in Flanders, that the Plotters deſign'd to father it on the Puritans. Fuller has an odd Story on this Occaſion. A few Days before the intended Blow, Mr. Keys being at Tichmarſh ſuddenly whipp'd out his Sword, and as in Jeſt made ſeveral Paſſes at the Head, Neck and Breaſt of ſeveral Gentlemen and Ladies then in Company. It was at that time thought an apiſh Frolick; but when the Treaſon was diſcover'd, thoſe who remember'd his Monkey-like Freak, imagin'd he meant to do what he mimick'd, to ſtab, wound, and kill the Hereticks of all Sexes, Ages, and Qualities.

Papiſts wou'd throw the Plot on the Puritans.

The Deſign being form'd, they bound themſelves to Secrecy by taking the holy Sacrament, Garnet the Jeſuit being their Confeſſor. Every one of the Plotters had his Share in the Plot aſſign'd him. Some were to provide Money, ſome Materials. Piercy was to hire the Cellar under the Parliament Houſe, to lay Wood and Coals in it for his Winter Store, which Guy Faux, who went for his Man by the Name of John Johnſon, was to lodge there, and to give Fire to the Train. The Gunpowder was bought in Flanders, brought to Catesbie's Houſe at Lambeth, and from thence by Night to the Cellars, where 'twas hid under the Wood. They deſign'd to perpetrate their Wickedneſs on the 7th of February, when the Parliament was to meet; but it being prorogu'd to the 5th of November, they were obliged to defer it, and diſpers'd themſelves with a Reſolution to meet again when the Parliament met the next Winter.

They had in the Interval ſeveral private Cabals, in which it was reſolv'd to kill the Duke of York, Piercy undertaking that bloody Work. When the King, Prince Henry, and the Duke were deſtroy'd, the Princeſs Elizabeth was to have been proclaim'd Queen under Tuition of the moſt rigid Papiſts; and in order to ſeize her, the Hunting Match at Dunſmore-Heath was fix'd to be the 5th of November. In this dangerous and dreadful Poſture ſtood things, when on a Saturday, ten Days before Execution was to be, an unknown Fellow deliver'd a Letter ſeal'd to a Footman of the Lord Monteagle's, Son and Heir to the Lord Morley. *A.D.*1605. The Contents were:

My LORD,

OUT of the Love I bear to ſome of your Friends, I have a Care of your Preſervation; therefore I wou'd adviſe you, as you tender your Life, to deviſe ſome Excuſe to ſhift off your Attendance this Parliament; for God and Man have concurr'd to puniſh the Wickedneſs of this Time. And think not ſlightly of this Advertiſement; but retire your ſelf into the Country, where you may expect the Event in Safety. For tho' there be no Appearance of any Stir, yet, I ſay, they ſhall receive a terrible Blow this Parliament, and yet they ſhall not ſee who hurts them. This Counſel is not to be contemn'd, becauſe it may do you good, and can do you no harm. For the Danger is paſt as ſoon as you have burnt the Letter; and I hope God will give you the Grace to make good uſe of it, to whoſe holy Protection I recommend you.

This Letter was deliver'd to the Lord Monteagle at his Houſe at Bednal-Green. He cou'd not tell what to make of it, unleſs it was an Artifice made uſe of to hinder his going to Parliament; yet he cou'd not be eaſy till he had communicated it to the Earl of Salisbury, Secretary of State. Saliſbury ſaid, he was a Fool or Madman who wrote it: By this Expreſſion, The Danger is paſt as ſoon as the Letter is burnt. If the Danger is paſt when the Letter is burnt, what needs any Warning? In which he miſconſtru'd the Writer's Meaning, whoſe Deſire was to have the Letter burnt, and then the Danger wou'd be over both to him who wrote, and him who receiv'd it. The King at that time was hunting at Royſton; as ſoon as he return'd to Whitehall, the Earl of Salisbury ſhew'd him the Letter.

It has been obſerv'd of Love, that it is ingenious in finding out Expedients to gain the deſir'd Object; and Fear is not leſs ingenious to diſcover Danger, and avoid it. This Paſſion being natural in King James, he ſaid immediately, It is no mean Man's Writing. There is a Blow to be given. They ſhall not ſee it that feel it. Some ſecret Miſchief is meant by it; which on a ſecond reading of the Letter his Majeſty interpreted to be Gunpowder. Wilſon ſays upon it, Many times Fear is a profitable and an active Servant, if it does not domineer and grow maſterly. The King commanded the Earl of Suffolk, Lord Chamberlain, to make Search about the Parliament Houſe; who under pretence of ſearching for ſome Hangings ſtolen out of the Wardrobe, enter'd the Cellar under the Houſe accompany'd with the Lord Monteagle. They found the Cellar ſtuff'd with Billet, Faggot, and Coal. And asking Whinyard of the Wardrobe, who was Houſe-keeper, to whom they belong'd? he reply'd, To Mr. Piercy, one of the Gentlemen Penſioners to the King, the Wood and Coal being for his Winter Fuel. The Earl of Suffolk caſting his Eye aſide, diſcover'd a tall, raw-bon'd, ill-looking Fellow in the Corner of the Vault; and asking who he was, underſtood 'twas Mr. Piercy's Man John Johnſon, whoſe true Name was Guy Faux. The Lord Chamberlain thought fit to make this Report to the King before he proceeded farther in his Search; and his Majeſty conceiving ſtill greater Cauſe of Suſpicion, order'd the Coal and Wood to be remov'd. Accordingly Sir Thomas Knevet, a Juſtice of the Peace at Weſtminſter, with Conſtables and other Attendants, aſſiſted Whinyard in a ſtricter Search after the pretended Hangings. They came to the Cellar about Midnight the fourth of November, and found Faux in Cloak and Boots at the Entrance into the Vault. Sir Thomas Knevet apprehended him immediately; and entring the Cellar, caus'd the Billets, Faggots and Coals to be thrown aſide, under which they diſcover'd the

The Plot diſcover'd.

*A.D.*1605. Magazine of Powder, 36 Barrels, prepar'd to blow up the King, Prince, and Two Houſes of Parliament; and ſearching the Villain Faux, who waited to ſet fire to it, they found about him a Watch, very rare at that time, a Dark Lanthorn, three Matches, a Tinder-Box, and other Inſtruments, to have given fire to the Train at a certain Minute. He was ſo far from relenting, that he ſwore, if he had been in the Houſe, he wou'd have blown himſelf and them up together; adding, he was ſorry it was not done; and it was not God, but the Devil that diſcover'd the Plot. About four a-Clock in the Morning Knevet went with his Priſoner to ſome Lords of the Council, who waited his coming; and having given them an Account of his Succeſs, the Earl of Suffolk and other Lords haſten'd to the King, and awak'd him with crying, The Treaſon is found out, and the Traytor taken. Faux was at firſt very obſtinate, and wou'd confeſs nothing in particular; but own'd the Plot in general, juſtifying it by the Principles of his Religion, himſelf being a Catholick, and the King an Heretick. He was committed to the Tower, and threaten'd with the Rack; which brought him to a better Senſe of his Condition, and by degrees to Repentance and Confeſſion.

Before the Diſcovery of the Plot, the Plotters had Intimation of the Letter which was ſent to the Lord Monteagle, who upon hearing Piercy nam'd imagin'd the Letter came from him, there having been ſome Intimacy between himſelf and Piercy; tho' in truth the Letter was written by Francis Treſham, Son of Sir Thomas Treſham, who was ſo active in this wicked Buſineſs, that he lent 2000 l. for the carrying it on. Sir Everard Digby lent 1500 l. and Piercy promis'd to ſeize the Earl of Northumberland's Rents, which wou'd bring them in 40000 l. They all forſwore the Letter, but Treſham was ſuſpected to be the Author. Himſelf, Catesbie, Piercy, Winter, and the younger Wright were lodg'd in the City; and when they heard of the Diſcovery, got out of Town as faſt as they cou'd; only Treſham ſtaid behind, and ſhifted his Lodging, in hopes of making his Eſcape beyond Sea. Piercy and Catesbie went firſt, Winter and others follow'd them to Dunchurch in Warwickſhire, the Seat of Sir Everard Digby, where they had appointed to meet for the before-mention'd Hunting Match. John Grant of Northbrooke in Warwickſhire, Eſq; broke open the Stable of one Benock, a Manager of great Horſes, and took away eight; on which he mounted ſo many reſolute Papiſts; and not doubting of the Succeſs of their diabolical Deſign, he was prepared to ſeize the Princeſs Elizabeth at the Hunting Match. The Conſpirators broke open ſome Stables in London, and ſeiz'd ſeveral Noblemen and Gentlemen's Horſes, in hopes of raiſing a good Body of Horſe to head a general Inſurrection of the Papiſts. Their Powder-Plot having miſcarry'd, a Rebellion under Colour of Religion was to ſerve in its ſtead; but with all their Zeal and Activity they cou'd not draw 100 Men together. A Proclamation to apprehend them was iſſu'd at London; but it was not come into Warwickſhire when Grant alarm'd the Country by breaking open Benock's Stable. Sir Fulk Greville the Elder, a Deputy-Lieutenant of that County, caus'd Hue and Cry to be made, and a Party of Men was rais'd to purſue the Rebels; one of whom, Winter, was ſeiz'd by a Smith at Coventry, but reſcu'd by his Fellows. Sixteen others of them were taken by the Citizens, and ſent Priſoners to London by Sir Richard Verney, High-Sheriff of Warwickſhire. Catesbie, Piercy, Grant, Rookwood, the two Winters and the two Wrights ſeiz'd Arms at the Lord Windſor's, and ſhut themſelves up at Halbach, the Houſe of Stephen Littleton in Staffordſhire on the Borders of Worceſterſhire; of which Sir Richard Walſh, High-Sheriff of Worceſterſhire, having notice, he took what Help was at hand; and coming to Halbach, *A.D.*1605. ſent a Trumpet and Meſſenger to them. The Rebels being ſummon'd in his Majeſty's Name to ſurrender, they anſwer'd with Diſdain, If he cou'd not get more powerful Aſſiſtance, he wou'd not be able to defend himſelf. During the Parley, the chief Conſpirators were buſy in drying Powder far off from the Chimney; yet a Spark of Fire flew out, and falling amongſt it blew up a Bag-full that was near it, and a good Part of the Houſe. Catesbie, Rookwood and Grant were ſo wounded, that they cou'd make little Reſiſtance. They were all in a terrible Conſternation, and expecting no Pardon, reſolv'd to open the Gate, and ſell their Lives as dearly as they cou'd. Catesbie and Piercy fighting Back to Back were kill'd with one Shot. The two Wrights were alſo ſlain. Thomas Winter receiv'd ſeveral Wounds, and was taken Priſoner; as were Robert Winter, Littleton, Grant, Sir Everard Digby, Faux, Keys and Bates, who were all committed to the Tower; where Thomas Winter made a full Confeſſion of this helliſh Conſpiracy, by which it appears to have been contriv'd ſoon after King James came into England. For Winter went to Flanders before the Conſtable of Caſtile landed in England, to deſire him, in the Name of the Papiſts, to procure them Favour; and in Flanders he met with Faux, who ſo early as Eaſter 1603. communicated this curſed Deſign to him; which was contriving at the ſame time that Watſon and Clarke, the two Popiſh Prieſts before-mention'd, were engag'd in Raleigh's Plot. Digby extenuated his Crime by the Deſpair to which they were driven, upon the King's deceiving them in their Hopes of a Toleration. Treſham nam'd Garnet the Jeſuit as privy to the Plot; tho' afterwards he deny'd it, or that he had ſeen him in ſixteen Years; which was prov'd to be falſe by Garnet's own Confeſſion after he was apprehended, they having been together ſeveral times in the laſt half Year. Treſham's Wife, who had as much Zeal as her Husband, tempted him to clear Garnet, tho' againſt his Knowledge, even when Death look'd him in the Face. He dy'd of a Strangury in the Tower two Months before the Conſpirators were try'd by a Commiſſion directed to ſeveral Lords and Judges.

Thomas Winter, Robert Winter, Guy Faux, John Grant, Ambroſe Rookwood, Sir Everard Digby, Robert Keys, and Thomas Bates, Winter's Man, were convicted and condemn'd. Digby, Robert Winter, Grant and Bates were hang'd, drawn, and quarter'd the 30th of January at the Weſt End of St. Paul's Church in London; as were Thomas Winter, Keys, Rookwood and Faux the next Day in the Parliament-Yard at Weſtminſter. I cannot imagine why Archdeacon Echard has ſo much Compaſſion for Sir Everard Digby, as to miſrepreſent his Caſe. He little imagin'd Treaſon, and was bound to Secrecy by Oath. What rare Authorities that Reverend Hiſtorian takes his Facts from, and what rare Reflections he makes upon them, when he has a mind to do Honour to the Papiſts and their Faction? Digby frankly lent 1500 l. to the Buſineſs, as Winter ſaid in his Confeſſion. If it is true that Sir Everard dy'd very penitently, in that caſe Humanity admits Compaſſion. But as to Digby's not knowing it to be Treaſon, 'tis equally falſe and abſurd. Biſhop Burnet tells us he wrote ſeveral Letters in Priſon, wherein he expreſſes great Trouble, becauſe he heard ſome of their Friends blam'd their Undertaking. He highly magnifies it, and ſays, if he had many Lives he wou'd willingly have ſacrific'd them all in carrying it on; adding, They had taken care that there were not above two or three worth ſaving, to whom they had given notice to keep out of the way. As to his Penitence, the Biſhop adds, he did not expreſs any Sort of Remorſe in his Letters. Winter and his Man Bates were very penitent; but Grant was more obſtinate than

A.D.1606. any of the reſt, excepting Keys. Faux's Repentance appear'd to be moſt ſincere; they all declared themſelves Members of the Church of Rome; and conſidering how little in Life and Death they did Honour to that Church, ſhe had no great Cauſe to boaſt of their Memberſhip. Francis Treſham did not live long enough to be hang'd, his Head was cut off after his Death, and ſet upon London-Bridge, with the Heads of his Fellow-Conſpirators.

As ſoon as the Parliament met, which was on the 9th of November, four Days after the Diſcovery of the Plot, the King made a Speech to them, wherein he did not only take Pains to clear the whole Body of the Catholicks from the Guilt of it, but to ſweeten them for the little Aſperity which this Treaſon had put into the Speech, he did not forget to have a Fling at the Puritans, who deſerv'd to be burnt for allowing no Salvation to Papiſts. The Parliament congratulated his Majeſty on his Deliverance, and at the Motion of Sir Edward Montagu, Anceſtor to his Grace the Duke of Montagu, paſt an Act to have the Fifth Day of November for ever ſolemniz'd with Publick Thankſgivings.

Notwithſtanding the general Joy that appear'd every where on the Detection of this horrid Conſpiracy, there were ſome who inſinuated that the Plot was of the King's own making, or that he was privy to it from firſt to laſt: A Fancy inconſiſtent with his Majeſty's Piety, ſays Dr. Fuller. I wiſh the Doctor and his Brother Divines, had explain'd what they mean by Piety, when they ſpeak of this King's, or wou'd teach us how to reconcile Piety with Swearing, Sabbath-breaking, Luxury, Wantonneſs, &c. Certain it is, 'twas inconſiſtent with what the Doctor calls his Fearfulneſs to dally ſo long with Deſtruction. Others tell us, King James had Information of the Plot from Henry IV. of France, before he ſaw the Lord Monteagle's Letter. If ſo, one need not hold up one's Hands with Aſtoniſhment at his Majeſty's great Wiſdom in diſcovering Gunpowder in the very Words of that Letter. Welwood is of this Opinion, "That P. 19. "Letter was a Contrivance of his own, the Thing "being diſcover'd to him before by Henry IV. of "France, through the Means of Monſieur de Rho-"ny, after Duke of Sully. King Henry paid dear "for his Friendſhip to King James; and there is "Reaſon to believe it was upon this Account, a-"mong others, that a Party of the Church of "Rome, employ'd Ravillac to murder that great "Man." Osborn thinks the Information came firſt from France, on account of the ſmall Notice that was afterwards taken of the Lord Monteagle; and that the French King did not give King James Advice of this Gunpowder-Plot, out of any Affection to his Perſon, but fearing a more heroick Prince ſhou'd come in his Place; and, to uſe my Author's Words, He ſhou'd exchange Herb John for Colloquintida.

Among the many Compliments which were paid his Majeſty on this Occaſion, that of the Spaniſh Ambaſſador was moſt extraordinary, being accompanied with a Preſent of a fine Coat with Golden Taggs, two Gold Chains, a Velvet Cap, a Gold Baſon, &c. as you may read at large in Echard, who is wonderfully delighted with the Deſcription of it. This Farce was the more ridiculous, for that the very Plot was hatch'd in Spain, and the Flattery ſo groſs, that the Pope cou'd not help laughing in the Face of Cardinal d'Oſſat, when he told him the Story, as the Cardinal informs his Maſter Henry IV. in one of his Letters; ſo eaſily was the Britiſh Solomon impos'd upon by the Addreſs of the Spaniards, tho' ſo ill diſguis'd, that there was no need of good Eyes to ſee thro' it.

Spaniſh Ambaſſador impoſes on King James.

Garnet the Jeſuit hang'd.

The Execution of Father Garnet, Provincial of the Jeſuit's Order in England, clos'd the Tragedy of the Gunpowder-Treaſon. This Jeſuit was not only privy to it, but active in it by Exhortation and Counſel. Cecil Earl of Salisbury, Dr Overal Dean of St. Paul's, and other Divines, examin'd him about it when he was in the Tower; but he inſiſted upon it, that having receiv'd Information of the Conſpiracy in Confeſſion, he cou'd not by the Laws of his Religion diſcover it. He was told that he had talk'd with Catesbie concerning it out of Confeſſion; to which he reply'd, In via ad Confeſſionem, in order to Confeſſion. Dr. Overal anſwer'd, Confeſſion was of Things done, not to be done; and that even the Romiſh Caſuiſts allow'd Diſcovery, when a greater Good accru'd by revealing than concealing ſuch Secrets. Garnet then own'd that he was minded to diſcover the Plot, but not the Plotters. The Earl of Salisbury demanded what hinder'd him? Yourſelf, ſays Garnet; for I know full well, ſhou'd I have reveal'd the Plot, and not the Plotters, you wou'd have rack'd me to Pieces to make me confeſs. He was arraign'd at Guildhall before the Lord-Mayor Sir Leonard Holiday, and the Lords of the Council, Sir Baptiſt Hicks, afterwards Viſcount Cambden, being Foreman of the Jury, by whom he was ſoon convicted of High-Treaſon, for which he was hang'd, drawn, and quarter'd at the Weſt-End of St. Paul's Church, being the laſt that ſuffer'd for this Treaſon, which Monſieur de Thou calls ſuch a Monſter of Conſpiracies, as no Age or Country did every produce.

We have been the longer on the Gunpowder-Plot, that it might be made clear beyond queſtion, being, as Welwood terms it, an uncontroverted Treaſon. But he is miſtaken, notwithſtanding all the undeniable Proofs of all the Circumſtances, and all the Confeſſions of the Criminals, the French Jeſuit Orleans controverts it in his Hiſtory of Revolutions, of no other Value than as the Book was approv'd by our abdicated King James II. and is recommended by Archdeacon Echard. He begins with Doubts: All Men do not agree about the Circumſtances of it. All Men, Proteſtants and Papiſts, do agree that there was a Plot to blow up King, Prince, and the two Houſes of Parliament; that the Gunpowder was found under the Houſe that was to be blown up, and the Villain who was to do it, taken with the Implements about him. What other Circumſtances were wanting to prove the Treaſon, and hang the Traytors? Again; The Inventions of our Days ſhew what might have been invented then. Whether he refers to the Invention of the Rychouſe Plot, or the Invention of the Pretender, or what other Popiſh Invention I ſhall not enquire. But there has not been in our Days, nor in any Days, according to the illuſtrious Hiſtorian De Thou, ſuch a Monſter as the Gunpowder-Plot. P. 37. Again; The Crime cou'd not be imputed to the Catholicks alone, for a conſiderable Number of the Conſpirators were Proteſtants: So impudently falſe, that not one of them was a Proteſtant. Fuller, they all crav'd Teſtimony that they died Roman Catholicks. The Contrivers and Heads of the Conſpiracy were to a Man Papiſts, and I never heard of one Proteſtant nam'd in it. Again; Some of them were Prieſts, who had no other hand in it, than that they were accus'd without ſufficient Proof of having been told it in Confeſſion. The Prieſts are Garnet, for no other Prieſt was queſtion'd for it. This good Man Garnet had no leſs than four Names, four Alias's, to cover him againſt Proſecutions for his Crimes. Beſides what he had been told in Confeſſion, Dr. Fuller aſſures us it was P. 37. prov'd, that he frequently and publickly diſcourſed of it with Catesbie, Gerard, and Greenwood. Again; the others were two or three Incendiaries; thoſe two or three were in all two or threeſcore, tho' not above nine or ten were executed for it; ſet on by Cecil. What does the Reader think now of Mr. Echard's Jeſuit and his Hiſtory?

The chief Conſpirators having had their Reward, ſome who wiſh'd well to them were puniſh'd, as

*A.D.*1606. as Henry Lord Mordaunt, and Edward Lord Stourton, who had both neglected to come to Parliament, and were therefore ſuſpected to be in the wicked Secret, and ſo far prov'd guilty of Miſpriſon of Treaſon, that the Court of Star-Chamber fin'd the Lord Mordaunt 10000 Marks, and the Lord Stourton 6000, both of them to remain in Priſon during his Majeſty's Pleaſure. The Earl of Northumberland was thought more guilty on account of his Kinſman Piercy, whom he had admitted to be one of the King's Gentlemen Penſioners, without adminiſtring to him the Oath of Supremacy, tho' he knew him to be a rank Papiſt; for which the ſame Court fin'd him 30000 Pounds, and condemn'd him to Impriſonment during the King's Pleaſure.

The Puniſhment of the Traytors and their Accomplices, was ſcarce over, before the People were alarm'd with a Rumour of the King's being aſſaſſinated at Ockingham in Berkſhire. But the Conſternation laſted not long, his Majeſty coming to London two or three Hours after. The Impreſſion the late Plot had made on Mens Minds, render'd them very apt to be terrify'd with ſuch Rumours; and when their Terrors were paſt, their Joy was equal to what their Fear had been. Sir Lewis Lewkner, Maſter of the Ceremonies, had a Gold Chain given him by the Spaniſh Ambaſſador, for bringing him News of his Majeſty's Safety. 'Twas thought he was ſo generous to take off the Odium of the late Conſpiracy from his Maſter the King of Spain, who was ſuſpected to have fomented it.

Wilſon, p. 32.

On the 27th of May the Parliament was prorogued to the 18th of November, having paſt ſeveral Acts beſides that for the Fifth of November, particularly an Act granting the King three entire Subſidies, and ſix Fifteenths; and an Act enjoining a new Oath of Allegiance, in which 'twas aſſerted, That the Pope cou'd not depoſe the King, nor diſpoſe of his Kingdom, nor authorize any other Prince to invade him, nor diſcharge his Subjects from their Fidelity, &c. It alſo bound the Perſon who took it, to bear Faith and true Allegiance to his Majeſty, to diſcover all Treaſons and Conſpiracies, and declar'd that the Pope had no Power to abſolve this Oath; the Form of which was ſo order'd, that it might not offend the Conſcience of thoſe who, without renouncing their Religion, wou'd pay that Duty to their Sovereign, which they rightfully ow'd him. The Thing appear'd ſo reaſonable to the Engliſh Papiſts, that the Nobility, Gentry, Prieſts, and all others, ſwore in this Form. George Blackwell nominated Arch-Prieſt of England by Pope Paul V. not only took the Oath, but wrote in Defence of it, which the Pope underſtanding, ſent a Brief immediately to forbid the taking it, as inconſiſtent with the Salvation of Souls. The Papiſts in England treated this Brief as ſpurious, and his Holineſs was forc'd to ſend a ſecond to confirm it. He alſo directed Cardinal Bellarmine to write to Blackwell about it; in which Letter were ſome Expreſſions which ſo anger'd his Majeſty, as to put him upon anſwering it himſelf, in an Apology for the Oath: Wherein, ſays Dr. Fuller, he effectually confuted the Pope's Brief. And another Author writes, the King gave a very learned Anſwer to a Brief, which cou'd not but have been anſwer'd without one word of Learning. However, ſuch was the Language of certain Writers, whenever they ſpoke of his Majeſty's Parts and Performances. Let us therefore ſee what Foreigners, who had no Biaſs of Hope or Fear, ſay of him and his Learning. Vaſſor writes thus, Had not a King better have forborn writing at all, and have left this Care to another? A little Jeſuit, made a Cardinal by ſcribbling, was not an Adverſary for a Monarch. The Pope behav'd himſelf like a King, and King James acted the Part of a Doctor. The Pope commanded, and King James diſputed. Except a Prince wrote like Julius Cæſar, or Marcus Aurelius, he is in the wrong to become an Author. The Jeſuit Orleans, who ſpeaks well of him in ſome Places for his Inclination to Popery, cannot help ſaying of his boaſted Learning, He was commended by learned Men as a Patron of Literature; for which, if we may judge by his Works, it will appear he had rather an Affection than any good Taſte; and that he, who, during his Life, call'd him the learned King, rather did it becauſe he was a King, than becauſe he was really learned. What his Genius was, we have from Buchanan his Tutor; which Mezeray and Juſtel often told in their Aſſemblies at Paris. King James I. at his Levee in Scotland, wou'd have the French Ambaſſador talk Latin; which he complying with, and happening to break Priſcian's Head, the Laugh was againſt him; upon which he running out of Court, met Buchanan on the Stairs, and reproach'd him for having made a Pedant of his Pupil. Pedant, ſaid Buchanan, lifting up his Hands and Eyes, I thank God I have made any Thing of him. And a noble Author, ſpeaking of this very Incident, ſaid, the Scotch Solomon had not one good Quality in him. This was confirm'd to me by a Perſon of that Dignity and Character, as leaves no room to doubt its Veracity, and I ſhall name him when I am put to it. The King was at firſt ſo ſenſible of the Indiſcretion in his anſwering Bellarmine, that he did not own his Apology. Bellarmine wrote againſt it under the Name of Tortus: Dr. Andrews Biſhop of Wincheſter reply'd to him. But a little Flattery on the Value of the Work, made his Majeſty put his Name to it, and a very pompous Preface before it in the Nature of a Manifeſto, addreſs'd to all Kings, Princes, and States of Chriſtendom, vindicating the Rights of Sovereigns againſt the Uſurpations of the Pope. Vaſſor ſays, The Popiſh Princes durſt not read, and the Proteſtant Princes did not need it. Henry IV. of France, who had been a zealous Proteſtant, forbid the tranſlating it into French, which however was done ſoon after; and Coeffeteau, a French Hiſtorian and Refiner of that Language, anſwer'd it, tho' poorly enough, as allowing the Independence of the Kings of France. Cardinal Bellarmine reply'd to the King's Preface, addreſſing his Reply alſo to the Emperor, the Kings and States of Chriſtendom. The Parliament of Paris condemn'd Bellarmine's Book; but ſome Years after, Mary de Medicis, King Charles the Firſt's Mother-in-law, then Queen-Regent of France, order'd their Decree to be ſuperſeded; and all the Glory that redounded to King James by this Controverſy, was, according to Mr. Coke, that he cou'd wrangle and cavil as well as Bellarmine. 'Tis the Fault of the Reign, as has been obſerv'd, if the Matter is ſo trivial. Coke writes, The King gave himſelf wholly up to Hunting, Plays, Maſques, Balls, and writing againſt Bellarmine. Thus ſtood the Caſe for four Years after, wherein I ſcarce find any thing worth mentioning. Echard indeed mentions the Arrival of the King of Denmark, Brother to the Queen, but he does not mention what he read in Sir Edward Peyton, p. 63. If we examine the King of Denmark, Brother of Queen Anne, the firſt time he was entertain'd in England, what Debauchedneſs was exercis'd in his Welcome to King James, who both were ſo drunk at Theobalds, as our King was carried in the Arms of the Courtiers, &c. I can tell no more of it; the Delicacy of Engliſh Readers being ſuch, that Truth itſelf gives Offence when it breaks in upon Decorums. No ſooner was the King of Denmark gone, than another princely Viſitor, the Count de Vaudemont, Son to the Duke of Lorain, arriv'd at Court with a numerous Train of Servants and Attendants, and was entertain'd with the like Magnificence, Profuſion, and Luxury.

Prince of Vaudemont.

On the 18th of November the Parliament met, and Sir Francis Bacon, Sollicitor-General, made a Motion for an Act to naturalize all Scotſmen; but Parliament.

it

*A.D.*1607. it met with ſo much Oppoſition, that the King was forc'd to interpoſe, and in March following he ſent for both Houſes of Parliament, to whom he made that notable Speech which Echard is ſo fond of for its Jingles, Unus Rex, Unus Grex, Una Lex, one King, one People, one Law. But all that cou'd be gotten for the Scots was an Act to repeal all Laws of Hoſtility antiently made between England and Scotland. The Parliament neglected the Affair of the Union of the two Kingdoms, yet the King in ſome meaſure carry'd his Point, by a Determination of the Lord Chancellor Elleſmer, and moſt of the Judges in the famous Caſe of Calvin, by which the Poſtnati Scots, born after the King's coming to the Crown of England, were declar'd to be free, to bring real Actions, to purchaſe and inherit in this Kingdom.

Scots Poſt-nati.

Sir Francis Bacon made a very long Speech in the Houſe of Commons for a general Naturalization, another for the Poſtnati before the Lord-Chancellor Elleſmer and the Judges in the Exchequer; and another in the Houſe of Commons for a Union of Laws in England and Scotland: Three Speeches full of Learning and Eloquence. But that before the Houſe of Commons for a Naturalization had no Effect on the major Vote; that before the Lord-Chancellor ſucceeded better, the King being Maſter of his and the Judges Opinions. The Motion for a cloſer Union with Scotland, was not then popular; his Majeſty's profuſe Bounty to the Scots Favourites, gave the Engliſh a Diſguſt to the Nation, to which the Inſolence which generally accompanies Favour, did not a little contribute. Biſhop Burnet informs us, That King James loſt the Union of England and Scotland by an unreaſonable Partiality in pretending that Scotland was the third Part of the Iſle of Great-Britain, if not more. So very politick was his Majeſty in an Affair which he had moſt at heart.

Before the Parliament broke up, there was a kind of Inſurrection in Northamptonſhire, Warwickſhire, and Leiceſterſhire, the Rabble getting together under one John Reynolds, (whom they call'd Captain Pouch, from a large Leather-Pouch he wore by his Side,) to pull down Incloſures. A Proclamation was iſſu'd, commanding them to diſperſe, which they took no notice of; but the Earl of Huntington, the Earl of Exeter, the Lord Zouch, and the Lord-Chief-Juſtice Coke, being ſent againſt them with an arm'd Force, they were ſuppreſs'd. Their Leader Captain Pouch was hang'd, and the chief of them, who cou'd pay for the Riot, were fin'd.

The Earl of Tyrone, who had been ſo well receiv'd by his Majeſty, the Lord Tyrconnel, the Lord Dungannon, and other Iriſh Peers, fled into foreign Parts to ſollicit Popiſh Princes againſt their own Sovereign. Tyrconnel dy'd in Spain, and his Son was made Page to Philip the IIId's Queen, ſo careful was the Spaniſh Court to cultivate a good Intelligence with the Iriſh Papiſts, who were continually caballing againſt the Engliſh Government, at the ſame time that the Spaniſh Ambaſſadors were more careſs'd at the Court of England, than the Miniſters of any other Princes or States. His Majeſty had always ſhewn a particular Tenderneſs to Popiſh Offenders, and from his Acceſſion to the Throne of England to his Death, puniſh'd none but thoſe he was afraid of, ſuch as the Gunpowder Plotters, whoſe Heirs were ſuffer'd to enjoy their Eſtates, particularly Digby's Son, Sir Kenelm Digby, a great Favourite of the Queen's, if not of the King's in the next Reign. He reſtor'd all the Forfeitures and Confiſcations, to which he was moſt juſtly intitl'd by Tyrone's Rebellion in Ireland. This Lenity, inſtead of obliging them to grateful Obedience, embolden'd them to renew their traiterous Deſigns, and Tyrone drew the whole Province of Ulſter into a Confederacy againſt the Engliſh; which being diſcover'd before 'twas brought to a Head, and the other Provinces not joining with him, he and the chief of his Adherents fled to Spain, from whence he never return'd; ſo welcome were all theſe Rebels and Traytors to the Catholick King, at the ſame time that King James was ſo fond of his Friendſhip. A.D 1607.

Ireland.

On the 4th of July the Parliament was prorogued to the 16th of November, and then to the 9th of February, in the Year 1609. In the Interval, the King ſpent his Time very jollily, always ſporting or feaſting. His Majeſty din'd with the Lord-Mayor Sir John Watts, and was made free of the Clothworkers Company. Soon after he dined at Merchant Taylors Hall, and Prince Henry was made free of that Company; of which Archdeacon Echard tells us, a Queen and an Archbiſhop had been free before. Such Events as theſe muſt needs be very ornamental in Hiſtory: But if I had had others to put in their Place, I ſhou'd have left theſe Ornaments for Mr. Echard's, which is capable of no better. About the ſame time Sir Thomas Knevet, of whom mention was made for his Service in the Gunpowder-Plot, was created Baron of Layton-Bromeſwold; the Earl of Salisbury, and Thomas Howard Viſcount Bindon, had been made Knights of the Garter the laſt Year; and George Earl of Dunbar, and Philip Earl of Montgomery, were now advanc'd to that Honour. Sir Julius Cæſar, Chancellor of the Exchequer, was ſworn of the Privy-Council, and bountiful was his Majeſty in the Diſpoſal both of his Honours and Treaſures.

In the midſt of this Time of Peace and Joy, this fair Outſide of Government, there was growing within a Rottenneſs, which turn'd to a Mortification in the ſubſequent Reign. Coke coarſely expreſſes it: Whilſt the King was wallowing in Pleaſure, he wholly gave himſelf up to be govern'd by Favourites, to whom he was exceſſively prodigal, not only of Honours and Offices, but of the Revenues of the Crown, and Aids given in Parliament; and theſe being of both Nations, Scots as well as Engliſh, made them to be the more intolerable. All Things being in Peace abroad, publick Affairs were neglected, and ſcarce thought of: And in this Lethargy of State, the Prerogative Clergy ſwell'd the High-Commiſſion to ſuch a Weight, that it was complain'd of as a Grievance in Parliament; one Blackwood publiſh'd a Book, wherein he endeavour'd to prove, That the Engliſh were Slaves by Reaſon of a Conqueſt; and when the Parliament was about to proceed againſt him, his Majeſty interpos'd and put a Stop to it, by iſſuing a Proclamation to call in the Book. P. 62.

Another Inſtance of King James's Politicks, was his Proclamation prohibiting the Increaſe of Buildings in the City of London, which has been ſtill increaſing theſe 120 Years, and by collecting the Strength and Riches of the Kingdom into a Body, has render'd the Nation more ſafe at Home, and more formidable Abroad, than ever it was before. King James's ſtrongeſt Reaſon referr'd to his own Perſon, for fear a Crowd of People ſhou'd bring in the Plague again, and infect Whitehall; whereas the Plague ceas'd at that Time, and the Danger was over. Many Men, ſays Wilſon, that did not ſo well heed the Proclamation, laid out their whole Eſtates upon little Hovels, and building fair Houſes upon new Foundations, tho' but two Yards from the old, they became Treſpaſſers, and muſt either purchaſe their Houſes, or pull them down, both ways tending to their Ruin. However, Mr. Archdeacon aſſures us, it was done with mature Deliberation of the Council; and if we will not take ſuch Counſels as this, to be the Effect of mature Deliberation, we muſt look for them in other Hiſtories and other Reigns.

This Incident is miſplac'd by the reverend Hiſtorian in the Year 1609, whereas it was publiſh'd in October 1607; and the Reaſon which was given for reſtraining the new Buildings to prevent Infection,

*A.D.*1607. was found afterwards to be a Reaſon for enlarging the Buildings, that by having more Room, the Inhabitants might not be too much crowded, and conſequently the Air in Time of Peſtilence be leſs liable to be infected: So that what the Wiſdom of one Time doth decry, ſays Wilſon, the Experience of another may advance. Yet this is the Time when Counſels were maturely deliberated, and the wiſeſt Monarch of the Age ſate on the Throne of Great-Britain, to whoſe Wiſdom is always join'd the Character of merciful, which did not however appear in this Inſtance.

A Judge at the Aſſize at Northampton, condemn'd a Felon, but repriev'd him on account of the Weakneſs of the Evidence: Judge Nicholls, who went that Circuit this Year, continu'd the Priſoner's Reprieve, for which he was complain'd of. The King, without enquiring into the Strength or Weakneſs of the Evidence, commanded the Judge, by Letter, to direct Execution of the Sentence, which that good Magiſtrate refus'd to do, ſaying, His Predeceſſor, who had heard the Witneſſes, thought it Juſtice to reprieve the Felon, and his Conſcience wou'd not let him direct Sentence to be executed, ſince he never had heard the Evidence: Beſides, his Oath oblig'd him to do right, notwithſtanding the King's Letter.

Sand. p. 341.

The Affair of the Union had better Succeſs in Scotland, than it had had in England. The Parliament there allow'd all the Articles which were concluded by their Commiſſioners, provided the ſame were ratify'd by the Parliament of England, who took no Notice of what the Scots did in the Matter; ſo the Deſign fell, and came to nothing.

'Twas not likely that a King of King James's Diſpoſition ſhou'd be much conſider'd abroad, his whole Conduct, with reſpect to foreign Affairs, neceſſarily drew upon him the Neglect of all Europe. We ſhall ſee preſently how he deſerv'd it.

Le Clerc. The Preſident Jeannin, and Monſieur Roiſſy, the French Ambaſſadors at the Hague, offer'd a ſtricter Alliance between their Maſter and the States-General. The States notify'd this Offer to King James, who promis'd to diſpatch Mr. Richard Spencer, and Mr. Ralph Winwood, who had been his Agent in Holland, to join in the Negotiation, but he found Means to evade it, and remain Spectator of the War. Richardot wrote from Bruſſels to Jeannin, that the King of Spain, his Maſter, was the more difficult in the Article of the Treaty of Truce, which related to the declaring the States-General to be a Free State, becauſe King James had written to King Philip, That he believ'd the States might be brought to conſent to the leaving out of the Treaty what related to the Acknowledgment of their being free; which ſhews how little he underſtood the Intentions and Reſolutions of the States, and the true Intereſt of the Proteſtant Religion, and the Liberties of Europe; or at leaſt how little he concern'd himſelf about them. The Preſident Jeannin writing to his Maſter from Holland, told him King James was never ſincere with the Dutch: Henry IV. reply'd, I know his Capacity, and the Inclinations of his People; the moſt contemptible Thing that ever was ſaid of the Genius and Abilities of a Monarch.

*A.D.*1608 In the beginning of the Year 1608, dy'd Thomas Sackville Earl of Dorſet, in an apoplectick Fit, which ſeiz'd him and carry'd him off at the Council-Table. He was made Lord-Treaſurer 10 Years before by Queen Elizabeth; he was Chancellor of the Univerſity of Oxford, and of Eminence in his Time for a poetical Genius, as his Tragedy of Ferrex witneſſes, and for his rare Wiſdom and careful Providence, to uſe the Words of an old Author. The Earl of Salisbury ſucceeded him as Lord-Treaſurer; and tho' he had the Dexterity to raiſe one of the greateſt Fortunes in England, it is ſaid he gave a Check to the King's prodigal Bounty to others; which does not agree with what Osborn tells us, He was a Seducer of the King, perſuading him this Nation was ſo rich, it cou'd be neither exhauſted nor provok'd. 'Tis certain he was very looſe in his Morals, as by the Satyrs on him. *A.D.*1608.

But now in Hatfield lies the old Fox,
Who ſtank while he liv'd, and dy'd of the——
In another;
Till Atropos clapt him, a Pox on the Drab,
For Spight of his Tar-box, he dy'd of the Scab.

Osborn, p. 154.

Echard ſays, after Osborn, who is here miſtaken, or the Archdeacon wou'd not have made uſe of him, He might have enrich'd his Family more, had he not look'd upon low Things with Contempt; which is not true. There is nothing in the World ſo low as a Bribe; and that he took Spaniſh Money for the Peace, is as well known, as that he was a Speaker at the Hampton-Court Conference againſt the Preſbyterians. As to his Contempt of low Things, ſee Sir Anthony Welden: Salisbury had one Trick to get the Kernel, and leave the Scots but the Shell, yet caſt all the Envy upon them; he wou'd make them buy Books of Fee-Farms; ſome 100 Pounds per Ann. ſome 100 Marks; and he wou'd compound with them for 1000 Pounds; which they were willing to embrace, becauſe they were ſure to have them paſs without any Controul; and 1000 Pounds appear'd to them that never ſaw 10 Pounds before, an inexhauſtible Treaſure; then would Salisbury fill up this Book with ſuch prime Land, as ſhould be worth 10 or 20000 Pounds, and which was very eaſy for him being Treaſurer, &c. Theſe were his admirable Abilities. P. 60.

The Remembrance of the Gunpowder-Plot, kept the Sword of Juſtice keen againſt Popiſh Prieſts and Jeſuits, and the King ſuffer'd two of them, George Jervis a Seminary Prieſt, and Thomas Garnet a Jeſuit, to be executed: A Pardon was offer'd the latter, if he wou'd take the Oath of Allegiance, but he utterly refus'd it.

We have mention'd the Pyracies of one Tomkins in the beginning of this Reign, and now the Seas were infeſted by a Pyrate of an honourable Name, Sir Francis Verney, together with Ward, Biſhop, Glanville, and others, ſome of whom were Renegadoes, and liv'd as Turks at Tunis in great State. Nineteen of theſe Robbers being taken, were brought to England, and executed at Wapping.

Earl of Northampton's bad Character.

The Earl of Northampton was about this Time made Lord Privy-Seal, who, beſides his being a reputed Papiſt, had a worſe Character, a Man of no Morals nor Conſcience, who ſtuck at nothing to gratify his Paſſions, and pleaſe his Appetite. Sir Anthony Welden ſays, he was the groſſeſt Flatterer in the World, of ſo venomous and canker'd a Diſpoſition, that he hated all Men of noble Parts, nor lov'd any but Flatterers. An Inſtance of his Hatred to brave Men, was what he ſaid of Sir Robert Manſell: Body of God, I will be content to be damn'd perpetually in Hell, to be reveng'd of that proud Welſhman. The ſame Knight, ſpeaking of one Lake, whom he calls a Fellow of mean Birth, afterwards Secretary of State, ſays, he roſe by Tale-telling: "He let the King know the Paſſages at "Court, and great Men, as who was Salisbury's "Miſtreſs, and govern'd all, who govern'd Nor-"thampton, and diſcover'd the Bawdry which did "infinitely pleaſe the King's Humour." We ſee what Sort of Miniſters King James employ'd; and Echard informs us, That upon this Earl of Northampton's Shoulders, the King laid the main Burden of all his Affairs. Northampton's Affection to Popery, appears by a Letter he wrote to Cardinal Bellarmine, wherein he ſaid, Howſoever the Condition of the Times compelled him, and his Majeſty urg'd him to turn Proteſtant, yet nevertheleſs his Heart ſtood with the Catholicks, and he wou'd be ready to further them in any Attempt. *A.D.*1608. biſhop of Canterbury produc'd this Letter in the Star-Chamber; and told that Court he had harbour'd ſuch about him, as wrote in Defence of the Gunpowder Plot. The wiſe King laid the Burthen of the State on this Lord's Shoulders; as Car Earl of Somerſet, and his lewd Counteſs, did the Burthen of their adulterous Luſt, as will be ſeen in the Sequel of this Reign.

The Viſcount Bindon, now Earl of Suffolk, had been made Lord Chamberlain ſome time before. Lewdneſs. He was Father to the Counteſs of Somerſet, and his Wife the Counteſs of Suffolk had an Employment at Court, which was the moſt beneficial of any in the Reign of King Charles II. King James's Grandſon. Sir Thomas Overbury did not ſtick to call her Bawd, too homely a Word for Hiſtory. Sir A. W. joins Northampton in this gallant Employment, Copinger, ſays he, being a Bawd to Car, and the Counteſs of Eſſex's Luſts made him a Friend to Northampton and Suffolk, tho' he was but a Servant to Car.

*A.D.*1609. Being ſupported by theſe Counſellors, to uſe the Archdeacon's excellent Words, the King join'd with Henry the IVth of France in the Mediation of a Peace between Spain and the United Provinces. The Account he gives us of this Negotiation is alone a ſufficient Proof of the Inconſiſtency of his Panegyricks on King James's Wiſdom with the Truth, and even with his own Relation of it. P. 386. In this Treaty the States were acknowledg'd Free and Independent. This was the firſt Scene in which King James appear'd abroad, either as a Party or Moderator, ſince his Acceſſion to the Throne of England; and tho' the Treaty prov'd of extraordinary Conſequence, yet it is ſaid that his Part in it was as mean as that of the King of France was glorious; and his Conduct towards the States for whom he mediated, and towards France with whom he join'd, was quite different from the Methods and Maxims of his renown'd Predeceſſor. So different, that even the Jeſuit Orleans, who writes on the P. 2. ſame ſide with Archdeacon Echard, owns ELIZABETH had been a great King, and JAMES was a good Queen. The Archdeacon proceeds: For beſides ſeveral unuſual Condeſcentions to the French in the Perſons of their Ambaſſadors, which gave Foreigners a mean Idea of his Government, he was tax'd with being inſincere in the Treaty, which he appear'd to promote and encourage. And what Opinion the French Miniſters had of him in this Affair, appears from the printed Negotiation of Jeannin, the chief Agent for France; who in ſeveral Letters to the French King his Maſter wrote, That King James was never hearty in the Treaty, but had all along condemn'd the Hollanders for throwing off the Sovereignty of Spain upon the account of its bad Example. In Anſwer to one of which Letters, Henry IV. whoſe Opinion of King James was never very great, own'd his Knowledge of that King's ill Intentions towards the States; and withal told Jeannin, that his Carriage did not break his Sleep; and concluded his Letter with an Expreſſion of Contempt rarely us'd among Princes of that Rank, which has been already repeated. All this is ſaid of a Monarch, whom the ſame Reverend Hiſtorian a few Pages after characterizes in the moſt fulſome manner. As to his Mind he has receiv'd the higheſt Applauſes and Commendations, that for Learning and Wiſdom he was the Solomon of the Age. The K. James not wiſe. above-mention'd Henry IV. of France ſo term'd him, but not exactly in the ſame Words, nor with the ſame Meaning; for taken in a literal Senſe, he might as well have call'd him the Hercules of the Age. The Author of a Letter to King State Tracts. William has ſome judicious Reflections on his Majeſty's Wiſdom, the Subject of ſo much Eulogy in Eccleſiaſtical Hiſtory. His Thoughts ſeem'd to be ſet on his own Power, and the Flattery of the Court was more pleaſing to him than the general Intereſt of his Kingdom. He had got ſome ſuperficial Skill in the Arts and Sciences, and a profound Knowledge, *A.D.*1609. as he thought, in Divinity. He made his Court to the Clergy, that they being appriz'd of his great Learning might in their Writings celebrate his Fame; and truly they have not at all been deficient in ſuitable Returns. They inſinuated to the People his great Knowledge in all Sorts of divine and human Learning. Hereupon at his firſt coming to the Crown he induſtriouſly aſſiſted the Biſhops againſt the Puritans; for which they almoſt ador'd his deep Learning, comparing him to Solomon. Sir A. W. of him: He was crafty and cunning in petty things; inſomuch as a very wiſe Man was wont to ſay, he believ'd him the wiſeſt Fool in Chriſtendom. Welwood ſpeaks of him thus: He writ and ſpoke in a Stile that border'd too much upon Pedantry. Biſhop Burnet ſays, his Reign in England was a continu'd Courſe of mean Practices. I have ſeen the Original of his Letters to the Prince and Duke in Spain, which ſhew a Meanneſs that renders him very contemptible. The great Figure the Crown of England had made in Queen Elizabeth's Time was ſo much eclips'd, if not quite darken'd, during this Reign, that King James was become the Scorn of the Age. Now for Archdeacon Echard: He knew how to catch the Inclinations of the People at the firſt Rebound, not ſuffering them to mount higher than he could reach them; nor grow ſo ſtrong, but he cou'd either alter or divert them. He had an admirable Pregnancy of Wit, &c. It is too ſurfeiting to be repeated: His Knowledge hath been by ſome thought fitter for the Head of a Society than the Governor of a Kingdom. Why all this Panegyrick without Ground or Modeſty? We may be aſſur'd of the Reaſon from what the ſame Writer tells us; He acted very laudably, and with great Reputation with reſpect to the Eſtabliſh'd Church, both as to the Settlement of the Revenues, &c. Another ſuch Writer in King Charles the Firſt's Reign having for the ſame good Reaſon given him the ſame Praiſe, an Hiſtorian who wrote the Life and Reign of King Charles the Iſt, animadverts upon it thus:

Why the Clergy call'd him ſo.

He is the Scorn of Age.

I have enlarg'd here on King James's Character, that the Reader might take it along with him thro' the Sequel of his Reign, and comparing it with his Actions, be convinc'd of the Truth of it, tho' directly contrary to the Writings of ſome Eccleſiaſticks.

While his Majeſty's Actions were ſo laudable to the Church of England, he condemn'd the Dutch for defending themſelves againſt Popery and a Spaniſh Inquiſition. We ſhall be oblig'd frequently to obſerve, that Eccleſiaſtical Hiſtorians, in Return for the Care King James took of their Revenues, complimented him with a divine, unlimited Prerogative; of which he was extremely fond, and left an Example of arbitrary Government to his Son, which ended in the moſt terrible Cataſtrophe that is to be met with in any Hiſtory. In ſe-

veral

*A.D.*1609. veral of his Proclamations, and moſt of his Speeches, he gives Intimation of his good Diſpoſition to abſolute Power, as in his Proclamation of the 8th of May, prohibiting all foreign Nations to fiſh on the Britiſh Coaſt without Licenſes. Tho' we do ſufficiently know by our Experience in the Office of Regal Dignity, (in which by the Favour of Almighty God we have been plac'd, and exercis'd theſe many Years) how far the Abſoluteneſs of ſovereign Power extendeth; and that in regard thereof we need not yield Account to any Perſon under God for any Action of ours. What is moſt ſtrange in this is, that a Prince ſhould have ſo ſtrong an Appetite for Power, who, according to Henry IV. of France, had ſo little Capacity to make uſe of it.

Licenſes for fiſhing were to be taken out at London and Edinburgh every Year, and Commiſſioners were appointed to grant them. But this Proclamation had no great Effect; and indeed Proclamations were too common in this Reign to be ſo much reſpected as they were in Q. Elizabeth's.

P. 116. Echard remembers this Proclamation for the Fiſhery, to ſhew his Majeſty's wiſe Adminiſtration and paternal Care of his People; whereas if we may believe Sir Edward Peyton, it was all Grimace: For he took a ſmall Rate only of the Hollanders, and granted them the Iſle of Lewis in Scotland, and other Iſles in Ireland to dry their Fiſh, by which they have enrich'd themſelves above 40 Millions Sterling. He alſo permitted the French to fiſh on the Coaſt of England, who carry'd away the very Earth and Spawn of the Fiſh of Roches, Gurnet, Cunger and Hadduck to Diep; where they have abundance, and we want. The Proclamation to confiſcate all foreign Allum was a very conſiderable one in the Opinion of the Reverend Hiſtorian, that Commodity having been brought to Perfection in England by Sir John Bourchier.

His Reign mean, and without Action. P. 50.

It is a moſt unpleaſant Labour to write a Hiſtory without Facts; or if any offer, they are ſuch as are not worthy Remembrance. Dr. Fuller ſays juſtly enough, The Reign of King James was better for one to live under than to write, having nothing to entertain Poſterity. The hiſtorical Archdeacon takes no notice of this Defect in all his Hiſtory of this King, which he writes with as much Pride and Pleaſure, as if he was writing the Reigns of Edward III. or William III.

About this Time, according to Le Clerc, the Account of the Debt owing from the States of the United Provinces to England was adjuſted 818408 l. and the States engag'd to begin the Payment of it two Years after the Concluſion of the Peace; but a Truce being now concluded, King James was contented with the Payment of 40000 Florins, or about 3000 l. every ſix Months during the Truce; which wretched Bargain was obtain'd for the States by the good Management of Barneveldt, as he ſet forth in his Remonſtrance in 1618. The States General of the United Provinces ſome time after ſent John de Bork Penſionary of Dort, Albert Vere Penſionary of Amſterdam, Elias Olden-Barneveldt Penſionary of Roterdam, Albert Joachim Deputy of Zeland, Ambaſſadors to King James. They arriv'd at London the 24th of April, and had Audience the 27th. They had afterwards Conferences with the Miniſters about the Proclamation which the King had publiſh'd concerning the Dutch Fiſhery on the Britiſh Coaſts; to which theſe Ambaſſadors alledg'd, they had a Right according to the fourth Article of the Treaty concluded with the Archduke Philip, Sovereign of the Netherlands in 1495. In effect the King ſuſpended the Execution of his Proclamation, and knighted the Ambaſſadors; ſo very well pleas'd was he with the Payment of the Florins before-mention'd.

Makes a wretched Bargain with the Dutch.

*A.D.*1610. The Reverend Hiſtorian opens the next Year with another of King James's peaceful Triumphs in the Perſon of his Son Prince Henry, who was belov'd by every Native of Great Britain better than by his Father. He diſcover'd ſo much of an heroick Genius, that it gave Occaſion for Suſpicion, which ought never to enter into Hiſtory; and therefore I omit what Sir Edward Peyton ſays of his Birth, and what the Lord Sinclair ſaid at the Court of Denmark. He was much given to Tiltings, Barriers, and other martial Exerciſes on Horſeback; while his Royal Father contented himſelf with hunting the timorous Hare. Sometimes the Sport was more generous, as a Stag-Chace, in which the young Prince accompany'd him; and it is ſaid the King conceiv'd the firſt Jealouſy of him at the End of ſuch a Chace: For the Stag being kill'd 15 Miles from the Place where they were to lodge, the King did not care to go ſo far, and took up his Quarters much ſhort of it. But the Prince reſolving to lye where they firſt intended, went forward, and took away with him almoſt all the Company, who attended him out of Affection and Reſpect, and left only ſuch Attendants with the King, as were oblig'd by the Duty of their Offices to attend him. The Prince was now ſixteen Years of Age; and the King, either to raiſe Money, or do his Son Honour, receiv'd an Aid of his Subjects for the Prince's Knighthood. And to add new Splendor to this glorious Youth, continues the Archdeacon with his wonted Eloquence, "he "not long after created him Prince of Wales after "this ſolemn manner: Garter King at Arms bore "the Letters Patents, the Earl of Suſſex the Robes "of Purple Velvet, the Earl of Huntington the "Train, the Earl of Cumberland the Sword, the "Earl of Derby the Rod, the Earl of Shrewsbury "the Cap and Coronet. The Earls of Nottingham and Northampton ſupported the Prince, "who was only in his Surcoat and bare-headed. "Being conducted to the King, and attended by "25 Knights of the Bath of eminent Families, Secretary Salisbury read the Letters Patents, while the "Prince continu'd upon his Knees before the "King, and at the accuſtom'd Words the King "inveſted him with the Robe, the Sword, the "Cap and Coronet, the Rod and Ring; and then "with a Kiſs the Ceremony ended". After this it was thought proper that he ſhould keep his Court by himſelf. It is worth mentioning, that in this Seſſion of Parliament the King was pleas'd to command that the Lords and Commons ſhould ſit together in the Court of Requeſts, the Lords ſitting on the right Hand by themſelves, and the Commons on the left Hand. The Prince's Tutor, Sir Thomas Challoner, was made his Chamberlain; Sir Edward Philips his Chancellor: And his Houſhold being eſtabliſh'd, Sir Charles Cornwallis was ſent to Spain, to treat with that King for his eldeſt Daughter to be a Wife for him; which never took Effect: and the Infanta was given in Marriage to Lewis XIII. the French King. But King James's being baulk'd in this Treaty, did not diſcourage him from entring afterwards into a long and fruitleſs Negotiation at the ſame Court for the Marriage of his ſecond Son Prince Charles with a ſecond Infanta of Spain.

The Murder of Henry IV. of France by Procurement of the Jeſuits, occaſion'd a Conſternation in the Court of England; and the King in a Pannick commanded by Proclamation, all Romiſh Prieſts and Jeſuits to quit the Kingdom, and all Papiſts not to come within ten Miles of London. The Oath of Allegiance was alſo reviv'd, and ſolemnly taken by both Houſes of Parliament to his Majeſty's great Satisfaction. This Seſſion of Parliament began the 16th of October; and, ſays Wilſon, "though they were willing to ſecure their "Allegiance to the King out of Piety, yet they "were ſo ſtout, which he term'd obſtinate, that "they

*A.D.*1610. Coke, 64. "they wou'd not obey him in his Encroachments "upon the publick Liberty, which he began then "to practiſe; and the Parliament being willing to "diſcover by the Light of Law and Reaſon what "was the King's and what theirs, he diſſolv'd them "by Proclamation; ſetting forth, That he had propos'd many things far differing the Graces and Favours of former Times both in Nature and Value, in Expectation of a good Concluſion, not only for the Supply of his Neceſſities, but for the Eaſe and Freedom of his Subjects; but theſe being the two laſt Seſſions little taken notice of, &c. he put an End to the Seſſion. The Parliament had lately been very ſparing of their Subſidies. They had alſo complain'd of his governing by Proclamations, and of the High Commiſſion Court, where the Biſhops exercis'd an intolerable Tyranny; tho' Echard with his uſual Judgment and Sincerity tells us, it was a Preſervation againſt Popery, and a Curb to the Lewdneſs of great Men, when Bancroft beforemention'd was at the Head of it. Wilſon judges otherwiſe of it, and lets us know why it was complain'd of in Parliament thirty Years before it was aboliſh'd. The High Commiſſion Court alſo began
P. 46. now to ſwell into a Grievance, every Man muſt conform to the Epiſcopal Way, and quit his Hold in Opinion or Safety. That Court was the Touchſtone to try whether Men were Metal for their Stamp; and if they were not ſoft enough to take ſuch Impreſſions as were put upon them, they were made malleable there, or elſe they cou'd not paſs current. This was the Beginning of that Miſchief, which when it came to a full Ripeneſs made ſuch a bloody Tincture in both Kingdoms, as never will be got out of the Biſhops Lawn Sleeves.

The Cauſers of the Civil War. This is the main of my Deſign. This ſhews who were really the Cauſe of the Civil War, and all the Blood and Treaſure that were conſum'd in it; tho' the Lord Clarendon has in vain endeavour'd to impoſe the quite contrary upon us, and load the Presbyterians with what the Biſhops were the Occaſion of. The Thirtieth of January Sermons, Cathedral Sermons, Oxford Lectures and Sermons contain little elſe; as contrary as it is to the plain Truth told us by Mr. Wilſon, who was contemporary with theſe things, and knew them and felt them, as did all good and ſober Engliſhmen and Proteſtants.

A Speech of the King's. Before his Majeſty parted with this Parliament he made a Speech to them, wherein he enlarg'd again on the high Prerogatives of Royalty, he compar'd the Power of Kings to that of the Almighty: "For as God can create and deſtroy, make and "unmake at his Pleaſure; ſo Kings can give Life "and Death, judge all and be judg'd by none; "they can exalt low things and abaſe high things; "making the Subjects like Men at Cheſs, a Pawn "to take a Biſhop or a Knight.

To this Eloquence is added ſome Argument, which has juſt as much Strength as the other has Beauty.

"As it is Blaſphemy to diſpute with God, ſo it "is Sedition in Subjects to diſpute what a King "might do in the Height of his Power".

The very Eſſence of Wiſdom this, to talk thus before the moſt auguſt and the moſt free Aſſembly in the World; a great Body of Nobility and Gentry well read in the Conſtitution, and very tenacious of their Liberties, to be thus documented by a Prince, who in ſeven Years Reign had acquir'd no other Glory than the Conqueſts his Miniſters Spiritual and Temporal had made for him in the Star-Chamber and High Commiſſion Courts. Our hiſtorical Archdeacon aſſures us, this Speech had many obliging Expreſſions; but his Majeſty wou'd not ſtay to have the good Effects of the Obligations he had laid upon them. He informs us alſo that the Parliament paſs'd many good Laws.
P. 56. Dr. Fuller ſpeaking of this very Seſſion ſays, It may be found in the Records, though it be loſt in the Statute Books, becauſe nothing was enacted.

About this time dy'd Archbiſhop Bancroft, to whoſe Pride and Severity may be imputed all the Evils which occaſion'd the Murmurs in this and the following Reigns: The Prelates, who afterwards follow'd his Example, continuing the Grievances in the High Commiſſion Court as long as the Tyranny of that Court laſted, which was as long as it had a Being. Dr. George Abbot ſucceeded him in the See of Canterbury, and by his Piety and Prudence put a Stop for a while to the Rage of Perſecution, and a Calm ſucceeded the Storm in which periſh'd ſo many religious and conſcientious Proteſtants. *A.D.*1610. Dr. Abbot Archbiſhop of Canterbury.

By the Death of William Duke of Cleves and Juliers, the Succeſſion to his Eſtates was like to have caus'd a general War in Europe. The Houſe of Auſtria eſpouſing the Cauſe of the Elector of Saxony, who pretended a Right to it by Virtue of a dormant Grant from the Emperor. Accordingly the Archduke Leopold, Governor of the Spaniſh Netherlands, ſeiz'd the City of Juliers in Prejudice of the Rights of the Elector of Brandenburg and Duke of Newburgh, who both had Pretenſions to the Succeſſion of Cleves. Mary de Medicis, then Queen Regent of France, was adviſ'd to ſupport the Pretenſions of Brandenburgh and Newburgh in Oppoſition to Saxony, who was ſupported by the Emperor. The States of the United Provinces were jealous of any new Acceſſion of Power to the Crown of Spain in their Neighbourhood, and therefore declar'd for Brandenburgh and Newburgh. King James, who had never yet ſuffer'd his military Sword to be drawn in any Quarrel, cou'd not in Honour let two Proteſtant Princes, Brandenburgh and Newburgh, be oppreſs'd, when the States had ſo generouſly offer'd to aſſiſt them. Thus was his Majeſty drawn into a kind of War, which laſted but a few Weeks: For Maurice Prince of Orange, with the Aſſiſtance of the Engliſh and French Troops, inveſted the City of Juliers the 18th of July, and had it ſurrender'd to him the firſt of September. Sir Edward Cecil, Brother to the Earl of Salisbury, commanded 4000 Engliſh at that Siege, who behav'd with great Gallantry very much to the Honour of the Nation. Sir Hatton Cheek was Lieutenant-General, between whom and one of his Captains Sir Thomas Dutton there happen'd a Diſpute, which ended in a Duel on Calais Sands, where Sir Hatton Cheek dy'd of his Wounds, and Sir Thomas Dutton with much Difficulty recover'd of his. After the Surrender of Juliers, the Princes of Germany met at Cologne to accommodate that Affair. The French Ambaſſador aſſiſted at this Congreſs, but the King of England was not concern'd in it. And indeed conſidering the little Good that came of it, his Honour was not touch'd by loſing that Negotiation. Cleves and Juliers. Vaſſor.

College at Chelſey. In this Year a Deſign was ſet on foot to erect a College at Chelſea, for a Provoſt and twenty Fellows, who were to employ their Studies in controverſial Learning, eſpecially in the Controverſy between Papiſts and Proteſtants. The College was built on a Piece of Ground call'd Thame-Shot, containing about ſix Acres, then in Poſſeſſion of Charles Howard Earl of Nottingham, who ſold it for a Reſerv'd Rent of 7*l.* 10*s.* a Year. The King laid the firſt Stone, and gave all the Timber requiſite for the Building, which was fetch'd out of Windſor-Foreſt. His Majeſty alſo named the firſt Provoſt and Fellows; and the Parliament paſt an Act to enable them to dig a Trench out of the River Lee, to erect Engines, Water-Works, &c. to furniſh the City of London and Suburbs with Water, the Revenue of which was to be for their perpetual Suſtentation. There was a Brief for a Collection in all the Pariſhes of England to carry on the Work, and Dr. Matthew Sutcliffe Dean of Exeter gave 300*l.* a Year, and 4000*l.* in Money to endow it, which he rais'd by Contributions. Others alſo contributed largely to this Foundation, yet not ſufficient

*A.D.*1610. to make it lasting. His Majesty named the following Persons to be the first Provost and Fellows.

The beſt Reaſon that is given for the Obſtructions this Deſign met with, is in Fuller, The Patriots in Parliament ſuſpected that this College wou'd be too much Courtier; and tho' they conſented to an Act in its Favour, they retarded Peoples Charities when they return'd into their Countries by their private Inſtructions: And truly when we conſider how forward the Clergy were to advance the Authority Royal above the Laws, the Gentlemen of England might well be jealous of a Society ſet apart to preach and write in a manner as the King wou'd have them; or, what was ſtill worſe, as Bancroft, the main Inſtrument in this Matter, ſhou'd inſpire them. Fuller adds, They conceiv'd this Foundation ſuperfluous, to keep Men to confute Popiſh Opinions by Writings, whilſt the Maintainers of them were every where conniv'd at and countenanc'd, and the Penal Laws not put in any effectual Execution againſt them. Thus do we ſee that his Majeſty's conſummate Wiſdom and Care of the Proteſtant Religion, lay under Suſpicion in thoſe very Inſtances where he intended they ſhou'd be moſt conſpicuous. This College fell into Confuſion even in its Infancy, and at laſt was ſo entirely diſſolv'd, that in the Provoſtſhip of Dr. Daniel Featly, the third Provoſt, a good Part of the Eſtate with which it was endow'd by Dr. Sutcliff, was decreed back by the Lord-Keeper Coventry, to Mr. Halce, Sutcliff's Heir general; and the Lord Munſon, who marry'd the Counteſs Dowager of Nottingham, on whom the Site of the College was ſettled for Life, ſued for it, and 40 Years after recover'd it. He ſold it to Duke Hamilton, by whoſe Delinquency it fell to the State, and conſequently to the Crown, and is now the Spot on which ſtands the Royal Hoſpital of Invalids, the moſt magnificent and beautiful of any in Europe.

K. James connives at Popery.

Now it was that the Eaſt-India Company got their Pattent to be renew'd and enlarg'd. They built a great Merchant-Ship of 1200 Ton, call'd the Trade's-Increaſe. The King and Prince Henry went aboard it, and were entertain'd by Sir Thomas Smith Governor of the Company, to whom his Majeſty gave a fair Chain of Gold, with a Jewel, in which was his Picture. This Ship was caſt away on the Coaſt of Batavia in her firſt Voyage. The King himſelf built alſo a very large Ship, the largeſt that had till then been ſeen in England. As poor as theſe Events are, they are far from being the pooreſt in the Compoſition of King James's Hiſtory.

His Hiſtory poor.

There were at this Time three Courts kept with the utmoſt Splendor, and at an immenſe Charge; the King's at Whitehall, the Queen's at Somerſet-Houſe, which ſhe fain wou'd have had to be called Denmark-Houſe, the Prince's at St. James's. The latter was ſo frequented by the moſt noble Youth, that it appear'd always as full, but more gay than the King's.

*A.D.*1611. His Majeſty was never without a Favourite, whom he was wont to careſs and fondle in a manner which gave Offence to the moſt religious and chaſte of his Attendants. Sir Edward Peyton ſays, He wou'd tumble and kiſs them as a Miſtreſs. The Earl of Montgomery, younger Brother to the Earl of Pembroke, was the firſt Engliſh Man who was in ſpecial Favour with him; as it is ſaid his elder Brother the Earl of Pembroke was with the Queen. He made Montgomery Knight of the Garter, and 'tis thought he might have got much more by the Affection the King had for him, if he had more minded his Majeſty's Pleaſures, and his own leſs. Hay Earl of Carliſle took Advantage of Montgomery's Negligence, and ſupply'd his Place always when he was wanting: However, the King never ſhook off Montgomery, but to his Death gave him as many Marks of his Good-will as the Earl ſeem'd to deſire.

His Minions.

It is a general Opinion, that the Scots gather'd in the Harveſt of his Majeſty's Bounty, and that the Engliſh had only the Gleanings; which however is ſo far from Truth, that three or four Engliſh Peculators in this Reign, got more than the whole Scots Nation, excepting the Earl of Dunbar, who in nine Years time did not receive above 20000 Pounds in ready Money. The Earl of Montgomery, and the Earl of Dunbar, were both forced to give way this Year to a new Favourite Robert Car a young Scots Gentleman, who came into England with the King as one of his Pages; but when, according to the Cuſtom of the Engliſh Court, Footmen were appointed to walk by the King's Coach inſtead of Pages, Robert Car went to travel, and liv'd ſome Years in France, where he acquir'd that Elegance of Breeding, which had a particular Charm with King James. Mr. Wilſon ſays he was a Man of no Parts nor Birth; in which he injures him, for he was of as antient a Family in Scotland as moſt in that Kingdom, and his Father had ſo eminently ſerv'd the Crown, that when, in the Cataſtrophe of his Fortune, he apply'd to his Majeſty for Relief, he makes uſe of his Father's Services as an Argument to plead for him. As his Parts were not the moſt extenſive, ſo neither were they contemptible for his Age, being ſcarce twenty Years old when the King took him firſt into Favour upon this Occaſion. On the Coronation-Day, there was a Tournament to be at the Tiltyard, and Mr. Car riding in with Sir John Preſton, Lord Dingwell, his Horſe fell with him, and broke his Leg. He was immediately carry'd to Mr. Rider's Houſe at Charing-Croſs; and the King being inform'd of the Accident, went thither to viſit him as ſoon as the Tilting was over. Pity has a very eaſy Paſſage to Love. Mr. Car's Youth, Beauty, ſoft Temper, and engaging Air, ſo won the Heart of the King, that he continu'd to viſit him daily, and took all Care for his Recovery, which was retarded by the great Number of People of Quality, who, following the King's Example, crowded to ſee him, and make their court to him. His Majeſty commanded a Reſtraint upon thoſe Viſits, that he might not ſpend his Spirits He was no ſooner well, than he appear'd at Whitehall, as it were, in the Arms of the King, and all the Courtiers ador'd this Riſing-Sun, who was knighted and made Gentleman of the Bedchamber. His Majeſty himſelf inſtructed him in the Latin Tongue, which he attain'd ſo perfectly as to write the King's Diſpatches in it. His good Fortune was the leſs envy'd, for that he ſhew'd more Kindneſs to the Engliſh than to his own Countrymen, having no Friends nor Servants but were Engliſh. The Earl of Dunbar dying ſoon after, Sir Robert Car was made Lord High-Treaſurer of Scotland. This Staff was follow'd by the Garter of England, with the Title of Baron of Branſpeth and Viſcount Rocheſter; Charles Duke of York, and the Earl of Arundel, being at the ſame time inveſted with that moſt noble Order to do the Favourite the more Honour. *A.D.*1611. whom the Viſcount Rocheſter had moſt Affection, was Mr. Thomas Overbury, a Gentleman of the Temple, who left the Study of the Law to ſhare the Fortunes of the new Favourite, whoſe quick Riſe, and the King's immoderate Love for him, cou'd not but raiſe the Indignation of Prince Henry, which was inflam'd by a little Jealouſly, that Rocheſter was better than himſelf with the young Counteſs of Eſſex, of whom we ſhall ſay much in the Sequel of our Hiſtory.

The King complains of Vorſtius's Book.

It was in this Year that King James met with a Book of Conradus Vorſtius, Profeſſor of Divinity at Leyden, intitl'd Exegeſis Apologetica, and dedica to the States. His Majeſty wou'd not loſe the Opportunity to ſhew his Skill in Divinity; and having read that Book, he diſpatch'd his Commands to Sir Ralph Winwood his Ambaſſador at the Hague, to complain to the States-General of certain blaſphemous Tenents and atheiſtical Notions which he had diſcover'd in it; and to deſire that he might not be elected Divinity Reader in the Univerſity of Leyden. It ſeems Vorſtius had publickly recanted his ſceptical Opinions, and had been a Profeſſor fifteen Years in the County of Tecklenburgh in Germany, which firſt threw off the Papal Yoke in the Empire. He was recommended by the Landgrave of Heſſe; and the States wrote to the King, that the Univerſity of Leyden had ſent for him out of his own Country by that Prince's Recommendation. Prince Maurice alſo ſeconded the States Letter, and Vorſtius was advanc'd to the Profeſſor's Chair, notwithſtanding his Majeſty threaten'd to ſeparate from the Union with the Dutch Proteſtant Churches if he was choſen. Sir Ralph Winwood deliver'd to the States-General a Memorial againſt the Election of Vorſtius; which having no more Effect than his other Negotiations, he made a ſolemn Proteſtation, which clos'd thus: His Majeſty is ſo ſenſible of the Violation of his Alliance with them, that if Reparation be not ſpeedily made, he will further declare it in Print; which accordingly he did, and fell upon Vorſtius's Books, with as much Succeſs as he had fall'n upon Bellarmine. The Profeſſor kept his Chair to his Death, which happen'd not long after. Men of Senſe thought this unequal Controverſy below the Majeſty of a Monarch; and had it ſucceeded better, 'twou'd have been but a poor Triumph for the King of Great-Britain to have been too hard for a German Pedant.

Wightman burnt.

King James came off more glorioufly in an Affair of the like Nature in England; for one Edward Wightman having broach'd erroneous Doctrine in Warwickſhire and other Places, he was proſecuted by Neile Biſhop of Coventry and Litchfield, who was afterwards queſtion'd in Parliament, and canonically condemn'd by him. Upon which the King iſſu'd his Warrant to the Sheriff of Litchfield to burn Wightman in that City, which was executed. About the ſame Time Dr. King Biſhop of London, proſecuted one Bartholomew Legat in like manner, and condemn'd him according to the Canons of Holy Church: Upon which a like Warrant was directed by the King to the Sheriffs of London, Sir Edward Barkham and John Smith Eſq; to burn Legat in Smithfield, and he was burnt accordingly. Fuller tells us, He was excellently ſkill'd in Scripture, and his Converſation very unblameable. How prepoſterous, how monſtrous does it ſeem for a Prince, whoſe Converſation was very blameable, to put a Man to Death for a Principle only, which he himſelf had often diſcours'd with him about? Legat deny'd the Divinity of our Saviour in the Terms of the Athanaſian and other Creeds. When he was brought before Biſhop King and his Brethren in the Conſiſtory of St. Paul's, he diſown'd their Authority, which, tho' a heinous Crime, did not deſerve Burning. He continu'd firm in his Opinions, and his Death was not ſo well taken by the People, as to induce the King to let the Biſhops make more ſuch Examples. He preferr'd, ſays Fuller, that Hereticks hereafter, tho' condemn'd, ſhould ſilently and privately waſte themſelves away in Priſon, rather than to amuſe others with the Solemnity of a publick Execution. Thomas Sutton's Hoſpital may be thought too particular an Event for a General Hiſtory; yet the general Good that has accru'd by it to Perſons of all Ranks in this Kingdom, renders it worthy our Remembrance. This Gentleman Thomas Sutton Eſq; was in his younger Years a Soldier; he afterwards turn'd Merchant, and the Tradition is, that he found in the Hold of a Pyrate Ship purchas'd by him, a prodigious Sum of Money, which by Uſury produc'd that vaſt Treaſure which enabled him to endow his Hoſpital with twenty Manors, to the Value of 8000 l. a Year, beſides 13000 l. which he paid the Earl of Suffolk for the Charter-houſe, and 10000 l. he laid out in Building. His Foundation was for 80 decay'd Gentlemen, Soldiers and Merchants, and 40 Boys; in whoſe School has been bred ſome of the moſt eminent Wits and Scholars of our Age. The Founder dy'd the 12th Day of December 1611, which is an Anniverſary Feſtival at the Charter-houſe.

Baronets created.

This Year, tho' Wilſon and after him Echard places it in the Year 1614, was the Order of Knights Baronets eſtabliſh'd. The Pretence was to raiſe Money to maintain Forces in the Province of Ulſter in Ireland. Every Gentleman who purchas'd this Honour, paid down 1095 Pounds in three yearly Payments, for the Maintenance of thirty Foot Soldiers; and it has been cuſtomary for thoſe Knights who have ſince been admitted into this Order by the King's Favour without Money, to have a Receipt endors'd on their Patent for the above-mention'd Sum, to be appropriated to the ſame Uſes; and for Want of ſuch Endorſement, King Charles II. in Reſentment of ſome Misbehaviour, as 'twas term'd, of certain Baronets, compell'd them to pay the 1095 Pounds, as particularly Sir Thomas Pope Blount of Hertfordſhire. Of the firſt ten Baronets, no leſs than ſix Families are now enobled. Sir Richard Molineux Lord Viſcount Molineux in Ireland; Sir Thomas Manſel Lord Manſel; Sir Francis Leak Earl of Scarſdale; Sir Thomas Pelham Duke of Newcaſtle; Sir John St. John Lord St. John; Sir John Savage Earl Rivers. The King promis'd to make but 200, which induc'd many honourable Perſons to buy this Knighthood, it being to be hereditary in their Families; and every Knight was to poſſeſs Lands to the Value of at leaſt 1000 Pounds a Year; but both the Number and Value of the Knights were ſoon broke in upon by King Charles I. tho' King James did not exceed 204. Theſe Knights brought him in 200000 Pounds, which enabled him to be ſo prodigal in his Bounty to the Viſcount Rocheſter, to whom he gave 20000 Pounds at one time, and would have given him another 20000 Pounds, had it not been for Cecil Earl of Salisbury, and Lord-Treaſurer, who imputing this Prodigality to his Majeſty's not knowing the juſt Value of ſo many Engliſh Pounds, a twelfth Part of which would make 20000 Pounds Scotch, ſo order'd the Matter, that the King ſhou'd paſs thro' the Room where the Treaſure was laid on four Tables, 5000 Pounds on a Table, to be carry'd thence to Car. His Majeſty ſtarted at the Sight of ſo much Money, and ask'd What it was to do? The Treaſurer reply'd, 'Tis your Gift to Sir Robert Car. Swounds, Mon, the King's uſual Oath, 'tis too much, let 5000 Pounds ſerve his Turn. His Majeſty rais'd Money by ſelling all Sorts of Honours. A Knight-Batchelor 300 Pounds, an Engliſh Baron 10000 Pounds, an Engliſh Viſcount 15000 Pounds, an Engliſh Earl 20000 Pounds. Vaſt Sums were collected by Compoſitions for defective Titles and Aſſart Lands, for Prince Henry's Knighthood, and the Princeſs Elizabeth's Marriage, by Benevolences, Privy-Seals never repaid, Sales of Mannors,

*A.D.*1611. Manors and Fee-Farm Rents, which were waſted as extravagantly as they were acquir'd illegally. The King being one Day in the Gallery at Whitehall with no body near him but Henry Rich afterwards Earl of Holland, and James Maxwell of the Bedchamber, ſaw ſome Porters paſs by with 3000 l. for the Privy Purſe; Rich whiſpering Maxwell, his Majeſty turn'd upon them, and cry'd, What ſaid he, Maxwell? The latter reply'd, He wiſh'd that Money was his. The King ſaid, Marry ſhalt thou have it, Harry; and commanded the Porters to carry it to his Lodgings, with this Expreſſion, think you have a great Purchaſe, but I am better pleas'd with giving than you can be with receiving it.

*A.D.*1612. L. Sanquir hang'd. The Execution of the Lord Sanquir, a Scots Peer, for the Murder of John Turner a Fencing-Maſter, is recorded as a tranſcendent Act of Juſtice; and we will not leſſen the Merit of it, by imagining that the Inſolence of the Scots, which was then a crying Grievance, contributed to the fulfilling of it on the Perſon of this Lord who was hang'd. Sanquir was at Turner's Fencing-School ſome Years before, and valuing himſelf on his own Skill thought to put an Affront on Turner's. The latter parry'd ſo dextrouſly with the Baron, that he puſh'd out one of his Eyes. The Lord Sanquir being ſome time after at the Court of France, King Henry IV. ask'd him, How he loſt his Eye? The Baron reply'd, 'Twas done by a Sword. And does the Man live who did it? ſaid the King. Which ſo awaken'd the Lord Sanquir's Revenge, that coming to England, himſelf, one Gray and Carliſle, two of his Countrymen, went to Turner's Houſe in Blackfriars, and with Piſtols ſhot him dead. They were all three taken, try'd, condemn'd, and executed; the Lord Sanquir at Weſtminſter-Hall Gate, and the others at Tyburn. One Ramſay, a Scotſman, had lately ſwitch'd the Earl of Montgomery at a Horſe-race, and he tamely bore it, tho' he was much intreated to reſent the Affront by the Engliſh who were then in Company. Sanderſon aſſures us, Montgomery by his Tameneſs loſt the Favour of King James, who, ſays he, hated a Coward. Which are both falſe: the King did not hate a Coward, nor did Montgomery loſe his Favour.

Car's Friendſhip to Overbury. We have mention'd the great Friendſhip and Intimacy between Sir Robert Car, now Viſcount Rocheſter, and Sir Thomas Overbury; for he had now receiv'd the Honour of Knighthood, and was look'd upon as a Man who cou'd do any thing at Court by means of his Friend Car. Accordingly Addreſſes were made to him by Men of much ſuperior Condition; and the moſt Noble and Powerful thought they cou'd not make a better Uſe of their Intereſt than by obliging Sir Thomas Overbury. His Father, Nicholas Overbury, Eſq; was made a Judge in Wales, and himſelf was offer'd a Poſt of Honour and Profit; which he ſlighted, as having Aims higher than any of thoſe Offers, his Friendſhip with Rocheſter making him in a manner Maſter of all the Places the King had to diſpoſe of. The Earl of Salisbury to ſtrengthen his Family had made an Alliance with the Houſe of Suffolk, by marrying his eldeſt Son the Lord Cranburn to the Lady Catharine Howard, eldeſt Daughter to the Earl of Suffolk. The youngeſt Daughter, Lady Frances Howard, was about thirteen Years of Age, and Salisbury to ingratiate himſelf with the young Earl of Eſſex, then almoſt fourteen Years old, to whoſe Father he had been a fatal Enemy, negotiated a Match between him and the Lady Frances; which was accompliſh'd, and the Earl went to travel, till both himſelf and his Counteſs were of a mature Age to conſummate their Nuptials. The young Lady was in her Bloom, and her Beauty attracted the Eyes of all the Youth of the Court. It made an Impreſſion on the Heart of Prince Henry: but ſhe was too fond of making Conqueſts, to preſerve that glorious one.

Earl of Eſſex marries Lady Frances Howard.

*A.D.*1612. The Counteſs, who was under the Influence of her Mother, appear'd in all her Charms to captivate the Favourite Rocheſter, by whoſe Intereſt ſhe and her Family flatter'd themſelves they ſhou'd reap more ſolid Advantages than by a Dream of being belov'd by the Prince; who obſerving ſhe met Rocheſter in his Approaches to her, beſtow'd on the Lady a Portion of the Contempt he had conceiv'd for her Lover. As he was once dancing with the Ladies, the young Counteſs letting her Glove fall, it was taken up and preſented to him by a Courtier, who thought it wou'd have been an agreeable Preſent; but the Prince refus'd it, ſaying, I will not have what another has ſtretch'd. The Earl of Eſſex was three or four Years upon his Travels, and then return'd with impatient Deſire to poſſeſs that Beauty which was his own by the Laws of God and Man. He found her ſo little inclin'd to receive his Love, that ſhe induſtriouſly avoided him, as one reſolv'd to be for ever a Stranger to his Bed. The injur'd Lord took it for a maiden Shineſs, which wou'd wear off with Time; but his Impatience thinking every Minute an Age till ſhe knew the Duty of a Wife, he apply'd to her Father the Earl of Suffolk, who was not acquainted with her Undutifulneſs, and deſir'd him to reduce his Daughter to conjugal Obedience, he having no Diſtruſt of his Ability or Vigor in the Performance of the Duty of a Husband. The Earl of Suffolk oblig'd the Counteſs of Eſſex to cohabit with him; who ſoon after their Cohabitation was ſeiz'd with a Diſtemper of a poiſonous Nature, which brought him ſo near the Grave, that it had like to have been his Marriage-Bed. This Poiſon was ſuppos'd to be given him by Procurement of the Counteſs, it having a Quality which diſabled him in the Enjoyment of her, that ſhe might reſerve herſelf entirely for the Viſcount Rocheſter, now Earl of Somerſet. Her wicked Counſellor and Aſſiſtant was one Mrs. Turner, a Doctor of Phyſick's Widow, who carry'd her to one Dr. Foreman, a pretended Conjurer, who by waxen Images, Philters and Drugs promis'd to captivate and invigorate Somerſet, and at the ſame time debilitate Eſſex. But in the midſt of all her wanton Hopes, ſhe is flung into the deepeſt Deſpair by being carry'd down to Chartley Caſtle in Staffordſhire, where it was thought ſhe might be wean'd from the Follies of the Town, and reconcil'd to a very fond and a very faithful Husband; which had a contrary Effect. Chartley was 100 Miles from her Happineſs. 'Twas in the pleaſanteſt Seaſon of the Year; yet ſhe ſhut herſelf up in her Chamber, and liv'd in perpetual Darkneſs. She never ſtirr'd out of it but in the Dead of Night; and her Behaviour to her Husband was ſuch as might make him as weary of her as ſhe was of him; yet he bore all her Slights without murmuring for ſome Months; but at laſt his Patience was quite worn out, and he wou'd break out into a little Paſſion; which ſhe preſently repreſented to her Father and Uncle the Earl of Northampton, as an intolerable Sowreneſs of Temper, which made her Life a Burthen to her, and render'd her the moſt unhappy of Women. Her wicked Confidents furniſh'd her with Compoſitions to make her Husband impotent; and when the Effects ſhew'd their Power, ſhe ſeem'd ready to admit of his Embraces; but as ſoon as by Abſence he recover'd Spirits, ſhe grew refractory, and wou'd not ſuffer him to enjoy her. Thus did they live together for ſome time; he in the Torment of ſlighted Love, and ſhe in the Rage of adulterous Luſt: In which ſad State we muſt a while leave them to continue our Hiſtory.

She poiſons him.

Hates him.

Mary Q. of Scots rebury'd with Pomp. The King had been ten Years in England before he remov'd his Mother's Corpſe from Peterborough to Weſtminſter Abbey, where ſhe was bury'd with much Pomp and Expence. If ſhe was really

*A.D.*1612. ly privy to the Murther of his Father, as is generally allow'd, there was no Reaſon for ſuch expenſive Honours to be paid to her Remains, which had been about 30 Years rotting in a Grave. Many Noblemen, and eſpecially Biſhops, aſſiſted at this Ceremony. Her having been a bigotted Papiſt, an inveterate Enemy to the belov'd Queen Elizabeth, a marry'd Wife to the Murtherer of her Husband, and a contracted Wife to another in the Life-time of that Murtherer, her dying without any Signs of Contrition for ſo many enormous Crimes, were of no Weight with theſe Prelates againſt her being Mother to the King, who had by Inſpiration pleaded their Cauſe ſo ſtoutly at Hampton-Court.

Shirley the Perſian Ambaſſador.

On the 26th of June arriv'd at London Sir Robert Shirley, Ambaſſador from the King of Perſia to King James. There were three Brothers, Sons of Sir Thomas Shirley of Wiſton in Suſſex, who were all three knighted, as Sir Thomas Shirley, Sir Anthony Shirley, and this Sir Robert Shirley. The elder Brother Sir Thomas was the laſt of the three who put themſelves upon Adventures in foreign Parts. The ſecond Brother Sir Anthony Shirley went firſt, and ſerv'd with Sir Philip Sidney in the Low Countries. He was knighted by the Earl of Eſſex in Ireland, made a Voyage to America, enter'd into the Service of the King of Spain, who gave him a conſiderable Command in his Fleet; and King James recalling him, he diſobey'd his Mandate, and was number'd among the Engliſh Fugitives. He behav'd well in the German Wars, for which the Emperor created him a Count of the Holy Empire. He alſo travell'd into Perſia, and paſs'd thro' Ruſſia to the Caſpian Sea, which himſelf wrote an Account of. He liv'd in Spain to a great Age. Sir Robert Shirley was taken into Favour by the King of Perſia, who gave him his Niece in Marriage; and that ſhe turn'd Chriſtian, appears by admitting a Son ſhe was deliver'd of in England to be baptiz'd, the Queen being Godmother and Prince Henry Godfather. Sir Thomas Shirley the elder Brother hearing of the Succeſs of his two younger Brothers in their Travels, left his aged Father and a fair Inheritance in Suſſex to ſhare with them in the like Honours. But his Fortune was not equal with theirs, and his Voyages only qualify'd him to write a Book of them. The Travels of theſe three Knights were the Subject of a Comedy, entitul'd, The Travels of three Engliſh Brothers, Sir Thomas, Sir Anthony, and Sir Robert Shirley. The latter before he came to England had been ſent Ambaſſador from the King of Perſia to Sigiſmund King of Poland. He ſtaid about a Year in England, and then leaving his Son behind him took ſhipping with his Lady for Perſia. The Grandſon of Sir Thomas Shirley was that Dr. Shirley, whoſe Diſpute with Sir John Fogg caus'd a Diviſion between the Two Houſes of Parliament in King Charles the IId's Reign. Archdeacon Echard, who is very fond of Stories of Ghoſts, Apparitions, Blazing Stars, and every thing that has the marvellous in it, ſpeaks of theſe three Brothers, as of Perſons whoſe Adventures were an Ornament to the Hiſtory of King James, whereas they are to be noted for nothing but their rambling Heads. The Dutch who judg'd ſoberly of Sir Robert Shirley, look'd upon him as a Tool of the King of Spain's, in whoſe Court he had made ſome Stay before he arriv'd in Holland; where he gave out he had a Commiſſion from the King of Perſia to treat with the States General about a War with the Turks; but Shirley producing no Letters from the Sophi Scha Abas I. authoriſing him to enter into a Treaty with them, the States, ſays Le Clerc, refus'd to give him Audience, ſuſpecting he was ſuborn'd by the Spaniards, tho' Shirley brought a Wife with him whom he had marry'd in Perſia.

Purch.

We are now coming to the End of a Life, which was the moſt valuable to the Engliſh of any other in the World, that of their darling Prince Henry, whoſe admirable Qualities, as they endear'd him to all good Engliſhmen, ſo they render'd him terrible to their Enemies. He was adorn'd with Wiſdom and Piety above his Years, had Strength and Agility of Body equal to any Man, was of an heroick Diſpoſition, and an Hater of Flatterers and Flatteries; which made him reject the Courtſhip of Rocheſter with Diſdain, not once giving him any Countenance, or admitting him into his Company. We are told as an Inſtance of his Piety, Coke, 71. that being once a Stag-hunting, and the Stag when he was almoſt ſpent croſſing the Road where a Butcher was travelling with his Dog, the Dog kill'd the Stag, which was ſo large the Butcher cou'd not carry it off. When the Prince and his Company came up, the latter did what they cou'd to incenſe him againſt the Butcher; to whom the Prince mildly reply'd, What if the Butcher's Dog kill'd the Stag, the Butcher cou'd not help it. The Company ſaid, If your Father had been ſo ſerv'd, he wou'd have ſworn ſo that no Man cou'd have endur'd it. The Prince anſwer'd, All the Pleaſure in the World is not worth an Oath. If Echard cou'd produce ſo pious an Expreſſion that came from the Mouths of his Beckets, his Lauds, and his other Saints, we ſhou'd have a much better Opinion of them than we have at preſent. This being a tacit Rebuke of the King his Father's prophane ſwearing, to which he was extremely addicted, was thought to have made ill Blood on the King's Side. The French Ambaſſador coming once to take his Leave of the Prince, and asking what Service he had to command him to his Maſter? Tell him, ſays the Prince, what I am doing. He was then toſſing a Pike. 'Twas a generous Saying of his concerning Sir Walter Raleigh, for whom he had a high Eſteem, No King but my Father wou'd keep ſuch a Bird in a Cage His Court was more frequented than his Majeſty's, and by another Sort of Men, the moſt religious and worthy Noblemen and Gentlemen of their Years, agreeable to his own; which the King being often told of, he was heard to ſay, Will he bury me alive? The Prince, as all generous Minds ever do, abhorr'd Perſecution for Conſcience Sake, and had Compaſſion for the Puritans, who in Return expreſs'd a grateful Senſe of his Favour; and this is one Reaſon why his Highneſs's immature Death is not ſo much ſuſpected of foul Play by the rigid Eccleſiaſticks, as by Proteſtant Writers. Some who knew the Offence the Prince had taken at Rocheſter, and Rocheſter's Reſentment of it, talk'd hardly of it, as if Car had got him poiſon'd, being afraid of his martial Spirit, tho' temper'd with as much Virtue as ever dwelt in human Breaſt. Sir James Elphington obſerving Prince Henry's Averſion to Car offer'd to kill him; but the Prince reprov'd him with equal Piety and Gallantry, If there was a Cauſe to juſtify it I wou'd do it myſelf. And he ſaid once upon ſome Offence given him by Rocheſter, If ever I am King I will not leave one of that Family unpuniſh'd; meaning the Howards, who were of the Cabal with Rocheſter, and under Engagements to ſupport one another againſt all Oppoſers.

A.D. 1612. Prince Henry's Death.

His Highneſs was not ill above five Days. Some ſay he was poiſon'd with a Bunch of Grapes; others, that it was with the Scent of poiſon'd Gloves. After his Death he was open'd by the King's Command. The Phyſicians preſent at the Diſſection were Sir Theodore Mayhern, Dr. Atkins, Dr. Hammond, Dr. Palmer, Dr. Gifford, and Dr. Butler, who reported that his Liver was pale, the Gall full of Wind, the Spleen black, the Lungs ſpotted with Corruption, the Midriff blackiſh, the Head full of Blood and Water, which was given out to clear the Suſpicion of Poiſon; as if, ſays Wilſon, no Venom cou'd produce ſuch Effects. Sir A. W. writes, Prince P. 84.

*A.D.*1612. Poiſon'd. Henry dy'd not without vehement Suſpicion of Poiſon; and I wiſh I cou'd ſay Suſpicion only. Sir Edward Coke, Lord Chief Juſtice, ſaid on the Bench, God knows what became of that ſweet Babe Prince Henry; but I know ſomewhat. "Surely, ſays Sir P. 123. "A. W. ſearching the Cabinets concerning Over- "bury's Murther, he lighted on ſome Papers that "ſpake plain in that which was ever whiſper'd, "which had he gone on in a gentle way wou'd "have fall'n in of themſelves not to have been "prevented; but this Folly of his Tongue ſtopp'd "the Breath of the Diſcovery of that ſo foul a "Murder, which, I fear, cries ſtill for Vengeance". P. 27. Sir Edward Peyton: Prince Henry falls mortally ſick of a ſuppos'd Fever, but not without Suſpicion of Poiſon. And as to the Diſſection; When he was cut up to be imbalm'd, his Brain was Liver-hu'd and putrify'd; an Argument of Poiſon as was affirm'd by a moſt learned Phyſician Dr. Butler of Cambridge. Welwood judging by the Opinion of Mayerne and the other Doctors is doubtful in this Matter, but owns it was the general Rumour at that time that this Prince was poiſon'd; and adds, P. 20. "Whatever was in it, there is yet in Print a Ser- "mon preach'd at St. James's upon the Diſſolu- "tion of his Family, which boldly inſinuated "ſome ſuch thing. And alſo Sir Francis Bacon, "Lord Chancellor of England, in his Speech at "the Trial of the Earl of Somerſet, had ſome Re- "flections upon the Intimacy of that Lord with "Sir Thomas Overbury, which ſeem to point that "way, inſomuch that there were ſeveral Expreſ- "ſions left out of the printed Copy that were in "the Speech". Biſhop Burnet writes thus of it: Colonel Titus aſſur'd me, that he had it from King Charles the Firſt's own Mouth; He was well aſſur'd he was poiſon'd by the Earl of Somerſet's Means. Whether his Averſion to Popery haſten'd his Death or not, I cannot tell. I think this melancholy Incident is the moſt fairly repreſented of any thing in Mr. Echard's Hiſtory; for notwithſtanding Prince Henry's Averſion to Popery and Affection to the Puritans, he ſeems to allow the Suſpicion of his being poiſon'd to be juſt.

The Death of this hopeful Prince made the whole Kingdom but as one Houſe of Mourning, Whitehall the King his Father's Court only excepted. Never was Grief ſo ſincere and ſo gene- P. 63. ral, tho' his Majeſty, according to Wilſon, commanded that no body ſhou'd come near him in Mourning. His Highneſs dy'd the 6th of November, and was carry'd in a Hearſe to Weſtminſter the 7th of December, the Pomp of the Funeral being fully compleated by the People's Tears and Lamentations.

Vaſſor informs us, that France was not ſorry to hear of Prince Henry's Death; he ſeeming rather to have the Inclinations of the antient Engliſh Kings, than of the Kings of the Scottiſh Race. Thus we ſee how happy Foreigners thought us in the Government of the Royal Houſe we are writing of. Vaſſor again: One can but very badly interpret the Sentiments which the Prince ſhew'd, when he heard of the Death of Henry IV. I have loſt, cry'd he, my ſecond Father. The common Opinion is, that young Henry had reſolv'd to ſteal from the Engliſh Court, and go learn the Trade of War in France, as ſoon as that King march'd at the Head of his Army. Dr. Welwood explains this Matter farther: "I have ſeen ſome Papers that make it more "than probable, that Prince Henry was not only "acquainted with the Secret of Henry IV. but "was engag'd in the Deſign for which his great "Army was prepar'd". Vaſſor again: The Prince of Wales lamented the tragical End of Henry IV. And one of his Courtiers taking that Opportunity to tell him his Death wou'd be a Means to ſtrengthen the King of England's Pretenſions to the Crown of France; "Get you gone, you idle Flatterer, re- "ply'd the Prince. Dare you talk to me of ma- "king War againſt an Infant? I am ready to de- "fend him againſt all who ſhall venture to attack "him". Sentiments ſo truly heroical, that one cannot think he was inſpir'd by King James. The French Author proceeds: "Some ſaid the Father "had a mind inſenſibly to efface the Memory of "his Son, who a little before charm'd all England. "Inſtead of taking Pains to diſcover the Secret of "the haſty Death of the Prince, the King heap'd "new Favours upon his unworthy Favourite, who "was thought to be the Author of it. Shou'd I "make a raſh Judgment, if I ſhou'd ſay that his "Majeſty look'd upon himſelf as a Man happily "rais'd from the Dead after the Death of his Son, "whoſe Court had for ſome time been fuller than "his own; and his ſaying, What will they bury me "alive, was much reflected on, when the Prince "of Wales dy'd a little after". This Prince's Affection to his Siſter the Princeſs Elizabeth was no doubt the warmer for her Zeal for the Proteſtant Religion; as no doubt the Perverſeneſs of his Brother Charles's Temper, and his early Bigotry caus'd the Coldneſs that was between them. Osborn tells P. 42. us, Prince Henry wou'd often make him weep; and tell him, he ſhou'd be a Biſhop, a Gown being the fitteſt to hide his Legs, ſubject in his Childhood to be crooked.

There was at that time in the Court of England Elector Pal. the Elector Palatine of the Rhine, who came to Marriage with Princeſs Elizaſolemnize his Marriage with the fair and pious beth. Princeſs the Lady Elizabeth, which was ſet a foot at firſt by the Encouragement Prince Henry gave Ibid. it. A Marriage that has been productive of the greateſt Bleſſing that ever happen'd to this Nation, in the Succeſſion of that Princeſs's Poſterity to the Throne of Great Britain, our preſent Sove- *A.D.*1613. reign King George II. being her great Grandſon. The Elector was inſtall'd Knight of the Garter in February, together with the Proxy of Maurice Prince of Orange; and a Week after marry'd to one of the moſt lovely Princeſſes in the World. She was led to Church by her Brother Prince Charles and the Earl of Northampton both Batchelors, her Train ſupported by young Ladies. Her Robes were white, the Emblem of Virgin Innocence; her Hair diſhevel'd, hanging down a Length upon her Back. She had a Crown of pure Gold on her Head glittering with the Luſtre of Diamonds, and other precious Stones. Her Ladies were all in white, and ſo adorn'd with Jewels, that in the Imagination of the Spectators they form'd another milky Way. The King gave her in Marriage, Dr. Abbot Archbiſhop of Canterbury perform'd the Ceremony, and Dr. Montagu Biſhop of Bath and Wells preach'd the Wedding Sermon. There appear'd in the enchanting Looks of the Royal Bride ſome ſudden Flaſhes of Joy; which, ſays Echard after Wilſon, were interpreted to be like Lightning before a Storm, Preſages of her future Misfortunes. She return'd from Church between the Duke of Lennox and the Earl of Nottingham, two marry'd Men. The Feaſtings and Maskings which follow'd are, as Wilſon juſtly obſerves, fitter to appear in a Prince's Court than in Hiſtory. But our hiſtorical Archdeacon not thinking ſo juſtly as Wilſon, has enter'd into the Detail of them, to which I refer; and ſhall only add, that their Highneſſes the Bridegroom and Bride were ſplendidly treated by the City of London, who preſented the beauteous Bride with a Chain of Oriental Pearl, by the Hand of the Lord Mayor Sir John Swinnerton. The Engliſh Nation in general were ſo well pleas'd with this Proteſtant Alliance, that they contributed largely to the Marriage Portion and Expence, notwithſtanding the collecting it was a Revival of an old obſolete Cuſtom. The Portion was but 40000 l. whereas the Expence. Profuſion in the Marriage Expences amounted to almoſt 60000 l. The Charges of the Elector's Inſtalment were 6000 l. the Wedding Feaſt 2000 l. the

*A.D.*1613 the Naval Fight on the Thames 5000 l. &c. Which is another Proof of the little Value the King put upon Money, tho' he made Grants of ſo many Monopolies to raiſe it; and they were ſuch Grievances, that he was forc'd to buy back ſeveral of them of the Grantees at large Sums of Money to eaſe Trade and Traders. He paid 6000 l. to the Earl of Dunbar for the Manor of Harrington in Derbyſhire, which he had before given him. He paid 1500 l. to Sir Patrick Murray for relinquiſhing a Grant of Concealments; 18000 l. to Lord Aubigny for relinquiſhing a Grant of ſome Lands he had given him; 6000 l. to the Earl of Montgomery for giving up his Grant of Cuſtodies; 2000 l. to the Earl of Dunbar for relinquiſhing his Grant of Logwood; 20000 l. to Sir Robert Car for the Manor of Shirburn which he had given him; 15000 l. to the Earl of Mar for relinquiſhing his Grant of the Manors of Minden and Chipley in Suffolk; 21000 l. to Sir William Wade and others, for relinquiſhing their Grants for Money out of Recuſants Eſtates; 6000 l. to the Lord Sheffield for ſurrendring his Grant of a Penſion; 11000 l. to the Earl of Nottingham for relinquiſhing his Grant of Wine Licenſes; 1300 l. to Sir James Hamilton for ſurrendring his Grant of Cuſtoms in ſeveral Ports of Ireland, &c. Thus did this wiſe Monarch diſpoſe of the Treaſure which he compell'd his unwilling Subjects to pay him.

About the latter End of April, the Elector and Electreſs were convoy'd by the Lord High Admiral the Earl of Nottingham with a Royal Navy to Fluſhing. They were attended to Heidelbergh by the Duke of Lenox, the Earl of Arundel, the Viſcount Liſle, the Lord Harrington, and ſeveral Ladies and Perſons of Quality. They were receiv'd in almoſt every City of Holland, particularly at Amſterdam, with a Magnificence anſwerable to the Wealth of that City. And met with the like Reception in all the Cities thro' which they paſs'd, till they arriv'd at Heidelbergh the Elector's Capital, where the Palatine Court exerted themſelves to compliment the Engliſh Princeſs and her Train, in a manner ſuitable to the Honour that was done them by this Alliance. The Lord Harrington dy'd in Germany to the great Grief of the Princeſs, who had liv'd many Years under his Tutelage.

The Earl of Salisbury ſurviv'd Prince Henry about ſix Months, and then gave way to Fate on the Road from Bath to London. He dy'd as little lamented as he had been belov'd; his beſt Quality being, that he was loth any one ſhou'd plunder his Maſter but himſelf. We have ſpoken of him more at large in the preceding Pages. His Death put Somerſet in the entire Poſſeſſion of the King's Favour. He took to himſelf the Office of Secretary of State; tho' he was no more qualify'd for it by his Learning, than what ten or twenty Romances, of which his Library was compos'd, cou'd furniſh him with. He receiv'd all Pacquets, and anſwer'd them himſelf without acquainting either King or Counſellors; who were doubtleſs the wiſeſt that cou'd be, by ſuffering ſuch an unfit Secretary to rule as he liſted.

We left the Counteſs of Eſſex in a languiſhing Condition with her Husband at Chartley; whence ſhe got to London again in a few Months, and enter'd farther ſtill in the criminal Correſpondence between her and Car. The Earl of Northampton her Uncle was privy to it, and ſo was Sir Thomas Overbury; but ſo far from approving of it, that he wou'd call her Strumpet, and her Mother Bawd; which Language he aggravated with many odious Circumſtances to irritate him againſt her; and when he underſtood that Rocheſter deſign'd to marry her, he oppos'd it with his moſt powerful Arguments, urging to him the Folly as well as Injuſtice of his marrying a Woman who had been diſloyal to a moſt noble and worthy Husband. Car's Paſſion made him deaf to his Friend's good Counſel, which inſtead of weaning him from his Miſtreſs, ſet him againſt his Friend; and the Counteſs being informed of Overbury's Endeavour to break off the intended Marriage, ſhe rail'd at him with all the Rage of a lewd Woman interrupted in her Lewdneſs, and complain'd of him to her Unkle Northampton, who provok'd Car more and more daily, by the falſe Colours he put upon Overbury's Actions and Diſcourſes, till at laſt he agreed with the Earl and the Counteſs to rid themſelves of him by Poiſon. Mrs. Turner, the Counteſs's Confident, told her, 'twas Pity Overbury ſhou'd live after he had defam'd ſo honourable a Lady; and rather than he ſhou'd not die, ſhe wou'd kill him herſelf; accordingly ſhe was the Agent to treat with Weſton, her late Husband Dr. Turner's Servant, to poiſon him for 200 Pounds. But the Difficulty was how to come at him; it is therefore reſolv'd to get him lodg'd in the Tower, to remove the preſent Governor Sir William Wade, and in his Place put Sir Jervas Elways, whom they cou'd confide in. To accompliſh this, Somerſet and Northampton move in Council, that Sir Thomas Overbury might be ſent Ambaſſador to the Archduke in the Netherlands, which Somerſet was to diſſwade him from accepting, and conſequently he wou'd for his Diſobedience be immediately ſent to the Tower. Somerſet found it no hard Matter to gain his Ends upon Overbury, who look'd on the intended Employment as an honourable Exile, to loſe him his Intereſt at Court by Somerſet's Means; who, pretending he cou'd not live without his Company, nor ſerve his Majeſty in his Offices without his Advice, encourag'd Overbury flatly to refuſe going abroad, and for his Refuſal he was ſent to the Tower, Somerſet incenſing the King againſt him, by repreſenting his Diſobedience as a Contempt of his Royal Perſon and Authority. The Warrant for impriſoning Sir Thomas, did not confine him to a Chamber, but the Earl of Northampton and Car, both of the Privy-Council, wrote to Sir Jervas Elways, Lieutenant of the Tower, to keep him cloſe Priſoner; and Sir Thomas Monſon brought him a verbal Meſſage, that he ſhou'd ſuffer no Letters, Tokens, or other Things, to be deliver'd to him. Weſton is recommended to Sir Thomas Overbury as a very proper Perſon to attend him in his Confinement. Franklyn was immediately taken into Employment, and having ſome Knowledge of Drugs and Phyſick, his Buſineſs was to provide the Poiſon, which Weſton was to adminiſter. Mrs Turner prepar'd the Tarts, Jellies, and other Vehicles, to convey the Venom, the Counteſs of Eſſex and Car receiving daily Informations of their Proceedings, and animating them in the diabolical Deſign by Rewards and Promiſes. The Counteſs ſent the firſt Poiſon in a Glaſs of Blue Water, which ſhe wrapp'd up in a Paper, and deliver'd to Weſton's Son to carry to his Father, who meeting with Sir Jervas Elways as he was carrying it in one Hand, and Sir Thomas Overbury's Supper in the other, Weſton ask'd him, Whether he ſhould give it now? The Lieutenant, who was not yet let into the whole Secret, demanded What? Sir, ſays Weſton, do not you know what's to be done? Elways, ſurpriz'd at the Diſcourſe, ſifted the Matter out of him, and then only charg'd him to defer it for that time. The next Day Northampton ſent for Sir Jervas, and communicated the Plot to him at large, but cou'd not in two Hours prevail with him to give into it; at laſt, what with Flattery, and what with Threats, the Lieutenant, who had gone too far to be innocent, and knew too much to be ſafe, without going farther, bound himſelf by an Oath of Secrecy, to connive at Weſton's and Franklyn's Doings; for which the Earl aſſur'd him he ſhould receive 1000 Pounds. This is the ſame Earl, on whoſe Shoulders, the reverend Hiſtorian tells us, King James laid a great Part of the Burden of the State.

Sir A. W. p. 66.

Sir Thom. Overbury.

*A.D.*1613. Sir Jervas Elways returning to the Tower, viſited Sir Thomas Overbury, and then wrote a Letter to the Earl, giving him an Account of their Converſation, cloſing it thus; I ſee the Event, I deſire it may be ſafely carried; what Service I may do in this, or any thing elſe, I will be faithful to your Lordſhip. Weſton had now 8o Pounds in Money ſent him by the Counteſs to haſten his Operations, and Mrs. Turner checks him for delaying them: Upon which he furniſhes himſelf with Roſater, White Arſenick, Mercury Sublimate, Cantharides, Red Mercury, and three or four more poiſonous Ingredients, which were given Overbury with his Meats and Broths, according as the Poiſon cou'd be beſt conceal'd, and as he was adviſ'd by Franklyn. Tarts and Jellies were ſent by Somerſet to Sir Thomas Monſon, whoſe Servant Simon Maſters carry'd them to Weſton, and he adminiſter'd them to Overbury, whoſe Sauce, Salt, Drink, and whatever he ſwallow'd, had Poiſon in it of one kind or another. By this Means he began to grow extreme ſickly, but having naturally a ſtrong Conſtitution, and the Doſes being in too ſmall Portions, for their better Concealment, he ſeem'd to be in a likely way of getting through it, eſpecially when conceiving a Jealouſy of foul Play, he demanded to have Phyſick, and by the Help of a Bribe, got the Aſſiſtance of an Apothecary, who order'd him a cold Bath, adviſ'd him to eat ſparingly, and be cautious of his Diet, which alarm'd the Conſpirators, and freſh Orders were ſent to the Lieutenant, to ſuffer no Body to have Acceſs to him but Weſton and his Accomplices, his own Servants not being admitted to ſpeak with him at a Window. In this ſolitary languiſhing Condition, was the poor Gentleman left at the Mercy of Traytors and Murderers; and the Conſpirators having Hopes of being ſoon rid of him, Somerſet haſtens to the Accompliſhment of his wicked Will in the Marriage of the Counteſs of Eſſex. There was now no body to check them in their lawleſs Loves; and they cou'd not be contented with a ſlight Taſte of future Joys, they want a Surfeit of them; and weary of a tranſient Fruition at Copinger's and other Places of Aſſignation, to riot in a kind of perpetual Enjoyment by the Liberties of Marriage. To effect this, there muſt be a Divorce for the Counteſs, and the ſhameleſs Pretence was the Earl of Eſſex's Impotence, the Counteſs herſelf making a Complaint in Form; and her Father the Earl of Suffolk join'd with her in a Petition to the King, to appoint a Court of Delegates to hear and redreſs her great Grievance. What follows is the moſt ſcandalous Part of this Story, which is made important by the Share his Majeſty had in it, as that is a Proof of the Piety and Wiſdom ſo much extoll'd by Archdeacon Echard and other Eccleſiaſtical Writers. A Commiſſion was thereupon granted to Dr. George Abbot Archbiſhop of Canterbury, Dr. John King Biſhop of London, one of the Hampton-Court Conference, Dr. Thomas Bilſon Biſhop of Wincheſter, another of them; Dr. Lancelot Andrews Biſhop of Ely, another; Dr. Richard Neile Biſhop of Coventry and Litchfield, Dr. John Buckeridge Biſhop of Rocheſter; Sir Julius Cæſar, Sir Thomas Parry, Sir Daniel Dunn, Civilians, to hear and determine this vile Cauſe. The Lewdneſs of the Trial exceeds all the Obſcenities of Farces and Lampoons; and the Sentence of the Prelates is not to be repeated by the chaſte Pen of an Hiſtorian. The Earl and the Counteſs lying in one Bed, Nudus cum Nuda, Inſpection of her Body, apt for Copulation, in the pious Sentence of Divorce, are Terms which immediately precede the invocating the Name of Chriſt, and ſetting God before their Eyes, Expreſſions which coming ſo very cloſe after the Bawdry, have ſomething ſo very ſhocking in them, that Poſterity wou'd not believe there were four Biſhops Names to the Decree of Divorce, was it not extant, and ſign'd by Thomas Bilſon Biſhop of Wincheſter, Lancelot Andrews Biſhop of Ely, Richard Neile Biſhop of Coventry and Litchfield, and John Buckeridge Biſhop of Rocheſter. The obſcene Decree was founded on the pretended Nullity of the Marriage, the Counteſs having never been enjoy'd by the Earl, which was certify'd by a Jury of Matrons, the Lady Martha Tyrwhit, the Lady Alice Carew, the Lady Dalliſon, the Lady Anne Waller, &c. aſſiſted by two Midwives, who reported, that upon Inſpection, they found the Lady fitted with Abilities, &c. 'Tis not to be ſuffer'd in Hiſtory. In ſhort, they ſign'd to it, that ſhe was a Virgin uncorrupted; ſo very bare-fac'd a Fraud, that there was not a modeſt Man or Woman in England but was aſham'd of it. The Counteſs's Character renders the Cheat as abſurd as it is abominable; and it is no Excuſe for the Ladies, that they were impos'd upon by a falſe Counteſs one Mrs. Finit, who was then too young to be other than Virgo intacta. The Counteſs pleaded her maiden Baſhfulneſs as well as Purity, that ſhe might be veil'd when the Ladies made their Inſpection; accordingly 'twas order'd ſhe ſhou'd have a Vail, under which Mrs. Finit eaſily paſt for her Ladyſhip, being alſo dreſs'd in the Counteſs's Cloaths. Sir Anthony Welden aſſures us he had this Information from Sir W. B. the very Gentleman who handed Mrs. Finit into the Place of Inſpection. I will not remember what Welden ſays of Biſhop Neil's Speech concerning the Proof of the Impotency in the Earl, and the Ability in the Counteſs, only that the Concluſion was; Ariſtotle's Problems was a modeſt Diſcourſe to the Biſhop's, who appear'd to be better ſtudy'd in that than in Divinity. Dr. Bilſon Biſhop of Wincheſter, was ſo zealous for the Divorce and the Nullity of the Earl of Eſſex's Marriage, on account of his Impotency, that when afterwards King James knighted his Son, he was generally call'd Sir Nullity Bilſon. A. Wood aſſures us, that this Prelate was as reverend a one as ever England bred, and a great Upholder of the Church. And Echard ſays of Biſhop Neile, That for his Merits he paſt thro' all Degrees and Orders of the Church; which ſhews us plainly enough, that theſe Gentlemen do not put Piety and Purity in their Scale of Merit, with the ſame Weight as Bigotry and falſe Zeal. The Archbiſhop of Canterbury refus'd to be concern'd in this Bawdy Buſineſs, for which he ever after liv'd in Diſgrace, excluded from the Council Table, and the Favour of the King on Earth, tho' he was favour'd by the King of Kings. His Majeſty took upon him to convince Abbot, in a Treatiſe dedicated to the Unbelieving Thomas. The Biſhop of London wou'd not agree to the Divorce, and told Biſhop Overal, He ſhou'd not have been ſo earneſt againſt it, but that he was perſuaded in his Conſcience the Counteſs's Witneſſes ſwore falſly. The only Colour of Juſtice from the Beginning of it to the End, is, That the Earl himſelf, to get rid of ſo horrid a Miſchief, acknowledg'd he had attempted to enjoy her many Times, but never did; which was imputed to her wicked Practices upon him, and her ſhunning his Embraces when ſhe believ'd he was capable of Enjoyment. The Earl was oblig'd by the Biſhops modeſt Decree, to pay back the Counteſs's Portion, being 5000 Pounds, which he cou'd not have done without ſelling his Lands, had he not been help'd by his Grandmother the Counteſs of Leiceſter. That his Majeſty was a Well-wiſher to the Divorce, and Car's intended Marriage with the Counteſs of Eſſex, appears by his heaping more Honours and Riches upon him; for now it was that he made him Earl of Somerſet, and giving her to him at the Solemnization of their Nuptials in Preſence of the Queen, and a great Confluence of Biſhops. The Pomp and Expence of this Wedding, for which the ſober Part of the Kingdom had an Abhorrence, were equal to thoſe of the Princeſs Elizabeth's; the Revellings, Maskings and profuſe Entertain-

Poiſon'd.

*A.D.*1613. ments laſting as long; and to the Shame of the City, the new marry'd Couple, whom the Archdeacon very gallantly calls the Happy Pair, were invited to a Feaſt at Merchant-Taylors-Hall, to which they rode as triumphantly, as if their Triumph had not been over Religion and Virtue, Modeſty and Chaſtity.

At the ſame Time that King James had ſo great a Hand in this odious Marriage, he buſy'd himſelf alſo in the religious Controverſy now carrying on with Warmth in Holland between the Arminians and their Opponents. Le Clerc tells us, He alter'd his Mind ſtrangely with Reſpect to the Arminians, depending entirely on ſuch Informations as were given him, which were very various, and a wiſe Man wou'd therefore not have depended upon them entirely.

A.D 1614. As ſoon as Sir Thomas Overbury heard the before-mention'd Marriage was to be to-morrow, he told the Meſſenger, You had almoſt as good have ſaid, I muſt die to-morrow, for I am ſure now not to live long. He added to this ſome Reproaches againſt Somerſet for uſing him ſo ill, and endeavour'd afterwards by Letter to prevail with him to perform his Promiſe, and procure his Deliverance, which the Earl gave him Hopes of; and Sir Thomas was ſo well pleas'd with it, that he began to recover Strength, and as Comfort increas'd ſo did his Health. Weſton applying to Mrs. Turner for more Pay, ſhe told him, He muſt do his Buſineſs firſt, and he ſhou'd then want nothing; upon which he applies to a certain Apothecary, whom he hir'd to give Sir Thomas Poiſon in a Cliſter, which work'd as thoſe Ruffians wou'd have had it, throwing Overbury into a languiſhing Diſeaſe, with racking Pains in his Bowels, of which he dy'd in September; and Weſton gave the Apothecary Money to go beyond Sea, himſelf being amply rewarded by the Counteſs. To murder Sir Thomas's Fame, as they had murder'd his Perſon, the Earl of Northampton gave out he dy'd of the venereal Diſeaſe, tho' the Sores and Ulcers that appear'd on his Body, were the Effects of the poiſonous Meats they had fed him with. Northampton did not long ſurvive this Villany, and one may form a Character of him, by his being a Party in this Murder, by his mocking God and the World in profeſſing the Proteſtant Religion, and yet correſponding with the Court of Rome, by the groſs Flattery with which he abus'd the good Will of the King, and by ſo many other immoral Acts, that 'tis a wonder the reverend Hiſtorian cries him up for his capacious Mind. Sir Anthony Welden, who knew him intimately, ſays, He was no wiſe Man; yet the wiſeſt of our Kings made him his prime Miniſter. Prince Henry was ſo irritated againſt him and his Couſin Suffolk, that he often ſaid, If ever he were King, he wou'd not leave one of the Family in a better Condition than that of a Footman. Northampton with all his Faults, was choſen by the Univerſity of Cambridge to be their Chancellor, in which Office he was ſucceeded by the Earl of Suffolk; that learned Body having too great Value for his Majeſty's Judgment to doubt the Qualifications of any Man whom the King delighted to honour.

The riotous Expences, and prodigal Bounty of the Court, exhauſted the vaſt Sums which were illegally rais'd by Monopolies, Benevolences, raiſing the Value of Gold and Silver Coin Two Shillings in the Pound, and a hundred Schemes of Projectors; all which being ſtill too little to ſupply that Profuſion, a Parliament was ſummon'd, the Court Flatterers having aſſur'd the King they had Intereſt enough in the Counties to get ſuch Members choſen, as wou'd do the Buſineſs for which he wanted them; inſtead of which, the Counties, Cities, and Boroughs, return'd thoſe Gentlemen who were moſt likely to do the Buſineſs for which the Country wanted them. The Courtiers ſhew'd their Wiſdom, by ſuffering Harſnet Biſhop of Chicheſter to put the Parliament out of *A.D.*1614. Humour, by a Sermon he preach'd, preſſing the Duty of rendring to Cæſar, as if what was paid to the King, was his Due before it was given by Parliament; and Biſhop Neile mended the Matter much, by ſpeaking deſpitefully of a leading Member of the Houſe of Commons, for his Moderation and Charity to Proteſtant Diſſenters, whom the Superſtition and Rage of ſuch Prelates had driven not only out of the Church, but out of the Kingdom; which was ſo deſtructive to the Peace and Trade of the Nation, that the Biſhops were forc'd to get a Reſtraint put upon Peoples removing beyond Sea. Thus they wou'd not let them enjoy Peace at home, nor give them Liberty to ſeek it abroad. Indeed they were allow'd afterwards to tranſport themſelves to New-England, and the malicious Proceedings of the furious Biſhops, did not hinder the Eſtabliſhment of that Colony. There's no need of reflecting to gather from theſe Events who were the Men to whom we are to impute all the Diſcontents and Murmurs which now diſturb'd, and afterwards inflam'd the Kingdom. The Parliament complain'd of the King's waſting the Publick Treaſure, eſpecially among the Scots; Somerſet, beſides Money, having had to the Value of 100000 Pounds in Crown-Lands; and deſir'd his Majeſty to ſtem the Current of the future Acceſs of that Nation to his Preſence and Bounty. They alſo enquir'd into the Cauſes of the unexpected Increaſe of Popiſh Recuſants ſince the Gunpowder-Plot; the Deteſtation of which they thought ſhou'd have utterly extinguiſh'd the whole Party, and this they found was owing to his Majeſty's admitting Popiſh Lords into his Council. This is the Prince of whom Echard ſays, He acted very laudably and with great Reputation in Reſpect to the eſtabliſh'd Church. The Parliament complain'd of the ſilencing of many diligent and watchful Miniſters; moſt laudably done indeed. We read in Sir Edward Peyton, how laudable his Actions were in reſpect to Religion, and Virtue; "Strictneſs of Life, "which our Saviour requires, was imputed a Diſ- "grace, and the vaineſt counted the wiſeſt; ſo "that it was difficult to hear profitable Sermons. "Preachers were fitter for a Stage than a Pulpit. "A Puritan was ſtil'd a Devil. Thus began Good- "neſs to dwindle, and Vice to ſpread far and near." The Parliament made Complaint of ſeveral Treaties for the Marriage of the deceas'd Prince Henry, and the preſent Prince Charles, with the Daughters of Popiſh Princes, all which diſhearten'd the Proteſtant, and encourag'd the Recuſant. The remonſtrating theſe and other Miſcarriages, to which the King and his Council had no other Anſwer, than the Leſſons of Neile, Harſnet, and ſuch like Prelates; and the Parliament's Backwardneſs to part with their Money, ſo diſguſted his Majeſty, that he reſolv'd to part with them, and a Diſſolution ſoon follow'd, to the great Grief of the People, which was heigthen'd by the arbitrary Proceedings againſt the chief Patriots in the Houſe of Commons, whom the Archdeacon calls the tumultuous Members, many of whom were thrown into Priſon. Sir Thomas Wentworth, Sir Henry Yelverton, Sir John Savile, Serjeant Glanvile, and Mr. Noy, were popular Members in this King's Reign, and not only frown'd upon but impriſon'd. They were all bought off in the next, and thoſe diſintereſted Patriots who were above Corruption, as Mr. Selden, Sir John Elliot, and others, continu'd their Oppoſition to the Male-Adminiſtration till King Charles the Firſt left the Parliament, and rais'd an Army to maintain it.

This King's Son, Charles the First, follow'd his Father's Example and Leſſons; for after King James's Death, there was found in his Cabinet at Theobalds, Inſtructions to his Son to quit himſelf by Degrees of all Parliaments, as too bad Copartners in the Government with their Kings. A noble Lord talking once of the Deſign the Stuart Family had to ſubvert our happy Conſtitution, which was firſt form'd by this King James, obſerv'd with Indignation, that the Luſt of Power was monſtrous in him, who was capable of no other Ambition than that of deſtroying the Rights and Liberties of his Subjects. Charles I. violated the Privileges of Parliament in or after every Seſſion. Like his Father too he had Recourſe to odious Methods of extorting Money from the People. King James compell'd them now to pay a Benevolence, and thoſe that refus'd to pay, were to have their Names return'd to the Council, who prick'd them for Sheriffs, or ſent them for Soldiers, or otherwiſe oppreſs'd them, as a Puniſhment for their Refractorineſs, in not obeying his Majeſty's Will and Pleaſure, as their Fathers obey'd an Act of Parliament. The Benevolence ſucceeded ſo ill, that it brought in no more than 52909 Pounds; for, ſays Wilſon, the moſt knowing Men ſupported their Neighbours tottering Reſolutions, with aſſuring them that thoſe Kinds of raiſing Money were againſt Law, Reaſon, and Religion.

This Summer the King of Denmark re-viſited his Siſter the Queen of England, and he was doubtleſs the more welcome for his delighting ſo much in Sporting and Drinking, which he did to Exceſs. He landed at Yarmouth with about forty Lords and Gentlemen in his Train, and came to Somerſet-Houſe, the Queen's Palace, before ſhe heard of his Arrival in England.

King of Denmark in Engl.

Now was reviv'd the diſſolute Way of Life which gave great Scandal to religious and virtuous Perſons. When this King viſited King James, his Brother-in-law ſome Years before, Sir Edward Peyton aſſures us the two Monarchs were ſo drunk at Theobalds, that the Briton was carry'd off in the Arms of his Courtiers, and the Dane was very rude with the Counteſs of Nottingham. King James was apt to be intoxicated with Wine, the ſtrongeſt Greek Wines being moſt grateful to him. Coke tells us, when he was a hunting, he was attended by a ſpecial Officer, who was always at hand to fill him a Cup of Wine, ſo ſtrong that a ſmall Portion of it got up into Coke's Father's Head, and ſpoil'd his Sport. It is well known that the King of Denmark gave Walleſtein, the Emperor's General, many Advantages in the German War, by his Drunkenneſs and Negligence. How the Time muſt be ſpent by two ſuch Princes, who did not meet often, one may eaſily imagine: But ſuch Happineſs, ſays the reverend Hiſtorian, is rare among Kings: For notwithſtanding all this Luxury, notwithſtanding King James's prophane Swearing even in his uſual Converſation, whereby he became contemptible, and his Example debauch'd the Manners of the Engliſh Nation; yet he was inſpir'd with the Holy Spirit, in his Zeal for Epiſcopacy, if we may believe Archbiſhop Whitgift. There is a pleaſant Story in Peyton, which runs thus in his own, not very elegant, Words: "Give me leave to repeat, that "this King of Denmark ordinarily wou'd be drunk, "and once when he was ſo, he bad Sir John Pooly, "then his Servant, ask what he wou'd of him to "the Value of half his Kingdom, and he ſhould "have it. Sir John finding his Maſter ſo beaſtly "out of Tune, demanded a great Pair of Stags "Horns, for which, when the King recover'd his "Senſes, he gave him 3000 Dollars." A Writer of the ſame Kidney with the Archdeacon, owns he often had his Load; and tho' he ſtaid here but a Fortnight, there were more rioting and revelling during that ſhort Stay in the Court of England, than had been known in ſo little time ſince the Reign of Canute. A rare Happineſs, of which the Puritans were not ſenſible. Coke writes, "As King James gave himſelf up to Pleaſure, ſo he did to "Favourites and Flatterers, and ſcarce heard any "Thing without the Prelude of Sacred, Peaceful, Wiſe, Moſt Learned, &c. Theſe made him careleſs both of his domeſtick and foreign Affairs, "the Thoughts of which diſturb'd his Pleaſures; "and if at any time he was thoughtful or penſive, his Favourites made it their Buſineſs to mimick or ridicule thoſe Things, eſpecially the Puritans, whom the King hated; and for that Hatred the Eccleſiaſticks dawb their Hiſtories with ſo much groſs Paint, repreſenting him as the moſt ſage and moſt orthodox Prince in the World. 'Tis true, his Majeſty did affect much to ſhew his Skill in Divinity. No Dutch Theologue cou'd have more of the Cant, nor with more Zeal maintain any Doctrine he eſpous'd. We have ſeen how he concern'd himſelf in the Affair of Vorſtius; but his Prejudice againſt him and his Party did not laſt long. The moſt rigid of the Biſhops being profeſs'd Arminians, he was prevail'd with to write a Letter to the States of Holland, to tolerate the Remonſtrants, who were the Arminian Party. The Contra-Remonſtrants ſent him a Memorial, to induce him to abandon the oppoſite Intereſt; but the King taking Offence at ſome ſtrong Expreſſions in it, ſent a Copy of it to the States, who diſpatch'd the famous Grotius to give his Majeſty fuller Information of what concern'd this Controverſy. He was favourably receiv'd by the King and many Biſhops, but Dr. Abbot Archbiſhop of Canterbury, gave him as much Oppoſition as he cou'd, and his Negotiation produc'd no other Effect than a Confirmation of his Majeſty's former Exhortation to the States, to forbid further Preaching or Writing upon the controverted Points, which were to be determin'd by a Synod.

The moſt conſiderable foreign Tranſactions this Year relating to King James, was his Envoy's aſſiſting at the Conference at Santheim in Germany, for accommodating Matters between the Elector of Brandenburg and Duke of Newburg about the Succeſſion of Cleves and Juliers; and his Ambaſſador Carlton's Credit with the Republick of Venice, where, at the Requeſt of Emanuel Duke of Savoy, he procur'd Audience for that Duke's Miniſter Piſcina, which the Senate had till then refus'd.

The Earl of Suffolk being made Lord-Treaſurer on the Death of Salisbury, the Earl of Somerſet ſucceeded Suffolk as Lord-Chamberlain, and he and his Father-in-law engroſs'd the King almoſt wholly to them, inſomuch that the Queen herſelf ſeem'd to have the leaſt Share of him. Somerſet rul'd without a Rival, and no body pretended to Favour at Court but by his Means, and in what Proportion and what Manner he pleas'd. Having reſign'd his Office of Secretary of State, Sir Ralph Winwood, King James's Ambaſſador in Holland, was recall'd and preferr'd to it, Car ſtill aſſuming the Management of it as much as if he was ſtill Secretary. Winwood was a Man of Parts, and too much Spirit to brook the Slavery Somerſet wou'd have impos'd upon him; and the Queen obſerving the Secretary's Diſcontent at Car's Conduct, did what ſhe cou'd to increaſe it. Winwood acquainted her Majeſty with the Favourite's Miſcarriages and Weakneſſes, and did not give the beſt Turn to his Words or Actions. This private Correſpondence grew at laſt into a Combination, and the Archbiſhop of Canterbury, hoping Affairs cou'd not be worſe by a Change, enter'd into it with a Reſolution to have Somerſet outed, and a new Favourite put in his Place; for King James cou'd no more be without a Minion, than his Grandſon King Charles cou'd be without a Miſtreſs.

It

*A.D.*1615. It continu'd to be whiſper'd about every where, that Prince Henry was poiſon'd by Somerſet, which coming to the Queen's Ear, who was enough provok'd againſt him before, by his alienating the King's Affections from her, and engroſſing them to himſelf, ſhe openly encourag'd Winwood and other Courtiers to talk freely againſt him, in which they were not ſparing, eſpecially when they ſaw the King began to caſt a friendly Eye on Mr. George Villiers, a young Gentleman newly come to Court from his Travels. He was a younger Son of Sir George Villiers of Leiceſterſhire, by his ſecond Wife Mary Beaumont, a Woman of a mean Family, according to Sir Anthony Welden; and Coke tells us, She was entertain'd in Sir George Villiers's Family as a Cook-Maid, but her ragged Habit cou'd not ſhade the beautiful and excellent Frame of her Perſon, which Sir George taking notice of, prevail'd with his Lady to remove her out of the Kitchen into her Chamber. The Earl of Clarendon, or whoever wrote the Hiſtory which has his Name to it, makes Villiers the eldeſt Son of Sir George, by Mary Beaumont; which is not true, for ſhe had an elder Son John Viſcount Purbeck, Son of the ſame Mary. There is ſomething very whimſical in the Vanity of this Sett of Men; they will not only be the wiſeſt, the braveſt, the handſomeſt, but they will alſo be the eldeſt, as Buckingham is made to do Honour to the Friend of Laud.

P. 80.

I am ſenſible that to enter into the Particulars of a private Man's Life, is too biographical for a general Hiſtory, but there is no avoiding it in ſuch a Reign as this, where the greateſt Events, ſuch as they are, turn upon the Paſſions and Vices of Minions and Favourites. Sir George Villiers abovemention'd, was of an antient Family, but having ſettled his Eſtate in Jointure on his firſt Wife and their Iſſue, there was ſo little left for his Wife Beaumont and her Children, that George Villiers their Son had but an Allowance of 50, ſome ſay 30 Pounds a Year, even after he came to Court. He was very handſome, and had the Glittering of a French Education, having liv'd ſome Time at Paris. But his higheſt Ambition, when he made his firſt Appearance at Court, was to marry the Daughter of Sir Roger Aſton, who had been King James's Barber in Scotland; and if he cou'd but have made her a Settlement of 80 Pounds a Year, he might have had her to the Ruin of his future Fortune: For before the Marriage was concluded, it was obſerv'd, that the King look'd favourably upon him, which being a Promiſe of his growing Greatneſs, he gave over all Thoughts of the Match, and wedded himſelf to the Favour of his Maſter. There was no body more inſtrumental in his Advancement, than good Archbiſhop Abbot, who had an Averſion to Somerſet for his Marriage with the Counteſs of Eſſex, and a vicious Courſe of Life. The Archbiſhop being inform'd of the Dawn of Favour which ſhone upon Villiers, and taking him to be of an Age and Diſpoſition fit to receive ſuch Impreſſions as the Queen ſhou'd give him, he propos'd to her the recommending him to the King, as a Means to ſet aſide Somerſet, who had behav'd very inſolently towards her Majeſty. The King affected to have the Queen believe that her Recommendation was the greateſt Merit his Favourites cou'd have, which he pretended to give a Colour to his Fondneſs of them, and that ſhe might not complain of his Affection to Perſons whom he lov'd for her ſake. Her Majeſty ſaw thro' this thin Diſguiſe, and had been ſo ill us'd by Minions, that it was a long time before the Archbiſhop cou'd prevail with her to ſpeak in behalf of Villiers. At laſt ſhe conſented, but told his Grace, You will live to repent it, for I ſee ſomething in this young Man, that will render him more intolerable, if he becomes a Favourite, than any of his Predeceſſors. Somerſet's Pride and Avarice made the Archbiſhop conclude, that let the Change be as bad as it wou'd, it muſt be for the better; and he took upon him to inſtruct Villiers himſelf, as to his Conduct towards the King and Queen. The young Gentleman learnt his Leſſons ſo perfectly, that he repeated them to Archbiſhop Abbot, and promis'd to obſerve them. *A.D.*1615.

Sir A. W. p. 90.

In the Beginning of his Fortune he was affable and courteous, and ſeem'd to court all Men as they courted him. He obtain'd Suits of the King gratis, for which Somerſet made all Suitors pay extremely; and did good Offices for all thoſe from whom he had receiv'd any, which were not a few. The Proſpect of his Riſe having excited ſeveral Perſons of Rank to be aſſiſting towards it; ſome in ſo low a degree as to contribute to his Dreſs, which was equally rich and gorgeous, his Majeſty's Eye being attracted by Shew much more than his Judgment was by Genius. Sir A. W. ſays, one ſent to his Mercer and Taylor to put good Cloaths on him; another to his Sempſtreſs for curious Linnen; others took upon them to be his Bravos, and all Hands help'd to piece up the new Minion. The King's firſt gracious Look was follow'd with a Preſent of 1000*l.* and the Place of Cupbearer, that he might be near in Attendance. Somerſet took the alarm, and did his utmoſt to give a Check to the Growth of this riſing Favourite, and gave his Rival great Advantages by his Preſumption, and an Imagination that the King wou'd not, nay durſt not countenance that Rivalſhip, if he appear'd to reſent it. Whatever Reaſon there was for it is uncertain; but ſure it is that his Majeſty was deſirous that Villiers ſhou'd ſeem to owe his good Fortunes as well to Somerſet as to the Queen; and order'd Sir Humphry May to let Car know Sir George Villiers, newly knighted, wou'd deſire his Protection; which if he granted, it wou'd do himſelf a Pleaſure. Sir George waited on Somerſet half an Hour after, and paid him this Compliment: My Lord, I deſire to be your Servant and Creature, and to take my Court Preferment under your Favour, aſſuring your Lordſhip you ſhall find me as faithful a Servant to you as ever did ſerve you. The Earl turn'd quick upon him with this ſhort Anſwer, I will have none of your Service, and you ſhall have none of my Favour. I will if I can break your Neck, and of that be confident. This Defiance put Villiers more on his Guard, and he and his Friends never reſted till they had remov'd Somerſet from the King's Preſence for ever; and they met with an Opportunity to do it much ſooner than they expected. *A.D.*1615.

Somerſet's Fall.

Secretary Winwood in Diſguſt at Somerſet's engroſſing the Powers and Benefits of his Office, and leaving him an empty Name only, having receiv'd ſome Intimation of Overbury's being poiſon'd, he never left ſearching into that dark Conſpiracy till it came to Light, and diſcover'd it to the King. It is ſaid, Sir Ralph Winwood receiv'd the firſt Information of this wicked Buſineſs from the Archbiſhop of Canterbury, who detected it by ſome Papers found in a Trunk, which was brought to him by a Servant of Overbury's. It is alſo ſaid, that one of his Servants petition'd the Lord Chief Juſtice Coke to examine Weſton as to what he knew of his Maſter's Death, which had been conceal'd near two Years. The Apothecary who fled beyond Sea being ill paid, confeſs'd that a poiſon'd Cliſter had been given Overbury; and his Confeſſion being deliver'd to Winwood, he ſhew'd it to the King; which was ſo ſtrong a Confirmation of the other Diſcoveries, that his Majeſty cou'd not refuſe giving the Earl up to Juſtice; tho' to prevent its having Effect againſt him, the King had granted him a Pardon ſo full, that had he committed a hundred Murders it wou'd have clear'd him. The Clauſe was taken by Sir Robert Cotton out of a Pardon granted by the Pope to Cardinal Wolſey to this Purport: That the King out of his mere Motion and ſpecial Favour did pardon all, and all

A.D.1615. all manner of Treaſons, Miſpriſions of Treaſons, Murders, Felonies and Outrages whatſoever by the ſaid Robert Earl of Somerſet committed, or hereafter to be committed: As the Romiſh Bulls pardon all Sins paſt, preſent, and to come. The ſtrongeſt Terms were us'd to make it the more firm; and when it was engroſs'd the Earl carry'd it to the King, who ſign'd it; but the Lord Chancellor Elleſmer refus'd to affix the Great Seal to it; and gave his Majeſty ſuch Reaſons for it as ſatisfy'd him, and contributed much to the Diſgrace of Somerſet, who retir'd penſive to Whitehall in diſmal Apprehenſion of the Diſcovery of Overbury's Murder, which he juſtly ſuppos'd was the Occaſion of the Lord Chancellor's Scruples about paſſing his Pardon. By Virtue of his own Warrant as Privy-Counſellor, all Trunks, Cheſts, Boxes, Studies, and every Place where he ſuſpected any Letters might be depoſited which concern'd the Conſpiracy, were diligently ſearch'd, that they might be made away with: But ſome Papers eſcap'd the Search, and fell into thoſe Hands that knew how to make the beſt Uſe of them. The King being inform'd of the Murder by Secretary Winwood, gave Orders to the Lord Chief Juſtice Coke to proſecute the Matter; and as his Cuſtom was when any troubleſome Affair happen'd, went himſelf into the Country to be out of the Noiſe of it; which however follow'd him where-ever he went. He ſent for all the Judges to Theobalds; and in the midſt of a Circle of Court Lords and Gentlemen kneeled down, and ſpoke to this Effect:

Sir A. W. p. 99. My Lords the Judges, It is lately come to my hearing, that you have now in Examination a Buſineſs of poiſoning. Lord, in what a moſt miſerable Condition ſhall this Kingdom be, if our Tables ſhou'd become ſuch a Snare, as none wou'd eat without Danger of Life, and that Italian Cuſtom ſhou'd be introduc'd amongſt us; therefore I charge you, my Lords, as you will anſwer it at the great and dreadful Day of Judgment, that you examine it ſtrictly without Favour, Affection, or Partiality. And if you ſhall ſpare any of this Crime, God's Curſe light on you and your Poſterity: And if I ſpare any that are found guilty, God's Curſe light on me and my Poſterity.

K. James curſes himſelf and Poſterity, if he pardon'd the Murderers of Overbury.

How well this agrees with theſe Words in the Pardon, which he ſome time after granted to the Counteſs of Somerſet, who was the greateſt Criminal: We have of our ſpecial Grace and mere Motion pardon'd, remitted, and remiſ'd; and by theſe Preſents for our ſelves, our Heirs, and Succeſſors, do pardon, remiſs, and releaſe Frances Carre late Counteſs of Somerſet, the Slaughter, Killing, Poiſoning, Bewitching, Death, Felony, and felonious Murther of Sir Thomas Overbury. The Effect of his Majeſty's moſt dreadful Imprecation fell heavy on the Princeſs Elizabeth Queen of Bohemia, and her royal Family, as was then particularly obſerv'd. How viſible it was in the Fate of King Charles the Firſt her Brother and his Offſpring, needs no farther Obſervation; and it is impoſſible to read this Speech and Execration without trembling, whatever Archbiſhop Whitgift and Archdeacon Echard have been pleas'd to ſay of King James's Piety. From Theobalds his Majeſty went to Royſton accompany'd with Somerſet, who took his Leave of him there, and never with more ſeeming Affection than at this time. When he kiſs'd his Majeſty's Hand, the King hung about his Neck, ſaying, For God's ſake when ſhall I ſee thee again. On my Soul, I ſhall neither eat nor ſleep till you come. Then lolling about his Neck he ſaid, For God's ſake give thy Lady this Kiſs for me; which he repeated at the Stairs-head, at the Middle of the Stairs, and at the Stairs-foot. But the Earl was ſcarce in the Coach, when his Majeſty turn'd about and cry'd, I ſhall never ſee his Face more. What a Comedy is this? ſays Vaſſor. Good God! Are Princes, whoſe high Birth and Station ought to inſpire them with noble and ſincere Sentiments; I ſay, Are Princes capable of ſuch a Baſeneſs; nay, to give it its right Name, of ſo black a Perfidiouſneſs!

Sir A. W. p. 102.

His Diſſimulation.

A.D.1615.

The firſt who was try'd for the Death of Overbury was Richard Weſton, who was convicted, condemn'd, and executed; as was alſo Mrs. Turner. Sir Jervas Elways the Lieutenant's Turn was next. At his Trial a Letter was produc'd written by the Earl of Northampton to Somerſet, ſo full of Bawdry, that the Lord Chief Juſtice cou'd not read it. Elways being convicted and condemn'd, was hang'd on Tower-hill. James Frankley was for the ſame Crime executed at Tyburn. But Sir Thomas Munſon's Trial was put off, after he had been arraign'd at Guildhall.

Overbury's Murderers puniſh'd.

A.D.1616. In April the next Year, the Earl of Somerſet and his Counteſs were brought to their Trial. The Counteſs pleaded guilty, but the Earl was try'd by his Peers, convicted, and both of them condemn'd. The great Eſtate he had heap'd up by the King's Prodigality and his own Parſimony was given to ſome of the Courtiers. The Earl and Counteſs liv'd many Years after. The latter dy'd miſerably, and the Charms of her Perſon were ſo entirely loſt, that at her Death it was as loathſome as it had been bewitching in the Bloom of her Youth. They had one Daughter, who marry'd the Earl, afterwards Duke of Bedford. A Lady as diſtinguiſh'd by her Virtue as her Rank; and ſuch Care was taken to conceal from her the odious Character of her Mother, that ſhe had heard nothing of this Story till a Year or two before ſhe dy'd; when a Hiſtory of thoſe Times happening in her way, ſhe read what concern'd the Counteſs of Eſſex's Divorce; upon which ſhe exclaim'd againſt the Malice and Falſhood of the Author, and was perſuaded by the Lady who gave me this Information, that no other Writer had ever mention'd it; and it was a Lye invented out of Envy to the Earl of Somerſet's Favour and Fortune. MS.

Sir A. W. p. 22.

The Whiſper of Prince Henry's being poiſon'd was reviv'd upon the Trial of Somerſet, and continu'd as long as this King liv'd; and his giving Car 4000*l.* a Year after he was condemn'd, and keeping Correſpondence with him to his dying Day, was not the way to put a ſtop to it.

Vaſſor. p. 14.

Tho' King James wou'd not aſſiſt the Prince of Conde and the French Proteſtants, who offer'd in ſuch Caſe to prevent the double Marriage between France and Spain; yet the Engliſh Ambaſſador at Venice propos'd a League between his Maſter and that Republick againſt the Houſe of Auſtria: But the Senate, ſays Vaſſor, underſtood very well the Character of King James, and thank'd him with as much Civility as poſſible, tho' they cou'd not rely on the Promiſes of a Prince, who cou'd patiently ſuffer the Archdukes of the Netherlands, in Sight of England, to take Poſſeſſion of the Dutchies of Cleves and Juliers, in wrong to the Elector of Brandenburgh, a Proteſtant Ally. Doubtleſs this Negotiation wou'd have been mention'd by Echard, as an illuſtrious Inſtance of his Majeſty's Wiſdom, had it come to his Knowledge. The King undertook the Affair of an Union among Proteſtants of all Nations, and wrote to the Reform'd Churches of France aſſembled at Tonneins. He alſo invited that Eminent Divine Monſieur Du Moulin to his Court, where he was well receiv'd for about three Months, but the Project came to nothing; tho' according to Vaſſor, it was more becoming his Royal Dignity than to ſcuffle with Perron and Bellarmine. He adds, 'Tis true King James very ſeldom took the right Side, or elſe ſlightly forſook it whenever he had taken it; and inſtead of applying himſelf to pacify the Troubles in the United Provinces, he increas'd them out of a Deſign to be reveng'd of Barneveldt, whom he hated probably for over-reaching him in the Bargain for the Cautionary Towns. Indeed he hardly ever did any thing conſiderable for a Proteſtant or publick Intereſt abroad; and when Bonnivet the Envoy from the French Proteſtants

*A.D.*1616. deſir'd his Aſſiſtance as Queen Elizabeth was wont to aſſiſt them, he left them to the Reſentment and Power of the French King; ſaying, All I can do for the Prince of Conde is to endeavour to reconcile him to the King his near Kinſman. Upon which Vaſſor reaſons thus juſtly: Shou'd he not in good Politicks have threaten'd France, that the Proteſtant States wou'd not care much to cultivate her Alliance, if ſhe enter'd into too ſtrict Ties with Spain their greateſt Enemy. He adds, His Britannick Majeſty was ſo ignorant of his Intereſt, that he was decoy'd with Hopes of marrying his Son to the Infanta. We ſee by theſe wiſe Steps what Foundation there is for Echard and other Eccleſiaſtical Hiſtorians to extol the Wiſdom of this Reign, and place a ſecond Solomon on the Britiſh Throne. The King by Sir Thomas Edmunds his Ambaſſador offer'd his Mediation to accommodate Matters between Lewis the XIIIth and the Prince of Conde; but the French Miniſters wou'd not ſuffer Edmunds to ſign the Treaty. This Slur on his Majeſty's Mediation was not ſo inglorious to him, as his delivering up the before-mention'd Cautionary Towns, which Le Clerc places ſome Years before. Thoſe Cities, Brill, Fluſhing and Rammekins are look'd upon as the Keys to the three famous Rivers, the Maeſe, the Scheld, and the Rhine; and were put into the Hands of the Engliſh for the Money Q. Elizabeth lent the States, which with the Intereſt amounted to ſome Millions. Barneveldt, one of the moſt able Miniſters of that Age, being well inform'd of the low Eſtate of King James's Exchequer, occaſion'd by his prodigal Bounty and extravagant Expences, and of his Favourite's Readineſs to take Money, thought the Juncture proper for the States to recover thoſe Towns at a cheaper Rate than the Payment of what they ow'd upon them. Accordingly he ſet himſelf at the Head of a pompous Embaſſy from Holland, and beſtow'd his Flattery and Bribes ſo well, that he obtain'd Reſtitution of the three Cities for a tenth Part of what was due to the Crown of England. Upon
P. 233. which Vaſſor writes thus: The Engliſh loudly cry'd out againſt their weak and covetous King, who had ſully'd his own Reputation, as well as diſparag'd the whole Nation, by his ſo ſhameful a Treaty. They publickly reproach'd him for having been ſo ſcandalouſly put upon by the Dutch, or betray'd by his Favourites and Miniſters. Mr. Echard tells us, he freed himſelf from thoſe Towns to prevent Propoſitions from Spain, where he was beginning a Treaty by his Ambaſſador Sir John Digby, to marry his Son Charles Prince of Wales to the Infanta; which Treaty tended viſibly to the weakning of the Proteſtant Intereſt, and expos'd the King's Honour to the Inſolence and Caprice of the Spaniſh Miniſters. The new Favourite roſe ſo faſt, that the People had hardly time to remember the Honours that were conferr'd upon him. Not long after he was knighted, the King created him Baron Whaddon, Viſcount Villiers, and made him Maſter of the Horſe to the Queen; then Gentleman of his Bedchamber, Privy-Counſellor, and Knight of the Garter. He was ſoon after created Earl of Buckingham, and made Juſtice in Eyre, Maſter of the King's Bench-Office, Steward of Weſtminſter, Conſtable of Windſor Caſtle, and Lord High Admiral of England. The Lord Chancellor Elleſmer having incurr'd his Diſpleaſure, the Seals were taken
Sir A. W. p. 125. from him; and to mortify him the more, Sir Francis Bacon his intended Succeſſor, whom the Lord Chancellor hated, was ſent to demand them of him; but the old Chancellor refus'd to deliver the Seals to him, and ſent them to the King by a Servant of his own. Sir Edward Coke was diſcharg'd
Coke, 91. from his Office of Lord Chief Juſtice, and Sir Henry Montagu put in his room. Sir Edward Coke had highly diſguſted the Court and the rigid Churchmen, by his oppoſing Archbiſhop Bancroft's Articles againſt granting Prohibitions at Common Law; as alſo by oppoſing the Favourite Buckingham in the Diſpoſal of a Law Patent. He might have been reſtor'd, if he wou'd have given a Bribe; but he anſwer'd, A Judge ought not to take one, nor give one. The Earl of Suffolk, Lord Treaſurer, having loſt his main Supporter the Earl of Somerſet, ſtood in a very tottering Condition, till he fell under a Fine of 30000*l.* for his and his Lady's Miſdemeanors. Suffolk's White Staff was given firſt to Sir Henry Montagu, and then to Sir Lionel Cranfield, afterwards Earl of Middleſex: A Man of ſo mean Birth, that, to uſe Welden's Words, none but a poor-ſpirited Nobility wou'd have endur'd his perching on that high Tree of Honour. Sir John Bennet, Judge of the Prerogative Court, was now diſcharg'd for Bribery, and Sir William Byrde put in his Place. Sir Henry Yelverton, Attorney-General, was alſo remov'd for adding ſome Clauſes to the Charter of London, and Sir Thomas Coventry made Attorney in his room. His Majeſty came in Perſon into the Court of Star-Chamber, and made a Speech like a Sermon, in which are theſe moſt eloquent Expreſſions: Another Sort Wilſon, are Gentlemen of great Worth in their own Conceit, 101. and cannot be content with the preſent Form of Government, but muſt have a Kind of Liberty in the People, and muſt be gracious Lords and Redeemers of their Liberty; and in every Cauſe that concerns Prerogative give a Snatch againſt Monarchy, thro' their Puritanical Itching after Popularity. The next Words ſhew us what it was that gave the King ſuch Offence. Some of them have ſhew'd themſelves too bold of late in the Lower Houſe of Parliament. We ſee here that King James made a Jeſt of the People's Liberty, and what Opinion he had of the Purity of the Reform'd Religion, appears by his comparing it to the Itch. 'Tis true, he intimates that the Piety and Virtue of the Puritans had made them popular; and it was therefore an Exceſs of Wiſdom in him to frown upon and oppreſs them in favour of bigotted Eccleſiaſticks, who were hated by the People, and careſs'd by him only for advancing the Prerogative above thoſe Laws, which the Patriots in the Lower Houſe of Parliament aſſerted and endeavour'd to maintain.

About this Time dy'd the Lady Arabella Stuart, Lady Ara- firſt Couſin to the King, being the Daughter of bella dies. the Lord Charles Stuart, younger Brother to the Lord Darnley his Majeſty's Father. This Lady is the ſame who was mention'd in Raleigh's Conſpiracy; and for marrying Sir William Seymour, afterwards Marquis of Hertford, without the King's Conſent, ſhe was impriſon'd in the Tower, where ſhe liv'd many Years; and dying there about the Time that Sir Thomas Overbury's Death made the moſt Noiſe, Wilſon tells us it ſet Mens Tongues and Fears at Work. Theſe are the Halcyon Days on which the Archdeacon beſtows as many Flouriſhes as his Rhetorick cou'd furniſh him with. In theſe peaceable Times the Temple of Janus was ſhut, Halcyon Days ſhin'd round the Iſland, and the Influence of the King's peaceful Mind had almoſt an univerſal Operation. Whereas it was never pretended that this King's Counſels had the leaſt Influence on the Nations around us. Wilſon gives another Picture of theſe Times of Peace even where he ſpoke of the Halcyon Days. " Nothing now but Bravery " and Feaſting, the Parents of Debauchery and " Riot, flouriſh'd amongſt us. There is no Theme " for Hiſtory where Men ſpill more Drink than " Blood. When Plots and Contrivances for Luſt " in dark Corners are more practis'd than Stratagems of War; and when the Stages with ſilken " Pageants and Poppets that ſlacken the Sinews, " are more frequented than thoſe Theatres of Honour, where Induſtry brawns and hardens the " Arms. Peace is a great Bleſſing, if it bring not " a Curſe with it; but War is more happy in its " Effects than it, eſpecially if it takes away the King James took notice of the Want of theſe Sunday Sports in his Journey thro' Lancaſhire to Scotland, where he ſtay'd about three Months; and at his Return ſet forth his Declaration for Dancing, Leaping, Vaulting, Shooting, Maygames, Whitſun-Ales, Morrice-Dances, Maypoles on the Sabbath-Day. It is ſad to recount, ſays Dr. Fuller, what Grief and Diſtraction was occaſion'd by this Declaration in many honeſt Mens Hearts. Sanderſon, as ſagacious a Writer as ever wrote for this Profanation of the Lord's-Day, informs us, " That ſeveral Counties

" Theſe and other ſuch " Machinations of the Biſhops to maintain their " temporal Greatneſs, Eaſe and Plenty, made the " Stones in the Walls of their Palaces moulder a- " way, and come to nothing". For it is not to be conceiv'd, what Offence this Sabbath-breaking gave to the People in general, and how it ſtrengthen'd the Puritan Party, who cry'd out againſt it as a national Sin, which was threaten'd with national Vengeance. Yet the wiſe King not only commanded the Book of Sports to be publiſh'd, but affected to give an Example to his Subjects by putting the Lord's-Day to the ſame Uſe he enjoin'd by his Book; and it was obſerv'd, that his Carriages commonly ſet out on a Sunday, when he remov'd his Court from one Place to another. Thus they paſs'd thro' London ſoon after the Declaration was made publick on a Sabbath-Day in Time of Divine Service; and making a very great Clutter and Noiſe, the Lord-Mayor, Sir George Bolles, commanded them to be ſtopp'd. The Officers belonging to the Carriages return'd immediately to Court, and complain'd to the King of this Violence; upon which his Majeſty in a great Rage ſwore, he thought there had been no more Kings in England but himſelf. However, having Wilſon, 106. cool'd upon it a little, he ſign'd a Warrant to the Lord Mayor to let them paſs; which he obey'd with this Anſwer, Whilſt it was in my Power, I did my Duty; but that being taken away by a higher Power, it is my Duty to obey: Which being told *A.D.*1617. the King, he was ſo touch'd with it, that it is ſaid he ſent the Lord Mayor his Thanks for it.

Sir Ralph Winwood, the King's faithful and honeſt Servant and Secretary, dying, his Majeſty made Sir Robert Naunton and Sir George Calvert Secretaries. Sir Robert was a zealous Proteſtant, and Sir George a Papiſt of the Spaniſh Faction, which flouriſh'd as much as the King's Countenance cou'd make it; and by their Power and Influence the Papiſts not only grew bold but inſolent, making Proſelytes daily among the looſer Sort of People.

The Earl, now Marquis of Buckingham, having no Rival in the King's Favour, provided for his Family as well as himſelf, and brought a Crowd of them from their Country Cots to Court. His Mother Mary Beaumont before-mention'd, whom the Lord Compton had marry'd, was made Counteſs of Buckingham. It was her Place to teach his Kindred, as faſt as they came up, how to carry themſelves, and put on a Court Dreſs and Air. The Women Kinsfolk were marry'd to Earls, Earls eldeſt Sons, Barons or chief Gentlemen of the greateſt Eſtates; nay, the very Kitchen Wenches, according to Welden, were marry'd to Knights el- P. 135. deſt Sons. " So that King James, who naturally " in former Times hated Women, had his Lodg- " ings repleniſh'd with them, and all of the Kin- " dred, the Brethren great Earls. Little Children " did run up and down the Royal Apartments " like little Rabbit-Starters about their Burroughs. " A ſtrange Alteration! The King, who formerly " wou'd not endure his Queen and Children in " his Lodgings, had now none but Women about " him". The Marquis's Siſter was marry'd to the Earl of Denbigh; his elder Brother John Villiers was made Viſcount Purbeck; his younger, Chriſtopher Villiers, Earl of Angleſey. One of his Couſins was marry'd to Sir Anthony Aſhley; another to Sir Chriſtopher Perkins. Purbeck marry'd the Lord Chief Juſtice Coke's Daughter; and the Marquiſs himſelf took to Wife one of the faireſt, nobleſt, and richeſt Heireſſes in England, the Lady Catherine, Daughter to Francis Earl of Rutland. It is evident, that ſuch a Train cou'd not be ſupported in ſuch Grandeur and Expence without draining the King's Exchequer; and 'twill not be pretended that it was an Inſtance of his Majeſty's Wiſdom to waſte the publick Treaſure on a numerous, worthleſs Family, not one of whom had any perſonal Merit, but the Favourite himſelf, who look'd well, dreſs'd well, danc'd well; and that was all. To ſupply the Profuſion of Buckingham and his Kindred, all Offices were ſet to Sale, as well as all Honours and Dignities Eccleſiaſtical and Civil. Welden informs us the Lord Chan- P. 129. cellor Bacon paid a Penſion, Heath the Attorney-General a Penſion, and ſo others; not forgetting Fotherby Biſhop of Sarum, who paid 3500*l.* and Dean Bargrave. He adds, There were Books of Rates on all Offices, Biſhopricks and Deaneries in England. Books of Penſions and Fines, by which immenſe Sums were rais'd, tho' little of it came into the Exchequer.

The Cataſtrophe of Sir Walter Raleigh's Fate happen'd about this Time. He had been releas'd out of the Tower two Years before; but his Eſtate being taken from him, and little or nothing left for his Subſiſtence, his Wants put him upon a Project to recover his ruin'd Fortunes by an Expedition to America. Authors differ as to the Time and Cauſe of his Releaſement out of the Tower. Some ſay it was for curing the Queen of a Diſtemper by a Chymical Preparation; others attribute it to the Merit of his Hiſtory of the World, which he compiled during his Confinement, and was for many Years the beſt Hiſtory of the Kind extant. It was publiſh'd about three Years before his unfortunate Voyage to Guiana. But the true

Coke, 9

*A.D.*1617. Reaſon of his Enlargement ſeems to be the Injuſtice and Scandal of keeping a Man of his Worth longer in Priſon, for a Crime which was too ill prov'd to deſerve fourteen Years Impriſonment; and the true Reaſon of his adventuring to America in his old Age, was his Impatience under that Poverty which the Forfeiture of his Eſtate had reduc'd him to. There is ſomething ſtrangely incompatible in King James's Conduct with reſpect to this Expedition. He is in perfect Amity with Spain, his Ambaſſador Digby is treating for a Match between the Infanta and his Son the Prince of Wales, and yet he grants a Commiſſion to Sir Walter Raleigh to ſeize thoſe Mines which the Catholick King claim'd as his. Sir Walter is in that Commiſſion ſtil'd his beloved and faithful Servant, Delecto & Fideli, which was incompatible with the Attainder he lay under, and a direct Pardon or a Nullity; for a Man who was dead in Law, cou'd not in common Senſe have a Power of Life and Death over other Men, as he had by this Commiſſion. And if it was a Pardon, which it muſt be, or it was Nonſenſe, the cutting off his Head afterwards for an obſolete Attainder, was as much a Murder, as the cutting his Throat wou'd have been before he was attainted. This is the plain Fact, and plain Argument, which will not bear further Reflection. 'Tis thought Sir Walter, who had been at Guiana 21 Years before, was deceiv'd himſelf in the Information he had of Gold Mines there. However, he ſet up Marks to direct him to them when he came thither again. Captain Keymis, A. M. of Baliol-College Oxon, had been his Companion in the Guiana Voyage A. D. 1595, and brought with him a Piece of Ore, which very much reſembled Gold: Sir Walter, who was a great Chymiſt, made an Experiment of it, and we are told, deceiv'd Keymis by repreſenting it as real Gold, whereas all he meant by it, was to raiſe Contributions for his intended Voyage, and ſo repay the Contributors out of the Wealth he got in America, or never ſee England more. Every one knows the ill Succeſs of this Enterprize, in which many Perſons of Condition engag'd, as Sir John Pennington, Sir Warham St. Leger, Sir John Fern, Captain Parker, Captain North, Brother to the Lords North and Mounteagle, Captain Chudleigh of Devonſhire, Major Pigot, Captain Thornhurſt. The Fleet conſiſted of about 12 Sail, two of which deſerted before they reach'd Guiana, commanded by Captain Whitney and Captain Woollaſton. Moſt of the Officers fell ſick, and Sir Walter himſelf was ſo weak, that he was carry'd in a Chair. When they arriv'd at Guiana, Captain Keymis was detach'd with five of the ſmaller Ships, to ſail up the River Orenoquo to diſcover the Mine. He had with him five Companies of Foot commanded by Captain Walter Raleigh, the General's eldeſt Son, Captain Parker, Captain North, Captain Chudleigh, and Captain Thornhurſt. The Marks which had been left for their Direction in the firſt Voyage, were either worn out or remov'd by the Spaniards, who had rais'd ſeveral Fortifications there ſince the Year 1595; a certain Proof that they claim'd the Country of Guiana, and King James commiſſion'd Sir Walter to invade it by ſeizing the Mines, at the ſame Time that Digby was commiſſion'd to conclude a Treaty of the ſtricteſt Alliance with the King of Spain. Keymis loſt ſeveral Men by Shot from thoſe Forts in his Paſſage up the River. No Mine was to be found, and that the Voyage might turn to ſome Account, Keymis attack'd St. Thomas, a Spaniſh Town: Mr. Raleigh, Sir Walter's Son, was kill'd in the Aſſault, but the Town was taken and plunder'd; a downright Breach of the Peace, and contrary to King James's Command, that they ſhou'd enter upon no Part of the King of Spain's Dominions, other than the Country where the undiſcover'd Mine was, which was as much a Part of the Spaniſh Dominions as Mexico and Peru; for the Pope had given the King of Spain all that Continent of America, and he had no better Title to any part of it. The Country where the Mine was ſaid to be, had been deſcribed by Sir Walter as exactly as he cou'd; to which Deſcription was added the Number of Ships, the Complement of Men, the Ordnance of every Ship. A Draft of the whole was given to the King, who gave it to Gondemar the Spaniſh Envoy; and we are told a Copy of it was found by Keymis at St. Thomas, when he took the Town. I do not think this deſerves the ſevere Reflections which are made on it in Hiſtory: For King James cou'd do no leſs than ſatisfy his Brother of Spain, that the Armament was not intended againſt his Subjects, but was made by Adventurers in queſt of Riches, which being not yet diſcover'd, cou'd be no body's Property. No fair way of arguing, for the Proprietor of any Land, has the Propriety of every Mine within the Bounds of it diſcover'd or not diſcover'd. The ſacking of St. Thomas, was certainly a Breach of Sir Walter's Promiſe to the King upon his Allegiance, not to commit offenſive Hoſtilities againſt the Spaniards; and when Keymis return'd from his Enterprize without News of the Mine, Raleigh was perplex'd to the very Soul, telling him he had undone him, by wounding his Credit with the King paſt Recovery, but he might aſſure himſelf to have a Share of his Majeſty's Diſpleaſure. Keymis, in great Anxiety, retires to his Cabin, and ſhot himſelf with a Piſtol. Sir Walter hearing the Noiſe, ask'd What it was? Anſwer was made, Captain Keymis has ſhot off a Piſtol in his Cabbin to cleanſe it: But Keymis's Man entring the Cabbin, found his Maſter weltring in his Blood. The Piſtol having a little Bullet, only crack'd the Ribs, which being too ſlow for his Fury he deſperately thruſt a Knife in after it up to the Haft, and expir'd. Sir Walter wou'd have prevail'd with his Followers to ſail directly to France, where he was promis'd Protection. But the Majority was for returning home, and accordingly the Fleet firſt put into Ireland, and then into Plymouth, where Orders were come to ſeize Sir Walter as ſoon as he arriv'd, to appeaſe the Spaniſh Ambaſſador, who dinn'd the Kings Ears with the Sack of St. Thomas. Sir Lewis Stewkely, Vice-Admiral of Devon, a Kinſman of Raleigh's, apprehended him, and brought him to London the 9th of Auguſt in the following Year. Being committed to the Tower, he form'd a Deſign to eſcape with the Privity of his Couſin Stewkely, who betray'd him, and receiv'd the Reward of his Villany when he was afterwards hang'd for counterfeiting the Coin. Sir Walter was re-taken on the Thames, examin'd by the Lord-Chancellor and Privy-Council, and warn'd to prepare for Death. On the 28th of October he was convey'd to the King's-Bench Bar in Weſtminſter-Hall, where Sir Henry Montagu Lord-Chief-Juſtice, demanded of him why Sentence of Death paſs'd upon him fifteen Years before, ſhou'd not be executed. He pleaded his Commiſſion Dilecto & Fideli Waltero Raleigh, and that the King's belov'd and faithful Servant cou'd not be a Traytor. The Court over-rul'd his Plea, the beſt that cou'd be made in Juſtice and Reaſon, and order'd him to be executed the very next Day. It is a very melancholy Conſideration, that there have always been found among the Learned in the Law, even the moſt eminent, ſuch as wou'd ſacrifice their Learning and Conſcience to the Pleaſure of the Prince. The French Ambaſſador the Baron de Cheſne interceeded for Sir Walter Raleigh, but his Fate was reſolv'd, and his Blood given to Gondemar as the Price of St. Thomas. Had he been try'd for exceeding his Commiſſion, and infringing the Treaty of Peace with Spain, and been found guilty, there wou'd have been a Colour of Juſtice in cutting off his Head. But unleſs he cou'd have been puniſh'd for another Man's Crime, himſelf knowing nothing of Keymis's Attempt againſt

The People wiſh'd Raleigh's Head on Secretary Calvert's Shoulders, and clamour'd ſo much againſt the Execution of an antiquated Sentence, that King James thought it neceſſary to publiſh an Apology, which, ſays Osborn, according to the Mode of weak and ill-conſulted Princes, render'd the Condition of that Proceeding worſe in the World's Opinion. The Wiſdom of granting the Commiſſion to Sir Walter, and the Juſtice of taking away his Life for a Crime committed fifteen Years before, if ever it was committed at all, are fit Topicks for ſuch Panegyriſts as Sanderſon and Echard.

Treaty of Marriage with the Infanta.

Sir Walter Raleigh's Death reviv'd the Treaty of Marriage with the Infanta of Spain, to which King James afterwards ſacrific'd the Intereſts of his only Daughter the Queen of Bohemia and her Royal Family, who were the Care of Providence for the Good of Religion, and the Glory of this Kingdom. It is not deny'd, that a Toleration of Popery was a ſeparate Article of the Marriage Treaty; and how conſiſtent that was with his Majeſty's Zeal for the Proteſtant Church of England, is left to the Reader's Conſideration. The Spaniards flatter'd him with Hopes of Two Millions of Gold as the Infanta's Portion; and the King who, as Coke writes, was never poorer, cou'd not reſiſt the Temptation, tho' every reaſonable Man in his Kingdon, but himſelf and his Minions, cou'd ſee 'twas only a Bait to lead him into Spaniſh Meaſures, and promote the Intereſt of the Houſe of Auſtria, which in good Policy he ſhou'd always have oppoſed, as his glorious Predeceſſor Queen Elizabeth had done. The Head of his Miniſtry, and in a Manner of his Monarchy, was the Marquiſs of Buckingham, who indulg'd himſelf in all Riot and Luxury. His Majeſty being ſo far from diſcountenancing him in it, that Sir Edward Peyton informs us he encourag'd and aſſiſted him. The Baronet writes thus: "To pleaſe this Favourite, the King "gave Way to the Duke to entice others to his "Will. Two Examples I will recite. Firſt, the "King entertain'd Sir James Crofts, and his Daugh-"ter, a beautiful Laſs, at Newmarket, to ſit at "Table with the King. This he did then to pro-"cure Buckingham the eaſier to vitiate her. Se-"condly, Mrs. Dorothy Gawdy, being a rare Crea-"ture, King James carried Buckingham to Culford "to have his Will on that Beauty; but Sir Nicholas "Bacon's Sons convey'd her out of a Window into "a private Chamber, and ſo diſappointed the Duke "of his wicked Purpoſe." Sir Edward Peyton was then at Culford, and aſſiſted the two Bacons in that cleanly Conveyance. He adds; Truly that Day a ſober Man was hard to be ſeen in King, Prince, and Nobles. His Majeſty wrote a Letter to the Pope, That there ſhou'd be a Toleration for Popery, when he had brought his Affairs to his Bent in Great-Britain. The Letter was diſcover'd by a lucky Chance to the ſeven Years Parliament, and complained of in the Remonſtrance to the King, who made the Scotiſh Secretary own this Act, and affirm it was his, and not the King's, promiſing him to take him off at laſt with Advancement, but contrary it occaſion'd the Secretary's Ruin. The King and Prince ſign'd an Article, that the Pope ſhou'd be ſatisfied in his Conſcience with reſpect to the tolerating Papiſts before he granted the Diſpenſation. Notwithſtanding which, his Majeſty appear'd very zealous for ſuppreſſing the Arminians in Holland, and reſtoring Peace to the Proteſtant Church. The Arminians, as has been hinted, were term'd Remonſtrants, and the oppoſite Party Contra-Remonſtrants. The former had Barneveldt for their Leader, who out of Hatred to the Prince of Orange, enter'd into Intrigues tending to the Deſtruction of the Government, for which he loſt his Head, and one of his Accomplices, the famous Hugo Grotius, was condemn'd to perpetual Impriſonment, but made his Eſcape in a Trunk, which his Wife told the Guard was full of Arminian Books, that were to be immediately burnt.

A.D. 1618.

To put an End to this Controverſy, the States-General reſolv'd to call a national Synod at Dort, and amongſt other Princes and States, invited King James to ſend ſome Divines to repreſent the Reform'd Church of England, who accordingly appointed Dr. Carlton Biſhop of Landaff, Dr. Hall afterwards Biſhop of Exeter, Dr. Davenant afterwards Biſhop of Sarum, and Dr. Ward Archdeacon of Taunton, to aſſiſt at that Synod. Excellent Divines! And had our national Church been always bleſt with ſuch Fathers, the dreadful Words Schiſm and Perſecution had never been met with in our Hiſtories. One of King James's Injunctions to them was, That they conform themſelves to the Confeſſions of the Neighbour Reform'd Churches, and hold good Correſpondence with them. How does this agree with Laud's forbidding the Dutch and Walloons to worſhip God after their own manner, and with the Lord Clarendon's Panegyrick on King Charles II. for refuſing to go to the Proteſtant Church at Charenton in France? The States-General allow'd theſe four Divines Ten Pounds a Day for their Entertainment; and King James ſent after them one Balcanqual a Scotiſh Divine, but a Hater of the Scotiſh Church, to repreſent her. He had a particular Seat erected for him, which Fuller tells us diſcompos'd the Uniformity of the Building, which was extreamly regular before. Dr. Joſeph Hall falling ſick, return'd to England for Recovery of his Health, and Dr. Thomas Goad Chaplain to Archbiſhop Abbot, was ſent to ſupply his Place. This Synod having agreed upon a Confeſſion of Faith, known by the Name of the Belgick Confeſſion, the Engliſh Divines proteſted againſt what related to Diſcipline, and approv'd of all the doctrinal Points; which ſhews us, what few of the rural Clergy have not the leaſt Notion of, that the Church of England is the very ſame with the Church of Holland in Matters of Doctrine; and then I think we need not ſcruple to conform to her on account of Diſcipline. The fierce Mountague, Author of the Appeal, which we ſhall hereafter have Occaſion to ſpeak of, fell furiouſly upon theſe reverend Engliſh Doctors, for approving any thing which the Dutch Proteſtants approv'd. The States-General gave them at their Departure a Medal of Gold, and 200 Pounds to bear their Expences back. This Synod condemn'd Arminianiſm; but tho' it ſunk here, it roſe again in England, and was cheriſh'd by the moſt rigid of the rigorous Churchmen in Oppoſition to Puritaniſm, or rather to the Purity of the Chriſtian Religion.

Archbiſhop Spolato turns to the Church of England.

Conſidering of what poor Materials the Hiſtory of this Reign conſiſts, we muſt not omit the Arrival of Antonio de Dominis, Archbiſhop of Spolato in England. He had been fourteen Years Archbiſhop of that See in Dalmatia, under the State of Venice, and pretending Conſcience, he renounced the Errors of the Church of Rome, and conform'd to that of England about a Year before he arriv'd here. He ſaid the Romiſh Church was myſtical Babylon, the Pope a Nimrod, a Tyrant, Schiſmatick, Heretick, and even Antichriſt himſelf. It ſeems he had a Pique againſt the Pope, Paul V. for making him pay 500 Crowns a Year out of his Biſhoprick to a Suffragan, and in a Fury left Italy. He made but a ſhort Stay in the United-Provinces, not liking their Presbyterian Government, too mean for his archiepiſcopal Spirit. Coming to England, he was receiv'd by King James with as much Favour as if he had been a real Convert. He ſoon found out the King's Foible, and flattering him for his Learning and Knowledge

*A.D.*1618. in Divinity, obtain'd ſeveral rich Preſents and profitable Preferments, his Majeſty ſending him a fair Baſon and Bowl of Silver, the Archbiſhop received it with this Compliment; Miſit mihi Rex Magnæ Britanniæ, &c. The King of Great-Britain has ſent me a Silver Baſon to waſh from me the Filth of the Roman Church, and a Silver Cup to mind me to drink the Purity of the Goſpel. He was ſoon after made Dean of Windſor, with the good Parſonage of Weſt-Iſleſly in Berkſhire annex'd to it, and Maſter of the Savoy; which Benefices he was no ſooner poſſeſs'd of, than he began to be very vexatious to his Tenants, and intended to queſtion all his Predeceſſors Leaſes at the Savoy; but Dr. King Biſhop of London, reprimanded him ſo ſeverely for it, that he dropp'd that Deſign. Dr. Fuller owns King James was deluded with this Man's falſe Spirit, which muſt be taken for another Evidence of Wiſdom. Gondemar the Spaniſh Envoy taking Offence at a Jeſt the Archbiſhop made upon him, told King James he was ſtill a Papiſt in his Heart, and he wou'd prove it. To effect it, he wrote to his Maſter the King of Spain, to demand de Dominis's Pardon of the Pope, with a Promiſe of Preferment, and a Cardinal's Cap, if he wou'd ſign a Recantation of what he had ſaid and written againſt the Catholick Church Spolato readily embrac'd the Motion, and ſign'd the Recantation, which was preſented him by Gondemar, who carry'd it immediately to the King. His Majeſty order'd the Matter to be kept ſecret, De Dominis being at that very Inſtant an importunate Petitioner for the Archbiſhoprick of York, vacant, as it was thought, by the ſuppos'd Death of Matthew, which his Majeſty denying him after he was convinc'd of his Falſhood, Spolato deſir'd leave to depart the Kingdom, and was commanded ſo to do within twenty Days, and never to return. This Meſſage ſtartled de Dominis, who expected to be courted to ſtay in England; and when he found the King was in earneſt, he made all the Intereſt he cou'd to be permitted to ſtay, but all being in vain, he ſhipp'd himſelf with Count Swartzenbourg the Imperial Ambaſſador, and return'd to Flanders, from whence he went to Rome, where he liv'd on a ſmall Penſion paid him by Pope Gregory XV. whoſe Succeſſor Urban VIII. prohibited the Payment of it; and upon Information of ſome Expreſſions of his in Praiſe of the Books he had written againſt Popery, he was ſeiz'd and thrown into Priſon, where he dy'd, and his Corpſe being excommunicated after his Death was burnt in the Field of Flora. Of this Spolato Dr. Fuller writes thus:

Recants.

P. 99. " He was the firſt who, profeſſing the Proteſtant " Religion, us'd the Word Puritan to ſignify the " Defenders of Matters of Doctrine in the Church " of England. For merely the Word was only " taken to denote ſuch as diſſented from the Hi- " erarchy in Diſcipline and Church Government, " which now was extended to brand ſuch as were " Anti-Arminians in their Judgments. As Spolato " firſt abuſed the Word in this Senſe, ſo we wiſh " he had carried it away with him in his Return " to Rome; whereas now, leaving the Word be- " hind him in this extenſive Signification, it has " ſince by others been improv'd to aſperſe the " moſt orthodox in Doctrine, and religious in Con- " verſation." By this we ſee that the Divines and others, who were perſecuted by Laud and the Arminian Prelates, were the moſt orthodox and religious, according to the Teſtimony of a Divine of our own Church; and how wiſe and how pious muſt King James be, to ridicule and hate the moſt religious and orthodox of his Subjects? Let it be remember'd that the Term Puritan, us'd as a Reproach, was the Invention of this Arch Apoſtate and Impoſtor Antonio de Dominis Archbiſhop of Spolato.

Puritans, whence the Word.

Q. Anne's Death. Cometa were ſo little known in theſe Times, that the Hiſtorians dwell much upon the Appearance of one in Libra for twenty-eight Days together. Echard, who, as has been obſerv'd, affects every where the marvellous, will have it to prognoſticate the Death of Queen Anne, Conſort to this King; but doubtleſs the Swelling which attends Hydropick Diſtempers, was a much more certain Prognoſtication of her Majeſty's dying of the Dropſy. Her Character is various according to the Ingenuity or Information of the Hiſtorians. Read Sir Edward Peyton, pag. 27, 28; and Echard, pag. 395, and you will as ſoon reconcile two Contraries as their Hiſtories: The latter ſays ſhe was a peaceable and dutiful Wife, and a virtuous and pious Queen; the former repreſents her as amorous, luxurious, and the Reverſe of Piety and Virtue, inſomuch that ſhe endeavour'd to corrupt her Son the chaſte Prince Henry, the Example of whoſe Life was a tacit conſtant Rebuke of his Father's and his Mother's. " She ſo initiated him in the Court of P. 27. " Cupid, as one Night ſhe ſhut him under Lock " and Key with a beautiful young Lady now dead, " which ſhe'd her Love to the Sport," &c. I care not to repeat any more of it, and ſhou'd not have repeated this, but to ſhew the Reader what ſort of Piety the Archdeacon's Book is ſet out with; for Mary Queen of Scots was alſo, as he records it, a moſt virtuous pious Princeſs.

*A.D.*1618.

This Year his Majeſty created Robert Sidney Lord Viſcount Liſle Earl of Leiceſter, William Lord Compton Earl of Northampton, William Lord Cavendiſh Earl of Devonſhire, and Robert Lord Rich Earl of Warwick. *A.D.*1619.

About the beginning of the following Year, the Earl of Northumberland was diſcharg'd out of the Tower, where he had been confin'd ever ſince the Gunpowder-Plot for harbouring his Couſin Thomas Piercy, one of the Plotters. His Liberty was procur'd him by the Lord Hay Viſcount Doncaſter, who marry'd his Daughter the Lady Lucy without his Conſent. This Lady was the ſame who under the Name of the Counteſs of Carliſle, made the moſt ſhining Figure in the Court of King Charles I. as a Beauty, Wit, and even as a Politician. The old Earl wou'd give her nothing, nay, he cou'd hardly be brought to accept of his Liberty from the Hands of a Son-in-law, whom he thought unworthy his Alliance. The Earl valu'd himſelf on the Antiquity and Nobility of his Family, and hearing that the Favourite Buckingham was drawn about in a Coach and Six Horſes, he rode through the City of London in a Coach with Eight Horſes, which had never been ſeen in England before.

Counteſs of Carliſle.

Now it was that the Troubles in Bohemia involved Germany in a cruel War. The Houſe of Auſtria had poſſeſs'd themſelves of that Kingdom, which was elective, and in the Perſon of Ferdinand Brother to Charles V. made it hereditary under Pretence of Ferdinand's Claim in Right of his Wife Anne Siſter to Lewis King of Bohemia and Hungary, who was ſlain by the Turks in the Battel of Mohatz an hundred Years before. Maximilian the Son of Ferdinand ſucceeded him, not only as Emperor, but as King of Bohemia and Hungary. His Son and Succeſſor the Emperor Maxmilian II. held alſo both theſe Kingdoms: The ſame did his Brother the Emperor Rodolph The great Power of the Houſe of Auſtria, render'd all Attempts of the Bohemians to recover their Liberty abortive. Rodolph was a worthy Prince, and granted a Toleration of the Proteſtant Religion as well to the Auſtrians as Bohemians; and the latter were ſo eaſy under the good Government of Maximilian II. and Rodolph, that they were inſenſible of the Loſs of their Freedom. Rodolph's Brother and Succeſſor Matthias, was a mild but a weak Prince; and the Popiſh Party prevail'd upon him to ſurrender his Right to the Kingdom of Bohemia to his Couſin Ferdinand Archduke of Auſtria, Son of Charles younger Brother to the Emperor Maximilian I. This Archduke Ferdinand had not the leaſt Pre-

King of Bohemia

*A.D.*1619. tence of Right to the Crown of Bohemia, either by Election or Succeſſion, for Anne Wife of Philip III. King of Spain, had the hereditary Right, her Mother being the eldeſt Daughter of Maximilian II. However, Ferdinand was declar'd Succeſſor to Matthias, without Conſent of the States of Bohemia, who were enough incens'd before by the Tyranny of the Auſtrian Governors, under the weak Government of Matthias. They aſſembled to repreſent their Grievances to the Emperor, eſpecially thoſe that concern'd Religion, thoſe Governors having ſhamefully violated the Toleration granted them by Maximilian and Rodolph. The Auſtrian Miniſters, inſtigated by Jeſuits, inſtead of redreſſing their Grievances, inſulted the principal Senators, and exaſperated that Body to ſuch a degree, that they fell upon them, and flung Count Martinitz Slabata the Emperor's Chief Juſtice, Smeſanſius one of the Council of State, and Fabricius the Secretary, out of a Window in the Caſtle of Prague. This daring Act was like drawing the Sword, and the Deſperateneſs of the Action oblig'd them to throw away the Scabbard. The Count de la Tour, a Leading Senator, made a pathetick Speech to the States againſt the Tyranny of the Auſtrian Governors, and Ferdinand's Succeſſion. The Citizens of Prague and the Bohemians in general, took Fire after the Example of the Count, and choſe a Council of thirty to undertake the Government 'till they cou'd reſtore the Conſtitution, and elect them a King, as moſt certainly it was their Right to do in oppoſition to Ferdinand, who not long after ſucceeded Matthias in the Empire, by the Vote of George Duke of Saxony, who, tho' a Proteſtant, was prevail'd upon to abandon the Intereſt of Religion, and declare for one of the moſt cruel Perſecutors the Reformation ever met with. The like did Maurice Duke of Saxony, in the Time of the Emperor Charles V. and how the Houſe of Saxony have behav'd in our own Times, will, in the Caſe of the Maſſacre of Thorn, be remember'd with Horror. The Bohemians did not think themſelves oblig'd to acknowledge Ferdinand's Election to the Empire, and much leſs to the Kingdom of Bohemia, for he was not legally their King: He was conſequently no legal Elector as King of Bohemia, tho' his Vote was taken as ſuch for himſelf, and without his own Vote for himſelf, he cou'd not have carry'd it. The States of Bohemia therefore diſclaim'd his Election as invalid, and proteſted by Oath againſt his Claim to their Crown.

During theſe Commotions, King James and his Favourite Buckingham, were in full Peace, and enjoy'd all the Pleaſures which uſually attend it in a luxurious Court; but that he might not ſeem to have forgotten the Continent in this Lethargy of State, he ſent the Viſcount Doncaſter to mediate a Reconciliation between the Emperor and the Bohemians, who carrying nothing but good Words and good Cloaths with him, the Effects of his Negotiation were equal to the Subſtance of it. His Majeſty's Mediation was neglected by both Parties, and the Bohemians offer'd their Crown to Charles Duke of Savoy, tho' a Papiſt, on account of his better Title to it by Heirſhip, his Mother being a younger Daughter of Maximilian II. King James did his utmoſt to excite the Duke of Savoy to accept of this Offer, but the Pope and King of Spain diſſuaded him from it, and then the States had Recourſe to Frederick Elector Palatine; who beſides that he was a zealous Proteſtant, had amaſs'd great Riches, and cou'd give them the beſt Aſſiſtance of any Prince in the Empire, if King James, the Elector's Father-in-law, wou'd aſſiſt him according to his Ability. The Prince of Anhalt, Count de Holoch, and the Baron Done, were moſt intimate with the Elector Palatine, who did not at firſt hearken to the Offer of the Crown made him by the Bohemians, who knew too little of King James's Temper and Genius, in making the leaſt Dependance on Succours from him. They apply'd to the before-mention'd Lords in a manner that ſucceeded, and the Elector accepted of the Royal Dignity, without concerting with his Father-in-law, who had a good Pretence to preſerve his pacifick Counſels, his Son having ſo raſhly involv'd himſelf in a difficult and dangerous Affair without his Conſent. Baron Done was immediately diſpatch'd to England to excuſe the Suddenneſs of the Acceptation, but his Reception was as cold as cou'd be expected from a Prince who dreaded every thing which had the leaſt Look of War, tho' his Majeſty's Pretence was, that he wou'd not countenance any People in a Power to diſpoſe of a Kingdom. Archbiſhop Abbot earneſtly ſollicited him to aſſiſt the new King; and not being able to attend the Council himſelf on account of Sickneſs, he wrote to Sir Robert Naunton Secretary of State. My humble Advice is, there is no going back, but a countenancing of it againſt all the World, with ringing of Bells, and making Bonefires in London, ſo ſoon as it ſhall be certain of the Coronation. I am ſatisfied in my Conſcience the Cauſe is juſt, God having rejected that proud and bloody Man, who wou'd have made the Kingdom not elective; and when God hath ſet up the Prince a Mark of Honour to all Chriſtendom, to propagate the Goſpel, and protect the Diſtreſſed, I dare to do no other, but to follow where God leads. Our ſtriking in will comfort the Bohemians, honour the Palſgrave, ſtrengthen the Union, ſtir up Denmark, &c. He cloſes his Letter thus: This from my Bed, and when I can ſtand, I hope to do better Service. Such Sentiments as theſe were ſure to gain him the mortal Hatred of all Enemies to the true reform'd Religion; and one may ſuſpect that ſuch Sentiments as theſe provok'd the Earl of Clarendon, or his Editors, to ſay of this Archbiſhop, He was a Man of no Credit, and totally ignorant of the Conſtitution of the Church; an Aſſertion equally bold and falſe. The Elector was crown'd King of Bohemia at Prague about two Months after. But King James wou'd not ſuffer Bonefires to be made, nor the Bohemians to be comforted, nor the Palſgrave to be honour'd, as that moſt reverend Father adviſ'd; and one cannot enough lament the Loſs of this Opportunity to eſtabliſh the Proteſtant Religion in Germany; for it is plain that a ſmall Aſſiſtance wou'd at firſt have ſupported the King of Bohemia; 10000 Men, and 100000 Pounds in Money more than he had, wou'd have driven the Auſtrians out of the Kingdom; and the new King's Succeſs at firſt wou'd have ſo encouraged the Proteſtant Princes and States, that Ferdinand wou'd ſoon have been oblig'd to give up an imaginary Title for Peace. Had King James committed no other weak and ſcandalous Act of Government, this alone had been ſufficient to have render'd all Eulogy on his Wiſdom idle and ridiculous. Inſtead of Aſſiſtance, he ſent Embaſſies. Sir Richard Weſton afterwards Lord Treaſurer, and Sir Edward Conway afterwards Secretary of State, were his Ambaſſadors to the Emperor Ferdinand. I have often wonder'd how Men of any Diſtinction for Parts or Rank, cou'd be got to go on ſuch Errands, which were ſure to make them contemptible wherever they came. Ferdinand had proclaim'd the King of Bohemia Traytor, and given his Electoral Dignity to the Houſe of Bavaria, who enjoy it to this Day. The Duke of Saxony undertook to put the Imperial Ban in Execution, and invade the Bohemian Provinces with an Army of 20000 Men; Forces were immediately rais'd on both Sides, and ſome Engliſh Voluntiers permitted to ſerve under the Prince of Orange, who oppos'd Spinola General of the King of Spain's Army, which invaded the Palatinate. It is not to be queſtion'd but the States General wou'd vigorouſly have ſeconded his Majeſty's Endeavours to preſerve that Electorate for his Son-in-law; and

*A.D.*1620. that Spinola wou'd not have ſet foot in it, had he not been ſure of King James's ſtanding Neuter, and tamely ſeeing the Ruin of his Daughter, and a numerous Royal Family. Sir Horatio Vere commanded one Regiment only of about 1200 Engliſh in the Prince of Orange's Army, and had with him the young Earls of Oxford and Eſſex his Nephews, Captain Fairfax, afterwards the famous General Fairfax, Sir Gerard Herbert, Captain Burroughs, and ſeveral other brave Officers, who diſtinguiſh'd themſelves in that Service.

Engliſh in the Prince of Orange's Army.

But King James diſown'd his Son-in-law's Proceedings by his Agent Cottington in Spain; and the Engliſh who ſerv'd in the Palatinate were look'd upon only as Auxiliaries in the Dutch Army. Spinola was put to it by the Prince of Orange and the Hollanders only, what then wou'd have become of him if a good Body of Engliſh Troops had join'd the Dutch? The Prince of Anhalt made head againſt the Imperial Army in Bohemia; and the Forces on both Sides being pretty near equal, had King James ſent or hir'd Troops to have join'd Anhalt, the Battel of Prague cou'd not have ended ſo fatally. 'Twas fought on the 18th of November, and the Prince of Anhalt and the Bohemians were entirely routed by the Imperialiſts; and the King and Queen left Prague the next Day, taking little with them of the Treaſure which ſome ſay the King had been too ſparing of, conſidering his Kingdom, nay his All was at Stake. Anhalt his General made his Peace with the Emperor, and enter'd into his Service. The Spaniards reduc'd all the Electoral Territories, except two or three Towns garriſon'd by the Engliſh under Vere, Herbert, and Burroughs. The Matter is now left to Negotiation; which is manag'd by King James with as much Reſolution as he had exerted in the Conduct of the War. The Truth is, his Majeſty was afraid the Court of Spain wou'd break off the Treaty of Marriage, which was ſtill ſpun out, if he did any thing by War or Negotiation to offend the Emperor. As he dreaded Arms, ſo he avoided in all Treaties to inſiſt on Articles which might in the leaſt put it to the Hazard. The King of Bohemia's accepting that Crown is allow'd to be a raſh Action by all Writers; but the greateſt Part of the Raſhneſs conſiſts in his doing it in Deſpight of King James's unactive pacifick Temper; knowing, as he muſt know if he knew any thing after having been ſo nearly ally'd to him almoſt ten Years, that he lov'd nothing in the World ſo much as Flattery, Eaſe and Pleaſure, and hated nothing in the World ſo much as Action and Peril. Gondemar the Spaniſh Ambaſſador, to lull him into a yet deeper Sleep, aſſur'd the King that his Maſter was in earneſt for the Match; and beſides the two Millions, wou'd make a Preſent of the Palatinate to the Prince of Wales at the Marriage, upon which Sir John Digby, who negotiated that Matter in Spain, is made Baron of Shireburn, and Vice-chamberlain to the King. How did People in thoſe Days acquire Honour and Dignities! Digby coming to England, Sir Walter Aſton was diſpatch'd into Spain to keep the Treaty alive till Digby's Return thither. The Courtiers who were in the Popiſh Intereſt, as Arundel, Worceſter, Calvert, Weſton, and others, made their Court to the King by promoting the Match out of Zeal to that Religion. Buckingham and all his Dependants did the ſame. The Duke of Lennox and the Marquis of Hamilton were not ſo active; and the Earl of Pembroke oppos'd it as much he cou'd without hazarding his Majeſty's Favour. In the mean time Gondemar was as much of the King's Cabinet Council as any of them, except Buckingham. The Papiſts were ſo proud of his Protection, that nothing leſs than a Toleration was in their Hopes and Expectations. He got Diſcharges for a Multitude of Jeſuits and Prieſts; and among others for one Baldwin, who was accus'd to have had a Hand in the Gunpowder Plot. He procur'd a Squadron of Men of War to be ſent to the Mediterranean under Sir Robert Manſel againſt the Algerines, who were become too ſtrong for the Spaniards. He bought up Ordnance, and all Sorts of warlike Stores, which he ſhipp'd for Spain to ſupply the Spaniſh Magazines, even while the Arms of Spain were battering the few Engliſh that remain'd in the Palatinate. Secretary Naunton taking notice of the Spaniſh Ambaſſador's Influence at Court, and his unjuſtifiable Conduct, was remov'd, and Sir Edward Conway put in his Place. The ſame whom we heard of in Conjunction with Weſton employ'd in the Affair of Bohemia, where theſe two Miniſters cou'd only obtain a Paſs for them to return peaceably after the Loſs of the Battel of Prague. Conway was ſo little qualify'd for the Poſt which was given him, that King James was wont to ſay, he had a Secretary who cou'd neither write nor read. Naunton was a Man of Learning, Abilities and Honeſty, and conſequently very unfit to be of this King's Council at this time. His Majeſty was probably jealous of Sir Robert Naunton's Learning, affecting to be himſelf the greateſt Profeſſor in his Court. Gondemar knew the Affectation, and never fail'd to compliment him on that Article. The Spaniards Converſation was full of Point and Conceit, which was a way of Wit then much in Vogue. He had ſome Scholarſhip, but for the Jeſt ſake wou'd talk falſe Latin to make the King merry; and when his Majeſty laugh'd he wou'd ſay, You ſpeak like a Pedant, and I like a Gentleman. By ſuch ſmall Subtilties he inſinuated himſelf ſo far into the King's Affection, that he gain'd his Belief in whatever he ſaid to him, eſpecially relating to the Treaty of Marriage. The Court Ladies partook of his Favours, which conſiſted more in Preſents than Amours; and there was no Lady of any Eminence for Wit or Raillery, whoſe good Word he did not by that Means engage.

Gondemar's Influence on the King.

This Year Sir Henry Montague, Lord Chief Juſtice, bought the Lord High Treaſurer's Staff for 30000*l.* which however he did not keep long, for within the Year he was made Baron Kimbolton, Viſcount Mandeville, Lord Preſident of the Council, The Treaſurer's Staff being given to Sir Lionel Cranfield, who, according to Sir Anthony Welden, had been an Apprentice to a Mechanick in London, and ſerv'd three broken Citizens. Himſelf got a ſmall Place in the Cuſtom-Houſe, where he acquir'd ſome Knowledge of the Revenue, and became a Projector. As ſuch he was entertain'd firſt by Somerſet, and afterwards by Buckingham. Such Sort of Inſtruments being very neceſſary to ſuch Sort of Stateſmen, who ſpend the publick Treaſure faſter than it comes in. Cranfield's chiefeſt Merit was his marrying a Kinſwoman of the Favourite, Anne Brett, Daughter to the Counteſs of Buckingham's Siſter; for otherwiſe, as Welden tells us, he was nothing but a Pack of Ignorance ſolder'd together with Impudence. And his Fortune was anſwerable to his Merit; for tho' he was Lord Treaſurer, he did not long hold his Office, being two Years after convicted of Corruption by his Peers with this Cenſure, Thou Lionel Earl of Middleſex ſhalt never ſit, or have any Voice in this Houſe of Peers, and ſhalt pay for a Fine to our Sovereign Lord the King 20000*l.* His Poſterity had been degraded had it not been for the Votes of the Biſhops Bench. Upon which Welden remarks, I verily believe it is one Cauſe that they will themſelves be degraded.

I have mention'd ſome of Villiers's Amours, and by whom he was befriended in them. Wilſon confirms what Welden ſaid of him, If his Eye cull'd out a wanton Beauty, he had his Setters that cou'd ſpread his Nets. And one may eaſily imagine there cou'd not be much Religion there, where was ſo much Lewdneſs. What it was in Appearance the rigid Churchmen made their Advantage of,

Buckingham's Character. Is it not prodigious, that a Prince who was as wiſe as the belov'd Son of David, ſhou'd commit the Reins of Government to a callow Youth of no more Capacity than is ſufficient to qualify a modern Beau? A foreign Author writes of him, Larr. 61. He was the moſt ſtiff and imperious Man in the World, and his Proneneſs to Love made him a very improper Perſon for Negotiations. Again; The Deſign of a War with France was above the Reach of a voluptuous Man, very uncapable of managing ſo great an Affair, as the weak Execution made apparent. The ſubtil Spaniard Gondemar obſerving what an ill Choice King James made of his Miniſters on account of their Youth, told him in Sir E. P. 42. Raillery, He was the wiſeſt and happieſt Prince in Chriſtendom to make Privy-Counſellors ſage at the Age of twenty one, which his Maſter the King of Spain cou'd not do till ſixty. How fit Buckingham was for an Admiral and General, in both which Stations we ſhall hereafter find him, appears by this Verſe which was in every one's Mouth:

Mars ad Opus Veneris, Martis ad Arma Venus.
In Venus Wars he's Mars, in Mars's Venus.

P. 98. For an old King, ſays Coke, he having reign'd in Scotland and England 51 Years, to doat upon a young Favourite ſcarce of Age, yet younger in Underſtanding, tho' as old in Vices as any of his Time, and to commit the whole Ship of the Commonwealth both by Sea and Land to ſuch a Phaeton, is a Precedent without any Example. One may ſee by all King James's Actions, that when he gave himſelf up to any one of his Favourites, he did it entirely, and the Strength of his Wiſdom cou'd put no Reſtraint upon it. Why is it that Buckingham has ſo glorious a Character in the Lord Clarendon's Hiſtory? Did not that grave Chancellor know he was prodigal, voluptuous, raſh and inconſiderate? Cou'd thoſe Qualities eſcape him? No, doubtleſs; but he had another Quality which aton'd for all his bad ones; he was a Friend to Laud, and fa-

Not only Buckingham, but his Mother had a Hand on the Helm of the State. Few Places were diſpos'd of without her Conſent. As much Court was made to her as to her Son, and much more than to the King himſelf. She was an Apoſtate to Popery, and pro-

*A.D.*1621. The Projector's Schemes for raiſing Money having generally fail'd, and the Treaſury been a long time empty, there was no way left to ſupply the Profuſion of the King and his Minions, but what they thought the very worſt way of all, the Cal-
Parliament. ling a Parliament, who they doubted not wou'd be ready enough to give Money, if they cou'd be made believe his Majeſty wou'd employ it for the Recovery of the Palatinate. The People of England had it very much at heart out of Affection to the Queen of Bohemia, whoſe Zeal for the Proteſtant Religion had endear'd her and her Royal Family to all good Proteſtants.

The King's Wiſdom. The Parliament met the 13th of January, and King James open'd it with a long Speech, as polite and eloquent as the former Speeches. I ſhall only repeat a Paſſage or two, to ſhew how conſummate was the Wiſdom which the Earl of Clarendon dwells ſo much upon. A Parliament is a *A.D.*1621. thing compos'd of a Head and a Body, the Monarch and the two Eſtates. It was firſt a Monarchy juſt as it was among the Jews After this rate Saul came before the Judges. Then after a Parliament. There are no Parliaments but in Monarchical Governments: for in Venice, the Netherlands, and other free Governments there are none; that is, the Senate of Venice is not call'd a Parliament, the Aſſembly of the States General of the United Provinces is not call'd an Engliſh Parliament, they are only Free Governments. The Advantage of a Monarch to tell them, That hunting after Grievances is the Spirit of the Devil, makes a Parliament a much greater Bleſſing than the Liberty of a Senate or Diet. In this Speech the King jumbled together the Jeſuits and the Puritans. A wiſe way to open a Seſſion, which he was ſo much in want of. He told them the Reaſon he had not to approve of his Son-in-law's Acceptation of the Crown of Bohemia, as not holding with the Jeſuits to diſpoſe of Kingdoms, but with the Popiſh Emperor Ferdinand to make all Oppoſition Rebellion. He acquainted them with the Expence of the Lord Doncaſter's Embaſſy, 3500*l*. Whereas Wilſon aſſures us 'twas at leaſt 50000*l*. and the King own'd he had ſent the King of Bohemia only 10000*l*. which Sums were not proper to appear together in compariſon. The Parliament knew well enough what was meant by Subſidies for Recovery of the Palatinate. That the Favourites were at their Wit's End for Money, and having been the Source of all the Grievances, they reſolv'd to proceed upon them in the firſt place. Several Petitions were deliver'd from Perſons impriſon'd and ruin'd by Projectors and Informers, who had been active in promoting thoſe illegal Exactions to which the King's Neceſſities and ill Counſels had driven him. The chief Actors in the great Pattents for Inns, Ale- Projectors.
houſes, and gold Thread, were Sir Giles Mompeſſon and Sir Francis Mitchel, who, according to Wilſon, Illegal grated the Bones and ſuck'd out the very Marrow Practices. of the People, and whoſe Oppreſſion was thoroughly ripp'd up and laid open by the Houſe of Commons. The Marquis of Buckingham was known by every one to be at the Head of theſe Projects, Mompeſſon being his Creature, and Mitchel brought from the Brothels at Clerkenwell; where, Wilſon Mompeſſon and ſays, he pick'd up a Livelihood by granting the Mitchel Whores Licenſes, to an Office at Weſtminſter, that puniſh'd. he might be near at hand to obey the Commands he receiv'd from Court. The King was ſenſible Villiers lay under the Imputation of theſe Grievances: yet in a Speech to the Peers he ſaid, I remember that ſince the Beginning of this Parliament Buckingham hath told me, he never found ſuch Quiet and Reſt as in this Time of Parliament from Projectors and Informers, who at other times miſerably vex'd him at all Hours. There was no manner of Diſguiſe in this Application of the King to the Lords in Recommendation of his Minion; but it was a Sort of Inſult on their Underſtandings to commend him for oppoſing the very thing which they all knew he had promoted; and the Commons were now preparing to call him to Account for that and other Grievances, as appears by a Letter from Sir Anthony Aſhley to Buckingham: Cabala. Your Lordſhip may be moſt aſſur'd, that your Adverſaries continue their Meetings and Conferences here in Holborn, how to give his Majeſty ſome foul Diſtaſte of you, as making you the only Author of all Grievances and Oppreſſions whatſoever for your private Ends; and I hope to be able in a few Days to give you good Overture of an uniting Oath taken to this Purpoſe amongſt them. The Parliament however contented themſelves with falling upon the Under-workers in the odious Buſineſs of Patents. Sir Giles Mompeſſon fled the Kingdom, his Eſcape Wilſ. 158. being facilitated by Buckingham himſelf. But his Friend and Partner Sir Francis Mitchel met with a Puniſh-

A.D.1621. Puniſhment ſuitable to his Crime. He was degraded of his Knighthood with Ceremonies of Debaſement, and ſentenc'd to ride thro' the whole City with his Face to the Horſe's Tail, and a Paper on his Breaſt declaring the Foulneſs of his Crime. After he had been ſufficiently expos'd to the Scorn of the Rabble, he was thrown into Finsbury Goal, and good Part of the Money he had got by his wicked Practices was ſqueez'd out of him by Fine.

L. Chan. Bacon's Fall. About the ſame time fell the famous Lord Chancellor Bacon, un de plus beaux Genies de Siecle, one of the greateſt Genius's of the Age, according to a French Critick, who quotes a witty Saying of his which ſhew'd his Diſpoſition; Money is like Dung, good for nothing till 'tis ſpread; and truly he ſpread it abroad ſo laviſhly, that having no Heap left for himſelf, he to ſupport his Profuſion ſuffer'd his Servants and Officers to ſet many things to Sale, which were inconſiſtent with the Integrity of a Judge; and the Charge of Bribery and Corruption was but too fully prov'd againſt him. Wilſon writes, that what he rak'd in and ſcrew'd for one way, he ſcatter'd and threw abroad another; for his Servants being young, prodigal and expenſive Youths, his Treaſure was their common Store, which they took without Stint, &c. He loſt his Peerage and the Seal; and it was debated whether he ſhou'd carry the Title of Viſcount St. Albans to his Grave; which he did. When his Fine was in Debate, a Member of Parliament mov'd it might be 40 s. only; for if more he cou'd not pay it. But whatever his Fine had been, Buckingham, who advanc'd him, cou'd eaſily have got it off.

L. Keeper Williams. His Succeſſor in the Chancery was Dr. John Williams then Dean of Weſtminſter, ſoon after made Biſhop of Lincoln, with a Promiſe from Villiers of a better Biſhoprick when it fell. Welden tells us his Promotion was owing to the Hopes which Buckingham's Mother had of marrying him. But the Lord-Keeper Williams thought otherwiſe of that Marriage than did Dr. Williams Dean of Weſtminſter, which, ſays the ſame Author, was the Cauſe of his Downfal. The ſame Author informs us, that the late Chancellor Bacon had been degraded, if it had not been for the Biſhops Votes. He adds, " St. Albans was ſo very a Slave to Buc- " kingham, and all that Family, that he durſt not " deny the Command of the meaneſt of the " Kindred, nor oppoſe any thing. By this you " ſee a baſe Spirit is ever moſt concomitant with " the proudeſt Mind; and ſurely never ſo many " Parts, and ſo baſe and abject a Spirit, dwelt to- " gether in one earthen Cottage, as in this Man. " I ſhall not remember his Baſeneſs, being out of " his Place, of pinning himſelf, for very Scraps, " on that noble Gentleman Sir Julius Cæſar's Ho- " ſpitality, that at laſt he was forc'd to get the " King's Warrant to remove him out of his Houſe; " yet in his Proſperity, the one being Chancellor, " and the other Maſter of the Rolls, did ſo ſcorn " and abuſe him, as he would alter any thing the " other did". The Letters which Bacon wrote to ſeveral Courtiers on King James's coming in, prove that there was indeed ſomething very abject in a Mind the moſt enlighten'd of his Age in all good Literature, eſpecially that to the Earl of Salisbury begging the Place of Sollicitor-General, and another to Sir Edward Coke, then Attorney-General, on the ſame Subject. Villiers cou'd do no leſs than procure a Pardon for a Perſon, who had paid ſuch a ſlaviſh Submiſſion to his Pleaſure; and the Lord-Keeper Williams took notice of the irregular Proceedings of the late Chancellor Bacon in the paſſing of it, writing thus to Buckingham: " His " Majeſty and your Lordſhip do conceive that " my Lord of St. Albans Pardon and Grant of " his Fine came both together to my Hands, and " ſo your Lordſhip directs me to paſs the one and " the other. But his Lordſhip was too cunning " for me; he paſs'd his Fine, whereby he hath A.D.1621. " deceiv'd his Creditors, ten Days before he pre- " ſented his Pardon to the Seal; ſo as now in his " Pardon I find his Parliamentary Fine excepted, " which he hath before the ſealing of the ſame " obtain'd and procur'd; and whether the Houſe " of Parliament will not hold themſelves mocked " and derided with ſuch an Exception, I leave to " your Lordſhip's Wiſdom". The Lord-Keeper acted like a faithful Counſellor; but I do not find his Counſel was hearken'd to. Dr. Williams had been Domeſtick Chaplain to the Lord Chancellor Egerton, and very much in his Favour. A little before the Chancellor dy'd he ſent for Williams, and ſaid, If you want Money, I will leave you ſuch a Legacy as ſhall furniſh you to begin the World like a Gentleman. Sir, ſays the Chaplain, I kiſs your Hands; you have fill'd my Cup full; I am far from Want, unleſs it be of your Lordſhip's Directions how to live in the World if I ſurvive you. Egerton reply'd, Well, I know you are an expert Workman: Take theſe Tools to work with; they are the beſt I have. So he gave him ſome Books and Papers written all with his own Hand, being Directions concerning the well ordering the High Court of Parliament, the Court of Chancery, the Star-Chamber and Council-Board; as if he foreſaw that he wou'd have Occaſion of ſuch Knowledge in the Courſe of his Fortune.

Sir Edward Villiers, half Brother to the Marquis of Buckingham, was as deep in the Mire as Mitchel the Projector and Informer; but Williams adviſ'd the Marquis to ſend him on an Embaſſy out of the way, and leave Mompeſſon and Mitchel to the Reſentment of the Parliament. Williams had been ſworn a Privy-Counſellor before the Seal was given him; and when he took it, there was great grudging among the Lawyers, that the chief Poſt in the Law ſhou'd be given to a Doctor of Divinity. It ſeems indeed a little prepoſterous to Laymen, who have no Rule to go by but Reaſon and common Senſe, which ſeem to make the Vocation of the Holy Ghoſt and a Judgment-ſeat in a Law-Court very incompatible. Williams, who had refus'd to be Chaplain to the Lord Chancellor Bacon, accepted of a Commiſſion from him to be a Juſtice of Peace in Northamptonſhire; and an Hiſtorian who was let into the Secret, but had not Wit enough to keep it, tells us his being made Lord Keeper was only to prepare the way for filling the Courts of Judicature with Churchmen, who wou'd have fix'd firm Footing there, ſays Sanderſon, had King James liv'd to have effected his Deſires. Dr. Williams was doubtleſs a Man of great Abilities; and beſides the Directions in the Lord Elleſmere's Manuſcripts for his Conduct, he kept Sir Harry Finch, a Lawyer, in his Houſe five or ſix Months to adviſe with him upon all Occaſions.

Things were not carry'd ſo ſwimmingly in Parliament, as to make the King fond of their Company. The Commons enter'd into a Debate about the Growth of Popery, which was their conſtant Complaint from the Beginning to the End of the Reigns of the Houſe of Stuart; of whom but one had the Courage to own himſelf a Papiſt, and to run the Country for ſo doing; but every one of them conniv'd at, if they did not encourage it. The Commons alſo canvaſs'd the Spaniſh Match: But his Majeſty had a Party in that Houſe ſtrong enough to prevent their falling on his Miniſters. This Party were ſtill ſtronger in the Houſe of Lords. All the Courtiers, and moſt of the Biſhops, according to Wilſon, ſteering by his Compaſs. Prince Charles was almoſt always preſent in the Houſe to awe the Members: Yet there were ſome gallant Men, continues my Author, who aim'd at the publick Liberty more than their private Intereſt. If any thing were ſpoken in the Houſe, that did in the leaſt reflect upon the Government, or touch, as the Courtiers thought, that noli me tangere the Prero-

The Lord Spencer, to excite that generous Spirit, put the Houſe in mind of their generous Anceſtors, in which the Earl of Arundel cut him ſhort, ſaying, My Lord, when theſe things you ſpeak of were doing, your Anceſtors were keeping Sheep. A very poor Jeſt; and the poorer, for that the noble Houſe of Spencer were Barons long before that of Arundel. If it reflected on the Lord Spencer's delighting in Flocks of Sheep, as we are told, it was a Reflection which no Man cou'd have thought on, who had any Love for his Country. The Lord Spencer retorted, When my Anceſtors were keeping Sheep, yours were plotting Treaſon. This touch'd Arundel to the Quick, and referr'd to the Earl of Surrey and Duke of Norfolk beheaded in the Reigns of Henry VIII. and Queen Elizabeth. The Court Party cou'd not but be ſenſible he had been the Aggreſſor by an abſurd, ridiculous Affront on a young Nobleman of great Honour and Merit. Lord Spencer ſhew'd himſelf ready to juſtify his Words by his Actions. But they were both commanded out of the Houſe, who took into Conſideration the Offence Lord Arundel had given, and he was order'd to give the Lord Spencer ſuch Satisfaction as they preſcrib'd, and upon Arundel's Refuſal he was committed to the Tower. The Lord Spencer was readmitted to his Seat, as was alſo the Lord Arundel upon his Petition and begging Pardon. Two Days after the Parliament was adjourn'd; but the Commons before they parted, notwithſtanding the King had engag'd his Crown, Blood and Soul for the Recovery of the Palatinate, agreed upon this Declaration: "The "Commons aſſembled in Parliament taking into "moſt ſerious Conſideration the preſent State of "the King's Children abroad, and generally af-"flicted Eſtate of the true Profeſſors of the Chri-"ſtian Religion, meaning the Presbyterians in the "Electorate, profeſs'd by the Church of England "in foreign Parts, and being touch'd with a true "Senſe, and Fellow-feeling of their Diſtreſſes, do "with unanimous Conſent, in the Name of them-"ſelves and of the whole Body of the Kingdom "whom they repreſent, declare unto his moſt Ex-"cellent Majeſty, and to the whole World, their "hearty Grief and Sorrow for the ſame, &c. and "do ſolemnly proteſt, That they ſhall be ready to "the utmoſt of their Powers, with their Lives "and Fortunes, to aſſiſt him". Such was then the Senſe of the Nation with reſpect to the Support of the King of Bohemia and the Proteſtant Religion: Such their Senſe continu'd; and only King James and his Courtiers, who were moſt concern'd to ſupport them, abandon'd both. The King, ſays my Author, was pleas'd with the Declaration, intending to make his Market of it, but not to enter into the War for which they declar'd. The Lord Digby had been ſent Ambaſſador into Germany to treat with the Emperor for the Reſtitution of the Elector Palatine's Hereditary Dominions. A very hopeful Errand! The Duke of Bavaria was in Poſſeſſion of moſt of them by Ferdinand's Donation; and 'twas likely ſo powerful a Prince as that Duke wou'd be wheedled or menac'd out of them by Embaſſies. The Lord Digby made his Addreſſes firſt to the Emperor, then to the Duke of Bavaria, and laſtly to the Archdutcheſs at Bruſſels; and all, according to Wilſon, to as little Purpoſe as if he had ſtaid at home. Theſe Embaſſies were the Subject even of Walloon Wit, which was ever at as low an Ebb as ours is now; and in a Farce acted in the Spaniſh Netherlands, a Meſſenger was introduc'd bringing News in haſte, that the Palatinate wou'd ſhortly be repleniſh'd with a moſt formidable Army; for the King of Denmark wou'd furniſh 100000 pickl'd Herrings, the Hollanders 100000 Butterboxes, and England 100000 Ambaſſadors. Muſt not the Heart of every good Engliſhman weep Blood, to think that a Nation ſo renown'd and happy before King James came to the Crown ſhou'd become the Scorn of Beggars, and the Jeſt of Fools? Echard himſelf acknowledges, that this King was pictur'd abroad with a Scabbard without a Sword. And again: With a Sword which none cou'd draw out, tho' ſeveral tugg'd at it. At Bruſſels he was painted with his Pockets hanging out, and no Money in them, nor in his Purſe. Had it been poſſible to divide the King's Reputation from that of the Kingdom, the juſt Indignation which glow'd in every honeſt Engliſh Breaſt wou'd have been ſomewhat mitigated. But the Kingdom was diſgrac'd with the King, the Weakneſs and Cowardice of this Adminiſtration made them deſpis'd by the moſt deſpicable People, and render'd them the vile Object of Flemiſh Drollery and Dutch Mirth. Echard owns Great Britain was ſaid to be grown Little England, which had loſt its Strength by changing of Sex, a King Elizabeth for a Queen James. The moſt moving Part of the Infamy which was thrown on our Nation, is the Picture of the unfortunate Queen of Bohemia, the moſt belov'd and worthy Princeſs in the World, expos'd in the Netherlands like a poor Iriſh Mantler, with her Hair diſhevel'd, and her Child on her Back, the King her Father carrying the Cradle after her. Every one of theſe Pictures had Mottos, expreſſing the Scorn in which our Neighbours held our pacifick Monarch. Such Deriſions and Reflections were put upon him, ſays the hiſtorical Archdeacon. What Sentiments muſt thoſe Engliſhmen have of this Reign, who liv'd in the Days of the Veres, the Norris's, the Drakes, the Rawleighs, and a hundred other illuſtrious Names in the glorious Reign of Queen Elizabeth? Cou'd ſuch Engliſhmen content themſelves amidſt ſo much Shame and Diſgrace, as Echard does with his Majeſty's acting very laudably, and with great Reputation for the Eſtabliſh'd Church, when at the ſame time he pointed all the dreadful Artillery of his Wit and Learning againſt the Puritans, who were by much the greater Body of Engliſh Proteſtants?

The Lord Digby at his Return from his fruitleſs Embaſſy in Germany, made a Speech by Command of the King to both Houſes of Parliament, informing them how he had been amus'd by the Emperor, ſcorn'd by the Duke of Bavaria, and ſlighted by the Archduke. Theſe are the Laurels our Heroes brought home with them from abroad in this Reign. Digby concluded there was no way to recover the Palatinate but by Arms, and the King doubted not of their granting him the neceſſary Subſidies. The Miniſters talk'd after the ſame rate: But neither the King nor his Miniſters had Credit enough with the Parliament to gain their Belief, as they flatter'd themſelves they ſhou'd. For according to my Author, As the King's Suits and Intreaties were ſlighted and diſregarded abroad, ſo his Intentions were ſuſpected and fear'd at home. The Parliament knew his Inclinations were for Peace. Gondemar's Power over him boded ill to the pretended War; and Letters had lately appear'd from the King to his Brother of Spain, promiſing great Indulgences to the Papiſts. Digby was alſo diſpatch'd to Spain to cloſe ſome way with the Houſe of Auſtria, either by Marriage or Treaty. But the King had to do with cunning Gameſters, who ſmil'd to ſee how earneſt he was for it; they had the Sign given out of his Hand, and ſaw all the Game he play'd, ſo faithleſs was the Council about him. Here's Wiſdom, here Politicks, here a laudable Care for the Reform'd Religion! *A.D.*1621. believe the Editors of the Earl of Clarendon's Hiſtory, or Archdeacon Echard. The King ſaw the Engliſh were generally averſe to the Spaniſh Match, and that the Inſolence of the Papiſts alarm'd them daily; yet inſenſible of any ill Conſequence of the general Diſcontent, he went on in his Way. The Parliament which had been adjourn'd in June to February, was ſummon'd to meet before its Time, to hear Digby's Relation of his Embaſſy; and they were ſo ill ſatisfy'd with it, that taking the State of the Nation into Conſideration, they agreed upon a Remonſtrance, of which the Popiſh Secretary Calvert, Weſton, and others, giving the King notice, he went out of Town, and retir'd to Newmarket; for his Majeſty's Cuſtom was to run from Buſineſs, if he did not like it. The Remonſtrance was drawn up in November, and ſet forth The Growth of Popery, the diſtreſs'd Eſtate of the Proteſtants, the diſaſtrous Accidents to his Majeſty's Children abroad, expreſs'd with Rejoycing, and even with Contempt of their Perſons. The Arminian and Popiſh Faction were ſuffer'd to inſult the Royal Family of Bohemia, to rejoice at thoſe Misfortunes for which all good Engliſhmen and Proteſtants were in the deepeſt Affliction, and treat Perſons with Contempt. It is hardly credible, but ſo it was; and the ſame Faction, when Laud was at their Head, wou'd not admit the Prayers for the Queen of Bohemia and her princely Children into our Liturgy. Such Well-wiſhers have the rigid Churchmen been to the Palatine Houſe, and their Succeſſors the Royal Houſe of Hanover.

Grievances

Papiſts, &c. hate the Houſe of Bohemia.

The Remonſtrance further ſets forth the great Armies rais'd by the King of Spain, of whoſe Alliance the King was ſo fond: The Expectations of Papiſts from the Spaniſh Match, the daring bold Behaviour of Romiſh Prieſts, the great Reſort of People to Maſs-Houſes, the licentious printing of Popiſh Books, the Swarms of Jeſuits, the common Indiaries of all Chriſtendom. Then the Parliament propos'd Remedies for theſe growing Evils; That his Majeſty wou'd not omit this juſt Occaſion ſpeedily and effectually to take the Sword in hand; that he wou'd publickly avow the aiding of foreign Proteſtants, the French King having newly laid Siege to Rochelle and Montauban, the remaining Strength of the Reform'd in France. But our King contented himſelf with ſending an Ambaſſador Henry Viſcount Doncaſter, to mediate a Peace between them; and, as Wilſon has it, he only follow'd the French King from Camp to City, and from City to Camp, with as little Succeſs as his Majeſty's Ambaſſadors had had in Germany. The ſame Author here very wiſely remarks on King James's Wiſdom, and the Bleſſings of his peaceable Temper, the Subject of ſuch a Torrent of Praiſe in the Hiſtory of the Rebellion, and Archdeacon Echard's. "Our King's Intentions aiming at Peace, he took, "as he thought, the beſt way to it, which was to "intreat for it, but that wou'd not prevail, for "the Voice of Intreaty cannot be heard for the "Trumpet. In War one Noiſe muſt expel another. The Parliament ſaw the Danger the Proteſtant Religion was in, and thought it their "Duty to let the King ſee how inclineable they "were to ſupport the falling Condition of it with "their Lives and Fortunes: But the King wou'd "be call'd Rex Pacificus to the laſt. His Heart "was not advanc'd to glorious Atchievements. "God will not many Times make uſe of ſome "Men to do great Things." This laſt Reflection extends thro' the Reign of this Royal Houſe, during which not one great Thing was done for the Proteſtant Religion, or the Liberty of the Subject, but what came with an Ill-will, and did not laſt long. Before the Houſe of Commons had had an Opportunity to preſent their Remonſtrance to his Majeſty, Sir Thomas Richardſon their Speaker, receiv'd a Letter from him, imputing the drawing of it to fiery Spirits, who debated Matters far above their Reach and Capacities. Mr. Selden, Mr. Pym, Sir Robert Naunton, Sir Thomas Wentworth, Mr. Noy, Sir Henry Vane, Sir Edward Coke, Sir Robert Philips, Mr. Hampden, Serjeant Strode, Serjeant Glanville, and an hundred other ſuch Members of this Parliament, had not the Reach and Capacity of Secretary Conway, who cou'd hardly write or read, and of the Favourite Villiers, whoſe Reach and Capacity conſiſted in the elegant Cut of a Coat, or in a nice Step in a Courant. I am ſenſible Satyr and Mirth are inconſiſtent with the Sobriety and Gravity of Hiſtory; but what can provoke Mirth and Satyr, like talking of Capacities and Reach in an Adminiſtration which was a Jeſt to People who had till then been a Jeſt to all the World.

The King's Wiſdom.

Stuarts never did a great thing in England

*A.D.*1621.

King writes to the Speaker.

The King in his Letter intimated, that to enquire into his Government, was a Breach of the Royal Prerogative, and commanded the Speaker to let the Houſe know, that none ſhou'd preſume to meddle with his deep Matters of State, nor his Son's Match with the Infanta, nor the Honour of the King of Spain; which Points, if they are touch'd in the Paper prepar'd, he will not deign to hear it. This imperious way of treating the Parliament, was ſo well imitated by his Son, that he never met nor parted with one in any tolerable Humour; and how this wiſe Conduct ended, will be ſeen hereafter.

Wiſdom.

The Parliament however ſent him their Remonſtrance, with a Petition, in which they declared, that the Welfare of Religion and State, were fit for parliamentary Conſideration, and cou'd not otherwiſe come fully and clearly to his Knowledge; and whereas his Majeſty ſeem'd to abridge them of the ancient Liberty of Parliaments, Freedom of Speech, they were now forc'd to pray that it may be allow'd, and the Doubts and Scruples rais'd by his Letter to their Speaker, be remov'd. His Majeſty was very uneaſy at this Petition, and us'd the twelve Members who were ſent with it, a little roughly, inſinuating that their giving Advice about his Son's Match was High Treaſon. Excellent Reaſon! He might as well have inſinuated that it was Adultery. For to give good Advice, with all due Submiſſion and Affection, can no more have a traitorous than a lewd Deſign in it. He added, They ow'd their Privileges to the Grace of his Anceſtors; that is, all the Saxon Kings were arbitrary deſpotick Princes, who ſquander'd their Prerogative on the People, as this King did his Money on his Minions; and the Saxons had no Right to any thing but what their Kings gave them; which is a Proof that his Majeſty knew as much of Hiſtory as he did of Divinity.

More Wiſdom and good Manners.

Learning.

About this Time the Lords of Parliament conſider'd how cheap they were made by the Multitude of Scottiſh and Iriſh Viſcounts, who had bought their Titles. They were not Natives of thoſe Kingdoms, but private Engliſh Gentlemen, who purchas'd that Honour to have Precedence of the Engliſh Barons, contrary, ſays Echard, to the Laws and Cuſtoms of England. Thirty-three Lords, among whom were the Earls of Oxford, Huntington, Eſſex, Lincoln, Dorſet, Salisbury, Warwick, ſign'd a Petition to his Majeſty to put a Stop to this Breach of their Cuſtoms and Laws. The King was ſo angry with them, that he cou'd not help ſhewing it, particularly to the Earl of Eſſex; I fear thee not, Eſſex, if thou wert as well belov'd as thy Father, and hadſt 40000 Men at thy Heels. I can ſcarce believe his Majeſty ſaid ſo, tho' we are told it by an Archdeacon, there not being a Man in Great-Britain, who cou'd think King James wou'd not have been afraid of Queen Elizabeth's Earl of Eſſex with half 40000 Men at his Heels. The King did not alter the Precedence claim'd by the Scottiſh and Iriſh Viſcounts, who had paid for their Title, but reſtrain'd himſelf in thoſe Creations for the time to come.

There

*A.D.*1621. There happen'd an Incident in this Seſſion of Parliament, which we ſhou'd not have had from Echard, if he had come to the Knowledge of it. I ſhall take it almoſt verbatim from Mr. Ambroſe Philips, Fellow of St. John's College Cambridge:

Life of Ld Keeper Williams, p. 96.

Biſhops ſpoken of.

" When the Privilege of the Nobility was debated, and almoſt carried by a Majority, that the " vouching of their Honour ſhou'd paſs with them " for an Oath, the Biſhop of Lincoln prevented " it by the Force of his Reaſons; but the Debate " continuing very long that Morning, an aged " Biſhop very infirm in Health, deſir'd to be excus'd if he cou'd not ſtay it out. With all our " Hearts, ſaid ſome Lords, you may all of you " troop home as faſt as you pleaſe; and the Earl of " Eſſex preſs'd it more paſſionately than any, deſiring to know if their Lordſhips were not content " to throw their Doors open, and let all the Biſhops " out if they would. The Biſhop of Lincoln, then Lord-Keeper, ſaid he wou'd put it to the Queſtion " if commanded." But I do not find it was inſiſted upon.

His Majeſty wrote to Secretary Calvert and Sir Thomas Richardſon, to take off the Edge of ſome ſharp Expreſſions he had us'd; and as it is a ſure Sign of Wiſdom to be convinc'd of one's Error, and own a Miſtake, ſo the miſtaking is a ſure Sign of Weakneſs. The Parliament were not ſatisfy'd with this Softning, when their Privileges had been ſo ſolemnly attack'd. They expected a Diſſolution, and reſolv'd before they broke up, to aſſert thoſe Privileges in as ſolemn a manner as they cou'd. To this End they drew up a Proteſtation, Proteſtation.

That the Liberties, Franchiſes, Privileges, and Juriſdictions of Parliament, are the ancient and undoubted Birthright and Inheritance of the Subjects of England; and that the arduous Affairs of State, the making of Laws, and Redreſs of Grievances, are proper Subjects for Debate in Parliament; that every Member of right ought to have Freedom of Speech, and the Commons to treat of Matters in ſuch Order as in their Judgments ſhall ſeem fitteſt; that every Member hath like Freedom from all Impeachment, Impriſonment, and Moleſtation, other than by Cenſure of the Houſe, for any ſpeaking concerning parliamentary Affairs. But to ſhew that they minded his Majeſty's Buſineſs as well as their own, they gave him two entire Subſidies to enable him to begin the War for Recovery of the Palatinate.

Wilſon, p. 186.

The Parliament in Queen Elizabeth's Time petition'd her to marry, and ſhe lik'd it, as King James himſelf ſaid: But he thinks it Preſumption in the Parliament humbly to beſeech him, for the Good of Religion, to permit his Son to marry a Proteſtant Princeſs, telling them, if they had fix'd on any Place or Perſon, he wou'd have thought it High Treaſon; ſo many Degrees high was the King's Spirit mounted above a Woman's to humble Subjects, and ſo many Degrees lower than hers was his Spirit to dare Enemies.

*A.D.*1622. His Majeſty was ſo incens'd at the Proteſtation, that by the Advice of Buckingham, he diſſolv'd the Parliament on the 6th of January, by Proclamation; in which he laid all the Blame upon the Commons, at leaſt on thoſe fiery Spirits abovemention'd. Biſhop Laud is ſaid to have drawn that huffing Proclamation, ſo raſh in Thought, and harſh in Expreſſion, that the Lord-Keeper Williams advis'd to have it ſoften'd before it was publiſh'd, but Laud was never for making Abatements, and ſo it paſs'd to the general Diſcontent of the whole Nation. The Lord-Keeper was very much troubled at it, ſeeing plainly of what dangerous Conſequence it might be, and how much his Majeſty treſpaſs'd againſt the true Principles of Engliſh Policy, by quarrelling with his Parliament; and he did all he cou'd to perſuade the King to make it his earneſt Endeavour to unite with them when they were aſſembled next. A Week before the Parliament was diſſolv'd, the King haſten'd to Town from hunting, and call'd a Council, at which the Judges aſſiſted; he declar'd before them all, that the Proteſtation was void, and ſending for the Journal-Book belonging to the Houſe of Commons, he tore it out with his own Hand. The Diſſolution of the Parliament added Fuel to the Flame, which began to heat the whole Kingdom. The Infringement of their Privileges diſguſted the People whom they repreſented, and who thought it not above their Reach and Capacity to obſerve, That a Prince who ſuffer'd the Proteſtants of Germany and France to be extirpated, ought not to have born the Title of Defender of the Faith; that he might almoſt have purchas'd ſuch a Country as the Palatinate with the Money ſpent on Embaſſies; that the promiſing the French Proteſtants Aſſiſtance, without aſſiſting them, had only made them the more reſolute to their Ruin; that all that was got by the King's Negotiations, was this arrogant Saying from the Conſtable de Luines in France, to Sir Edward Herbert, What has your Maſter to do with us or our Affairs? " Where- " as the Engliſh Fleets, the Glory of the World, " if employ'd, wou'd have taught the French Pride " to know, that he who ſtrikes with Paſſion, will " many times thank them that take him off by " friendly Admonition." All this Echard calls ſawcy talking; and yet he repeats the moſt ſawcy of all; it was mouth'd out that he was no King, but a Fidler's Son, otherwiſe he wou'd not ſuffer ſuch Diſorders at Home, and Diſhonours abroad. To ſtop People's Mouths, a Proclamation was publiſh'd againſt talking of State-Affairs, which was never known in any good Reign, ſuch as Queen Elizabeth's, and all the Reigns ſince the Revolution; it being a plain Confeſſion that the Affairs of State cannot ſtand the Teſt of Truth.

Wilſon, p. 190.

As ſoon as the Parliament was broken up, the King exerted his Royal Power againſt ſeveral of the leading Members of both Houſes; the gallant Earl of Oxford was committed to the Tower for ſpeaking againſt the Miniſtry, the weakeſt and wickedeſt that ever govern'd this Kingdom; the Earl of Southampton was confin'd for ſpeaking the Truth of the Duke of Buckingham, who had ſpoken diſorderly in the Houſe of Peers. Mr. Selden, Mr. Pym, Sir Robert Philips, Mr. Mallory, were committed to the Tower for their Freedom of Speech; Sir Thomas Crew, Sir Dudley Diggs, Sir Nathaniel Rich, and Sir James Perrot, were ſent into Ireland with a trifling Commiſſion; Sir Peter Haymen, one of the Barons of the Cinque-Ports, was commanded to ſerve in the Palatinate, where his Service cou'd be of no uſe. Sir Edward Coke, late Lord Chief-Juſtice, was not only impriſon'd in the Tower for the like Offence, Freedom of Speech in Parliament, but the Locks and Doors of his Chambers in the Temple were ſeal'd up, his Papers, and among others, ſeveral Securities for Money were taken away. None of his Children or Servants were ſuffer'd to come near him, and in this Confinement the King ſu'd him for 30000 l. an old pretended Debt due from Sir William Hatton to Queen Elizabeth, which was proſecuted with all Severity imaginable, tho' Sir John Walter, the Attorney-General, return'd the Brief that was ſent him, with this Expreſſion, Let my Tongue cleave to the Roof of my Mouth, whenever I ope it againſt Sir Edward Coke. The ſhutting up theſe Gentlemen, ſome of the moſt eminent of the Kingdom, merely by virtue of the Authority Royal, is an Inſtance of arbitrary Power not to be match'd but in French, Turkiſh, or Ruſſian Hiſtory. The Example was follow'd by this King's Son, as was that of raiſing Money without Act of Parliament, by Order of Privy-Council only. Letters were ſent to the Judges and others, to move them to contribute for the Defence of the Palatinate, as was pretended, and the Names of thoſe who refus'd, were order'd to be certify'd to the Council-Board. The like Letters were directed to the High-Sheriffs of Coun-

Lords and Commons impriſon'd.

Thoſe who wou'd not contribute, were return'd as diſaffected. "These, ſays Mr. Coke, were the Ways which this "pacifick King took in and out of Parliament, "which I believe, except in the Reign of Edward "the IVth, were never practis'd by any of our "Engliſh Kings; and all this under the ſpecious "Pretext of recovering his Son-in-law's Patrimo-"ny, prodigally to ſquander among his Favourites, "eſpecially Buckingham, whoſe Avarice cou'd not "be ſupported otherwiſe by the Revenues of the "Crown, and the ſelling of all Places ſacred and "civil. Theſe were his Majeſty's noble Atchieve-"ments over his Parliament, who preſum'd to "adviſe him for his own Honour and the Na-"tions Safety." Another way of managing leading Members in the Houſe of Commons, was to bribe them by Places and Honours, which was alſo practis'd in the next Reign. Sir John Saville, Knight of the Shire for the County of York, was now bought off from the Country Intereſt by being made Comptroller of the Houſhold, a Privy-Counſellor, and not long after a Baron.

K. James boaſts that his Mother was a Martyr for Popery. H.J.Lach. p. 20.

The Lord Digby was ſent to Spain to forward the Treaty of Marriage with the Infanta Maria, Siſter to Philip IV. King James ſmooth'd the Way on his Part by his Indulgence to Papiſts; and when thoſe who had near Acceſs to his Perſon, remonſtrated to him againſt that Marriage, and that Indulgence, the only Anſwer they could get from him, was, His Mother had been a Roman Catholick, and dy'd a Martyr for that Religion. Gondemar boaſted he had procur'd the Releaſement of 4000 Papiſts. Before Digby departed the King wrote a Letter to Pope Gregory the XVth, addreſs'd thus; To the moſt holy Father, &c. greeting, and all manner of Felicity. With what Reputation his Majeſty acted for the Church of England? He then tells the Pope, He doubts not but his Holineſs, out of his ſingular Piety, will further what he has been endeavouring. This Epiſtle is from the Defender of our Proteſtant Faith to him whom all true Proteſtants term Antichriſt. Again; That which remains for us further to ſay concerning this Matter, this Gentleman, our Subject, George Gage, will deliver unto you more at large; praying your Holineſs that you will give him in all Things Credence and Belief; beſeeching Almighty God, from our Heart, to preſerve you in Safety, and to grant you all other Happineſs. His Majeſty prays from his Heart, that all other Happineſs may be granted to the Pope by Almighty God; in which Happineſs muſt be included the utter Extirpation of the Reform'd Religion, without which no Pope will ever think himſelf happy. How does this agree with the Prayer in King Edward VI. Liturgy, From the Tyranny and all the deteſtable Enormities of the Biſhop of Rome, good Lord deliver us?

K. James's Letter to the Pope.

And encourages Popery, 193, 194.

Having mention'd the Lord Digby's Embaſſy to Spain, we cannot omit taking notice of his Reception there, which, according to Wilſon, was ſo ſhort of the Reſpect due to an extraordinary Ambaſſador of the King of England, that a Meſſenger might have hop'd for better. The Spaniards treated him as ſcurvily as if he had come from ſuch a ſort of Monarch as one of the Indian Kings in Queen Anne's Time: Yet to quicken the Buſineſs in England, his Majeſty commanded the Lord-Keeper Williams to iſſue Writs under the Great-Seal, requiring the Judges in every Circuit, to enlarge all Papiſts who were impriſon'd according to Law for Recuſancy.

Archbiſhop Abbot's Misfortune

About this Time a ſad Accident happen'd to that moſt reverend Prelate Dr. George Abbot Archbiſhop of Canterbury, in Bramſhill-Park in Hampſhire; where, by the Invitation of the Lord Zouch, he was at a Buck-hunting. The Keeper running amongſt the Herd of Deer to bring them up to the fairer Mark, and the Archbiſhop ſitting on Horſeback, let fly a barb'd Arrow from a Croſs-Bow, which unhappily ſhot the Keeper in the Left Arm, and he dy'd of the Wound immediately. The Archbiſhop's Enemies, who were all the rigid Clergy, did their utmoſt to have him depriv'd for this involuntary Crime, which the moſt bitter of them cou'd not mount higher than caſual Homicide. The learned Sir Henry Saville, his Grace's old Friend, ask'd Sir Edward Coke, Whether a Biſhop might hunt? Which it was urged he might not do by the Canons; but thoſe Canons had never been admitted as Laws in England; and the Lord Coke reply'd, There's an old Law, that when a Biſhop dies he ſhall leave his Dogs to the King. If a Biſhop might not hunt that Law was uſeleſs. Laud was one of the Prelates, who, in Hopes of riſing by the Archbiſhop's Fall, alledg'd that the Homicide, tho' involuntary, tainted the archiepiſcopal Function; and his Conſcience was ſo ſcrupulous, that he did not think the Orders Dr. Abbot conferr'd afterwards were valid; but ſober Clergymen, even Dr. Andrews Biſhop of Wincheſter, who was not thought to be very well with the Archbiſhop, reprov'd thoſe who condemn'd his Irregularity, as they term'd his hunting; tho' ſome Years after, when Dr. Jaxon was talk'd of for breeding the beſt Dogs in England, the Sport was then regular, and the Sportſman worthy to be call'd from his Game, and to be made Biſhop of London. The Archbiſhop was ſo mortify'd at this Accident, that he retir'd to an Almſhouſe he had built at Guildford, which the King hearing of, took Compaſſion upon him, and ſaid to a Lord who was ſpeaking of it, It might have been my Chance or thine. His Grace not long after receiv'd an Order to return to his Charge at Lambeth, and to make the Widow of the Deceas'd ſome Amends for the Loſs of her Husband, he ſettled twenty Pounds a Year upon her, which Penſion got her another Husband in a very little while. The Biſhoprick of St. David's becoming vacant about the ſame Time, Dr. Laud the turbulent Oxonian, was preſented to it by Recommendation of the Lord-Keeper Williams, whom the Duke of Buckingham put upon it. Echard confeſſes he was charg'd not only with Arminian but Romiſh Tenets; and his Temper was ſo fiery, that Judge Whitlocke foretold He wou'd ſet the Nation in a Flame. Nay, King James himſelf, who was hardly prevail'd with to prefer ſuch an exceptionable Perſon, ſaid to the Lord-Keeper, who importun'd him for Laud, Is there no Hold but you will carry it? then take him to you; but on my Soul you will repent it; which the Keeper did in a few Months, owing his Diſgrace to the Intrigues and Ingratitude of this lordly tyrannical Prelate, who concern'd himſelf ſo much with the State, that he made himſelf a part of it; and we are conſequently neceſſitated to ſpeak more of him than he deſerves. I mean not on account of his low Birth; for having Capacity enough to go thro' an academical Education with ſome Reputation, it is no Blemiſh to his Character that his Fortune was made by himſelf, if he had taken none but warrantable Ways in the Progreſs of it. After he was made Biſhop of St. Davids by the Recommendation of the Lord-Keeper Williams, he by the ſame Favour retain'd his Prebend at Weſtminſter, and had a Living of 120 l. a Year given him in his own Dioceſs of St. Davids, for which Laud return'd his Thanks to Biſhop Williams by Mr. Wynne in theſe Words, My Life will be too ſhort to requite his Lordſhip's Goodneſs: But, according to Coke, his Favours were not eighteen Months planted, when Laud became the Biſhop's ſharpeſt Enemy; and his Malice grew ſo high, that the Counteſs of Buckingham took notice of it. Ruſhworth aſſures us, He was ſuſpected of Popery while he was a Member of St. John's College Oxon, inſomuch that it was with Difficulty he got to be choſen Head of his Houſe; where he preſided when Dr.

Dr. Laud's Riſe.

A.D.1622. Robert Abbot, the Archbiſhop's Brother, afterwards Biſhop of Salisbury, ſpoke thus of him in a Sermon preach'd at St Maries on Eaſter-Day 1615. "Men "under Pretence of Truth, and preaching againſt "Puritans, ſtrike at the Heart and Root of Faith "and Religion eſtabliſh'd amongſt us. This preach- "ing againſt Puritans, was but the Practice of "Parſons and Campian. Is it not worth minding from whom Laud learn'd his Leſſons againſt Proteſtants, according to the Biſhop of Sarum's Information? Again; "When theſe Jeſuits came to "England to ſeduce young Students, ſome of the "latter, who were afraid to loſe their Places if "they ſhou'd profeſſedly be Papiſts, were coun- "ſell'd by Campian and Parſons to ſpeak freely a- "gainſt the Puritans, and that ſhou'd ſuffice; and "theſe Students cannot ſuppoſe they are account- "ed Papiſts, becauſe they ſpeak againſt the Puri- "tans. If ſome of them do at any time ſpeak a- "gainſt the Papiſts, they do beat a little upon the "Buſh for fear of troubling or diſquieting of the "Birds that are in it. They ſpeak nothing but "that wherein one Papiſt will ſpeak againſt ano- "ther. The Papiſts beyond the Seas can ſay they "are wholly theirs, and the Recuſants at Home "make their Brags of them. In all Things they "keep themſelves ſo near the Brink, that upon any "Occaſion they may ſtep over to them." Laud him- ſelf was at the preaching of this Sermon, which was Fuel to his fiery Spirit, and gave this Account of it to his Patron Biſhop Neile; I came Time enough to be at the Rehearſal of it upon much Perſuaſion, where I was fain to ſit patiently and hear my ſelf abuſed almoſt an Hour. I wou'd have taken no notice of it, but that the whole Univerſity apply it to me; and my own Friends tell me I ſhall ſink my Credit, if I anſwer not Dr. Abbot as King James P. 201. anſwer'd Bellarmine. Wilſon confirms what Abbot ſaid, The King's Animoſity againſt Puritans was thought to be fomented by the Papiſts, whoſe Agent Biſhop P. 144. Laud was ſuſpected to be. Coke ſays, The principal Stickler herein was Dr. William Laud, a Man of a moſt turbulent and aſpiring Diſpoſition; and one of the firſt Acts for which he was taken notice of, was to marry the Earl of Devonſhire to the Lady Rich, Mother to Robert Earl of Warwick, when her Huſband was alive, at which King James was highly incens'd. While he was at Oxford, his Buſineſs was to pick Quarrels in the Lectures of publick Readers, and ſend Informations of it to Biſhop Neile, that he might fill the Ears of King James with Diſcontents againſt honeſt Men, who took Pains in their Places, and ſettled the Truth, which he call'd Puritaniſm, in their Auditors. Archbiſhop Abbot ſaid of him, He was Buckingham's inward Counſellor, ſitting ſometimes privately with him whole Hours, feeding his Humour with Malice and Spite. As there was hardly a lewder Man upon Earth than Buckingham, what Notion can one have of the Piety of his Confeſſor and Counſellor? Laud's Contrivance to ruin his Patron and great Benefactor Biſhop Williams Lord-Keeper, takes up almoſt a Volume of Finch's Character. Biſhop Hacket's Life of that Prelate. Coke's Indig- nation was ſo rais'd by reading it, that he expreſſes P. 146. it thus: "You there ſee villanous Inſtruments, "Perjuries, Subornations, and keeping back of "Witneſſes, razing Records, the diſplacing Sir "Robert Heath from being Lord-Chief-Juſtice, "becauſe he wou'd not do Laud's Drudgery, and "bringing in Sir John Finch, who would jurare in "Verbo Magiſtri." It would be endleſs ſhou'd one go about to repeat every thing that is ſaid of this Laud's Fury, Pride, Inſolence, Cruelty, Ingrati- tude, Superſtition, &c. after Authors of undoubted Credit; one of them, the celebrated Mr. Locke, ſays of Laud and his Followers, they wou'd do the Des Maiz. Coll. worſt of Things by the worſt of Means, enſlave their Country, and betray them under the Maſque of Religion. We will now ſee what the Lord Clarendon or his Editors ſay of him, his other Advo- cates being too mean and too partial to be taken notice of. "The advancing of him was infinite- A.D.1622. "ly to the Benefit and Honour of the Church. Need one go any further? The Reader can have no Conception that any Thing more notoriouſly againſt the Truth cou'd be ſaid of him, unleſs I repeated it P. 65. out of the HISTORY OF THE REBELLION. "No "Man was more plentifully repleniſh'd with a good P. 90. "Conſcience, and a moſt ſincere worthy Intenti- "on; the Splendor of his pious Life, and his un- "poliſh'd Integrity; his ſingular Abilities and im- "menſe Virtue, and his Writings, more advanc'd "the Proteſtant Religion, than it had been from "the Reformation. He was the beſt provided of P. 98. "any Man with Innocence of Heart, and Inte- "grity of Manners. To call him Papiſt was a "ſenſeleſs Appellation, his Heart being always ſet "upon the Advancement of the Church."--- E- nough ſurely to ſhew us what Metal the Cha- racters in that Hiſtory are made of, eſpecially where the Author or Authors add, He had hitherto avoided Court Buſineſs and Matters of State; which I may venture to aſſert, is one of the falſeſt Things that ever was aſſerted in Hiſtory. He had been a Privy-Counſellor, and as we have mention'd af- ter Archbiſhop Abbot, was the Confident of Villiers, who certainly did not conſult him about Caſes of Conſcience; and when he went with the Prince to Spain, this very Laud, who had hitherto avoided Court Buſineſs, was left his Agent at Court. The Biſhop being afraid he ſhou'd be left out of the High-Commiſſion Court, on account of his per- Ambroſe ſecuting Spirit, he immediately apply'd himſelf by Philips, Letter to Buckingham, in which are theſe Expreſ- P. 150. ſions: Since by his Majeſty's gracious Goodneſs, and your Grace's ſole Procurement, I am made a Gover- nor, I wou'd be loth to be excluded, but am ſure my Lord of Canterbury will leave me out, as hi- therto he hath done. If his Majeſty be not pleas'd to command that I ſhall be in, I humbly deſire I may be depriv'd. He is begging a Power to domi- neer and oppreſs, out of the Innocence of his Heart, the Integrity of his Manners, out of his Piety and his immenſe Virtue, as we juſt now read in the Hiſtory of the Rebellion. Here he affirms it was by the ſole Procurement of the Duke of Buck- ingham, that he was made Biſhop of St. Davids; whereas Biſhop Hacket aſſures us it was Biſhop Williams that procur'd the Biſhoprick for him: and A. Wood, who ador'd Laud, as much as he lov'd P. 56. Adoration, owns it was done by the Endeavours of Dr. John Williams. Granting that Villiers did re- commend him to the Lord-Keeper, to ſay that therefore he was the ſole Procurer of the Biſhop- rick is falſe, for Williams was forc'd to ſtruggle for him, and was more than once diſcourag'd in his Suit by the King. True it is, Laud had already thrown off the Protection of his Patron, and been very inſtrumental in his Diſgrace; the Ingratitude of which, within a few Months after he had made him a Biſhop, wou'd not agree with owning his Promotion to him, without more Shame than he was capable of.

General Hiſtory wou'd not admit of ſo large a Digreſſion concerning a particular Perſon, if that Perſon had not thruſt himſelf into moſt of the State Affairs we ſhall be oblig'd to relate for twen- ty Years of our Period, and if it was not to en- lighten a little thoſe we ſhall find him concern'd in.

King James was ſtill in Hopes that he ſhou'd Spaniſh preſerve his Reputation abroad, according to Echard, Match. by puſhing forward the Treaty of Marriage: But our Archdeacon tells us not how that Reputation was acquir'd: indeed he does tell us that the Lord Vaux, a Papiſt, had Liberty to tranſport 4000 Men to reinforce the King of Spain's Armies, both a- gainſt his Majeſty's Confederates of Holland, where Ech. 400. his baniſh'd Children had Refuge, and even againſt his baniſh'd Childrens Country, the Palatinate it-

The Match it ſelf was like to be attended with ſuch ill Conſequences with regard to the Religion and Liberties of England, that no body who wiſhes well to them can read the Story, and much leſs write it with Pleaſure. The Palatinate being entirely loſt, Count Mansveldt, who commanded there for the King Palatinate. of Bohemia, march'd thro' Lorrain and Luxembourg, and enter'd the Netherlands, where he fought his way thro' the Spaniſh Army under Corduba. In which Action the Duke of Brunſwick had his Arm ſhot off, and many Engliſh and Scots Gentlemen ſignaliz'd themſelves out of Love to the Queen of Bohemia. Of theſe let us remember the brave Sir Charles Rich, Brother to the Earl of Warwick; Sir James Hays, Knevet, Hume, and Helburn, who behav'd very gallantly. Count Mansveldt join'd the Prince of Orange's Army, and they oblig'd Spinola to raiſe the Siege of Bergen-op-Zoon. A plain Indication, that if the Money given by the Parliament for the Palatine War had been employ'd even now for that Service, the Spaniards inſtead of making Conqueſts in Germany wou'd have been hard put to it to have preſerv'd what they had poſſeſs'd themſelves of in the Netherlands. With that Money the Prince of Orange, *A.D.*1622. who made head againſt Spinola without it, wou'd have been enabled to make ſuch a Diverſion in the Low Countries, as wou'd not have permitted the Spaniards to have march'd their Armies into Germany.

The Emperor at this time held a Diet at Ratiſbon, in which the Affair of the Elector Palatine was canvaſs'd by the Popiſh and Proteſtant Parties. The latter argu'd ſtrenuouſly for his Reſtoration, the former juſtify'd the Emperor in transferring the Electorate to the Duke of Bavaria. The German Proteſtants had the Palatine's Intereſt ſo much at heart, that without any Sollicitation of the King of Great Britain, who by no means intereſted himſelf ſo much in it, they did of themſelves oblige the Emperor to conſent, that the Inveſtiture of the Duke of Bavaria ſhou'd not be prejudicial to the Children of the Palatine. There was a private Treaty carry'd on by ſome of King James's Miniſters, that the young Prince Palatine ſhou'd be bred up in the Emperor's Court under pretence of marrying his Daughter; but in effect, ſays Wilſon, to be train'd up in the Popiſh Religion. This Matter is touch'd in a Letter of the Conde Olivarez to his Maſter the Catholick King. This will reduce the Prince Elector, that was an Enemy to the Obedience of the Church, by breeding his Son in the Emperor's Court in the Catholick Doctrine.

It did not require more Knowledge than any Prince of the Age had, to have foreſeen that a powerful Aſſiſtance ſent to Count Manſveldt, or the Prince of Orange, and a powerful Negotiation at the Imperial Diet in Conjunction with the Proteſtant Princes, wou'd have recover'd the Palatine's Dominions with more Expedition and Honour than an odious tedious Marriage Treaty, in which King James at laſt gave up the Palatinate, ordering the Earl of Briſtol not to inſiſt upon it as a Condition of the Marriage. What Opinion Foreigners had of the King's Tameneſs and Negligence in this Affair, may be ſeen by that of the Learned and Noble Spanheim. The Proteſtant Welwood, Religion was thereby entirely rooted out of Bohemia, 27. the Electoral Dignity transferr'd from the Palatine Family, the Palatinate itſelf loſt, the Liberty of Germany overthrown; and what muſt be an inexpreſſible Loſs to a Nobleman as much ſuperior to King James in Learning as the King was to him in Dignity, The famous Library at Heidelbergh remov'd to Rome. The Mules that carry'd the Books over the Alps had each a Silver Plate on his Forehead, wherein was engrav'd FERO BIBLIOTHECAM PRINCIPIS PALATINI. All which Miſchiefs are in a great meaſure owing to the Influ- Gondemar ence his Majeſty permitted the crafty Gondemar to lull'd the have over him; inſomuch that the Conde wrote the K. aſleep. Duke of Lerma, I have lull'd King James ſo faſt aſleep, that I hope neither the Cries of his Daughter and her Chilaren, nor the repeated Sollicitations of his Parliament and Subjects on their Behalf, ſhall be able to awaken him.

As full as this cunning Spaniard was of his Con- Gondeceits, he was often rebufft by the Repartees of the mar. Engliſh, who hated him and his Errand. Vere Earl of Oxford being flatter'd by him for his great Actions and Qualities, reply'd, I know of but two memorable things in my Life, I was born in Eighty-eight, and chriſten'd the Fifth of November. As the King was once praiſing the Plenty of Proviſions in England, eſpecially Fiſh and Fowl, and ſaying, One County had more than all Spain: Yes, ſays Gondemar; but my Maſter has the Gold and Silver Mines in the Eaſt and Weſt Indies. And I by my Soule, reply'd the King, have much ado to keep my Men from taking them away from him.

If the Adventures of Prince Charles and Buckingham had come into the Head of Miguel Cervantes, *A.D.*1623. it wou'd have carry'd his Quixotiſm much higher than

*A.D.*1623. than the Knight of Manca did; yet the Earl of Clarendon, or the Oxford Doctors, tell this Story with as much Solemnity, as if the Journey had been the Effect of Matchivillian Policy; whereas it is thus repreſented by other Writers. "It was ſuch an Adventure as Don Quixote never dreamt of; that becauſe the King, the Prince's Father, was poor at home and deſpis'd abroad; which is not deny'd by Authors who deny every thing elſe; therefore by making his only Son an Hoſtage in another King's Court, where the Maxims both of Religion and State were directly contrary, he ſhould think to perſuade the King of Spain to overturn all, and alſo get ſuch a Portion as was fourfold more than any Prince before had: As alſo that the King of Spain ſhou'd reſtore the Palatinate, becauſe the King knew not elſe which way to get it; yet the Journey muſt be made, it being Buckingham's Pleaſure to have it ſo; ſo ſtark blind does Poverty and Covetouſneſs make Mens Underſtanding and Reaſon". This Language is a little rough, as indeed is that Writer's Manner, but the Sentiments are juſt; and the Gravity of the Lord Clarendon's Hiſtory of this Journey turn'd into a Jeſt by a Saying of Archy the King's Fool, an Officer who ſeems to be very ſuperfluous in that Court: When his Majeſty was once merrily diſpos'd, that Under-Courtier told him he muſt change Caps with him. Why? ſays the King. Why? Who, replies Archy, ſent the Prince into Spain? But what, ſaid the King, wilt thou ſay if the Prince comes back again? Why then, quoth the Fool, I will take my Cap from your Head, and ſend it to the King of Spain.

The Prince his Journey to Spain. Coke, 126.

P. 131.

There is more good Senſe couch'd under this Buffoonry of Archy, than in the pompous Relation which takes up ſo many Pages of the Hiſtory of the Rebellion very faithfully copy'd by Archdeacon Echard. The Reaſons which induc'd the Prince to take this Journey are too wild and romantick to find a Place in ſober Hiſtory; but they were back'd to the King with ſome Menaces from Buckingham, as unfit for him to ſpeak as his Maſter to hear. If you go from your Promiſe, his Majeſty having been ſurpriz'd into a Conſent to it, it will ſo diſoblige the Prince that he can never forget it, nor forgive the Raſcal who has been the Cauſe of it; which put an End to the King's Imprecations and Deliberations upon the Matter. The Journey was conſented to, and the two Perſons nam'd who were to attend the Prince and Marquis, both very grateful to his Majeſty, Sir Francis Cottington and Endimion Porter. The Lord Clarendon tells us the former had been the King's Agent in Spain. Wilſon ſays indeed he had been a ſort of Clerk to Sir Charles Cornwallis when he was Ambaſſador there. Porter had been Mr. Edward Villiers's Man; and being taken into Buckingham's Bedchamber was remov'd thence to the Prince's. There was another Attendant who was not to be ſo much entruſted, one Sir Richard Graham, who ſerv'd firſt in Buckingham's Stable. It is not, continues Wilſon, to vilify the Perſons, being Men in this World's Lottery as capable of Advancement as others; but to ſhew in how poor a Bark the King ventur'd the rich Freight, his Son, having only the Marquis to ſteer his Courſe. The Prince and he had falſe Beards, and went by the Names of Jack and Tom Smith; but their profuſe Living render'd their Quality ſuſpected.

The Journey.

At Dover the Mayor took them into Examination, which oblig'd Buckingham to diſcover himſelf. They were then permitted to embark; and landing at Bologne the 18th of February, they rode Poſt to Paris, where they ſaw the Court incog. and in particular the Princeſs Henrietta Maria; whoſe Eyes afterwards ſo inflam'd the Prince's Heart, that, according to Wilſon, it ſet the Three Kingdoms a fire. At Bourdeaux the Governor, the Duke d'Epernon, offer'd them the Civilities of his Houſe; but Cottington, who, ſays my Author, had the leaſt Mien of a Gentleman, let him know his Companions were only travelling for Improvement, and had not Breeding ſuitable to his Grandeur. Grammont, Governor of Bayonne, had ſome Suſpicion of them; but it being in Time of Peace, he ask'd no Queſtions. *A.D.*1623.

Arrival in Spain.

On the 6th of March they arriv'd at Madrid, about 800 Miles in 18 Days from their ſetting out. They alighted at the Earl of Briſtol's Houſe, who was ſtrangely aſtoniſh'd at the Sight, having not been let into the Secret. The King of Spain had receiv'd Information of it, and 'twas preſently rumour'd that ſome great Perſons were arriv'd; who were the next Day known to be the Prince of Wales and Buckingham. The Earl of Briſtol went firſt to Court, and had private Audience of the King, who ſent his prime Favourite and Miniſter the Count-Duke d'Olivarez to congratulate his Highneſs's Arrival; who did it in a moſt ſubmiſſiue manner, the Spaniſh Stiffneſs bending ſo low as to embrace the Prince's Thigh; and in huge ſwelling Words he exaggerated the Honour his Highneſs's Preſence did the Court of Madrid: An Obligation ſo great, that he deſerv'd to have the Infanta thrown into his Arms. He alſo complimented the Marquis of Buckingham, telling him, Now the Prince of England was in Spain, his Maſter and he wou'd divide the World between them. Which Rodomontado and others were ſwallow'd glibly enough. About 10 a-Clock at Night the King of Spain came in a cloſe Coach to viſit the Prince, who having Intimation of his coming met him in the way; and their Interview was with all the endearing Marks of Friendſhip and Affection which cou'd be expected from ſuch great Princes. The next Day came Gondemar, who had been ſucceeded in his Embaſſy in England by the Marquis Inioſa; and after many Compliments in his uſual Strain, he added, I have ſtrange News to tell your Highneſs, for an Engliſhman is this Day ſworn of the Privy Council to the King of Spain; meaning himſelf, who, he ſaid, was an Engliſhman in Heart. The next Day the King and Prince went to take the Air in their Coaches at the Prado, where the latter had the firſt Glimpſe of his fair Miſtreſs. A Day or two after his Highneſs made his publick Entry on Horſeback from the Monaſtery of St. Jerom to the Royal Palace with the ſame State the Kings of Spain uſe at their Coronation, the King himſelf riding under the ſame Canopy, and giving Precedence to the Prince of Wales. The Marquis of Buckingham and the Count-Duke d'Olivarez follow'd the Royal Canopy. Then came the Earl of Briſtol between two of the eldeſt Counſellors of State; and then Sir Walter Aſton between two Spaniſh Courtiers. The Cavalcade was the moſt ſplendid that can be imagin'd; the Grandees, the chief Magiſtrates of Madrid, the Officers of the Guard, and the Guard themſelves glitter'd in Cloth of Gold and Silver, and the Ladies ſhin'd in the Balconies with a Luſtre of Diamonds not to be purchas'd but with the Treaſures of Peru and Mexico. The Scaffolds erected in the Streets for the ſeveral Councils of Spain, were cover'd with the richeſt Tapeſtry; and all the way as the King and Prince paſs'd, they were entertain'd with painted and gilt Pageants, where the beſt Comedians and Dancers ſhew'd the utmoſt of their Skill to divert ſo glorious a Company. The Queen and Infanta were Spectators of the triumphal Entry at the Court Gate; but they ſoon retir'd, the Queen to receive the Prince, and the Infanta to her Apartment. The King and Prince embrac'd when they alighted, and paſs'd immediately to the Queen's Quarter, who receiv'd them at her Chamber Door, and conducted the Prince to the Cloth of State, under which were three equal Chairs, where the Queen ſate in the midſt, the Prince on the right Hand, and the King on the left, with a Circle of the nobleſt and faireſt Youth of both Sexes in the

A.D.1623. Court of Spain. Madam, ſaid the Prince, the Honour of this Day's Solemnity is due to your Majeſty, Sand. 546. which conveys me hither to kiſs your Princely Hand; and ſo he ſtoop'd to her Knee. Sir, ſaid ſhe, It is to your Highneſs, and in ſuch manner as to the Royalty of Spain, due and done to your excellent Merit. After about half an Hour's Converſation in French, ſhe reconducted the King and Prince to her Chamber Door. The King accompany'd his Highneſs to an Apartment prepar'd for him in the Royal Palace. The two Infants, the King's Brothers, receiv'd the Prince of Wales at the Entrance into that Apartment, and all three conducted him to his Bedchamber. An Hour after the Queen's Major Domo brought a Preſent of a fair Baſon of maſſy Gold, a curious embroider'd Night-Gown, and other things of great Value. A Preſent was alſo ſent by the Counteſs d'Olivarez to the Marquis of Buckingham, who, it is ſaid, took it as an Act of Gallantry, and not of Ceremony; and fancy'd the Spaniſh Favourite's Lady encourag'd him to make Advances to her; which were incompatible with the Importance of his Negotiation, and the Severity of the Manners in Spain. The King gave Orders that his Highneſs ſhou'd have Keys to all his private Lodgings, even to his Bedchamber. The Prince was attended by Grandees and Titulados; and had all Honours paid him except that for which he came. He had never any better View of the Infanta than at a Diſtance, tho' he earneſtly ſu'd for it, and was promis'd it from Day to Day by Olivarez. At laſt he was inform'd he cou'd not ſee the Infanta as a Lover till the Diſpenſation came from Rome.

Engliſh Noblemen in Spain.

For the greater Glory of his Highneſs's Court in Spain, the Marquis of Buckingham was created a Duke. The Patent was brought by the Viſcount Doncaſter, now Earl of Carliſle; with whom went ſeveral Engliſh Noblemen and Gentlemen, and others going before and coming after, the Prince was circled with a ſplendid Retinue of his own People; as the Lord Kenſington, Captain of King James's Guard; the Earl of Denbigh, Edward Lord Kimbolton, the Lord Viſcount Rochford, and others. The Outſide of the Reception he met with was gallant and promiſing. But the grand Affair became every Day more intricate. The Spaniards doubted not of making him a Convert; for he ſeem'd to be ſo enamour'd, that they thought he wou'd at any rate have purchas'd the Enjoyment of his beauteous Princeſs. Sanderſon, an Hiſtorian very much in Credit with Echard, affirms, There never were any Propoſals or Deſign to alter the Prince's Religion. But Echard himſelf tells us, "The Pope us'd all his Endeavours to cauſe the "Prince to turn Catholick; the Spaniards pro- "miſ'd him great Aſſiſtance if the Engliſh ſhou'd "rebel; Orations, Proceſſions and pompous Shows "were made to allure him; Popiſh Books were "dedicated, and Popiſh Pictures preſented to him". The Pope himſelf wrote him a Letter, in which, according to Wilſon, he us'd all the Rhetorick of his Cabaliſtical Conſiſtory and holy Chair to charm him to his Obedience. The Archbiſhop of Embrun was told by the Duke of Buckingham, that when the Prince demanded to be admitted into the Infanta's Company, he was refus'd unleſs he wou'd firſt make Profeſſion of the Catholick Religion before ſix or ſeven Witneſſes at leaſt, to which they endeavour'd to perſuade him with all the Artifices imaginable. He was permitted to write to her, as he did ſeveral times, and receiv'd an Anſwer, which the Prince believ'd to be written with the Hand of the Infanta; but it appear'd afterwards to be compos'd by one of her Ladies of Honour. The Prince of Wales return'd a civil Anſwer to the Pope; wherein he ſays, It has been his greateſt Care to be united to his Holineſs; that he had always been far from encouraging Novelties, and to be a Partiſan of any Faction againſt the Catholick Religion. That he will ſeek Occaſion to take away Suſpicion, and deſir'd but one Religion and one Faith; having reſolv'd in himſelf to ſpare nothing that he has in the World, his Eſtate and Life, for a thing ſo pleaſing as the uniting us to the Church of Rome: for no Man in his Wits can think the Pope wou'd unite himſelf to the Church of England. He then implores the Almighty to give his Holineſs Health and Happineſs. How does this agree with Archbiſhop Abbot's Letter to King James when he heard of the Articles in Favour of Papiſts, which were the Conditions of Marriage: I beſeech you to take into Conſideration what that Act is, what the Conſequence may be. By your Act you labour to ſet up the moſt damnable and heretical Doctrine of the Church of Rome, the Whore of Babylon. By this you ſhew yourſelf a Patron of thoſe wicked Doctrines which your Conſcience tells you are ſuperſtitious, idolatrous, and deteſtable. And hereto I add what you have done by ſending the Prince into Spain without the Conſent of your Council, the Privity or Approbation of your People. The Drawers of him into this Action, ſo dangerous to himſelf, ſo deſperate to the Kingdom, will not paſs unqueſtion'd and unpuniſh'd. He cloſes all thus: And now, Sir, do with me what you pleaſe. Why ſhou'd Echard doubt the Truth of King James and the Prince's ſwearing to the Articles which contain'd this Toleration, when the Archbiſhop ſo ſeverely rebukes him for it? His only Reaſon is, that ſo trifling an Author as Nalſon does not ſpeak of it, and that what the Archbiſhop charges the King with directly is not probable. The Articles being ſworn, and the Diſpenſation come from Rome, his Majeſty cry'd out in a Tranſport, All the Devils in Hell cannot break the Match. To which one ſoftly reply'd, There is not a Devil left in Hell; they are all gone to Spain to make it. Wilſon informs us how the Diſpenſation was obtain'd. "The Pope finding by the Prince's Letter, and "ſome other private Intimations, his good Affe- "ction to the Roman See, thought it high time to "dally no longer, but to draw him altogether with "the Cords of Love". The Articles which Nalſon does not ſpeak of, and therefore Echard does not believe them to be true, were confirm'd in Council, and the following Privy-Counſellors ſign'd them as Witneſſes: John Biſhop of Lincoln, Lord Keeper; Lionel Earl of Middleſex, Lord Treaſurer; Henry Viſcount Mandeville, Lord Preſident; Edward Earl of Worceſter, Lord Privy-Seal; Lodowick Duke of Richmond and Lenox, Lord Steward; James Marquis of Hamilton; James Earl of Carliſle; Thomas Earl of Kelley; Oliver Viſcount Grandiſon; Lancelot Biſhop of Wincheſter; George Lord Carew; Arthur Lord Chicheſter; Sir Thomas Edmonds; Sir John Suckling; Sir George Calvert; Sir Edward Conway; Sir Richard Weſton; Sir Julius Cæſar.

Most of theſe Counſellors were profeſs'd or ſuſpected Papiſts, and the others ſet their Hands againſt their Wills. The Articles being ſworn, the King gave the Spaniſh Ambaſſador a Royal Entertainment; and, as Wilſon avers, took a private Oath to obſerve certain other Articles in Favour of the Romaniſts, and for the free Exerciſe of Popery in all his Dominions. The Encouragement this gave the Papiſts appear'd by the Boldneſs and Inſolence of their Prieſts and Jeſuits, who dar'd the Proteſtants to Diſputations, and inſulted them with this Queſtion, Where was your Church before Luther? Many were perverted by their ſophiſtical Arguments; particularly one Edward Bugg, Eſq; a Gentleman of London, 70 Years old, whom they ſeduced in a Fit of Sickneſs. After his Recovery he was troubled in Conſcience, and deſir'd a publick Diſpute; which was held at the Houſe of Sir Humphry Lind between Dr. White and Dr. Featly, Proteſtants, and Father Fiſher and Father Sweet Jeſuits; where Featly handled the Argument with great Diſputations.

*A.D.*1623. great Dexterity, and ſo confounded the Jeſuits, that Mr. Burgs with unſpeakable Satisfaction return'd to the Truth of the Reform'd Religion. There was another Diſputation, which wou'd have been of greater Conſequence had the Perſon perverted been as eminent for Piety as Quality, I mean the Counteſs of Buckingham, the Duke's Mother, who had all along been in ſecret a Papiſt, and now declar'd it openly. The ſame Jeſuit Fiſher was the Counteſs's Champion, and the ſame Dr. White Dean of Carliſle oppos'd him; as did alſo the Lord-Keeper Williams, who adviſ'd the Diſputation to clear the Duke's Character and Biſhop Laud. The Diſpute was held in Preſence of the King, and a numerous Conflux of Perſons of Quality. There were three Conferences, the firſt was manag'd by Dr. White, the ſecond by Biſhop Williams, and the third by Biſhop Laud, his Majeſty being Moderator. The partial Heylin ſays, Biſhop Williams only put in a word or two ſometimes; which is falſe. For the ſecond Conference was manag'd entirely by him, as Biſhop Hacket affirms; and if he was not ſo vain as Laud to print his Diſputation, Biſhop Hacket gives us this Reaſon: He never wrote any thing with Intention to let the World ſee it, unleſs Neceſſity conſtrain'd him. But notwithſtanding the Advantage the Proteſtant Diſputants had in the Argument, the Counteſs remain'd unconverted, knowing full well that neither the King nor her Son had her Converſion at heart.

Biſhop Hacket, 35, 173.

About this time happen'd a very ſad Accident in Blackfriars, where a great Auditory of Papiſts were aſſembled to hear Father Drury preach: The Floor of the Chamber falling down kill'd the Prieſt, and near 100 of his Congregation, maiming and bruiſing moſt of the reſt.

To return to Spain: We muſt obſerve that when the Articles were ſworn, and the Diſpenſation arriv'd, the Infanta was ſtil'd Princeſs of England by thoſe who favour'd the Match, and they were not many; ſo general was the Hatred to our Religion. The Prince was admitted Acceſs to her in Preſence of the King; and great was the Talk of celebrating the Nuptials, and her embarking for England, when on a ſudden News came of the Pope's Death, which render'd the Diſpenſation null. But the Spaniards to keep the Prince in heart promis'd to procure another from the new Pope; and if a new one was not ſoon choſen, to have it from the Dean of the ſacred College of Cardinals. The Prince's Impatience was ſtunn'd at this Delay; and the Court of Spain having given the Duke of Buckingham ſome Occaſion of Diſguſt, it took off the Edge of his Zeal for the Match, and ended in as great Zeal againſt it. Wilſon tells us, that Diſguſt aroſe from a Trick that was play'd him by the Counteſs d'Olivarez, who put a diſtemper'd Strumpet to Bed to him, when the Aſſignation was made for herſelf; and this is the general Report of Hiſtorians, who have written of the Journey to Spain. But the Author or Authors of the Hiſtory of the Rebellion, who affect every where to be as directly againſt the Truth as is the Cauſe they wrote for, reſolv'd not to leave the Character of this faſt Friend to Laud with ſuch a foul Spot, and wipe it off at the Expence of the Counteſs: She was then an old Woman paſt Children, of ſo abject a Preſence, in a word, ſo crooked and deformed that ſhe cou'd not provoke his Appetite. Sir Anthony Welden ſays in ſo many words, She was a very handſome Lady; and it was plotted between her Husband and her to palm a Stew upon Buckingham inſtead of that Beauty. Welden was a Courtier contemporary with this Affair; and it is impoſſible he ſhou'd miſtake a crooked, deform'd old Hag for a beautiful Lady. Sir Edward Peyton, Knight of the Shire for the County of Cambridge, who much frequented the Court at that time, tells us, Olivarez foiſted a foul Courtezan into his Bed, inſtead of his Lady often ſollicited by Buckingham. Sir Walter Aſton, who wiſh'd as well to the Cauſe as the Lord Clarendon, gives good Reaſon to believe the Lady was neither ugly nor coy; for in one of his Letters to the Duke after he was gone he writes, The Condeſſa of Olivarez bids me tell you ſhe kiſſes your Grace's Hands, and prays for you by Name daily. Larrey, a French Hiſtorian, ſpeaks of the Duke's Paſſion for this Counteſs. Buckingham's Reſentment was juſt kindled, when he receiv'd a Letter from the Queen of Bohemia. The Archbiſhop of Embrun writes, that Buckingham ſhew'd him a Letter of the King of Bohemia's dated at the Hague, wherein he intreated him to take care that the Reſtitution of the Palatinate be inſerted in the Marriage Treaty; and as an Acknowledgment of this Favour, and alſo as a Teſtimony of the perpetual Friendſhip he intended to contract with his Grace, he propos'd that his Daughter, about ſeven Years old, ſhou'd be marry'd to the Duke's eldeſt Son; ro which Embrun found him much inclin'd: for he told him the King was not very averſe to it. So much greater was his Affection to his Favourite than to his Family. The Queen of Bohemia in her Letter deſir'd all his Friendſhip in behalf of herſelf and her Children. Accordingly he aggravated the Delays and Provocations of the Spaniards in his Letter to the King. At which his Majeſty was ſo provok'd, that he wrote the Duke to bring back his Son with all Speed; but if his youthful Follies ſhou'd tye him to a long Expectation, he charged him by his Allegiance to come away and leave him. This Letter was immediately ſhewn to the Prince, and ſo wrought upon him, that he took a ſudden Reſolution to return to England; of which the Spaniſh Miniſters having Notice, they were mightily concern'd, it deſtroying all their Hopes of compleating the Prince's Converſion if he ſtaid out the Winter; and in caſe of Conſummation of the Marriage, then they hop'd the Infanta might prove with Child in the Spring, which wou'd give them a Pretence to keep her there till ſhe was deliver'd, that ſo the Child might be bred up a naturaliz'd Spaniard. For whatever they did before, the Spaniards did now ſincerely intend the Match, to ſecure the great Advantages they had obtain'd for the Papiſts in England. The Marriage Articles being ſtil'd at Rome, For the Augmentation and Weal of the Roman Catholicks, Olivarez upbraided Buckingham with a Promiſe that the Prince ſhou'd turn Papiſt. The Duke ſaid it was falſe; and hot Words paſs'd between them to their mutual Reſentment, eſpecially on the Side of Buckingham, who made haſte to embark aboard the Engliſh Fleet at St. Andero, which was ſent to fetch the Infanta. He little regarded Ceremony at his Departure, and told the Count-Duke very frankly, I am oblig'd to the King, Queen, and Infanta in an eternal Tie of Gratitude; but for yourſelf, you have ſo far diſoblig'd me, that I cannot without Flattery make the leaſt Profeſſion of Friendſhip for you. The Duke took no Leave of the Counteſs, and little of any one: he left the Prince to manage his own Buſineſs. His Highneſs took an Oath to ſolemnize the Marriage ten Days after the Diſpenſation came from the new Pope. The King of Spain took an Oath that it ſhou'd be ſolemniz'd. A Procuration was ſeal'd by the Prince to the King and his Brother Don Carlos, and left in the Hands of the Earl of Briſtol, who was not to know the Contents till the Diſpenſation came from Rome. His Highneſs oblig'd the King to ſwear to the Solemnization of the Match, alledging the Infanta might retire into a Cloyſter, and defraud him of a Wife; and there was ſome Reaſon to be jealous of it, for whatever is ſaid of her Inclination to the Marriage, is ſaid to put a Colour on the Folly and Raſhneſs of the Prince's Journey to Spain, and his long Stay there. Who that has read the Catholick King's Letter to Olivarez before-mention'd,

*A.D.*1623. and Olivarez's Anſwer, can believe a Word of it? The Count-Duke ſays the Princeſs was reſolv'd to put herſelf into the Deſcalcas, an Order of bare-footed Nuns, rather than ſhe wou'd marry the Prince of Wales. But Archdeacon Echard, one of the moſt credulous Writers that ever aſſum'd the Title of an Hiſtorian, tells us, becauſe it is for the Credit of King Charles I. She had many Divine Duties, he means Maſſes, perform'd for the Safety of the Prince's Return to England; and that ſhe ſaid at their parting, If the Prince lov'd me, he wou'd ſtay for me; his Highneſs telling her, My Heart can never be out of Anxiety, till you have paſt the intended Voyage, and are ſafe on the Britiſh Land. Echard aſſures us, ſhe ſaid with a Bluſh, what wou'd rather become the Mouth of a formal Pedant, than a gay young Princeſs, If I am in Danger on the Ocean, or diſcompos'd with the rolling brackiſh Waves, I ſhall chear up myſelf, and remember all the Way to whom I am going. Very likely this to come from the Mouth of a Lady who wou'd never let him ſee her but with Ceremony, tho' he was very deſirous of it. He was always ogling her when in her Preſence, and once climb'd up a high Wall to have a Sight of her in a Garden. He preſented her with a Necklace of Pearls of ineſtimable Value, which was return'd upon breaking off the Match; tho' it be now indifferent, ſays Wilſon, whether the French or Spaniſh have them. He alſo made moſt of the Court Lords and Ladies Partakers of his Bounty, and Buckingham enrich'd the Spaniſh Beauties with Diamonds and Pearls.

The Prince's Return.

The King of Spain brought the Prince to the Eſcurial, where he was magnificently entertain'd; and when they parted, his Majeſty told his Highneſs, Nothing in the World cou'd more oblige me, than the Confidence you had in me to put yourſelf in my Hands, being unuſual with Princes. But I, who value my Honour above all earthly Things, am the more endear'd to you, in that you gave me an Opportunity to expreſs it. He proteſted, he earneſtly deſir'd a nearer Conjunction of brotherly Affection with him, for the more entire Union between them. The Prince reply'd, I am ſenſible of thoſe high Favours I have found during my Abode in your Court and Preſence, which has ſet ſuch an Eſtimation on his Worth, that I know not how to value it; but I will leave a Mediatrix who ſhall make good my Defects, if you will do me the Honour, and make me ſo happy, as to preſerve me in the good Opinion of her, my moſt fair, my moſt dear Miſtreſs. They then embraced, and went their ſeveral Ways. A Marble Pillar was erected in the Place as a Monument of their parting. The Prince was attended to St. Andero by Cardinal Zapata, the Marquiſs Aytone, Count Gondemar, Count Monterey, Count Baraias, and other Grandees, who were all royally entertain'd aboard the Engliſh Fleet riding off that Port; but a Tempeſt riſing as they were getting aſhore again, frighted the Dons ſo much, that they were ſoon weary of the Sea-Coaſts, and return'd to Madrid.

Dageant, p. 249.

At St. Andero Cardinal Zapata deliver'd his Highneſs a Packet of Letters ſeal'd up, in which the Prince, when he open'd it, found all the Letters written by him to the Infanta, folded up and ſeal'd as he ſent them. A plain Indication that they reſolv'd he ſhou'd never make any way in her Affections, and never have her, if they cou'd not have whatever they demanded in Favour of Popery and Papiſts. Father Orleans affirms, that King James and Buckingham being both inclin'd to the Church of Rome, deſign'd chiefly by this Match to diſpoſe the Affairs of England to an entire Re-union with the Papal See. Heylin diſcovers another main Deſign of that Treaty, which was, by the Aſſiſtance of an Army of Spaniſh Papiſts, to deſtroy the Puritans in England. His own Words are, The near Alliance with the Court of Spain, wou'd arm the King with Power to ſuppreſs that Faction. I doubt not his Party were very angry with him, and call'd him Idiot, Fool, Babbler, and an hundred Names, for diſcovering a Secret which made the Matter a thouſand times worſe than the Puritans themſelves thought it was.

While the Prince was at Madrid, he receiv'd a Letter from the Pope, Gregory XV, dated April 20th 1623; which was not clandeſtinely deliver'd to him, but by the Pope's Nuntio, in Preſence of the greateſt Court Lords; and the Prince did not fail to ſend his Holineſs a moſt dutiful and complaiſant Anſwer; wherein he ſays, He will make it his Buſineſs for the Remainder of his Life, to have but one Religion and one Faith with the Pope, ſeeing that we believe in one Lord Jeſus Chriſt. And again; 'Tis certain I ſhall never be ſo affectionate to any Thing in the World, as to endeavour an Alliance with a Prince who hath the ſame Sentiments of the true Religion with myſelf. Here he affirms that the Idolatries of the Romiſh Church, the Harlotries of the Whore of Babylon, are the true Religion. If ſo, what then muſt the Proteſtant Church of England be? And what does all the pretended Martyrdom come to? His Behaviour in Spain was agreeable to the pious Sentiments in his Letter to the Pope. Howel, his Secretary, who was with him at Madrid, ſays, He made no Shew of the Proteſtant Religion at the Royal Palace where he lodg'd, but on the contrary, his Carriage in that Reſpect was ſuch, that the Spaniards took him for a good Catholick: And foreign Accounts ſay, He there from a Balcony ſaw a Proceſſion, and bow'd his Knee to the Hoſt; which I do not remember as ſomething ſtrange and ſurprizing, for as during his whole Life and Reign he countenanc'd and favour'd Papiſts, ſo might he from the ſame Principle comply with, and occaſionally conform to Popery. I have ſeen a Vindication of this Letter with as much Reaſon and Eloquence as might be expected in ſo noble a Cauſe, but too mean and vile to deſerve a ſober Anſwer.

Dodona Grove, p. 96.

The Prince arrives in England.

The Fleet ſetting ſail for England, arriv'd at Portſmouth the 6th of October, and on News of his Highneſs's being landed, the whole Kingdom was in a Blaze; for there were few who had not Fears of ſome ill Accident or other happening to him in Spain; and wiſe Men did not impute the King of Spain's letting him go to his Honour. Monſieur Spanheim reflects upon it thus, in his Life of Louiſa Juliana, Daughter to William Prince of Orange, and Mother to the King of Bohemia, Father of the Princeſs Sophia Electreſs of Hanover; ſo nearly were the Houſes of Hanover and Orange related. Never Prince, ſays the learned Spanheim, was more oblig'd to a Siſter than Charles I. was to the Queen of Bohemia, ſince it was only the Conſideration of her and her Children, who were then the next Heirs after him to the Crown of England, that prevail'd with the Court of Spain to permit him to ſee England again.

While the Prince and Buckingham were at St. Andero, the Conduct of the Spaniard in delaying the Marriage, was much aggravated by the Duke, and the Prince reflecting upon it ſeriouſly, grew every Day more and more cool in it. One Clark, a Creature of Buckingham's, was diſpatch'd to Madrid, with Orders to Briſtol not to deliver the Powers left in his Hand, till he had further Directions. Theſe Counſels were too late. The Prince had ſworn to the Marriage, and the Earl of Briſtol was ſo troubled at this Double-dealing, that he reſolv'd to deliver the Procuration within ten Days, if the Diſpenſation came, and juſtify himſelf by the Authority he had receiv'd from the King under the Great Seal of England, unleſs he had a Command from his Majeſty to the contrary within a limited Time. Briſtol had negotiated this Affair in the Reign of Philip III. the Infanta's Father, and built very much on the Merit of having obtain'd a Portion of two Millions, four times as much

*A.D.*1623. much as had ever been given with an Infanta of Spain. It mortify'd him extremely to ſee the Building he had rais'd in ſo tottering a Condition, the Match, as he wiſely conjectur'd, being now very uncertain. After the Prince's Departure, he follow'd the Negotiation cloſely, was daily at the Palace to attend the Infanta, and was aſſiſted in it by the Counteſs de Olivarez. The Duke of Buckingham was jealous he wou'd rather puſh the Matter forward, than put it back; he therefore left Clark behind him to be a Spy upon him. When the Letter about ſtopping the Procuration was deliver'd to Briſtol, he was equally troubled and ſurpriz'd, telling Clark, it muſt for a Time be conceal'd, for he fear'd if the Spaniards ſhou'd come to the Knowledge of it, they wou'd ſtop the Prince.

King James being at Royſton when the Prince and Duke came Poſt to London, they both haſten'd thither, and gave him a fair and plauſible Account of their Proceedings, laying all the Blame on the Delays of the Spaniards and Briſtol's Miſcarriages; which the King, as an indulgent Father to his Son, and a kind Friend to his Favourite, took in current Payment without further Examination. The Prince and Duke fell in with thoſe Lords of the Council who had ever been averſe to the Marriage. Theſe were of Opinion that a Parliament ſhou'd be called, as the beſt Remedy for all Evils; and that the fraudulent Dealings of the Spaniards ſhou'd be laid open. The News of a Parliament to be ſummon'd for that Purpoſe, was receiv'd with univerſal Joy throughout the Nation. An abſolute Command was ſent to Briſtol to ſuſpend the Delivery of the Proxy till Chriſtmas tho' the Diſpenſation came, and to demand the Reſtitution of the Palatinate and Electoral Dignity, which were neglected in the Concluſion of the Treaty. The King cou'd not ſay a Truth himſelf, which all the Kingdom ſaid while 'twas negotiating, It wou'd be very ſtrange in him to receive one Daughter in Joy, and leave another in Sighs and Tears. There was a Clauſe in the Procuration left by the Prince, that the Power of that Inſtrument ſhou'd expire at Chriſtmas; ſo that the Execution of it was to be reſpited till it was invalid. Thus was the Marriage effectually annull'd, and the Deſign kept ſecret for the greater Affront to the Spaniards, who made all ſolemn Proviſions for accompliſhing it, they being now in earneſt after ſuch ample Toleration was granted to the Papiſts. Thus when King James wou'd have ſacrific'd all his true Intereſts to the Marriage, the Spaniards amus'd him with a fraudulent Treaty, and now he is wean'd from it they are as fond of it as ever he had been. An Embaſſy was ſent from Spain to England, to congratulate the Prince's ſafe Arrival. The Ambaſſador was inſtructed to go to Flanders, Germany, and Italy, and make known to the Princes how near the Marriage was to Conſummation.

In the beginning of December, the new Pope's Diſpenſation came to Madrid, upon which Bonfires were made throughout all Spain, and the Artillery was every where fir'd. The Poliſh Envoy at Court, whoſe Errand was to obtain the Infanta for that King's Son, diſappear'd when he underſtood the Diſpenſation was come, and ſaw the Preparations which were making for the Wedding. A Day was ſet to celebrate it, the 9th of January; a Tarras was erected between the Court and the next Church, near a quarter of a Mile in length, cover'd with Tapeſtry, and all Things were appointed in the higheſt State for ſo great a Solemnity. Preſents were providing in the Court of Spain for King James and the Prince of Wales. The Infanta's Family was ſettled, and it ſeems by what we read in Wilſon, the Diſpenſation had made a Conqueſt over her maiden Modeſty. She us'd her beſt Skill amongſt the Sweets of Spain, to cloath her Lord and Husband with ſome Suits of perfum'd Amber Leather, ſome embroider'd with Pearl, and ſome with Gold. She had long practis'd the Engliſh Tongue to make it natural by the Help of her two Jeſuit Tutors Wadſworth and Boniface. She had begun to draw the Letters ſhe intended to ſend the Prince her Husband, and the King her Father-in-law, on the Day of her Eſpouſals. Her Journey into England was reſolv'd about the beginning of March; and in the height of her Expectations, and the Expectations of the King and Kingdom of Spain, fell all this glorious Fabrick at once, the Earl of Briſtol declaring by Command of his Maſter, that without the Reſtitution of the Palatinate and the Electoral Dignity, the Treaty ſhou'd proceed no farther. Four Engliſh Meſſengers, Killegrew, Wood, Grieſly, and Dacres, follow'd each other at the Heels with Diſpatches, confirming the Earl of Briſtol's laſt Inſtructions. The King of Spain gave his Anſwer, That the Palatinate was none of his to give, and the Electorate was in the Power of another; but if the Emperor and Duke of Bavaria would not yield to Reaſon, he wou'd arm himſelf againſt them. Words were now a Coin which King James wou'd not be paid with, tho' he had had no other Payments from Spain ſince he had had any thing to do with her. The Earl of Briſtol receiv'd Inſtructions to demand no more Audiences, nor deliver no more Letters to the Infanta, who was no more ſtil'd Princeſs of England. *A.D.*1623.

Such was the End of a Treaty which had laſted ſeven Years; a ſort of Farce wherein the Engliſh were the Bubbles to the Cataſtrophe, and then the Tables were turn'd on the Spaniards. When one has read the Greek and Roman Hiſtories, where every Thing is grand by itſelf, or by Circumſtances, what a poor Impreſſion muſt a ſeven Years Treaty of Marriage make? How tedious muſt it ſeem to both Writer and Reader? and what a Waſte of Time to both? Yet without this Tranſaction, theſe ſeven Years of this Reign wou'd have been a ſort of Vacuum; and the Neceſſity of ſaying ſomething, is the greateſt Part of its Importance, conſidering how inglorious it was thro' the whole Courſe of it; for the breaking a Marriage which had been ſo ſolemnly ſworn, was certainly as diſhonourable an Action as the negotiating it was a weak one: But it was a politick one, if we conſider the Bent of the Nation, which was generally againſt it. 'Tis ſuppos'd the Expence of the Embaſſies to Spain during thoſe ſeven Years, of the Prince and Duke's romantick Journey, the Preſents given away by all of them, and by the King of England to accompliſh this Match, amounted to a Sum not much leſs than the promis'd Portion. Spaniſh Match broken. Expence of the Negotiation.

'Twas a common Saying concerning King James, that he took Phyſick, and call'd Parliaments both alike, uſing both for meer Need, and not caring for either how little Time they laſted. We have mention'd the Prince's having ſeen the Princeſs Henrietta Maria in France. Her Youth and Beauty gave her ſome Advantage of the Infanta; and the Duke had no difficult Task to alienate his Affections from the King of Spain, and turn them towards a Daughter of France. The Earls of Holland and Carliſle were ſent thither to feel the Pulſe of that Court, which beat as it was wiſh'd, and the Treaty of Marriage was begun and ended in fewer Months than that with Spain continu'd Years. The latter cou'd not handſomely be broken by the King and Prince, who had ſolemnly ſworn to it; and therefore a Parliament is ſummon'd to meet the 12th of February, but the King put it off a Week longer to mourn for the Death of the Duke of Richmond, who was that Morning found dead in his Bed. Ful' 112. A Marriage with Henrietta Maria of France. *A.D.*1624.

On the 19th of February the Parliament met, and his Majeſty made a Speech to them, which had leſs Cant and fewer Texts in it than his former Speeches. He told them he wou'd adviſe with them in Matters relating to his Eſtate and Dignity; Parliament.

A.D.1624. and that as he had endeavour'd by this and the like Ways, to procure and cheriſh the Love of his People towards him, ſo he does hope, and his Hope is exceeded by Faith, that never any King was more belov'd by his Subjects. Mr. Coke deſires his Readers to compare this with what the King ſaid and did laſt Parliament, when he boaſted he had broken the Necks of three Parliaments, which were all that were in his Reign but this. He then ask'd their free Counſels about his Son's Match, the debating of which had formerly given him ſo great Offence. He ſpoke ſlightly of the Prince's Journey to Spain, but highly commended the Duke of Buckingham's Conduct, in whom he ever repoſed the moſt Truſt of his Perſon. He added, as God ſhall judge me, I never thought or meant, or in Word expreſs'd any thing that ſavour'd of a Toleration of Popery. A tremendous Appeal this! Upon which my Author makes theſe Reflections, very natural indeed, but eaſily like to eſcape the Conception of an Hiſtorian, ſuch as Echard, who ſinks all this King's unhappy Qualities, for the ſake of that moſt happy one his Zeal for the Church. " How was Arch-
Coke 148. " biſhop Abbot miſtaken, ſays Coke, when he wrote " his diſſwaſive Letter againſt the King's Proclamation for the Toleration of Religion to Roman " Catholicks? How was my Lord-Keeper Williams " miſtaken, after the King had directed him and " other Commiſſioners to draw up a Pardon for " all Offences paſt by Roman Catholicks, with a " Diſpenſation for thoſe to come in, putting a " Stop to the Prohibition ſent the Judges and Bi- " ſhops to execute any Statute againſt them, If the King had never meant, nor in Words expreſs'd, as God was his Judge, any thing that ſavour'd of a Toleration of Popery. Heylin, Echard, and ſuch Writers, may take Pleaſure in writing ſuch Hiſtory as this, but it muſt needs be ſhocking to all thoſe that do not think his Favour to the rigid Eccleſiaſticks ſufficient to attone for worſe Incidents even than this. His Majeſty referr'd them to the Prince and Buckingham for what related to the breaking off the Spaniſh Match, and concluded thus; I ſpeak as a Chriſtian King, that never any wayfaring Men in the burning, dry, ſandy Deſarts, more thirſted for Water to quench his Thirſt, than I thirſt and long for the happy Succeſs of this Parliament, that the good Iſſue of it may expiate and acquit the fruitleſs Iſſue of the former; which does not ſeem to be ſaid with the greateſt Depth of Wiſdom, ſince this Parliament had by much a Majority of the ſame Members as the laſt; and the Houſe of Commons ſhew'd by the Choice of their Speaker Sir Thomas Crew, that they came together in the ſame Temper, that Gentleman having lain under his Majeſty's Diſpleaſure for doing his Duty, and ſpeaking freely in Parliament: But tho' they knew, ſays Wilſon, there was an Intention of tolerating Popery; pray remember the dreadful Appeal before-mention'd; Yet they were ſilent, they ſeal'd up their Lips, and wou'd not ſee the Light that diſcover'd it. That worthy Patriot Sir Robert Philips, Knight of the Shire for the County of Somerſet, was one of the firſt who ſpoke in this Seſſion; he ſaid, This Day's Debate makes me call to mind the Cuſtoms of the Romans, who had a Feaſt once a Year for their Slaves, at which Time they had liberty to ſpeak. After grievous Sufferings of many violent Oppreſſions, we have, as theſe Slaves had, a Day of Liberty of Speech, but ſhall not, I truſt, be herein Slaves; for we are Freeman, not Bondmen. The Romans after their Feaſt were Slaves again, but it is our Hope to return Freemen. " This Gentleman, ſays a modern Author, left " ſuch an Example of publick Spirit to his Poſte- " rity, as it will be for their Glory to imitate. Warwick has a Fling at this Speech in his Memoirs, tho' he does not mention it. Sir Robert Philips ſpoke again thus; I more fear the Violation of publick Rights at Home than a foreign Enemy; the unaccuſtom'd Violences trench into all we have; our Religion is made vendible by Commiſſions: Alas! Now a Toleration is granted, and Men for pecuniary annual Rents diſpens'd withal, whereby Papiſts, without fear of the Law, practiſe Idolatry, and ſcoff at Parliament and all. Why is there nothing of all this in Echard's Hiſtory? How comes it that thoſe whoſe Duty it is to take Care of our Religion, to teach it and inculcate it, ſeem to have leſs Concern for it than Laymen, whoſe Duty only it is to learn and practiſe? Sir Robert Philips in another Speech ſaid, It is well known the People of this State are under no other Subjection than what they did voluntarily conſent to by the original Contract between King and People; and as there are many Prerogatives and Privileges conferr'd on the King, ſo there are left to the Subject many neceſſary Liberties and Privileges, as appears by the common Laws and Acts of Parliament, notwithſtanding what thoſe two Sycophants Sibthorp and Manwaring have prated in the Pulpit. How different are theſe Things from thoſe in the Archdeacon's Books? Sir Robert Philips, an hundred Years ago, aſſerted the Rights of the original Contract, which Filmer, Brady, the Oxford Decree, Hicks, Leſley, Hill, T--p, Swift, &c. deny with ſo much Aſſurance, and which ſo many others of the Clergy have condemn'd as a Fiction ſince the Revolution. The Houſe went directly to the Buſineſs of the Spaniſh Treaty, in order to which Buckingham made a full Narrative of it before both Houſes in the Banquetting-Houſe, and at the End of every Paſſage, he call'd the Prince to witneſs to the Truth of what he ſaid, who always anſwer'd I or Yes. Throughout all his Diſcourſe, he labour'd to make the Earl of Briſtol as hateful to the Parliament as himſelf had been, laying on him the whole Blame of the Spaniſh Delays, and charging him with deceiving the King in his Advices of the Intentions of that Court, both as to the Marriage and Reſtitution of the Palatinate. He ſaid thoſe Delays put his Highneſs on the Journey to Spain, to which the King was perſuaded to conſent by the Prince's Reaſons: That Briſtol had adviſed him to turn Papiſt to facilitate the Match: That the Spaniards hoping the Toleration wou'd cauſe a Rebellion, offer'd the Prince an Army to ſuppreſs it: That his Highneſs finding he was only delay'd, left a Proxy with Briſtol to conclude the Marriage when the Diſpenſation came, but forbad him to deliver it, which however Briſtol wou'd have done, and made the Eſpouſals, if Grieſly had not brought a Revocation of the Proxy over Night. He clos'd all thus: If the drawing of us out of Darkneſs into Light, did deſerve Thanks, we allow'd it to the Prince, who by the Hazard of his Perſon, and by his great Care and Induſtry, had done this for us. The Duke's Narrative was receiv'd by both Houſes with univerſal Applauſe; old Murmurs were forgotten, and they cou'd ſcarce contain themſelves from acknowledging him to be the Preſerver of the Nation. The Prince having eſcaped the Danger he had thrown himſelf into by the Spaniſh Journey, had made his Royal Perſon more dear to them than ever, as 'tis uſual in human Minds to ſympathize with ſuch as have been in extream Peril, and to turn their Compaſſion into Love. The Duke having been the Companion of the Prince's Dangers, and having led him thro' them, contrary to the Expectations and Fears of the King and Kingdom, the Raſhneſs of his firſt Counſels were forgotten in the Safety of the laſt; and the Merit of breaking the Match more than atton'd for the Offence in forwarding it. Thus from a Grievance the Duke became a Favourite to the People as well as to the King; and the Parliament having taken the Treaty of the Marriage with Spain into Conſideration, adviſ'd the King to break it off, and proclaim open War, offering their Lives and Fortunes for the Reco-

*A.D.*1624 very of the Palatinate, and the Electoral Dignity; ſo dear were our moſt gracious Sovereigns Royal Anceſtors to the good People of England in all and the worſt of Times. Upon this Declaration the King determin'd to ſend inſtantly to Spain, to ſignify to that King, by his Ambaſſador, that the Parliament adviſ'd him to break off the Treaties, and recover the Palatinate by War. A Diſpatch was drawn to this Purpoſe, but the King immediately repented of it, and wrote this Letter to Secretary Conway: "I doubt not you have heard "what a ſtinging Petition againſt the Papiſts the "Lower-Houſe hath ſent to the Higher-Houſe "this Day, that they might jointly preſent it to "me. You know my firm Reſolution not to "make this a War of Religion; and ſeeing I "wou'd be loth to be Coney-catch'd by my Peo-"ple, I pray you ſtay the Poſt that is going into "Spain, till I meet with my Son, who will be "here to-morrow Morning. Do it upon Pretext "of ſome more Letters to ſend by him, and if "he ſhou'd be gone, haſten after him to ſtay "him upon ſome ſuch Pretext, and let none liv-"ing know of this in the Love of me, and be-"fore two in the Afternoon to-morrow ye ſhall "without fail hear from me." The King was not rightly inform'd of the Contents of that Petition, there being no ſuch terrible Thing in it as a War of Religion, only a War for the Recovery of his Son-in-law's Dominions, which he told them in another Speech he would conſider of, after he had thank'd them for their Advice, and repreſented the Difficulties he lay under. He alſo valu'd himſelf for the Title of Rex Pacificus, and ſaid War was Malum neceſſarium, a neceſſary Evil, as ſome ſay of Women. The Parliament, to animate him, offer'd him three entire Subſidies, and three Fifteenths, which they aſſur'd him was the greateſt Aid that ever had been given. The Earl of Clarendon, if it was he who wrote the Hiſtory of the). 275. Rebellion, ſays, They rais'd great Mountains of Promiſes, but never made them good, which too often falls out in ſuch Counſels. Wilſon on the contrary charges the King with promiſing much, and performing little. Such ſort of Slurs on parliamentary Proceedings were common after Queen Elizabeth's Death, the Kings of the Houſe of Stuart having had an Averſion to Parliaments, and with good Reaſon, becauſe their Government cou'd never ſtand the Teſt of them; they therefore put as much Diſgrace on their Counſels as cou'd be done with Safety. Coke aſſures us the Money was not only given, but ſquander'd away in carrying on a French Treaty.

Earl of Briſtol. The War with Spain being the Conſequence of breaking off the Match, and that a Work of the Duke of Buckingham's, the Author of the Hiſtory of the Rebellion tells us, "The King was infi-"nitely offended, and wanted only a reſolute and "brisk Counſellor to aſſiſt him in deſtroying the "Duke, and ſuch a one he promis'd himſelf on "the Arrival of the Earl of Briſtol, whom he had recall'd, and who had the beſt Head of any Miniſter employ'd in the Marriage Treaty, or indeed in any other of King James's Affairs. The Earl had ſome Friends in Parliament, who ſent him Information of what the Duke had ſaid againſt him; and his Lordſhip to prepare the Way for a good Reception at home, wrote to his Grace; "If there "have happen'd any Errors or Miſunderſtandings, "I hope you will paſs them over; and for any "thing that ſhall perſonally concern my particu-"lar, I ſhall labour to give you that Satisfaction "as may preſerve your Friendſhip; and if that "ſhall not ſerve the Turn, I ſhall not be found "unarm'd with Patience againſt any thing that can "happen to me." It was talk'd in Spain that his Life wou'd be in danger, and he was ſo well with that Court, as to have an Offer of Protection and Honour from the King; of which Sir Walter Aſton wrote thus to Secretary Conway: "The Conde *A.D.*1624. "Olivarez told the Earl they had receiv'd large "Advertiſements out of England, by which they "underſtood the hard Meaſure that he was likely "to ſuffer by the Power of his Enemies; and "that the only Crime which they cou'd impute "to him, was for labouring to effect the Marri-"age, which his Maſter cou'd not but take much "to heart; and held himſelf oblig'd to publiſh to "the World the good Service that my Lord had "done unto the King of Great-Britain; and "therefore for the better Encouragement like-"wiſe of his own and all other Miniſters that "ſhou'd truly ſerve their Maſters, he was to of-"fer him a Blank Paper, ſign'd by the King, "wherein his Lordſhip might ſet down his own "Conditions and Demands; which he ſaid he did "not propoſe to corrupt any Servant of his Ma-"jeſty's, but for a publick Declaration of what "was due to his Lordſhip's Proceedings. He ſaid "farther, that in that Offer he laid before him the "Lands and Dignities that were in his Maſter's "Power to diſpoſe of, out of which he left it at "his Pleaſure to chuſe what Eſtate or Honour "he ſhou'd think good." The Earl reply'd, He was very ſorry to hear this Language us'd to him; that his Catholick Majeſty ow'd him nothing, but that what he had done was upon the King his Maſter's Commands, and without any Intention to ſerve Spain; and that howſoever he might have Reaſon to fear the Power of his Enemies, yet he truſted much upon the Innocency of his own Cauſe, and the Juſtice of the King, and that he cou'd not underſtand himſelf in any Danger; but were he ſure to loſe his Head at his Arrival there, he wou'd go to throw himſelf at his Majeſty's Feet and Mercy, and rather there dye upon a Scaffold, than be Duke of Infantada in Spain, the Title which probably was offer'd him.

Before his Arrival in England, the Marquis Inioſa the Spaniſh Ambaſſador, had complain'd by Letters to his Maſter, that he cou'd not procure a private Audience, tho' he had often deſir'd it; and the War being near breaking out, the Marquis and his Brother-Ambaſſador Don Carlo de Colonna, reſolv'd to be reveng'd on the Duke of Buckingham, whom they conceiv'd to be the chief Author of the Neglect they met with: Accordingly they drew up a Paper, wherein they repreſented, "That King James was kept as much a "Priſoner by the Prince and Duke's Emiſſaries, "as ever was King John of France in England; "that the Prince and Duke had contriv'd at Ma-"drid to take the Adminiſtration of the Govern-"ment from him: In order to which a War was "to be begun, and Forces rais'd under that Pre-"tence; that the Duke had traduc'd his Majeſty "as a ſlothful unactive Prince, who abandon'd "his only Daughter and her Children; that he "had divulg'd the King's Secrets with reſpect to "his Majeſty's and their Maſter's Deſigns about "the Hollanders; that he was guilty of corrupt "Dealing with the Ambaſſadors of ſeveral Prin-"ces; and that the Duke encourag'd the Puritans "in their Wiſhes to have the Succeſſion ſettled "on the Princeſs Palatine and her Children, af-"ter the Demiſe of the King." We ſee by this, that the Proteſtants in England always long'd for the Government of the Bohemian Line, and their good Wiſhes were at laſt crown'd with Succeſs in the Reign of our late glorious King and his preſent Majeſty. This Paper contain'd ſeveral bold Untruths, which the Spaniſh Ambaſſadors doubted not wou'd terrify King James, and his Terror make a Breach between him and Buckingham: But it was ſome time before they cou'd get an Opportunity to deliver it. At laſt Inioſa and Don Carlo, being accidentally at Court, when there was but a very thin Circle, Don Carlo held the Prince and Duke in earneſt Diſcourſe, while Inioſa

Inioſa the Spaniſh Ambaſſador's Intrigues.

Engliſh Proteſtants for the Poſterity of the Queen of Bohemia.

A.D.1624. ſlipt the Paper into the King's Hand, with a Wink that he ſhou'd put it into his Pocket. At the Bottom of the Paper they pray'd his Majeſty to admit Don Franciſco Carondelet, Secretary to Inioſa, to a private Audience when the Prince and Duke were in the Houſe of Lords; which was perform'd by the Earl of Kelly, who introduc'd Don Franciſco and a Jeſuit, nam'd Maeſtro, to the King; and they confirm'd the Contents of the Paper, tho' one may well queſtion the Truth of their Evidence. However, it wrought ſo upon the King that it threw him into a Fit of Melancholy; and the next time he ſaw Buckingham he cry'd out, Ah Stenny, Stenny; for ſo he ever call'd him in Familiarity; Wilt thou kill me? At which Buckingham ſtarted, and ſaid, Who, Sir, has abus'd you? His Majeſty recollected that he had gone too far, if he intended to prevent the Miſchief; ſo he ſate ſilent, and the Duke fell into a violent Paſſion, finding ſomebody had been with the King in his Abſence. Upon Enquiry he underſtood it was Father Maeſtro, and that he had been introduc'd by the Earl of Kelly. Buckingham in a Fury demanded of him, How he durſt bring any one to the King without his Leave? Kelly did not diſown it, nor ſhew any Fear of him; which was enough for the Court to foreſee that the Duke's Fall was not ſo far off as he imagin'd. 'Tis true, the King defended him to one of the Spaniſh Miniſters; but cou'd not help ſaying, He had noted him a turbulent Spirit of late, and knew not how to mitigate it; ſo that caſting up the ſame, he doubted it might come to his Turn to pay the Reckoning. Biſhop Hacket in the Life of Biſhop Williams informs us, that in this Perplexity the King prepar'd to take Coach for Windſor, and found a ſlight Cauſe to leave Buckingham behind. As his Majeſty was putting his Foot into the Coach, the Duke beſought him with Tears in his Eyes to let him know the Charge againſt him, ſwearing he wou'd clear himſelf of it, or confeſs it. The King would not ſatisfy him; but expreſs'd his Sorrow, that he was the unhappieſt Man alive, to be forſaken of them that were deareſt to him; and weeping as faſt as the Duke did, he made haſte with the Prince to Windſor. Contrary to this, the Author of the Hiſtory of the Rebellion aſſerts, there appear'd no Marks or Evidence that the King did really leſſen his Affection to him to the Hour of his Death. The Prince of Wales in Diſcourſe with Biſhop Williams ſaid of Buckingham, He hath loſt the good Opinion of my Father, and I myſelf am in little better Condition. The Lord Keeper Williams having Information of what had paſs'd went immediately to the Duke, whom he found lying on his Couch in ſuch Confuſion and Deſperation, that he ſeem'd perfectly ſtupid. He wou'd neither riſe up nor ſpeak, tho' preſs'd to it by the Keeper, who told him, He believ'd God's directing Hand was in it to ſtir up his Grace, to advance him to thoſe Favours which he poſſeſs'd to do him Service at this Extremity. He intreated him to haſten after the King to Windſor, and not to ſtir out of his Preſence, but carry himſelf in the moſt amiable manner to prevent the Acceſs of his Enemies, who probably might put the King upon diſſolving the Parliament, which might prove very fatal to his Grace at that Juncture. The Duke, as waking out of a Dream, took his Advice, thank'd him, and poſted away to Windſor. When he was gone, the Lord Keeper ſet himſelf to diſcover what the Charge was; which he did by means of a Miſtreſs kept by Corondelet the Spaniſh Secretary, who got the whole Secret out of him, and even procur'd a rough Draught of the Paper Inioſa had given the King. He ſoon after had an Opportunity to pump the Contrivance out of Don Frantiſco, who having a Friend that was a Prieſt, and lodg'd in Drury-Lane, the Keeper order'd him to be ſeiz'd on purpoſe to get the Spaniard to his Houſe; for he doubted not he wou'd come to interceed for his Friend. Franciſco earneſtly ſolliciting the Enlargement of the Prieſt, Biſhop Williams reply'd, Wou'd you have me run ſuch a Hazard: he is a dead Man by our Statutes. Now the Eye of the Parliament is ſo vigilant upon the Breach of Juſtice, eſpecially in this Kind, to the ſadding of our godly Men, who deteſt them that creep here out of Seminaries above all Malefactors, becauſe they come with an Intent to pervert them who have liv'd in the Boſom of our Church. "My Lord, ſays Franciſco, let not the Dread of Parliament trouble you; for I can tell you, if you have not heard it, that it is upon Expiration". They then enter'd into a long Converſation, and upon Hopes of obtaining the Prieſt's Liberty, Franciſco open'd himſelf at large concerning Inioſa's Project; which when the Spaniard was gone the Lord Keeper wrote down, and carry'd the Paper to the Prince, who was return'd to St. James's. His Highneſs was equally ſurpriz'd and pleas'd at the Diſcovery, the more for that the Lord Keeper had taken the Pains to vindicate the Duke as to every Article of Inioſa's Charge in the ſame Paper. Buckingham's Surprize and Pleaſure were much greater ſtill. The Prince deliver'd it to the King, who read it deliberately, and at ſeveral Stops ſaid 'twas well, very well. At the End of it he embrac'd both the Prince and Duke, and expreſs'd great Joy at the Detection of the Spaniard's Machinations againſt them. Buckingham put the Prince upon writing a Letter of Complaint to Spain; but the Catholick King wou'd not receive it, knowing the Contents of it, and that it was to demand Satisfaction for Inioſa's Conduct; which was ſo far approv'd of by King Philip, that he ſent the Letter unopen'd to Inioſa, who, as my Author affirms, ſent it thus to the Prince. It will be ſeen in the Sequel of this Hiſtory, how grateful the Prince and Duke were to the Lord Keeper for this good Office, which ſupported them both in the King's Favour and Affection, when they were in the moſt tottering Condition.

Amb. Philips, 123.

As ſoon as the Earl of Briſtol arriv'd in England, he receiv'd a Letter at Dover from the Lord Conway, commanding him in the King's Name to retire to his Houſe, and not come to Court. Upon which the Earl petition'd that he might make his Anſwer in Parliament to any Charge againſt him, to prevent which he was committed to the Tower; and tho' he was ſoon releas'd, it was on Condition he made a Submiſſion, and retir'd into the Country.

Earl of Briſtol order'd to retire.

The Diſgrace of the Earl of Middleſex, which has been ſpoken of, happen'd about this time. He had given the Duke Offence by checking his extravagant Demands on the Treaſury to anſwer his Profuſion in Spain; and Buckingham took hold of this Opportunity to ruin him, when he had the Parliament on his Side. He eaſily got an Impeachment againſt Middleſex ſent from the Houſe of Commons to the Lords. Upon which his Majeſty told him, He was in this Fit of Popularity making a Rod to ſcourge himſelf; and turning to the Prince, who was as forward in this Impeachment as Buckingham, he ſaid, When I am dead you will have your Belly-full of Parliament Impeachments; and will remember to your Sorrow, how much you have contributed to the weakning of the Crown by it. Kings who are for arbitrary Power have all Impeachments in Abhorrence, for that they call the Miniſters of it to Account, and are Barriers to the Liberties of the People. He knew enough of the Diſpoſition of his Son to foreſee that his Government would render frequent Impeachments neceſſary; and this Foreſight is extoll'd as prophetical by Archdeacon Echard.

Parliament.

The Parliament was not in ſo good Humour with the Court, but they began to pry into the ſecret Treaty of Marriage with a French Princeſs, and to expreſs their Fears that it would contribute

to

A.D 1624. to the Growth of Popery. To prevent which they deliver'd a Petition from both Houſes, wherein they pray'd his Majeſty, That upon no Occaſion of Marriage or Treaty, he would take away or ſlacken the Execution of the Laws againſt Jeſuits, Prieſts, and Popiſh Recuſants. The King told them in his Anſwer, that his Heart bled when he heard of the Increaſe of Popery. I hope this will be remember'd when we come to the Archbiſhop of Embrun's Negotiation to convert him and his Kingdoms to that Religion. That it was as Thorns in his Eyes, and Pricks in his Sides. He could not have been an honeſt Man, if it had not been his Deſire to hinder it. If he was not a Martyr, he was ſure he was a Confeſſor, never King having ſuffer'd more ill Tongues. He proteſted he had never diſpens'd with the Laws. How well this agrees with Lord Keeper Williams's Letter to the Judges: "His "Majeſty having reſolv'd to grant ſome Conni- "vance to the Papiſts, hath commanded me to "iſſue Writs under the Broad Seal, requiring you "in every Circuit to diſcharge ſuch as are in Pri- "ſon. You are to make no Niceneſs or Diffi- "culty to extend his princely Favour to them for "any Church Recuſancy whatſoever; as refuſing "the Oaths of Supremacy, diſperſing Popiſh Books, "ſaying of Maſs, or any thing which doth touch "or concern Religion". In the Cloſe of the King's Anſwer to the Petition of both Houſes, he tells them, they had given him the beſt Advice in the World, and might aſſure themſelves that by God's Grace no ſuch Conditions ſhou'd be foiſted in upon any other Treaty whatſoever. And in a Month or two after, ſuch Conditions were agreed to in the French Treaty of Marriage, particularly that all Engliſh Catholicks ſhou'd be no more enquir'd after for their Religion, nor conſtrain'd to take the Oath, which contains ſomething contrary to the Catholick Religion, &c. And generally that they ſhou'd receive more Grace and Liberty in favour of the Alliance with France, than had been promis'd them in Conſideration of that with Spain. Upon all which Wilſon makes theſe juſt Reflections: "If "the King had ſeriouſly conſider'd the Minute of "this Petition, and the very laſt Clauſe, wherein "the Glory of God, and the Safety of his King- "dom ſo much conſiſted, as the Parliament wiſe- "ly expreſs'd and foreſaw, and which the King "ſays is the beſt Advice in the World, and which "he promis'd ſo faithfully to obſerve in the next "Treaty of Marriage for his Son, it might perhaps "have kept the Crown on the Head of his Po- "ſterity: But when Princes break with People in "thoſe things which concern the Honour of God, "God will let their People break with them; "which Maxims hold in all Powers, whether "Kingdoms or Commonwealths".

Amboyna. The Cruelties and Rapine of the Dutch at Amboyna in the Eaſt Indies will never be read by an Engliſhman without Horror and Reſentment. The Engliſh had five Factories in Amboyna, one of the Spice Iſlands called alſo Setibe. The chief Factory was at Amboyna, the Capital of the Iſland, from whence the Engliſh ſupply'd not only Europe, but Perſia, Japan, and other Countries with Spices. They had a Fort at Amboyna for the Security of this valuable Trade; and being better belov'd in the Spice Iſlands than the Dutch, the latter, who were the ſtronger in India, under ſome Pretext ſupriz'd the Fort, and poſſeſs'd themſelves of the Engliſh Factories. This did not ſatisfy them; they reſolv'd to extirpate that Nation in thoſe Parts; and pretending the Engliſh had plotted with the Natives to recover the Fort by Treaſon, they maſſacred ſome of them in a moſt horrible bloody manner, and made the reſt Slaves not only in that Iſland, but at Poleroon and other Places to the Number of 1800. They alſo ſeiz'd their Effects to the Value of 400000 l. This wicked and barbarous Action deſerv'd the moſt exemplary Vengeance. The Honour and Intereſt of England were deeply concern'd in it. But how was it reſented by King James: He only ſent a Meſſage to the Dutch Ambaſſador, that he had never heard nor read a more cruel and impious Act. But he added, I do forgive them, and I hope God will; yet my Son's Son ſhall revenge this Blood, and puniſh ſo horrid a Maſſacre. Neither his Son, nor his Son's Son ſtruck a Stroke to revenge it, unleſs we allow that King Charles the Second's War to deſtroy the Dutch Proteſtants, and facilitate the Conqueſt of their Country by France, was to revenge the Wickedneſs and Cruelty of their Countrymen at Amboyna 50 Years before. Oliver Cromwel indeed when he gave Peace to the Hollanders oblig'd them to make what Satisfaction they cou'd, after a bloody and expenſive War, for the Maſſacre at Amboyna. And ſince the Revenge was taken by him, this barbarous Action wou'd doubtleſs not have been ſo often aggravated by certain Hiſtorians, were it not more to render the Dutch odious, as they are Presbyterians and Republicans, than as they were Enemies to the Trade of England.

A.D. 1624. Coke, 142.

Henrietta Maria of France. With what wonderful Delight does Echard dwell on the Hiſtory of the Treaty of Marriage with the Princeſs Henrietta Maria, Daughter to Henry IV. of France. To which Alliance are in a great meaſure owing all the Miſeries this Kingdom has ever ſince been involved in by the Principles and Practices of the Papiſts. The States General of the United Provinces recommended to the King a Proteſtant Lady of high Quality with a vaſt Fortune; but either not being the Daughter of a King, or being a Proteſtant, his Majeſty wou'd not hearken to the Propoſition. I have mention'd the Earl of Holland's being firſt ſent to Paris on that Errand, where he appear'd ſo forward in the Buſineſs, and Richlieu the prime Miniſter was ſo well inform'd of King James's Apprehenſion of a ſecond Diſappointment in the Marriage of his Son, that tho' Lewis XIII. told the Earl of Holland, he had rather have the Prince of England to be his Brother than any other Man in the World; yet Richlieu ſtood off, telling him his Maſter, who was the eldeſt Son of the Church, ſhou'd not abate any thing of what was granted to the Catholick King. And Coke ſays more was granted to Richlieu than to Olivarez. However, it is a dear Match with both the Earl of Clarendon and Archdeacon Echard, who are almoſt in as much Joy about it as the Bridegroom himſelf. It muſt be on account of that Lady's inveterate Hatred to Presbyterians; for excepting the Good ſhe did England by that excellent Quality, they have not one Reaſon to ſpeak of this Alliance but with Sorrow and Lamentation. The Princeſs's Portion was but 800000 Crowns; of which 2 or 300000 were to be laid out in Jewels, and for the reſt ſhe was to have a Jointure of 40000 l. a Year. If ſhe dy'd childleſs before her Husband, the Moiety of her Portion was to be return'd; and yet this Portion was to be paid at ſeveral Payments. Father Berulle of the Oratory, afterwards Cardinal, was ſent to Rome to obtain a Diſpenſation; and to diſpoſe his Holineſs to it, he was order'd to explain the Benefit this Marriage wou'd be to the Engliſh Papiſts, ſince King James and the Prince wou'd oblige themſelves by Oath no more to enquire after Catholicks, nor puniſh them when diſcover'd; to enlarge all that had been impriſon'd, and reſtore what Money or Goods had been taken from them: in a word, to treat them with more Favour than they cou'd have expected from the Alliance with Spain.

The Marriage in Favour of Papiſts.

Archbp. of Embrun. This was the leaſt of the Papiſts Expectations; for there was now a ſecret Treaty on foot, carry'd on by the Archbiſhop of Embrun and Monſieur Dageant, a Creature of Richlieu's, for the Converſion of the Kingdom to Popery; and it was almoſt brought to Perfection. Dageant tells the Story with ſo many Circumſtances, that Echard thought himſelf

A.D.1624. himſelf obliged to take notice of it; but endeavours to invalidate the Credit of the Author, who writes it thus: "The King of England, at the "Recommendation of our King, did often mitigate and abate the ordinary rigorous Proceedings "againſt the Roman Catholicks in that Country. "He was alſo very well pleas'd with the Propoſitions that were privately offer'd to him on behalf of his Majeſty, tending to reunite him to "the Boſom of the Church; inſomuch that after "ſome reiterated Conferences, which were manag'd to that Effect in the King's Preſence without communicating any thing of it to his Council, the Archbiſhop of Embrun made a Voyage "into England, as it were without any Deſign, in "the Habit and under the Name of a Counſellor "in the Parliament of Grenoble, whom Curioſity "had induc'd to ſee England. He had no ſooner "ſet his Foot on Land at Dover, but the Duke "of Buckingham came to meet him; and having "ſaluted him, whiſper'd him thus in the Ear: "Sir, You who call yourſelf a Counſellor of Grenoble, being the Archbiſhop of Embrun, are very welcome in theſe Dominions: You need not change your Name, nor conceal your Quality, for you ſhall receive nothing but Honour here, eſpecially from the King my Maſter, who hath a particular Eſteem for you. Indeed the King treated him very honourably, granted him ſeveral Favours in behalf of the Catholicks, and even permitted him to adminiſter the Sacrament of Confirmation to them in the Houſe of the Ambaſſador of France. There were near 18000 Perſons to whom nothing was ſaid in the Entry at the Door, or elſewhere, tho' there was a great Concourſe of People to ſee the Ceremony. During the Time he reſided there, he had ſeveral Conferences with the King, whom he ſatisfy'd as to all the Points in Controverſy; and who wrote a large Letter to the Pope, in which he acknowledg'd him as the univerſal Father of the Chriſtian Church, and the Chief of all Catholicks; aſſuring him, that after he had taken care of theſe things to which he had agreed, he wou'd openly declare himſelf. In the mean time he promis'd not to ſuffer any Search to be made in his Kingdom after Prieſts". In his Letter to the Pope, he deſir'd his Holineſs to vouchſafe that the Goods of the Church, which were now the Inheritances of private Families might remain ſo. He ſaid he wou'd have profeſs'd the Catholick Religion before now, but that he deſir'd firſt to gain over his Brother-in-law the King of Denmark, whom under another Pretence he had ſollicited to come to England, where he hop'd to convert him; and they two being joined together, wou'd draw after them almoſt all the Northern Countries. The Duke of Buckingham, and the Engliſh Gentleman who carry'd the King's Letter to the Pope, were the only Perſons of King James's Subjects to whom he diſcover'd theſe Intentions. The Duke had promis'd to follow him, and had made a conſiderable Progreſs in his Converſion, at the ſame time that he pretended to be the Head of the Puritans to preſerve his Popularity in the Parliament, and had conſulted with Dr. Preſton of Cambridge, how the King might ſeize the Dean and Chapter Lands; but he met not that Encouragement from the Doctor which he expected, and that made him the more inclinable to hearken to the Advice of the Lord Keeper Williams, who diſſuaded him from that Project. King James ſollicited Monſieur Dageant to prevail with his Maſter Lewis XIII. to make uſe of his Intereſt with the Electoral Princes who were his Friends, that the Duke of Savoy might be elected King of the Romans, as he deſign'd to do with thoſe Electors who were Friends to him, promiſing to aſſiſt Savoy with Forces in his Election and Inſtalment. But King James was too well known to be truſted by either the French King or Duke of Savoy; and Dageant did not undertake the Affair. What he ſpeaks of the Converſion was confirm'd eleven Years after by the Archbiſhop of Embrun's own Narrative, which he wrote at the Deſire of Cardinal Richlieu, who demanded of him by Letter, Whether there was certainly at that time any Negotiation depending between his Holineſs and the King of Great Britain concerning his Converſion. In Anſwer to which the Archbiſhop wrote a full Relation of his Reception at the Engliſh Court, and his Conferences with King James; in which, beſides what is related by Dageant, we find he had two Hours Audience of his Majeſty at Royſton when he firſt came over; and repreſented the Grievances of the Catholicks with ſuch Succeſs, that he cou'd not but acknowledge the peculiar Providence of God. For at that firſt Meeting, Orders were given to releaſe the Catholicks out of Priſon, and ſuſpend the Execution of the Laws againſt them. The People complain'd of his adminiſtring the Sacrament of Confirmation to ſo numerous a Congregation, but to no purpoſe; his Majeſty anſwering them, He does nothing contrary to my Pleaſure. At this time, and all others, ſays the Archbiſhop, wherein I had the Honour to ſee this King, he was ſo well pleas'd with my Propoſitions, that he freely diſclos'd his Thoughts to me; and when I propos'd to him to grant Liberty of Conſcience to the Papiſts, as the moſt effectual Means to give full Satisfaction to the Pope, he put his Hand upon mine and ſaid, I plainly ſee you are the Perſon appointed by God, in whom I ought to confide and reveal the Secrets of my Heart. Afterwards he very freely acknowledg'd the good Opinion he had conceiv'd of the Catholick Faith, proteſting to me that during his Minority, his Tutors having perceiv'd his Inclination to the Roman Religion, he ran great Hazard of being aſſaſſinated. Then as to the Toleration of Popery, he propos'd to have an Aſſembly of Engliſh Prelates and Divines, in Conjunction with an equal Number of Foreigners to meet at Bologne, after the Marriage with the Princeſs Henrietta Maria was conſummated, with Conſent of the French King and the Pope, to whom he wou'd write concerning it; and that I ſhou'd carry his Letter to the Pope, for whom, he ſaid, he had a great Affection and Reſpect. This Aſſembly were to reunite the Church of England with the French and other Popiſh Churches. It wou'd have extraordinary and admirable Events, ſays the King, who promis'd to negotiate the Matter with the Princes in Germany, and the principal Puritan Lords in England and Scotland, that it might end to the great Advantage of the Catholick Church. The Archbiſhop proceeds: "As ſoon as I arriv'd in France, I gave the "King a particular Account of all things, who "was pleas'd to ſignify that he was very well ſatisfy'd with the good Deſigns of the King of "Great Britain; and declar'd, that a Report was "already ſpread abroad in France, that I had treated with that King about his Converſion, of "which he had been inform'd by ſeveral Perſons. "I reply'd there were the ſame Suſpicions in the "Court of England: That the King of Great Britain had earneſtly enjoin'd me to keep the Matter ſecret, and that I was oblig'd to beſeech his "Majeſty to do the like. But all theſe generous "Reſolutions were made void by King James's "Death. The firſt News of which was brought "me at Maſs by the King himſelf, who expreſs'd "his Regret in theſe Words, All our Hopes of "England are loſt". When the Archbiſhop of Embrun wrote this Narrative for Richlieu, Lewis XIII. was alive, and cou'd not but remember the Converſation he had with him about King James's Converſion to Popery; which that Prelate durſt not have averr'd in the Royal Preſence, and repeated it to the Cardinal Richlieu, had it not been true. Lewis XIII. was ſure to ſee this Narrative, and Embrun wou'd not have mention'd the Diſ-

*A.D.*1624. courſe he had with the King concerning the Converſion of King James, had there been no ſuch Diſcourſe. He adds, That when Buckingham came afterwards to Paris to conclude the Treaty of Marriage with the Princeſs Henrietta Maria, "he perſuaded him to uſe his Endeavours to prevail "with his new King to keep a good Correſpondence with the Pope, and to that End to main- "tain a truſty Catholick Agent at Rome; but he "deſir'd that the Propoſition might come firſt "from the King with whom I diſcours'd on this "Subject; and he conſented to it, ordering me "to impart it to Monſieur Tronſon, that he might "put him in mind of it on the Road as he ac- "company'd the new Queen of England, which "I believe his Majeſty may remember". Such were like to be the happy Effects of a Match, which was to reſtore the ancient Correſpondence between the Pope and King of England, and ſettle an Engliſh Ambaſſador at Rome. But there is no Hint of any Danger from it in the Hiſtory of this Alliance with France written by Archdeacon Echard. The Pope eaſily granted a Diſpenſation for the Marriage with the Princeſs Henrietta Maria. But it did not take effect in this King's Life-time, tho' he liv'd long enough to ſign the Articles; and the Author of Richlieu's Life tells us, he ſwore to releaſe all Catholick Priſoners, and to prohibit for the future their being ill treated for their Religion.

Indeed they were ſo far from being ill treated, that the Parliament, to uſe Wilſon's Words, "bolted "out divers of the Nobility and Gentry of E- "minency, popiſhly affected, that had earth'd them- "ſelves in Places of high Truſt and Power in the "Kingdom, as if they meant to undermine the Na- "tion;" as Francis Earl of Rutland, Sir Thomas Compton, the Earl of Caſtlehaven, the Lord Herbert, the Lord Colcheſter, the Lord Petre, the Lord Morley, the Lord Teinham, the Lord Windſor, the Lord Eure, the Lord Wotton, the Lord Scrope, "Sir William Courtney, Sir Thomas Brudenel, Sir Thomas Somerſet, Sir Gilbert Ireland, Sir Francis Stoners, Sir Anthony Brown, Sir Francis Howard, Sir William Powell, Sir Francis Lacon, Sir Lewis Lewkner, Sir William Auberrie, Sir John Gage, Sir John Shelley, Sir Henry Carvel, Sir Thomas Wiſeman, Sir Thomas Gerrard, Sir John Philpot, Sir Thomas Ruſſel, Sir Henry Bedingfield, Sir William Wray, Sir John Conway, Sir Charles Jones, Sir Ralph Conyers, Sir Thomas Lamplugh, Sir Thomas Savage, Sir William Moſeley, Sir Hugh Beeſton, Sir Thomas Riddal, Sir Marmaduke Wivel, Sir John Townſend, Sir William Norris, Sir Philip Knevet, Sir John Tasborough, Sir William Selbie, Sir Richard Titchborn, Sir John Hall, Sir George Perkins, Sir Thomas Penruddock, Sir Nicholas Sanders, beſides Eſquires and Gentlemen. Theſe were diſpers'd and ſeated in every County, who were not only in Office and Commiſſion, but had Countenance from Court, by which they grew up and flouriſh'd; ſo that their Exuberance hinder'd the Growth of any Goodneſs or Piety their Malice pleas'd to drop upon. We have mention'd Count Manſveldt's March into the Netherlands, when he cou'd no longer maintain himſelf in the Palatinate; and the King to make good Part of his Promiſe to the Parliament, ſent a Man of War, commanded by Sir John Chudleigh to bring him into England, where he was royally entertain'd at St. James's. Orders were ſoon given to raiſe ſix Regiments of Foot of 2000 Men each, to be commanded by the Earl of Lincoln, the Lord Doncaſter, eldeſt Son to the Earl of Carliſle, the Lord Cromwell, Sir Charles Rich, Sir John Burroughs, and Colonel Gray. Theſe Forces were deſign'd to paſs thro' France into Germany, Paſſage having been promis'd them by the French Court, and even an Addition of Strength. Inſtead of which, notwithſtanding the Treaty of Marriage was at that time depending, when the Engliſh Fleet with Manſveldt's Army aboard came before Calais, the French dally'd with them ſo long, that Manſveldt was forc'd to ſail to Zealand, where his Soldiers were ſerv'd as bad as at Calais; and not ſuffer'd to land. Proviſions falling ſhort, the Fleet ſail'd up to Guertenberg in Brabant, where they far'd no better than at Calais and Zealand. Thus by the Detention of the Soldiers ſo long aboard, a Peſtilence broke out and rag'd ſo extremely, that Multitudes were thrown into the Sea; and when afterwards they were ſuffer'd to land in the Territories of the States of the United Provinces, there was not a Moiety of them left; and thoſe that remain'd fit for Service had not only the Spaniards to fight with, but their own Countrymen, whom the King had permitted the Lord Vaux and Sir William Parham to tranſport into Flanders in the Service of the King of Spain. My Author ſays he was preſent when the noble Earl of Southampton dy'd of a Lethargy at Berghen-op-Zoom, as he was conveying to England the Corpſe of the Lord Wriotheſley his eldeſt Son, who dy'd of a burning Fever at Roſendale this Winter. About the ſame time dy'd the Marquis of Hamilton, ſuſpected to be poiſon'd, the Symptoms being very preſumptuous, his Head and Body ſwelling to an exceſſive Bigneſs, full of great Bliſters of various Colours, which with other ſuſpicious Circumſtances caus'd ſuch a Clamour at Court, that Phyſicians were order'd to inſpect the Corpſe; but the Matter, according to Wilſon, was huddled up and little ſpoken, only by Dr. Egleſham a Scotſman, who exclaim'd againſt Buckingham as the Author of it. 'Tis true, poiſoning was more practis'd than it had been at any time in England; for not only Sir Thomas Overbury was murder'd after that manner, but, as we have hinted, there were more than Whiſpers that Prince Henry, the Duke of Richmond, and this Marquis went the ſame way. We are told his Majeſty ſhou'd ſay when he heard of Hamilton's ſudden Death, If the Branches be thus cut down, the Stock cannot continue long. Sir Anthony Welden tells us, the King had ſome Suſpicion that he ſhou'd be ſo ſerv'd by his often ſaying to the Earl of Montgomery in his laſt Sickneſs, For God ſake look I have fair Play.

Papiſts in Places.

*A.D.*1624. Wilſ. 285. Sir E. P. P. 174. *A.D.*1625.

This Sickneſs began with ſome Fits of an Ague, which turn'd to a Tertian, and is not reckon'd dangerous in the Spring. Wilſon thinks his full feeding, and continual Uſe of ſweet Wine, ſet the groſs Humours at work; which was ſufficient to turn his Ague into a Fever, and that enough to carry the greateſt Monarch out of the World without the Help of Poiſon. Six Days before he dy'd the Duke apply'd Plaiſters to the King's Wriſts and Belly; and the Counteſs of Buckingham tamper'd with him in the Abſence of the Doctors, giving him a Medicine to drink. The King complain'd of the Plaiſter, and his Phyſicians diſallow'd of the Drink, inſomuch that ſome of them refus'd to meddle further with him till the Plaiſters were remov'd, his Majeſty finding himſelf the worſe for uſing them, which occaſion'd Droughts, Raving, Fainting, and an intermitting Pulſe. When ſome of the Doctors would have imputed theſe Effects to a Cold taken, the King cry'd, No, no; it is that which I had from Buckingham; who told him, as we read in Wilſon, they were approv'd Medicines, and wou'd do him much good. Some of his Majeſty's Phyſicians and Servants muttering againſt them they were frown'd upon, and others making a Noiſe were forc'd to fly for it. My Author adds, "Tho' the ſtill Voice was ſilenc'd by "the Duke's Power, yet the Clamour made ſo "deep Impreſſions that his Innocence cou'd ne- "ver wear them out. One of Buckingham's great "Provocations was thought to be his Fear, that "the King being now weary of his too much "Greatneſs and Power, wou'd ſet up Briſtol his "deadly Enemy againſt him to pull him down. "This Medicine was one of thoſe thirteen Ar- "ticles

A.D.1625. " ticles that were afterwards laid to his Charge " in Parliament, who may be miſinform'd, " but ſeldom accuſe any upon falſe Rumour. Sir Anthony Welden writes to the ſame Purpoſe: " The Plaiſter ſo tormented him, that he was " glad to have it pull'd off, and with it the Skin " alſo. Buckingham coming into the Chamber " when he was at the Point of Death, an honeſt " Servant of his Majeſty's cry'd, Ah, my Lord, " you have undone us all his poor Servants, tho' you " are ſo well provided you need not care; at which " Buckingham kick'd him, and the Man catching " hold of his Foot, made his Head come firſt to " the Ground. Buckingham getting up, ran to the " dying King's Bed-ſide, Juſtice, for I am abus'd " and wrongfully accus'd: At which the poor King " mournfully fix'd his Eyes upon him, as who wou'd
P. 39. have ſaid not wrongfully. Sir Edward Peyton tells the melancholy Story in a more homely manner: " Thus fill'd with Venom of Greatneſs, he made " no bones to ſend his Majeſty packing to another " World, as appear'd plainly in Parliament;" of which himſelf was a Member, one of the Knights for Cambridgeſhire; by the Witneſs of divers Phyſicians, eſpecially Dr. Ramſey, in full hearing at a Committee. Sir Dudley Diggs, another Member, ſaid, I forbear to ſpeak further of the Plaiſter in regard of the King's Honour. Osborn ſpeaks of the Poiſon. Coke avers the Proof was next to poſitive. The Article concerning that Poiſon is in Ruſhworth, and more at large in Whitlocke. Biſhop Burnet writes, My Father was then in London, and did very much ſuſpect an ill Practice in the Matter; but perhaps Dr. Craig my Mother's Unkle, who was one of the King's Phyſicians, poſſeſs'd him with theſe Apprehenſions, for he was diſgrac'd for ſaying he believed the King was poiſon'd. To theſe Teſtimonies let me add that of a noble Perſon now living,
MS. who told me, that Dr. Craig Phyſician to the King, invited ſix Lords to Supper at the Bear-Tavern at the Bridge-Foot, a Houſe then of as much note as Brawn's is now. The Duke of Lauderdale's Father was one of thoſe Lords: The Doctor then aſſur'd them, that if they had Courage and Intereſt enough to protect him, he wou'd accuſe the Duke of Buckingham of High-Treaſon for poiſoning the King, and wou'd prove it. When he had ſo ſaid, the Lords remain'd ſilent ſome Time; at laſt Lauderdale's Father ſaid, He wou'd not adviſe
P. 113. him to do it for his own ſake; however he was of Opinion they ſhou'd conſider of the Matter, and have another Meeting upon it, but they never met. Dr. Fuller informs us, that the Counteſs of Buckingham contracted much Suſpicion to herſelf and her Son, for applying a Plaiſter to the King's Wriſts and Belly, without the Conſent of his Phyſicians, upon which the King grew worſe, a Piece of it eating down into his Belly. The Phyſicians refus'd to adminiſter Phyſick till the Plaiſters were taken off, and then his Fits were eaſier, as Dr. Chambers teſtify'd; notwithſtanding which the Plaiſters were laid on again contrary to the Advice of the Doctors; and his Majeſty growing worſe, Mr. Hayes, one of the King's Surgeons, was call'd out of his Bed to take them off again. Mr. Baker, a Servant of the Duke's, made a Julep, which the Duke brought to his Majeſty; the King drank twice of it, but refus'd the third time. After his Death a Bill was brought to his Phyſicians to ſign that the Ingredients of the Julep and Plaiſters were ſafe, but moſt of them refus'd it, and gave the ſame in Evidence before a ſelect Committee of Parliament two Years after. Contrary to all theſe Suſpicions and Proofs, the Earl of Clarendon, or ſome body in his Name, affirms, There was not the leaſt Colour or Ground for it, as appear'd upon the moſt malicious Examination; which ſurely is enough to give every impartial Man a juſt Idea of his Impartiality. Echard informs us that the Lord-Keeper Williams, hearing of the King's deſperate Condition, went and preſented himſelf before him. But probably he had not heard that the Duke was afraid of the Lord-Keeper's Attendance, inſomuch that he wou'd not at firſt give him leave to attend, as by this Cloſe of a Letter from the Lord-Keeper to Buckingham, dated the 22d of March, five Days before the King's Death; I am extremely ſorry to hear what a grie- Cabala. vous Fit his Majeſty had this laſt Night. The Plaiſters were apply'd, and the Drink given the 21ſt of March. And now am an humble Suitor again that I may come and look upon his Majeſty, reſolv'd to ſay what I ſhall never ceaſe to ſay, God bleſs him. " It were worth the Knowledge, ſays " Welden, what the King's Confeſſion was, or " what other Expreſſions he made of himſelf; " but that was only known to Biſhop Williams, " who it was thought had babbled ſomething " which incens'd King Charles I. and Buckingham's " Hatred ſo much againſt him." Among the few Things which cou'd be preſerv'd of his Majeſty's Death-bed Sayings, one is that calling to the Prince his Son, he recommended to him to love his intended Wife, but not her Religion; which doubtleſs he never ſaid, tho' 'tis affirm'd by Echard, it agrees ſo little with the Progreſs he had made to unite the Church of England with the Popiſh Churches. And how needleſs was ſuch Advice, if the royal Father had known his Son to be ſo zealous a Proteſtant as the Lord Clarendon repreſents him? Four Days before the King dy'd, he deſir'd to receive the Holy Sacrament; and ſome one asking him, Whether he was prepar'd in Point of Faith and Charity, he ſaid he was, and gave humble Thanks to God for it. He repeated the Articles of the Creed one by one, ſaying at the End of them, I believe them all as they are receiv'd and expounded by that Part of the Catholick Church which is eſtabliſh'd here in England. Whatever I have written of this Faith in my Life, I am now ready to ſeal in my Death; adding, I forgive all Men that have offended me, and deſire to be forgiven by all Chriſtians whom I have in any wiſe offended. Having receiv'd the Sacrament, he profeſs'd ſome Hours after to the Standers-by, They cou'd not imagine what K. James's Eaſe and Comfort he found in himſelf ſince the re- Death. ceiving it; and ſo he gently departed on Suaday the 27th of March, in the ſixtieth Year of his Age, having reign'd in England twenty-two Years and three Days. The Papiſts, who thought themſelves pretty ſure of him, crept much about the Chamber-Door when he was dying, but the Lord-Keeper Williams commanded them, as a Privy-Counſellor, to keep at a greater Diſtance. If they cou'd have got Acceſs to him, we ſhou'd doubtleſs have heard true or falſe, that he dy'd a very good Catholick.

From the Actions of this Prince, one may eaſi- Character. ly form his Character; and like a Picture after the Life, the Blemiſhes muſt be drawn as well as the Beauties, to preſerve the Likeneſs. Notice has been taken that he was a Lover of Peace, and that he valu'd himſelf much on the Title he acquir'd by it of Rex Pacificus. But was not that Love of Peace rather a Fear of War, or a Love of a State of Inaction and Indolence, or an immoderate Deſire of Sport and Paſtime. He is generally allow'd to be a Lover of Learning, but it border'd more upon Pedantry, than roſe to a compleat Under- P. 176. ſtanding. Coke explains what ſort of Learning it was; " The Learning wherein he and his Flatte- " rers boaſted, was a Scandal to his Crown, for " all his Writings againſt Bellarmine and Perrone, " were only Brawls and Contentions, without any " Learning, about the Papal Power of King-killing, " it being before exploded by the Nation, and " the aſſerting ſuch a Power prohibited." This Quality has been touch'd upon elſewhere, and ſo has almoſt all the Qualities of King James in the Courſe of his Hiſtory. Nay, even Heylin, who o-

A.D.1625. therwiſe ſpeaks ſo honourably of his Zeal for the Biſhops, cannot help confeſſing he was not the wiſeſt Man, nor the wiſeſt King of the Britiſh Nations; that tho' he much pleas'd himſelf with boaſting of King-craft, wiſe Men cou'd ſee what that King-craft was; it being no hard Matter to prove, that in all publick Treaties and Negotiations, and many private Conferences and Debates of Council, he was outwitted, and made uſe of to other Mens Ends, by almoſt all that undertook him. He is highly extoll'd for being moſt bountiful; but how was that Bounty diſpens'd, on Favourites and Flatterers? and how was the Money rais'd, by Monopolies, Benevolences, and other unlawful Ways? I have heard the late Duke of Ormond prais'd by the Diſaffected for his Generoſity and Liberality; a Panegyrick which is a Scandal to common Senſe and common Honeſty. He was liberal and generous to his Creatures, but at the Expence of his Creditors: He wou'd give but not pay. King James had nothing of Cruelty in his Nature, unleſs he was ſurpriz'd into it by Fear; and the ſame Diſpoſition that made him hate the ſpilling of Blood in War, turn'd the Bent of his Mind towards Mercy in Peace: But I can't ſay, as Dr. Fuller does, that not one Perſon of Honour was put to Death in his Reign, ſince Sir Walter Raleigh, a Perſon of more Honour than we meet with in his Hiſtory, was not only put to Death, but without Juſtice or Reaſon. His Wiſdom was next to infinite, if we may believe Sir Francis Bacon and other Panegyriſts. Echard quaintly expreſſes it, He caught People's Inclinations at the firſt Rebound; but he confeſſes others thought his Wiſdom was indeed Craft, and had more of Subtilty in diſcovering Miſchiefs, than of Ability in ſurmounting them. He adds, ſome thought this Quality wicked, and thoſe that were ſofter-mouth'd term'd it an exquiſite Skill in Diſſimulation; in which he ſo much delighted, that it ſeems to be the greateſt of all his Blemiſhes. Sir Anthony Welden is very coarſe in his Expreſſions on this Subject, but what he ſays is not the leſs true; He was ſo crafty in petty Things, as the circumventing a Courtier, or changing a Favourite, that a wiſe Man was wont to ſay of him, He was the wiſeſt Fool in Chriſtendom. For my own part, I cannot help diſtinguiſhing between Diſſimulation and Falſhood; I do not think the profeſſing and promiſing a Thing, and not doing it, or doing the contrary, is to diſſemble, but to deceive. Beſides, King James's Diſguiſes were ſo thin, that very weak Eyes might eaſily have ſeen thro' them. Dr. Fuller frankly gives us the Reaſon why this King's Wiſdom is ſo magnify'd by Echard, Sanderſon, Clarendon, and that ſort of Hiſtorians; No King of England ever did ſo much to preſerve the Revenues of the Hierarchy. His Wit, ſays the ſame Doctor, was piercing, tho' his Majeſty was wont to ſtoop to his Mirth. It had the Edge of Pun and Quibble, and did, according to Echard, too often deſcend to inferior Jeſts. The Archdeacon puts the greateſt Affront that can be on the Genius of England, by affirming that the Genius of this King was ſuitable to that of the Nation. Thus when Edward III. and Henry V. were ſpreading the Glory and Terror of their Arms over the Dominions of France; when Henry VIII. was at Bologne and Tournay, and the Engliſh Name was terrible to all its Enemes; when the Genius of the Nation exerted itſelf in breaking the Power and humbling the Pride of Spain, it was exactly like that of King James. It appear'd the ſame afterwards in Eſſex, Fairfax, Blake, in Talmaſh, Churchill, and a thouſand glorious Names, in whom the Genius of England ſhin'd out with ſo much Luſtre. Mr. Echard aſſures us, That in ſpite of Calumny he was eminent for Chaſtity; which was remarkable in a Court ſo looſe and luxurious. The Nonſenſe of which ſpoils the Eulogy; it being impoſſible for a Man who is himſelf very chaſte, to encourage Lewdneſs and Luxury in others; and every one will allow that Luxury and Lewdneſs can never prevail at Court, without the Countenance and Favour of the Sovereign. The ſame Hiſtorian aſſerts, that he was pious and religious; and the next Words are another Inſtance of his Conſiſtency; Yet in his Paſſion he wou'd be guilty of the profaneſt Oaths and Curſes. Welden tells us, he was infinitely inclin'd to Prayer, but more out of Fear than Conſcience. What follows of his Character in general, is taken from Coke; it is expreſſed with Acrimony enough, but has too much Truth in it: "He neglected foreign and domeſtick Affairs to wallow in ſenſual Pleaſures, only "great in making himſelf little, not belov'd at "Home, and contemptible Abroad. He ſquander'd away the ſacred Patrimony of the Crown "amongſt Flatterers and Favourites; he neglected "the Increaſe of the Royal Navy, and ſuffer'd "the Dutch to fiſh on our Coaſts, contrary to "Treaty: He debauch'd and effeminated the Genius of the Engliſh Nation by a diſſolute Life, "that became more ſcandaliz'd for Swearing and "Drinking than in any Age before: He broke "all the Meaſures of Henry VIII. and Queen Elizabeth, by which they made themſelves Arbiters of Chriſtendom. While he was fearful of "all his Enemies, he exercis'd tyrannical Power "over his Parliaments. He ſuffer'd the French "King to ſuppreſs the Reform'd in France, and "the Emperor of Germany to ſubdue the Proteſtants in the Empire, as well as his own Son-"in-law: He left an empty Exchequer, and a "vaſt Debt upon the Crown, at the ſame time "that he was engag'd in a foreign War, the Money that was given him for it being all waſted "on the French Treaty." A.D.1625.

If theſe Things are true, as is ſufficiently ſhewn in his Hiſtory, let the Imitators of the Earl of Clarendon invert his Character, and he will then appear the wiſe, the pious, and the glorious King they wou'd paint him; but the Biſhop of Salisbury in The Hiſtory of his own Times, ſhews what thoſe Authors were who flatter'd him, and what the King was whom they flatter'd. "I have ſeen the "Originals of about twenty Letters he wrote to P. 17. "the Prince and Duke of Buckingham while they "were in Spain, which ſhews a Meanneſs as well "as a Fondneſs that render him very contemptible. The great Figure the Crown of England "had made in Queen Elizabeth's Time, who had "render'd herſelf the Arbiter of Chriſtendom, and "was the Wonder of the Age, was ſo much eclipſed, if not quite darken'd during this Reign, that "King James was become the Scorn of the Age; "and while hungry Writers flatter'd him out of "meaſure at home, he was deſpis'd by all abroad "as a Pedant, without true Judgment, Courage, "or Steadineſs; ſubject to his Favourites, and de-"liver'd up to the Counſels, or rather to the Cor-"ruption of Spain."

King CHARLES the First.

*A.D.*1625. PRINCE Charles, now Charles the First King of England, was at Theobalds when his Father dy'd, and the Lords of the Council attending there, order'd him to be proclaim'd at the Palace Gate; and notify'd it to the Lord Mayor, that the same might be done at London, where News of the King's Death came in Sermon-time. Bishop Laud being then preaching at Court broke off his Discourse, to which his Congregation was too much disturb'd to hearken.

The new King was proclaim'd the same Day in London and Westminster with the usual Solemnities; and in the Evening came to Whitehall in a close Coach, attended by the Duke of Buckingham and that eminent Divine Dr. Preston, who apply'd Comfort now to one, now to the other, on so sad an Occasion; tho' we have Reason to believe they did not want Comfort so much as the Doctor apprehended. Full. 119.

The next Day his Majesty was congratulated on his Accession to the Throne by the Nobility and foreign Ministers; and a Proclamation was publish'd; wherein he promis'd to shew himself a benign and gracious Sovereign.

On the 23d of April the Corpse of the deceas'd King was remov'd from Theobalds to Somerset-House, and carry'd thence in great State on Saturday the 7th of May to Westminster-Abbey, where it was solemnly interr'd, King Charles himself walked as chief Mourner between the Earls of Arundel and Pembroke, his Train born up by twelve Peers. The Funeral Sermon was preach'd by the Lord-Keeper Williams with high Strains of Rhetorick and Commendation, says Echard. How well grounded, one may perceive by the Bishop's commending him for being eminent in War. *A.D.*1625.

The Funeral Solemnities are follow'd with those for the King's Marriage with the Princess Henrietta Maria of France, whose Zeal for the Romish Religion Cardinal Berulle so highly extoll'd to the Pope. The Earls of Holland and Carlisle were at Paris his Majesty's Ambassadors and Commissioners to compleat the Ceremony of the Espousals. The King's Proxy was the Duke de Chevreuse of the House of Guise; and on Sunday the 11th of May N. S. the Marriage was solemniz'd in the Church of Nostre Dame. The French King and Monsieur his Brother gave her to the Duke de Chevreuse. The Cardinal de Richlieu perform'd the Rites according to the Superstition of the Church of Rome. The News of which was not confin'd to the Walls of Paris, says Mr. Echard very elegantly, but resounded thro' all the Streets of London, where it was generally receiv'd with unusual Expressions of the most dilated Joy; which if it had been more true wou'd have been a melancholy Proof of the People's having lost their Senses, as well as their Honour in the last Reign. A Foreigner tells us, French Match.

" It was taken for an ill Omen, that this Marri- Larrey.
" age was celebrated in the immediate Time of " the Funeral, and that the Joy for the one shou'd
" mix with the Grief for the other, there being
" but one Night between the two Ceremonies".

That there were Rejoycings is not to be doubted,

*A.D.*1625. but one may well doubt whether theſe Appearances of Joy were ſo unaffected, as the deep Concern all good Engliſhmen and good Proteſtants were in at the King's marrying a bigotted Papiſt, and entring into Alliance with a Prince, who had render'd himſelf the moſt arbitrary of any Monarch in Europe by the Counſels and Miniſtry of a tyrannical Prieſt. General Ludlow thought thus of it: "In the Beginning of his Reign he marry'd a
P. 2. "Daughter of France, who was not wanting on "her Part to preſs him upon all Occaſions to "purſue the Deſign of enlarging his Power; not "omitting to ſollicit him alſo to mould the Church "of England to a nearer Compliance with the
P. 146. "See of Rome; wherein ſhe was but too well ſe"conded by the corrupt Miniſters of State, whoſe "Influence upon the King was always greater than "cou'd well conſiſt with the Peace and Happi"neſs of England". If ſuch Reflections as theſe cou'd have been conceiv'd by the Hiſtorian Echard, he wou'd not have dwelt with ſo much Delight on the joyous Circumſtances of this Popiſh Wedding. Beſides the Earls of Holland and Carliſle, the Duke of Buckingham and Earl of Montgomery, were ſent to Paris to fetch the Queen. Buckingham behav'd there with ſo much Vanity and Indiſcretion, that it was a Scandal to the vaineſt Court in Europe. He had the Ambition to make his Addreſſes even to the French Queen, and was not ſo ill receiv'd as French Authors wou'd have us believe; nay, one of Larr. *p.*14. them owns "he was ſo far from being ill receiv'd "by the Queen, that he left the Chevalier Bal"thaſer," his Confident, to carry on the Intrigue "with her; that this Agent ſucceeded ſo well, "that he brought him precious Favours from that "Princeſs, as her Garter, a Diamond of great Va"lue. The Cardinal had his Spies; but to no "purpoſe: Thoſe Argos's were deceiv'd; but he "ſtill ſuſpected ſomething, and the Hatred be"tween the two Rivals was redoubled". Buckingham had once contriv'd to pay her a private Viſit, and conſummate the Amour; but the Cardinal had Intimation of that very important Secret, and had the Duke gone to the Aſſignation he wou'd have been aſſaſſinated. He had notice that his Plot was diſcover'd, and gave it over with a Menace, I will ſee and ſpeak with her in ſpite of the Power of France. A true Gaſconade, or rather a Threat, which wou'd have ſounded well in the Mouth of Don Quixot in Purſuit of his charming Dulcinea del Toboſo; for not the Power of England cou'd have forc'd the French Queen out of her enchanted Caſtle. Yet this is the Man whom the Lord Clarendon, or the Oxonians, cry up for his good Parts and Qualities. He was Biſhop Laud's Friend and Patron, and deſerv'd on that Account as much Praiſe as is given him.

Buckingham's Amour with Anne of Auſtria.

Madame de Motteville, who was this Queen's chief Companion and Confident, ſpeaks of it very tenderly; yet one can't help obſerving that the Duke of Buckingham was enough favour'd by the Wife of Lewis the XIIIth to give Jealouſy to her Husband. "No wonder, ſays Motteville ſpeaking "in her Memoirs of the Duke of Buckingham, if "with ſuch amiable Qualities he had ſuch aſpi"ring Thoughts; ſuch a noble, tho' ſo dangerous "and unwarrantable a Paſſion; and that he had "the good Luck to perſuade thoſe who were Wit"neſſes of it, that his Addreſſes were not trouble"ſome. The Queen far from keeping it a Secret "made no Difficulty to tell me afterwards, that "whilſt ſhe was young ſhe cou'd not imagine that "the pleaſing Converſation which is commonly "call'd honourable Gallantry was blameable. "There was a great Rumour about a Walk ſhe "took in the Garden belonging to her Apart"ment, when ſhe went to conduct the Queen of "England to Amiens. All her Retinue were "there; and the Duke of Buckingham advancing "to entertain her with Diſcourſe, Putange, Maſter "of her Horſe, ſtepp'd aſide for a few Moments, *A.D.*1625.
"thinking it ill Manners to hear what the Duke "had to ſay to her. By chance they came to a "By-walk, where they were unobſerv'd; and the "Duke was ſo importunate with her, that ſhe cry'd "out. Putange running to her, ſhe chid him for "leaving her". The Duke of Buckingham's Paſſion put him upon another very bold Action. Tho' he had taken Leave of the Queen-Mother and the Queen at Amiens, in order to conduct the Queen of England to the Sea-ſide, where the Engliſh Fleet waited to tranſport her to Dover; yet he left Henrietta Maria at Boulogne, pretending he had receiv'd an Expreſs from his Maſter, which brought him Orders to treat of an Affair with the Queen-Mother. Accordingly he haſten'd back; and after ſome Diſcourſe with that Queen about his chimerical Negotiations, he went to wait upon Anne of Auſtria, whom he found all alone in her Bed. This Princeſs knew of his coming by Letters from the Dutcheſs de Chevreuſe, one of the Ladies who accompany'd the Queen of England; and ſhe talk'd of it before Madame Nogent with a Smile; ſo that ſhe was not ſo much ſurpriz'd at the Sight of him, as at the Liberty he took in kneeling down by her Bed-ſide, and kiſſing her Sheet with ſuch extraordinary Tranſports, as ſhew'd his Paſſion to be violent to a degree of Diſtraction. The Queen's Confuſion was ſo great, that for a long while ſhe ſaid not a word. But the Counteſs de Launoi told him, it was not the Cuſtom in France to do as he did. To which he reply'd with great Preſence of Mind, I am no Frenchman, and am not oblig'd to conform to the Cuſtom of France. Then addreſſing himſelf to the Queen, he careſs'd her aloud in the tendereſt Expreſſions that cou'd be; and her Majeſty only complain'd that he was too bold, bidding him riſe and be gone. He obey'd; and after having ſeen her again the next Day in Preſence of the whole Court, he departed with a full Reſolution to return again to France as ſoon as poſſible. Every thing relating to him was told Lewis XIII. to the Queen's Diſadvantage, inſomuch that ſeveral of her Domeſticks were turn'd away. Putange, Maſter of her Horſe, was baniſh'd; as were alſo two of her Women Datal and Laporte, and her Phyſician. It is probable that the Jealouſy of Cardinal Richlieu, who was alſo in Love with Anne of Auſtria, was the Occaſion of this Rigor.

The diſmal Conſequences of the French Match are livelily repreſented by Echard himſelf, notwithſtanding the Pains and Pleaſure he took in writing of it. "It prov'd one great Occaſion of the Ca"lamities of the Nation, and againſt the main "Bent and Genius of the People. For almoſt all "the Proteſtants took the alarm, as if the Marri"age had been only made to introduce the Roman "Catholick Religion; King James having in ef"fect condeſcended to many Particulars in Favour "of the Queen's Domeſticks and the Engliſh Pa"piſts, and taken ſo little care for the Education "of the Children to be born of this Marriage, "that unleſs he was reſolv'd to break his Word, "the Articles of the Contract were judg'd to be "a Deſign to ſtrengthen the Romiſh Party in Eng"land". Which being the whole Truth of the Matter, we ſhall make no Flouriſhes upon it, as the Archdeacon has done, only remember that the young Queen was attended to Bologne by Monſieur her Brother, and a numerous Company of Lords and Ladies: That ſhe embark'd aboard an Engliſh Man of War, convoy'd by a Fleet of near 30 Ships of the Royal Navy: That after a tempeſtuous Paſſage ſhe arriv'd at Dover, where the King met her, and receiv'd her with great Marks of Affection and Tenderneſs, and conſummated the Marriage at Canterbury; where, as the reverend Author very gallantly expreſſes himſelf, the Duke de Chevreuſe of the Houſe of Guiſe, who perpetrated the bloody Maſſacre at Paris, reſign'd her to

A.D.1625. thoſe Embraces which he ever preſerv'd with conjugal Purity; of which ſomething will be ſaid hereafter. From Canterbury the Royal Pair went to Graveſend, Where, ſays the Archdeacon, they enter'd their Imperial Barge, and paſt up the River in a triumphant manner; tho' the Triumph appear'd much more at Somerſet-Houſe, where, according to him, a Popiſh Chapel was open'd, a Convent of Capuchin Fryars eſtabliſh'd, and greater Numbers of Prieſts and Jeſuits repair'd than had been ſeen in England together ſince the Reformation, which began to cauſe Uneaſineſs and Murmurs in the People. Nor muſt we forget that amidſt the Exultations for this bleſſed Marriage, the City of London was in Mourning and Lamentation, the moſt dreadful Peſtilence that ever had been known in Europe then raging there, above 40000 dying this Year of the Plague; and a French Hiſtorian repreſents theſe Things very fair, tho' there is no Light of them in Echard and other ſuch Hiſtorians.

A Peſtilence.

" This publick Rejoicing ſuited ill with a Time of " Mourning; fatal Predictions were not wanting " on the Queen's Entry in ſuch a calamitous Con- " juncture, as if ſhe had brought in her Retinue " all the Scourges that were to make the King- " dom deſolate: Such ſaid they was the Entry of " the Horſe of Troy, which was welcom'd with " Shouts of Joy by that City, tho' it contain'd " their Ruin, &c.

Larrey, p. 16.

We have ſeen in the Reign of the Father what Hope the Duke of Buckingham had to continue in the ſame Degree of Favour with the Son. The Archdeacon tells us, King Charles was charm'd with ſome Qualifications which really were very wonderful; and then leaves off without telling us one of them. Larry indeed is more particular, He had not charm'd but bewitch'd him, cauſing him to make Peace and War, to revenge his private Injuries, obliging him to diſſolve his Parliaments to ſave him from being impeach'd; and in ſhort, engaging him in all his Piques; thus ſacrificing his Country, his Religion, his Maſter and Benefactor to his own Ambition. After this manner almoſt all Hiſtorians ſpeak of him, except the Author of The Hiſtory of the Rebellion, whoſe Work is the Reverſe of Fact and Character in almoſt all Places. He aſſures us, He was not by Nature ambitious; and the Experience he had gain'd, if he had liv'd longer, and his Jealouſy of his Maſter's Honour, might have repair'd many Inconveniences, &c. Coke lets us know why it was that the Lord Clarendon and Mr. Echard cry up his Qualifications as really wonderful. " His " only Support was Laud Biſhop of St. David's, " who from being an Informer was become his " Vicegerent; a Liſt of all the eminent Men for " Promotions in the Church is given him; thoſe " whom Laud wou'd have preferr'd were noted O " for Orthodox, and thoſe whom he lik'd not, " were mark'd with P for Puritans. Theſe two " ſtopp'd up both the King's Ears from any o- " ther Doctrine in Church or State, but what " was infus'd by them." It is extremely pleaſant to read what Excuſe the Archdeacon finds for this King's ſacrificing his own and his Peoples Intereſts to Buckingham's Pride and Avarice: A young and good-natur'd Prince, how this tallies with this Prince's Mother's Account of his Perverſeneſs and Obſtinacy, may ſuffer in the Opinion of ſuch as know not how to make candid Allowances for the Heights of Friendſhip, and the Neceſſities of rewarding Services. While he is himſelf making one of the moſt idle Reflections that ever diſgrac'd Hiſtory, he calls in queſtion the Judgment of his Readers, who do not know that a Prince may ruin himſelf and his Subjects out of Love to a Favourite, and finding himſelf under a Neceſſity of rewarding thoſe that never did him any real Service.

Laud.

I ſhall not imitate this ſagacious Hiſtorian in drawing the Characters of Archbiſhop Abbot, Biſhop Williams, and Biſhop Laud. What he ſays of them all is arbitrary and partial, founded on no Facts, and faint Copies of the Lord Clarendon's, which having the ſame Infirmities, I ſhall content myſelf with relating what Perſons did, and let the Reader determine what they were.

A.D.1625.

The Earl of Clarendon, or whoever elſe wrote the Hiſtory that goes by his Name, opens it with two or three Miſrepreſentations, which well conſider'd, will give any impartial Man a Diſguſt to the whole Work. He intimates that the Parliaments of England were not for a War to recover the Palatinate out of Zeal for the Proteſtant Religion, but out of Wantonneſs, and having ſurfeited with uninterrupted Pleaſures. He then ſets forth the ill Condition of the Exchequer at King James's Death, but does not ſay a word of that King's having waſted the Money upon his Minions, which had been given only for that Uſe. The preſent King's Wants put Buckingham upon calling a Parliament to ſupply them, or rather his own. The People of England were ſo much of the ſame Mind as at the laſt Election, that very few new Members were elected.

P. 3.

The Parliament met on Saturday the 18th of June at Weſtminſter, and choſe the laſt Speaker Sir Thomas Crew to fill that Chair. The King made a Speech to them in Subſtance, That the laſt Parliament had engag'd his Father in the War of the Palatinate, which was of Neceſſity to be proſecuted and ſupply'd. He then urg'd his great Wants and Charges, and concluded with a Compliment which had been ſeldom paid by Sovereigns, The veiling his Crown to the two Houſes. The Lord-Keeper Williams ſpoke to the ſame purpoſe: But there was not one Word ſaid in either of their Speeches of any Steps taken towards redreſſing Grievances, and putting the Laws againſt Papiſts in Execution, purſuant to the Petition of the laſt Parliament. No Excuſe was made for miſimploying the Subſidies which they had given for the Palatine War, only a peremptory Demand of more Money to be expended as the King and Buckingham thought fit. Yet, ſays Echard, there were many Reaſons to diſpoſe People to a general Concurrence and Satisfaction; and it cannot be deny'd that there were all the wiſe and juſt Meaſures that a new King cou'd take to render himſelf acceptable to his People, and conſiderable to the World: So notoriouſly againſt Truth and Reaſon, that almoſt all Hiſtorians do deny that there was one wiſe and juſt Meaſure taken. On the contrary, about a Month before the Parliament met, the King order'd the Lord-Keeper to cauſe a Suſpenſion of the Laws againſt Papiſts. The Keeper apprehenſive of his Fall, thought it was to no purpoſe to give his Advice, or to ſcruple thoſe Orders; but when a Warrant came ſoon after from his Majeſty to paſs a Grant for 2000*l.* a Year to the Lord Conway for twenty-one Years, Biſhop Williams boggled at it, telling the King, He durſt not do it for fear of infringing his Duty to his Majeſty, and drawing ſome Danger upon himſelf: The Reaſons he gave with much ado prevail'd; but he made the Lord Conway his Enemy. His Majeſty in the Declaration he ſent the Lord-Keeper for granting full Liberty of Conſcience to Papiſts, notwithſtanding the Rigor of the Laws, whether penal or pecuniary, ſaid, It was his Will they ſhou'd ſtand diſcharg'd. Thus we ſee that in almoſt the firſt Moon of his Reign, he ſet up a deſpotick Power againſt the Conſtitution, and his Will againſt Law, in Purſuance of the Deſign form'd by King James to introduce arbitrary Government, which his Son proſecuted more openly and avowedly. He granted a general Pardon to all Papiſts under Proſecution, not only as Papiſts, but as Criminals, and releas'd twenty Prieſts from Goal: So ſoon did the ſad Effects of the Popiſh Alliance with France appear, and ſo kind was the young King to the young Queen, who, as the reverend Hiſtorian writes with a kind of Tranſport,

A.D.1625. was in the Bloom of her Youth and Beauty, about ſixteen Years of Age, a Lady of excellent Air and Preſence, of a warm Zeal againſt the Church of England, a great Spirit, and of no leſs Vivacity in her Looks than Activity in her Motions. But he ſpeaks not of the Parliament with the ſame Pleaſure: And we are told, that according to the fluctuating and unſteady Counſels of Parliaments, they grew weary of the War; which is not true; they were not weary of the War, they were only grown weary of giving Money to feed the Pride and Luxury of Favourites, who were the Cauſe of the Grievances for which they could have no Redreſs.

P. 32. The Parliament had the ſame tender Sentiments of the Sufferings of the Royal Houſe of Bohemia as the laſt had, but they inſiſted on an Account of the laſt Supply, before they were willing to truſt a laviſh Miniſtry with a new one. They deſir'd to have Grievances redreſs'd, before they enabled the Court to live a while without them, and ſo long continue the Hardſhips the People labour'd under in Spirituals and Temporals.

Ships lent the French King.

It was about ſix Weeks after this King's Acceſſion to the Throne, that the Duke of Buckingham as Lord-High-Admiral, treated with the Marquis d'Effiat the French Miniſter, for a Squadron of Engliſh Men of War to join the French Fleet, which was fitting out againſt the Proteſtants at Rochelle, whoſe Admiral the Duke de Soubiſe was Maſter at Sea, and cou'd relieve that City as Occaſion requir'd. Echard endeavours to excuſe this King's aſſiſting the French Papiſts to deſtroy the only remaining Strength of the Proteſtants in France, on Account that the Treaty for ſo doing was made in King James's Time. A vain Pretence to throw the Odium on the Memory of the Father, to purge the Son of it: As if there was any Treaty made by King James himſelf without the Influence, if not the Direction of the Prince of Wales and Duke of Buckingham, who are now executing what was then agreed upon: And as if the French had not broken that Treaty by refuſing to let Count Manſfeldt land his Army at Calais, and the Engliſh Miniſters might not have recover'd the falſe Step they had made in promiſing Aſſiſtance to the French King againſt the Reform'd in France, had King Charles not been willing to oblige his Brother-in-law and his Queen, by arming the Engliſh Proteſtants againſt their Brethren in France. The reverend Hiſtorian aſſures us, There had been great Increaſe and Affluence of Trade in King James's Reign; and Coke writes, The Trade of the Nation was not only decay'd, but the Seas were ignominiouſly infeſted with Pyrates and Enemies, to the Loſs of very many of the Merchants and Subjects of England; which is the more likely, for that when de Effiat demanded the Men of War that were to join the French Fleet, there was but one, the Vanguard, fit for ſuch Service; ſo Buckingham, by his Power of Lord-Admiral, preſt ſeven great Merchant-Men, and put Officers and Soldiers aboard them; as the Great Neptune Sir Ferdinando Gorge Commander, the Induſtry Capt. James Meyer, the Pearl Capt. Anthony Tench, the Marygold Capt. Thomas Daws, the Loyalty Capt. Jaſper Dare, the Peter and John Capt. John Davis, the Gift of God Capt. Henry Lewen; all under Admiral Pennington in the Vanguard.

P. 189.

P. 190.

On the 8th of May the Duke caus'd Warrants under the Great-Seal to be iſſu'd to ſummon the Companies aboard that had been rais'd for the French Service, giving out that they were to be employ'd againſt Genoa, and no more French Soldiers or Seamen to be ſhipp'd on the Engliſh Ships, than the Engliſh Seamen and Soldiers cou'd maſter. But no ſooner were thoſe Ships arriv'd at Diep, than the Duke de Montmerency, Admiral of France, offer'd to put two hundred Men into the Induſtry, and the like Number into every one of the reſt, declaring they were to fight againſt the City and Inhabitants of Rochelle. Tho Pennington was as good a Tool for ſuch bad Work as cou'd have been employ'd, yet Sir Ferdinando Gorge, the other Captains and their Crews, abhorr'd this Service, refus'd to take the French Men on board, and engage in it, notwithſtanding the Rewards Montmerency tempted them with, and the Threats he made uſe of to frighten them. So Pennington return'd to England. The Duke de Rohan, and the Rochellers, hearing what had happen'd, diſpatch'd Monſieur de la Zouche to ſollicit the King on their Behalf, that the Ships might not return to France in that Employ. Buckingham told him the King his Maſter was oblig'd, and the Ships muſt and ſhou'd go out. This Matter was tranſacting before and after the Seſſion of Parliament, When, as in Echard we read, there had been no Meaſures taken but what were juſt and wiſe; and when, as the Lord Clarendon or the Chriſt-Churchmen affirm, the Duke had given the Parliament no viſible Cauſe of Diſguſt; and again, they had no Crime at all to impute to him. How little Regard have theſe Hiſtorians to ſave Decencies with their Readers, and by preſerving ſome Probability to give a Colour to their Belief. Three Weeks after the Seſſion was open'd, the Lord Conway wrote a Letter as from the King to Vice-Admiral Pennington, ſigni- Coke, 192. fying that the Command of that Squadron was aſſign'd over to the French King, who was to put aboard the Engliſh Ships as many French Men as he pleas'd: But the Captains of the Ships repreſented, that the Propriety of them being in the Merchants, they cou'd not therefore deliver them without ſufficient Security for all Loſſes and Damages which might happen. The Duke de Chevreuſe, the Marquis de Effiat, and Monſieur Villeauclere's, offer'd to be bound for it, but the Captains wou'd not take their Bond; upon which Sir John Hippeſley, and Sir Thomas Dove, remonſtrated to the Duke the Danger of ſuch an Enterprize, and had almoſt diſſuaded him from it; but the French Ambaſſadors perſiſting in the Demand of the Ships, Meyer and Tench who were deputed by the reſt to proteſt againſt the Service, were prevail'd upon to return to Diep, being aſſur'd privately that Means ſhou'd be us'd to prevent their going againſt Rochelle; inſtead of which, when they arriv'd there, they were follow'd by a Letter from the King to Pennington, commanding him poſitively to deliver up the Ships to the Marquis de Effiat for the French King's Service; and in caſe of the Captains Backwardneſs or Refuſal, to uſe all forcible Means to compel them, even to ſinking; P. 194. which no doubt will be remember'd, when the Eccleſiaſtical Hiſtorians are declaiming on his Majeſty's Zeal for the Proteſtant Religion. Pennington threaten'd the Captains accordingly, telling them it was as much as their Lives were worth, if they deliver'd not their Ships to the French; he himſelf bravely ſurrender'd the Vanguard, and commanded the other Captains to follow his Example, which they all refuſing, and immediately weighing Anchor to be gone, Pennington fir'd at them, and forc'd all of them to come back except Sir Ferdinando Gorge, who to the Honour of the Nation and himſelf, ſcorn'd ſo baſe an Action, bore his Fire, and made Sail for England. Mr. Edward Nicholas a Servant of Buckingham, whoſe Merits for future Preferment began on this noble Occaſion, was ſent to Diepe to perſwade the Engliſh Captains to ſerve; but tho' he us'd all his Rhetorick, he prevail'd not, not one of the Officers or Seamen wou'd take French Pay, a poor Gunner excepted, who was ſoon after kill'd in charging a Canoe. Nicholas, that Man of Honour, Integrity, and Virtue, as the above-mention'd Hiſtorians repreſent him, took a Diamond Ring, and a Hatband ſet with Diamonds, which the French Ambaſſador had Orders to give him for his notable Exploit. Such were the firſt Actions of this Reign, ſo prudent

One wou'd have thought that the main Buſineſs of an Engliſh Parliament, was to take Care of the Proteſtant Religion, but the reverend Author tells us, that Care of theirs retarded the main Buſineſs, which was to give Money to be as laudably expended as were the three laſt Subſidies. However, the Houſe not thinking like that Divine, enquir'd into the Execution of the Laws againſt Prieſts and Jeſuits, and complain'd of the Growth of Popery and Arminianiſm; the latter at leaſt under the Protection of Laud and his Brethren; one of whom Mr. Richard Mountague was queſtion'd by them for his Appello Cæſarem, contriv'd, ſays Whitlock, to put a Jealouſy between the King and his Subjects, and to encourage Popery. His Majeſty had not ſate three Months on his Throne, before the Parliament ſaw into the Deſign of the Laudean Prieſthood, to create Jealouſies between him and them; which Jealouſies daily increaſing by the Countenance that was given them, created ſuch a Diviſion as ended in a Civil War. The hiſtorical Archdeacon tells us that Mountague gain'd Reputation by his Writings, and was too hard for the famous Selden; which I think is ſufficient to confirm the Judgment we have made of his Characters. A French Author calls Mountague Un etrange Homme, a ſtrange Mortal; and tho' a Papiſt, owns he play'd Caſaubon a raſcally Trick, Un Vilain Tour; that he abus'd and inſulted the Learned at pleaſure, calling the great Scaliger, Stultus Philoſophus, a Fool of a Philoſopher. A Man of this Temper was a fit Inſtrument to be employ'd by Biſhop Laud. The Book he was queſtion'd for was ſtil'd, with equal Elegance and Modeſty, A new Gag for an old Gooſe. So ingenious and polite are the chief Writers of the Party if it is our good Fortune to light upon them. 'Twas publiſh'd in King James's Reign, taken notice of by the Parliament, and ſuppreſs'd by Archbiſhop Abbot, who diſciplin'd Mountague on that Occaſion, for which this Parliament gave his Grace Thanks, and ſummon'd Mountague to appear at their Bar for reprinting his Book with a Dedication to the King; and a Defence intitled, Appello Cæſarem, which they voted to be contrary to the Articles eſtabliſh'd by Parliament, to tend to the King's Diſhonour, and the Diſturbance of Church and State, obliging him to enter into a Bond of 2000 Pounds to appear again upon Summons. The Spirit of this Reign, and by whom it was influenc'd, appears in the making this obnoxious Prieſt Chaplain to the King in a few Weeks after King James's Death. He wou'd now have been ſeverely cenſur'd, according to Dr. Fuller, had not his Majeſty interpos'd, ſending a Meſſage to the Houſe of Commons, that thoſe Things which were then ſpoken and determined concerning Mountague without his Privity did not pleaſe him; adding, that being his Chaplain, he thought he might have as much Protection as the Servant of an ordinary Burgeſs; which is like the Sophiſtry of the Court Arguments in thoſe Days. No Servant to Lord or Commoner was protected in Offences againſt the publick Peace, and nothing cou'd be more offenſive than endeavouring to create Jealouſies between his Majeſty and his Subjects. This Air appear'd early in the King's Speeches and Meſſages, and agreeing ſo exactly with the Airs and Manners of John Buckeridge Biſhop of Rocheſter, John Howſon Biſhop of Oxford, and William Laud Biſhop of St. Davids, one may eaſily imagine by whoſe Counſels King Charles was guided. Theſe three Biſhops wrote a Letter to Buckingham, which began thus, We are bold to be Suitors to you in Behalf of the Church; and then they plead for Mountague and his Opinions, concluding with ſevere Reflections on the Synod of Dort, perhaps out of Pique to the pious and learned Dr. Carleton Biſhop of Chicheſter, who wrote againſt Mountague; as did alſo Dr. Sutcliffe Dean of Exeter, Mr. Wootton Divinity Profeſſor at Greſham-College, and ſeveral other orthodox Divines; ſo far was Mountague from being the Church, as Laud and his Brethren term'd him, diſtinguiſhing their own rigid Party from the Proteſtant Church of England, and engaging the King in that fatal Diſtinction he conniv'd at, if not encourag'd their perſecuting the moſt religious and worthy Miniſters to the general Diſcontent of the Nation, as will too plainly appear hereafter. Mountague's Buſineſs occaſion'd the firſt Breach between the King and the Houſe of Commons, who were as backward in giving Subſidies as the King was in redreſſing Grievances. They preſented a Petition concerning Religion, as it was in Danger from Popery and falſe Doctors, praying that he wou'd revoke his Order for ſuſpending the penal Laws againſt Papiſts. His Majeſty told them their Addreſs was of too great Importance to give a preciſe Anſwer to it, but he wou'd do it in a little Time; which Echard calls a diſtinct ſatisfactory Anſwer to their Petition for Religion: Indeed it ſo ſatisfy'd the Commons for the preſent, that they gave two Subſidies, the Papiſts to pay double.

The Peſtilence all this while increaſing, and the Members of Parliament flying from it into the Country before the Supplies which were ſtill wanting were voted, it was propos'd in Council at Hampton-Court three Weeks after the opening the Seſſion at Weſtminſter, to adjourn it to Oxford. This Motion came from Buckingham, but the Lord-Keeper Williams, who was then in very good Terms with the Duke, oppos'd it, ſaying, It was not another Place, but another Temper, that muſt do his Majeſty's Buſineſs; that the Plague had ſo overſpread the whole Land, no Man who travell'd knew where to lodge in Safety; for which Reaſon the Lords and Commons wou'd not take it kindly to be forced abroad in ſuch a mortal Time; and 'tis likely when they come together, they will vote out of Diſcontent and Diſpleaſure; that his Majeſty was ill-adviſ'd to give Offences, tho' ſmall ones, in the beginning of his Reign. Admirable Counſel, had there been any Diſpoſition in the Prince to hearken to it. Mountague's Affair was but a ſmall Offence, conſidering the Smallneſs of the Man; but the King's intermeddling in it, as it were out of Spite to the Parliament, drew it into Conſequence. Biſhop Williams again, The Houſe of Commons hath given two Subſidies, and tho' they remove to Oxford, yet it is the ſame Seſſion; wherefore if they alledge, that it is not uſual for the Houſe to give twice in a Seſſion, tho' I wiſh heartily they wou'd, yet how ſhall we perſu[illegible]bem out of their Cuſtom if they inſiſt upon : And it is not prudent in the King to run a probable Hazard of a Denial. To all this the Duke reply'd, That publick Neceſſity might ſway more than one Man's Jealouſy; upon which the Lord-Keeper requeſted that he might ſpeak a few Words with the King in private; and it being granted, he told his Majeſty, "That the Lord "Duke had Enemies in the Houſe of Commons, "who had contrived Complaints, and made them "ready to be preferr'd, and wou'd ſpend the Time "at Oxford about them; and what Folly it were "to continue a Seſſion that had no other Aim but "to bring the Duke upon the Stage? But if your "Majeſty think that this is like a Hectick, quickly "known, but hardly cur'd, my humble Motion "is, that this Malady or Malice, call it which you "will, may ſleep till after Chriſtmas: For I hope "to give ſuch Account by that Time, by under-"taking with the chief Sticklers, that they ſhall "ſuperſede from their Bitterneſs againſt your great "Servant, and that Paſſage to your weighty Coun-"ſel ſhall be made ſmooth and peaceable." And why do you conceal this from Buckingham? ſays the King: the Keeper reply'd, Good Lord, Sir, fain wou'd I begin at that End, but he will not hear me

A.D.1625. with Moderation. 'Tis thought this Diſcovery made by Biſhop Williams, compleated the Duke's Hatred againſt him, and haſten'd his Fall: For Buckingham now grown jealous, the natural Effect of Danger, defy'd the Lord-Keeper and his Confederates to do their worſt, and perſiſted in his Deſire to have the Parliament remov'd to Oxford that he might clear himſelf: So raſh, ſo inconſiderate were this King's Counſellors who had his Ear. The Lord Clarendon, or whoever drew thoſe Characters, tells us the Duke was a wiſer Man than any Servant or Friend he had. It is not in this Character only, but in all the reſt that the Author ſeems to affect to be as directly contrary to the Truth and Likeneſs as poſſible. Was the Duke wiſer than the Lord-Keeper? For it is not pretended that Williams wou'd not on any Terms have preſerv'd his Friendſhip, had not Buckingham been weary of being his Friend. It is plain by the wiſe and faithful Counſel Biſhop Williams gave for his Preſervation, that the Lord-Keeper exceeded the Duke of Buckingham as much in Ability as Buckingham exceeded him in Power. King James knew this full well, and told the Earl of Carliſle, If I had ſent Williams into Spain with my Son, I had kept Hearts Eaſe and Honour, both which he wanted. The Characteriſticks in the Hiſtory of the Rebellion, are for the moſt part made up of the like arbitrary Aſſertions, without the leaſt Proofs from the Facts, which will be very eaſy for me to prove in the general, or in particular Inſtances, when I am call'd upon, if I have not done it ſufficiently already. The Lord-Keeper had promis'd the Parliament at their breaking up, that the Laws againſt Popiſh Prieſts ſhould be put in Execution; yet on the very next Day, the 12th of Auguſt, his Majeſty caus'd a Warrant to be ſeal'd to pardon ſix of them. Biſhop Williams thought it a burning Shame for him who was of the reform'd Religion, to affix the Seal to ſuch a Warrant, which was brought twice to him, and he both Times refus'd to paſs it. This Deſign was to enſnare him, but another was caught by it. The Duke of Buckingham moved the King to command it be ſeal'd in his Sight at Hampton-Court, which when it came to be known, took off the Odium from the Keeper, and threw it upon the Duke.

Ambroſe Philips, p. 163.

On the firſt of Auguſt the Parliament met at Oxford in the Divinity-School. Heylin and Echard, two Authors of equal Credit and Diſcretion, ſeem to think the Speaker of the Houſe of Commons had too much Honour done him in being permitted to ſit in the Profeſſor's Chair. The judicious Heylin ſays, The placing the Speaker there, firſt put them into a Conceit, that the determining in all Points and Controverſies in Divinity did belong to them. As much as to ſay, if he had been plac'd in the Profeſſor of Muſick's Chair, he wou'd immediately have fal'n a fidaling. Echard, every whit as judicious as Heylin, apes even this ſtupid ridiculous Reflection. Sir Thomas Crew's being plac'd in the Divinity-Chair, was thought ſo much to inſpire the Houſe of Commons with controverſial Knowledge, that from thence no Parliaments were without a Committee for Religion. After this wiſe way of thinking, if Serjeant Crew had ſate himſelf down in the Coronation-Chair at Weſtminſter, Crew inſtead of Cromwell wou'd have laid violent Hands on the Crown. There is nothing in Hiſtory ſo ſilly as this childiſh Reflection of theſe two hiſtorical Prieſts, let the Reader be Judge, and aſſure himſelf that there are not two Hiſtorians of their Kidney in more Eſtimation among them; which ſhews us how well they are furniſh'd with Hiſtory. The Speaker had no ſooner taken this envy'd Seat, than Sir Robert Philips of Somerſetſhire, complain'd he had ſeen the above-mention'd Pardon for the ſix Fryars and Jeſuits, bearing Date the very Day after the Lord-Keeper had in his Majeſty's Name promis'd the Laws againſt them ſhou'd be rigorouſly put in Execution. The Houſe was immediately in a Flame, finding themſelves dealt with ſo doubly. The Cry was at firſt againſt the Keeper, who being a Proteſtant Biſhop, ſhou'd not have dar'd to have done ſuch Wrong to his Religion. The Lord-Keeper was clear'd by the Evidence of Bembo Servant to the Clerk of the Crown, who confeſs'd he brought it to the Seal, but it ſtopp'd there. It was afterwards ſent by Secretary Conway's Servant Derick, but it ſtill was ſtopp'd, till the Duke, as has been obſerv'd, got the King to command that it ſhou'd be ſeal'd at Hampton-Court. Both King and Duke were very uneaſy at this Diſcovery, and truly they had good Reaſon to be ſo, for this Proceeding was as mean as it was dangerous; to promiſe a Thing one Day, and do the contrary the next, in Defiance of the Laws, was a very hopeful beginning of a Reign, and cou'd not but preſage it wou'd have as happy an End. The impartial Author of the Hiſtory of the Rebellion, ſinks the lending the French King Ships to deſtroy the Proteſtants at Rochelle. Sir John Pennington had Intelligence that the Engliſh Ships were intended againſt Rochelle; he told the King of it, whoſe Anſwer was, Pennington go and deliver your Ships; which he wou'd not do without a Warrant under his Majeſty's own Hand for his Diſcharge, which the King gave him. The French making ſome Difficulty to reſtore thoſe Ships, the ſame Pennington was forc'd to ſeize above an hundred French Veſſels by way of Repriſal, and then the Engliſh Ships were deliver'd. 'Tis worth remembring that only two Engliſh Sailors aſſiſted againſt Rochelle in the Ships King Charles lent King Lewis, ſuch an Abhorrence of that Service had our Seamen, it being againſt Proteſtants, and to enſlave a free People. The Author or Authors of the Hiſtory of the Rebellion, ſink alſo this Pardon to the Popiſh Prieſts as not within his Period, but he takes Notice, and wrong Notice too, of the Proceedings of this very Parliament concerning the Duke of Buckingham, and the War for the Recovery of the Palatinate. The Commons deſir'd a Conference with the Lords in Chriſt-Church, where Sir Edward Coke open'd the Complaint againſt Conway, not without glancing at the Duke, who was accus'd alſo for abuſing the King's Favour, by aſſuming to himſelf the Diſpoſal of all Offices by Sea and Land. Biſhop Williams haſtened to Woodſtock, where the King and Duke then were; and after having acquainted the Duke with the Diſpoſition of both Houſes, he ſpoke to him as follows; My Lord, I am come unſent for, yet becauſe your Grace made me, I muſt and will ſerve you, tho' you are one that will deſtroy that which you made. Let me periſh, I deſerve to periſh ten times, if I were not as earneſt as any Friend to ſave you from periſhing. The Sword is the Cauſe of the Wound, but the Buckler is in Fault if it do not defend the Body. You brought the two Houſes hither, my Lord, againſt my Counſel: My Suſpicion is confirm'd, that your Grace will ſuffer for it. What's now to be done, but to wind up the Seſſion quickly. The Occaſion is for you, becauſe two Colleges in the Univerſity, and two Houſes in the Town, are viſited with the Plague; let the Members be promis'd fairly and friendly, that they may meet again after Chriſtmas; requite the Injuries done to you with Benefits not Revenge, for no Man that is wiſe will ſhew himſelf angry with the People of England. Confer one or two of your great Places upon your ſafeſt Friends, ſo ſhall you go leſs in Envy, and not leſs in Power. At the Cloſe of this Seſſion declare yourſelf to be the forwardeſt to ſerve the King and Commonwealth, and to give the Parliament Satisfaction. Fear them not when they meet again in the ſame Body, whoſe ill Affections I expect to mitigate. But if they proceed, truſt me with your Cauſe, when it is tranſmitted to the Houſe of Lords, and I will lay my Life upon it to preſerve you from Sentence

Parliament at Oxford.

A.D.1625. Sentence on the leaſt Diſhonour. To all which, the Duke reply'd only, I will look whom I truſt to, and ſo flung out of the Room with Threats in his Countenance. I am ſenſible the Keeper did this more to ſerve himſelf than his Patron; but the Advice was good, and let the Motive be what it will, a wiſe Man will always embrace the Counſel of Wiſdom. Mr. Ambroſe Philips charges Heylin on this Occaſion with a notorious Falſity, to the great Detriment of the Biſhop's good Name, as if he had been baſe and ungrateful to the Duke, whereas he prov'd in a Paper he deliver'd the King about a Week after, that he had done his utmoſt, and more than any one, to ſcreen the Duke from parliamentary Proſecution.

Life of Ld-Keeper Williams, p. 167.

The Committee of Religion ſummon'd Mountague the Gagger to appear before them according to his Bail-Bond, and appointed his Book to be examin'd again, but the Houſe did not ſit long enough to bring him to Puniſhment. The Secretaries Conway and Cook, after the King had reminded them of the War he had been led into, and the Supplies wanting to carry it on, urg'd new Reaſons for them from the State of Affairs in Germany, France, the Low-Countries, Denmark, Sweden, and Italy. The Lord-Treaſurer added the Debts of King James above 300000 Pounds, his Majeſty's Debts and Expences in four Months time above 200000 Pounds, and 300000 Pounds for the Navy, in all about Two Millions; tho' it was not likely the Miniſtry cou'd obtain near ſuch a Sum, when the Parliament talk'd of nothing but the Miſapplication of the Treaſury, Grievances, Buckingham, and Mountague. When the Miniſters mention'd an intended War, the Houſe deſir'd to know what War? This ſo reaſonable a Motion was ill taken, and ſcorn'd by the King: For even then, ſays the Hiſtorian, it evidently appear'd that he meant to rule by Will and Pleaſure. To ſhew his Reſentment at this Motion, he commanded Serjeant Glanville to attend the Fleet at Plymouth, ſaying, He ſhall there underſtand what he ſo much deſir'd to know; and breaking this Parliament before they had given him Money, he ſent Sir Sackville Crow with the Crown-Jewels to pawn them in the Netherlands.

Reybold. The King intends arbitrary Government.

We are often told by Echard, and other ſuch Hiſtory Writers, that the laſt Parliament, as was remember'd to this, led King James into the War, and that the latter left his Son in it. The Author of the Hiſtory of the Rebellion charges them as wavering and inconſtant for it. But, what an impartial Author he is? Takes not the leaſt Notice of the Reaſons given in this Houſe of Commons for poſtponing a further Supply: Tho' the former Parliament did engage the late King in a War, this is not oblig'd to be carry'd blindly, where ſound Counſels are wanting: It is not uſual to grant Subſidies twice in one Parliament, and no Grievances redreſs'd. It was ſpoken by Sir John Elliot, who deſir'd to know, whether the Money deſign'd for the Palatinate, did not maintain the Ships ſent againſt Rochelle, which was levell'd againſt Buckingham: Yet Echard ſo wiſely copying the Hiſtory of the Rebellion, even in Falſity affirms, this Parliament had no Crime to impute to him but what was as well known to the laſt. He and his Original might have ſaid as well known before the Crime was committed as after. Cou'd the ſending Ships againſt the Proteſtants in France, cou'd the pardoning the ſix Romiſh Prieſts, contrary to the King's Word, be known to the laſt Parliament? The preſent Houſe of Commons, whom they wrongfully thus abuſe, knew him ſo much better now than he was known laſt Year, that they order'd Enquiry to be made, Whether he broke not the Marriage with Spain out of Spleen to Olivarez; and whether he made not the Match with France upon harder Terms? Was the Match with France better known before than after it was made? The Parliament cou'd eaſily prove, that two Millions of Money was ſtipulated by the Conditions with Spain, and but 800000 Crowns by thoſe with France, which certainly were much harder Terms.

A.D.1625.

"The Commons, ſays Dr. Fuller, not ſo careful to ſave their own Perſons from the Plague, as to ſecure the Land from a worſe and more ſpreading Contagion, the daily Growth of Popery, preſented a Petition to his Majeſty, containing ſixteen Particulars of the Cauſes of Grievances, and Remedies to redreſs them; to ev'ry Clauſe of which, according to Echard, his Majeſty anſwer'd in a parliamentary Way, with ſo much Fairneſs and Satisfaction, that nothing cou'd be deſir'd more. We ſhall ſee whether any Thing more was deſir'd, in the Sequel of this Hiſtory; but while the Parliament ſeem'd in a pretty good Humour, on the Cloſe of the King's Anſwer, Buckingham made a Speech, putting them in Mind of the good Opinion the laſt Parliament had of him for his Conduct in the Spaniſh Treaty of Marriage, and he made no queſtion but ſpeaking now with the ſame Heart, he ſhou'd be as acceptable to them: He then enter'd into a particular Juſtification of himſelf, and gave ſeveral of his Actions ſo plauſible a Turn, that many of the Members began to think him not ſo bad as was repreſented: But Sir John Elliot when a Debate about him aroſe, apply'd to him moſt of the Miſcarriages of the late Reign, and this ever ſince he was concern'd in the Miniſtry; and ſpeaking of the further Supply which was deſir'd, he ſaid, They ought to be better ſecur'd from domeſtick Foes, before they engag'd againſt foreign Enemies; and that the great Sums given for Honours and Offices, wou'd go far in fitting out the Fleet. The Truth is, the Nation had no liking for an Expedition which was the Contrivance of Buckingham, whom they did not like. He intended the War againſt Spain, and they were for carrying it on in the Palatinate or Low-Countries. His Intention was to ſhew the Spaniards his Power and Reſentment; their Deſire was to recover his Majeſty's Brother-in-law's Dominions, and preſerve the Proteſtant Religion in Germany, which was never named by the laſt King and this, but only as a Pretext to demand Money, which when rais'd, was ſure to be apply'd to ſuch Uſes as wou'd increaſe the Grievances. Some Members were for going on the Supply, which the Neceſſity of the publick Affairs requir'd; but others ſaid Neceſſity was a dangerous Counſellor, and liable to be us'd as a continual Argument; that thoſe Miniſters who had thrown the King and Kingdom into ſuch Neceſſity ought to anſwer for it; and that there was as much Neceſſity for redreſſing Grievances as for granting more Subſidies: Upon which it was agreed to ſend his Majeſty a ſhort Declaration of their loyal Intentions to ſerve him in due Time and in a parliamentary way, beſeeching him to reſt aſſured of their true and hearty Affections, and to eſteem the ſame to be the greateſt Security and Reputation a juſt King can have, and to account all ſuch Enemies and Slanderers of the Commonwealth who ſhall dare ſay the contrary. The contrary was ſaid by Buckingham, Laud, Neile, Weſton, and in a word by almoſt every one who had Acceſs to the King's Perſon with the leaſt Degree of Favour.

Popery encourag'd.

Nothing is more apparent than that his Majeſty's ſcreening Buckingham and Montague from Parliamentary Puniſhment made the firſt Breach between him and his People; and there cou'd be no Hope of a Reconciliation, while ſuch Counſellors as Laud and Neile had his Ear upon all Occaſions. He ſaw plainly the Commons wou'd give him no Money, till he had given them Satisfaction as to Buckingham, and other Grivances. But as much as he wanted it, he reſolv'd to raiſe it without them; that is, without Law or Right, rather than let Juſtice be done on thoſe Offenders, who had flatter'd him with an Opinion that he cou'd not him-

The King's ill Conduct.

A.D.1625. ſelf offend. The Lord-Keeper Williams, with whom ſided the Lords of the Council, begg'd of him with Tears not to diſſolve the Parliament; and remember'd him of his Father's laſt Advice, to part with them always in Friendſhip, eſpecially with his firſt, and to call them often. King James had experienc'd the many Inconveniences of being at Variance with his Parliaments; and King Charles's Want of Temper or Wiſdom appear'd ſignally in protecting his Favourite in direct Oppoſition to the Senſe of the Nation. We are not to regard what is ſaid in Clarendon's and Echard's Hiſtories of his Majeſty's Firmneſs, ſo much to his Detriment and Diſhonour. Impartial Writers do here begin the Diviſion which parted him and his People for ever. Here, I ſay, at the abrupt Diſſolution of this his firſt Parliament four or five Months after his Father's Death. "The King's Love for Buc- "kingham, ſays Larrey, appear'd ſignally on this "Occaſion: If he wou'd have abandon'd him to "the Houſe of Commons, they wou'd immediately "have granted him the Subſidies he demanded; "but he choſe rather to renounce them, and in "ſome meaſure the Affections of his People, than "ſacrifice his Favourite". What follows ſhews us how ſincerely the Author of the Hiſtory of the Rebellion and Archdeacon Echard deal with us, when they declaim on his Qualifications as really wonderful. "Thus Buckingham was the fatal Be- "ginning of that Miſunderſtanding which conti- "nu'd ever after between the King and his Sub- "jects in thoſe great Aſſemblies of Parliament, "which are ſo dear to the Nation; and yet his "Aſcendant over his Maſter was not owing either "to his Charms or Capacity, but to the Weak- "neſs and ill Fortune of the King. If the King "had too much Complaiſance, or rather Blind- "neſs for his Favourite, the Favourite had but too "little Regard for his Maſter's Intereſts and Glo- "ry; for inſtead of ſacrificing his Fortune to his "Maſter, he ſacrific'd his Maſter to his Ambition". Such was the Fate of this Monarch during the whole Courſe of this Reign. For Laud and his Brethren wou'd never let him once give into mo- derate Counſels in religious Matters, tho' the Bent of the Nation was Puritan, and tho' his Govern- ment might have been eaſy and glorious by it; and even in the Cataſtrophe of the Civil War, when his Royal Life was in Danger, his Chaplains at the Iſle of Wight Treaty, Partizans of Laud, wou'd not let him ſecure his own Dominion, un- leſs he ſecur'd theirs alſo. How he was manag'd by his Favourites, and how inflexible he was in any Opinion they infus'd into him, the Source of all his Misfortunes, may be ſeen by what the French Author adds. "Thoſe that ſucceeded Buc- "kingham had the ſame Power, and the King was "as tender and as much bewitch'd to them, ſuf- "fering himſelf to be govern'd, and having no "Will but theirs. Firm on this Head, or rather "opinionated to ſuch a Degree, that nothing cou'd "convince him to the contrary. A Perſon who "prov'd too true a Prophet foretold of him, I "wiſh this Prince may be well inſpir'd when he "comes to the Throne, for if he takes the wrong "way all is loſt; opinionated as he is, and willing "abſolutely whate'er he wills. Nothing can make "him change his Reſolution, when it's once taken. Lilly ſays the ſame of him: "He was noted to be "very wilful and obſtinate by Queen Anne his "Mother, and ſome others who were about him "in his Infancy. His Mother being once told "he was very ſick and like to dye, ſaid, He wou'd "not dye then, but live to be the Ruin of himſelf, "and occaſion the Loſs of his three Kingdoms "by his Wilfulneſs".

The King's Firmneſs is Obſtinacy.

Parliament.

The Parliament had Notice that they were to be diſſolv'd; and when the Uſher of the Black Rod came to call the Commons up to the Houſe of Lords, they being in a grand Committee wou'd not ſuffer the Speaker to reſume the Chair, till Mr. Glanville the Chairman had made a Report in Form of a Proteſtation, as a Sort of Direction to the next Parliament to take up the Buſineſs of Buckingham and Grievances where they left it, and where it was broken off by this ſudden Diſſolution. A.D.1625.

The Plague raging at London, the Court, King, Queen, and French Attendants, was prodigally kept at Salisbury, where the King and the Lords of the Council were to ſeek how to defray the Houſhold Expences, the Purveyors not having wherewithal to ſupply the King and Queen's Table: Upon which he ſends for the Farmers of the Cuſtoms, and oblig'd them to ſupply him with more than they cou'd well ſpare. He preſs'd the City of Salisbury for a Loan of 1000 l. and Briſtol for ano- ther Loan of 3000 l. Several Aldermen of Briſtol came to excuſe the Payment, but they were thrown into Goal, where they lay till the Sum was brought to Court. Fifty Thouſand dy'd of this Plague at London; ſo great was the Mortality that the City was almoſt uninhabited. I have read ſomewhere, that in July this Year, a Man walking from Somerſet-Houſe to St. Antholine's Church in the Ci- ty met only three Perſons in the way; yet the De- ſolation hinder'd not the Rejoycings of the Court upon the King's Marriage with a bigotted French Papiſt. Reybold.

The great Plague

Much Talk there was of a Fleet with Land Forces on Board, but whither they were to be ſent none of the Council knew but the Duke, yet the Lord Clarendon's Indignation riſes againſt the Parliament for not giving Supplies towards an Expedition, which was under the Management of a Perſon whom they were about to impeach. To make good the Deficiencies, Letters were iſſu'd under the Privy-Seal to raiſe Money by Loan. The Perſons to whom they were directed were tax'd by the King himſelf in what Sums he pleas'd, which Echard calls borrowing Money of his Subjects with their own Conſent; tho' he confeſſes the Names of all who wou'd not lend were to be re- turn'd to him, and the Fear of the Conſequence did doubtleſs contribute much to the Conſent of the Lenders.

Warrants were granted for diſarming Papiſts; which had the good Effects that all ſuch Warrants had in the former Reign, and will have in this. I muſt own the Lord Clarendon, or his Editor's Re- preſentation of theſe Matters are quite contrary to mine. I find myſelf at a great Loſs in this Work, in that I can make little or no Uſe of his Six Vo- lumes of Hiſtory; nay, I am rather perplex'd than help'd by it, being every now and then oblig'd to clear up Matters which are very much darken'd by the Duſt he raiſes. The Events are ſo chang'd by the Turn he gives them, and the Gloſs he puts upon them, that none will ever have a juſt Idea of Things or Perſons as they are there repreſented. Octavo.

Let us inſtance in the Lord Wimbledon's ſhame- ful Expedition to Cadiz. The Author of the Hiſtory of the Rebellion aſſerts, it was undertaken with the Advice of Parliament, and the univerſal Approbation of the People; whereas Whitlock aſſures us, not one even of the King's Council knew of it but Buckingham; and Sanderſon, who is a Cham- pion in the ſame Cauſe with the Lord Clarendon, affirms, that Sir Robert Manſel, Vice-Admiral, and the moſt experienc'd Sea-Officer in England, de- clar'd againſt the Undertaking; the Lord Chi- cheſter, another old Officer, did the ſame; but the Duke of Buckingham, who knew as little of mili- tary Affairs as any other Courtier, approv'd of it, and that was enough. The Lord Wimbledon had a Fleet of 80 Ships, on which were embark'd a- bout 10000 Soldiers. They ſail'd the 8th of Octo- ber, and ſoon met with a furious Storm common in Autumn, which ſeparated the Fleet, and ſunk one of the beſt Ships, which with all the Crew was

A.D.1625. was loſt. The Author of the Hiſtory of the Rebellion ſays there was not a Ship loſt, and upon the matter not a Man, to diminiſh the Shame of this diſgraceful Enterprize. About the latter End of the Month the Fleet, which had join'd again, arriv'd at the Streights Mouth; and a Council of War being held, the gallant young Earl of Eſſex, Vice-Admiral, in Emulation of the Glory his Father had formerly won there, was for attacking the Forts at the Mouth of the Harbour of Cadiz, which was not thought practicable; only the Fort Puntal that very much incommoded the Men who attempted to land, was attack'd and carry'd by Sir John Burroughs. This Fort open'd and ſhut the Entrance into the Harbour; and the Engliſh by the Help of the Puntal might either have attack'd the Galleons that were in the Port, or have intercepted thoſe that were expected from America with Plate. The Spaniards were ſo alarm'd at the taking this Fort, that King Philip was putting himſelf at the Head of his Army, which was to march againſt the Engliſh; but Olivarez repreſented to him the Neceſſity thoſe Troops wou'd ſoon be under to abandon that Conqueſt and return home, the Winter Seaſon advancing ſo faſt. The Governor of Cadiz diſpatch'd ſome light Frigats to give Advice to the Galleons homeward bound from New Spain, that they ſhou'd ſteer to Cape Finiſtre, and get into the Groyne. One of theſe Advice-Boats fell into the Hands of the Engliſh, who believing the Spaniards wou'd accordingly make for Corunna, lay off that Port to intercept the Plate Fleet. But the Galleons by good Luck miſſing all the Advice-Boats ſail'd directly to Cadiz, from whence the Engliſh were gone to wait for them at the Groyne. Great Faults were committed by the Lord Wimbledon and his Officers. They miſ-ſpent their Time aſhoar in intrenching themſelves in the Puntal inſtead of attacking the Bulworks, which in the Surprize of the Spaniards at the Loſs of that Fort, they might eaſily have carry'd. They ſuffer'd both Soldiers and Seamen to come aſhoar for Refreſhment, who ſurfeiting themſelves with new Wine it threw them into Diſtempers, which kill'd great Numbers of them. Notwithſtanding this Sickneſs and Death, the Earl of Clarendon very quaintly aſſures us, all the Ships, and upon the matter all the Men were ſeen. Every Ship, and upon the matter every Man was not only ſav'd but ſeen; and thoſe Seamen and Soldiers who were left dead drunk aſhoar when the Ships came away, the Generoſity of the Spaniards ſent them all back again. I will make no Remark upon this fine Flouriſh; if the Reader can believe a word of it, he has a ſtock of Faith enough to run thro' the Roman Legends. F. Orleans affirms the Loſs of Men to be very conſiderable. Larrey ſays, the Ships and Men that return'd were ſeen indeed, but with Murmuring and Indignation. The Complaints ought to have been againſt Buckingham, but his Credit or good Fortune turn'd them on Wimbledon, who laid the blame on others; however, he was for ſome time not admitted into the King's Preſence. And thus ended an Expedition, which was the more inglorious for that in Queen Elizabeth's Time the Engliſh put the Coaſts of Spain and Portugal in a Blaze, burnt Cadiz, menac'd Lisbon, brought off the Galleons and Carracks loaden with the Silver of Mexico and Peru, and carry'd Terror to the old and new World. But as Larrey ſo words it, Thoſe Days of Glory and Triumph for England were paſs'd. This famous Enterprize was preceded by no Declaration of War. The moſt that was like it was a Proclamation to recall all Engliſh Men out of the Spaniſh Service. The Duke of Buckingham and Earl of Holland went at the ſame time to the Hague, where they concluded a League with the United Provinces, and with the Ambaſſadors of France and Denmark; but neither England nor Holland reap'd any Advantage by it.

The King of Denmark did indeed take Arms, A.D.1625. and one of his Reaſons was the Recovery of the Palatinate, his Nephew's Dominions. Some Troops were ſent to his Aſſiſtance from England. But it is ſaid he miſcarry'd by a too frequent Uſe of the Bowl. His drinking out of Reaſon loſt many Battels to the Emperor's General Walleſtein. The Miſcarriage of this King in the Invaſion of the Empire is by Echard, and all of 'em, imputed to the Parliament for not giving the Money the Court wanted; which however they wou'd gladly have given him, if the King wou'd have ſatisfy'd them that the Subſidies ſhou'd have been better ſpent than the laſt were, and that due Remedies ſhou'd be apply'd to the Diſtempers of the State.

4. The War upon the King of Spain without Declaration.
5. The lending Ships againſt the Proteſtants at Rochelle.
6. The abrupt Diſſolution of the Parliament to ſcreen Buckingham from Puniſhment.

If theſe Facts are true, and no body will pretend to diſprove them, what fine Hiſtories muſt Clarendon's and Echard's be; where they are either all ſunk; or if any of them are mention'd, 'tis with ſuch Explanations as alter the Nature of them, and render them the Subject rather of Applauſe than Complaint.

I have ſaid nothing of the Squadron of Ships that was ſent to join the Dutch, and block up Dunkirk. They alſo being ſent out of Seaſon were diſpers'd by a Storm, and left the Coaſts of England expos'd to the Inſults of 22 Dunkirk Men of War with Land Forces, which alarm'd Ireland as well as England. But why ſhou'd we wonder that all the Enterprizes of a certain Set of Men ſince the Death of Queen Elizabeth, have been inglorious both at home and abroad? The Rights and Liberties of the People, the Defence of which acquires true Glory, are what they never had at heart, and their Intereſts have always been ſeparate from thoſe of the Publick.

Tho' the Plague was ſtill raging, inſomuch that the Term was adjourn'd to Reading, it did not at all ſoften the hard Hearts of thoſe evil Counſellors about the King, who endeavour'd to engroſs his Affections by alienating them from his Subjects. However, there was no living without Money, and that which the Loan brought in made but ill Payment for the Clamour and Diſcontent which it occaſion'd; 'twas therefore reſolv'd to call a Parliament, but little Care was taken to have them meet in a better Humour than they parted with the laſt; nay, ſo wild was the way of thinking, that Sir Edward Coke, late Lord Chief Juſtice of England, and other Gentlemen, who in the laſt Parliament had appear'd againſt the Duke, were prick'd for Sheriffs, and ſo cou'd not be choſen Members.

Gentlemen prick'd for Sheriffs.

Sir Robert Philips,	Somerſetſhire.
Sir Thomas Wentworth,	Yorkſhire.

*A.D.*1625. Sir Edward Coke was then near 80 Years old; and it was barbarous to put a Gentleman of his Age, who had been Lord Chief Juſtice of both Benches, into the inferior and troubleſome Office of a Sheriff. He excepted againſt ſeveral Parts of the Sheriff's Oath, and by Advice of all the Judges, one of his Exceptions was allow'd, and order'd to be left out of the Oath for the future. Of
P. 210. Sir Robert Philips, Coke ſays, I revere his Memory, and ſhou'd be glad I knew any of his Deſcendants to whom I cou'd acknowledge it. But if any of thoſe Deſcendants ſhou'd have degenerated, and been as great Enemies to Liberty as Sir Robert was a Friend to it, Mr. Coke did not loſe much in the Loſs of that Wiſh of his. Sir Thomas Wentworth, who was at this time another Patriot, receiv'd the ſame Marks of the Court's Diſpleaſure. Such Methods were not likely to put former Grievances out of mind; and when the Parliament met, we ſhall ſoon ſee them brought upon the Stage again: Tho' to ſtop their Mouths concerning Popery, the Biſhops were order'd to proceed againſt Papiſts by Excommunication, and ſhutting the Church-Doors againſt thoſe that durſt not come within them under Pain of Damnation. All convicted Papiſts were by Proclamation confin'd to their Places of Abode, or within four Miles of it. But no Orders of this Kind had the Effect that was pretended. The Papiſts knew well enough the King was compell'd to do what he did by the Complaints of the Parliament, and they abated very little of their Inſolence. It was thought neceſſary to declare, that the King wou'd give up Mountague to Juſtice. Upon which Laud ſaid very gravely, if not very fooliſhly, I ſeem to ſee a Cloud ariſing, and threatning the Church.

William's Fall. We have taken notice of Buckingham's Diſpleaſure againſt the Lord-Keeper Williams, and his Diſgrace is the leaſt we cou'd expect from it. But his Merit and Services requir'd ſome Colour for diſplacing him; which not being to be found, the Miniſtry reviv'd a Propoſition made by the Keeper Williams himſelf to King James, That the Office of Lord Chancellor or Lord Keeper ſhou'd be Triennial; and Biſhop Williams having enjoy'd it above four Years, muſt according to his own Propoſal ſurrender the Seal. If the Queen cou'd have befriended him he had ſtood ſtill; for he was in her Favour by reaſon of the Speech he made to her in French at her coming to Whitehall. The Keeper having Intimation of the Counſels that were taking againſt him, wrote a Letter from Foxley in Berkſhire to the King at Salisbury juſtifying his Conduct in Parliament, eſpecially concerning the Duke; who having read the Letter cou'd not but own that the Juſtification was valid; but Buckingham ſaid he had other Proof againſt him, which cou'd not appear while he was in Office for People wou'd be afraid to accuſe him. The Lord-Keeper offer'd to anſwer any Accuſation in a legal Way; and that it was prepoſterous to puniſh firſt, and afterwards condemn. He ſaid the Wrong done him wou'd ſoon ſtartle others; for who that had any thing to loſe wou'd think himſelf ſecure upon ſuch Precedents? Then the Triennial Truſt was trump'd
P. 172. up; ſo that, ſays Mr. Ambroſe Philips, his Enemies cou'd lay no Accuſations to his Charge; and all his Crime was their Hatred and Malice. To prove which he quotes Sir Anthony Welden, p. 176. Biſhop Williams's Ruin was determin'd not upon any known Crime, but upon Circumſtances and Examinations to pick out Faults committed in his whole Lifetime. This Biſhop has never a good Word from the Laudæans on account of his oppoſing Laud's ſuperſtitious Innovations; and therefore it is that the Author of the Hiſtory of the Rebellion ſays very falſly, as well as affectedly, He was generally thought ſo very unequal to the Place, that his Remove was the only Recompence and Satisfaction that cou'd be made for his Promotion. What a Conſcience this Author had? The famous Lawyer Judge Hobart being deſir'd by Buckingham to certify the Lord-Keeper's Inabilities and Ignorance, upon which he wou'd engage to throw him out, and he ſhou'd ſucceed him, the reverend Judge reply'd, My Lord, Somewhat might have been ſaid at the firſt; but I ſhou'd do the Lord-Keeper great Wrong if I ſhou'd ſay it now. Mr. Ambroſe Philips writes of it thus: "Never was the Court of Chancery "better order'd than in his Time. Mr. Evelyn, "one of the ſix Clerks, and in his Time the beſt "Head-piece of the Office, took Pleaſure in ſay- "ing, as many yet know, that the Lord-Keeper "Williams had the moſt tow'ring ſublime Wit "that he ever heard ſpeak, and that his Decrees "in all Cauſes were juſt; that the Lord Coventry "did ſeldom alter any thing he had ſettled before "him but upon new Preſumptions; and that he "ſpoke of him always in Court very honourably". Echard too ſpeaking of this Biſhop has alſo a Falſity: He was ſequeſter'd from the Council-Table, and the Preſence of the King, before the Seal was taken from him. When the Lord Conway came to him with a Meſſage from his Majeſty about ſurrendring the Seal on the 15th of October, the Lord-Keeper ask'd him, If he was reſtrain'd from P. 175. the Council-Board before the delivering the Seal? Conway reply'd, I know of no ſuch Intent. After which the Keeper had Audience of the King himſelf; and among other things he petition'd, "not P. 176. "to be commanded from the Council-Table, but "that his Abſence may be left wholly to his own "Diſcretion". His Majeſty anſwer'd, I ever intended it ſo, and never ſaid a word to the contrary. But Echard has ſaid a word to the contrary; and it is a melancholy Reflection to conſider, that two ſuch Hiſtorians as the two laſt mention'd ſhou'd have ſo long impos'd upon a Number of credulous Readers with whom a great deal of Pains muſt be taken, and perhaps in vain with many to undeceive them, and ſet them right again. On the 25th of October, Sir John Suckling, Comptroller of the Houſhold, brought a Warrant from the King to the Lord-Keeper to deliver the great Seal to him; which Biſhop Williams did accordingly: But, ſays Ambroſe Philips, with no Signs of Unwillingneſs, as one intimates; for he was glad to hear that ſo worthy a Perſon as Sir Thomas Coventry, Atorney-General, was to ſucceed him. One can hardly meet with one Fact which is not thus diſfigur'd in their Hiſtories.

*A.D.*1626. Coronation. The Coronation was on Candlemas-Day; and there are ſo many large Deſcriptions of it, that we ſhall ſay the leſs, there being nothing which makes it more different from other Coronations than the ſtriking out that Part of the antient Oath, That the King ſhou'd conſent to ſuch Laws as the People ſhou'd chuſe; and inſerting, Saving the King's Royal Prerogative; which was become the only Topick for Court Preachers, Cathedral Preachers, and all the Preachers in England, who ſought Preferment under Laud, to whoſe Management is imputed the Alteration made in the Coronation Oath; and it is not to be queſtion'd, but if he was one of the Committee appointed to prepare that Oath, the Change which was made in it was his own. Cook in his Appeal ſays, It was charg'd upon the late Archbiſhop, that he emaſculated the Oath, and left out very material Words, as which the People ſhall chuſe. The Author of the Life and Reign of King Charles, printed by Reybold, mentions the ſame thing, clean forgetting or ſlighting the grand and more eſſential Part of the Coronation Oath, which is confidently averr'd the late Archbiſhop purpoſely emaſculated. Lilly affirms poſitively, He was crown'd at Weſtminſter, where William Laud alter'd the old Coronation Oath, and fram'd another new. Dr. Fuller writes of it thus: Others did equally conſent, tho' Biſhop Laud was moſt active. Notwithſtanding which Echard aſſerts, The Oath was

A.D.1626. the ſame that us'd to be taken by the King's Predeceſſors, tho' Biſhop Laud is condemn'd for it; and for making another Addition in the Coronation Prayers us'd, ſays Fuller, in popiſh Times: Sit Petrus in Clave, & Paulus in Dogmate; that the King might have Peter's Key of Diſcipline, and Paul's Doctrine. The Biſhop of Lincoln, as Dean of Weſtminſter, had a Claim to officiate at this Solemnity, and wrote a Letter to the Duke that he might be permitted: Which Letter begins thus; Being come hither according to the Duty of my Place to do my beſt Service for the Preparation to the Coronation, &c. I do moſt humbly beſeech your Grace to receive a Creature of your own, by bringing me to kiſs his Majeſty's Hand. But it ſtood him in no ſtead; tho' Biſhop Andrews, as Dean of Weſtminſter, attended at the Coronation of King James, yet Biſhop Williams had Orders to abſent himſelf, and to depute one of the Prebendaries in his place. He reſolv'd not to name Biſhop Laud, who by his Favour had kept his Prebend, and ſent the King a Liſt of all the Prebendaries to chuſe whom he pleas'd, and he immediately pitch'd upon Laud at the Deſire of Buckingham. Echard in the Deſcription of this Solemnity has certain Circumſtances, which add very much to its Importance, and to the Dignity of his Hiſtory. "The King omitted "riding thro' London to ſave Charges. 'Twas a "bright Day, and nothing was loſt nor broken; "not a Crewet, nor a Fork. The Theatre was "clear, and there was very little Noiſe. The "King was array'd in White, contrary to the Cuſtom of his Predeceſſors, who uſually wore "Purple. And this not out of Neceſſity but "Choice, to declare that Virgin Purity with which "he came to be eſpous'd to his Kingdom, laying "aſide the Robe of Majeſty to cloath himſelf in "the Robe of Innocence". Is it not Pity the Fact is falſe, there being ſo many pretty Conceits and Jingles in it; for Whitlock aſſures us, his Robe was White Sattin, Purple not being to be had. There never was ſo ſmall a Portion of a Reign, ſcarce ten Months, which had been charged with ſo much Male-Adminiſtration; yet the Reverend Author plays with Virgin Purity and Robe of Innocence, as if he had been deſcribing the Virgin Purity of Edward VI.

Second Parliament. The new Parliament met on the 6th of February; and the new Keeper Coventry made a Speech to them, which turn'd on the Neceſſity of a good Underſtanding between the King and them; but he gave the Pre-eminence to the former, and fix'd the Center of Authority there without diſtinguiſhing between the Executive and Legiſlative Power, that a Power ſuperior to both might be underſtood to be in the King. He proteſted the King's Intentions were good; and the Parliament were very uncivil not to take the Keeper's Word for it. Tho' the Court had good Reaſon to hope well from the Choice of the Speaker, Sir Heneage Finch, Recorder of London; yet they ſoon ſhew'd the ſame Spirit and Reſolution as appear'd in the Oxford Parliament. They immediately fell upon the ſhameful Expedition to Cadiz, the Miſemployment of the King's Revenue, evil Counſellors, favouring of Papiſts, notwithſtanding what Echard tells us of his Majeſty's having given them full Satisfaction in that matter, Loans, Taxes, and Mountague; for it ſeems Laud wou'd not yet let the King give up that Incendiary to Juſtice. To cool them in their Warmth, the Privy-Council requir'd Neile, Biſhop of Durham, Laud's Patron, to apprehend ſuch of his Majeſty's Subjects as ſhou'd be preſent at Maſs, and commit them to Priſon. The Attorney General ſent Letters to the Judges, to direct their ſtrict Proceedings againſt Recuſants in the Lent Circuit; which had no better Effect than other the like Orders in this Reign as well as the laſt. For among other Grievances we find this complain'd of by the Houſe of Commons:

Larr. 42.

Favour to Papiſts.

1. The Increaſe and countenancing of Popery.
2. The Diminution of the Kingdom in Strength and Honour.
3. Plurality of Offices in one Hand.
4. Sales of Honours and Places of Judicature.
5. Delivery up of Ships to the French.
6. Miſemployment of three Subſidies and three Fifteenths.

A.D.1626. Whit. 3. Ill Practices in the State.

Theſe Grievances were debated for Redreſs but a few Days after the Archdeacon declaim'd upon the Virgin Purity of the Government, which is otherwiſe repreſented in Larrey. "What is "there to be expected from a Prince, who ſuffers "himſelf to be abſolutely govern'd by ſuch a Miniſter as Buckingham? And what Security is there "for the Laws in Church and State, unleſs the "Parliament take care and puniſh the Attempts of "thoſe ambitious Diſturbers of the publick Peace, "Traytors to God and their Country. The Houſe "of Commons talk'd in Terms pretty near like "theſe, which the Houſe of Lords did not ſeem "to diſapprove. Popery was dreaded, and arbitrary Power not to be born. The King might "eaſily have appeas'd them, by giving them the "reaſonable Satisfaction they deſir'd; but he choſe "rather to ſave his Favourite". Can Clarendon or Echard be impartial? Can they indeed be true without remembring a word of theſe things? P. 42.

Mountague. I ſhall not enter into the Detail of the Proſecution of Mountague, only ſum up the Charge againſt him in brief, as the Committee who had the Caſe before them did, that it may be ſeen what a fit Man he was to make a Biſhop, and what Sort of Biſhops were in Favour with King Charles. "There The Charge againſt him. "are divers Paſſages in his Appeal full of Bitterneſs, Railing, and injurious to other Perſons, "diſgraceful and contemptible to many worthy "Divines of this Kingdom, and other reform'd "Churches beyond the Seas; impious and profane in ſcoffing at Preaching, meditating the "holy Scripture, and all Shew of Religion". Laud ſaid Mountague's Cauſe was the Cauſe of the Church. "All which do aggravate his former Offences, "having proceeded from pernicious and enormous Heat againſt the Peace of the Church, "and the Sincerity of the reform'd Religion publickly profeſs'd, and by Law eſtabliſh'd in this "Kingdom. All which Offences being to the "Diſhonour of God, and of miſchievous Effect "and Conſequence againſt the Church and Commonwealth of England, and other of his Majeſty's Realms and Dominions; the Commons "in Parliament aſſembled do hereby pray, that "the ſaid Richard Mountague may be puniſh'd according to his Demerits in ſuch exemplary Manner, as may deter others from attempting ſo "preſumptuouſly the Peace of the Church and "State". His Puniſhment was firſt the Biſhoprick of Chicheſter, and then that of Norwich; which Arbitrary Power. ſhew'd ſufficiently that all thoſe who wou'd, like him, in Contempt of the Parliament and Conſtitution of England, aſſert a deſpotick Power in Church and State, might expect the ſame Reward to the full Satisfaction of their Pride and Avarice.

Parliament. There was no Demand of Supplies in the Keeper's Speech; but Sir Richard Weſton brought a Meſſage from the King, repreſenting the preſſing State of Chriſtendom, and his Majeſty's Patience in waiting ſo long to hear what they had reſolv'd about Supplies. To this handſome Meſſage was tack'd a politick Indication, That the King wou'd not accept Coke, 221. of leſs than he wanted, and 'twas not fit to depend any longer on Uncertainties. A new Stile brought into the Speeches from the Throne ſince King Charles ſate on it. He affected very much to ſpeak en Maiſtre, and to let his Subjects know that he took what they gave him as their Duty, and not their Gift. If they had any Grievances to be redreſs'd of which his Majeſty was not ſenſible, they

A.D 1626. they muſt complain in a mannerly way without the leaſt Reflection on his or his bleſſed Father's Government. Such Speeches as theſe cou'd not but open the Hearts and Purſes of an aggriev'd People. The Commons return'd a general Anſwer promiſing a Supply. The King ſent to them again, that they ſhou'd apply to redreſs Grievances, not to hunt after them. Good Senſe and good Reaſon this, to redreſs what they did not know; for they cou'd know nothing without Enquiry. But there muſt be no ſtirring any thing for fear, as Coke phraſes it, of throwing an ill Odor on the former or preſent Adminiſtration.

In the Debate of theſe Matters, Mr. Clement Coke Member for Ailsbury, Son to Sir Edward, warm'd perhaps as much with his Father's Injuries as with thoſe of the Publick, ſaid in the Houſe of Commons, 'twas better to die by a foreign Enemy, than to be deſtroy'd at home, according to Warwick, but he can't help erring, he ſaid ſuffer at Home, and not be deſtroy'd; and the Saying was highly reſented by the Court, who had wrought ſo upon the Upper-Houſe, that they appointed a Committee to conſider of the Defence of the Kingdom, and the Safeguard of the Seas; and they adviſ'd the equipping a Fleet of Ships immediately to act againſt Spain, and another to guard the Coaſts and Trade, which they ſent to the Houſe of Commons, who they were ſure wou'd not take it well to have Matters that requir'd Money come from the Houſe of Peers to them, who had yet come to no Reſolution about raiſing any. The King ſent them a Meſſage that he was as willing to hear and redreſs Grievances as any of his Predeceſſors, but wou'd not allow any of his Servants to be queſtion'd; which has the ſame Infirmity as his laſt Meſſage, and is not only againſt Reaſon, but againſt Common Senſe. Can evil Counſels be remedy'd without queſtioning evil Counſellors, or Grievances be redreſs'd without queſtioning the Cauſe of them? 'Twas added, I ſee you eſpecially aim at the Duke of Buckingham; I admire what has ſo alter'd your Affections; I deſire you to haſten the Supply, or it will be worſe for you. A ſmall Portion of natural Underſtanding wou'd have inform'd theſe Counſellors, that a King cou'd not have ſaid any thing more poorly, and that tho' two or three private Perſons may be menac'd without Danger, yet that it is very dangerous to threaten a whole Nation. The Meſſages which follow are all in the ſame Strain, and ſo worded, that one may eaſily perceive the King was in the Hands of Men of Laud's Temper, and not likely to get out of them. His forbidding the Parliament to queſtion the Duke, which was their undoubted Right to do, made them more zealous in the Proſecution. Dr. Turner Burgeſs for Shaftsbury, whom Warwick calls by his own Name, an inconſiderate inconſiderable Court-Dependant, began the Charge with Six Queries.

Mr. Coke.

Echard.

Dr. Turner.

" I. Whether, as Admiral, he had not caus'd " the Loſs of the King's Royalty in the Narrow " Seas?

" II. Whether the late ill Succeſſes of the Fleet " had not happen'd by the Admiral's not having " perſonally executed the Place?

" III. Whether the Duke had not engroſs'd all " great Offices, and preferr'd his undeſerving Kin- " dred?

" IV. Whether he had not ſold Places of Ju- " dicature?

" V. Whether his Mother was not Patroneſs of " the Romiſh Party?

" VI. Whether he had not by his Profuſion " waſted the King's Treaſury?

This occaſion'd the moving two other Queſtions:

" Whether theſe ſix Heads, which were grounded " on Common Fame, ſhou'd be debated in Parlia- " ment?

A.D. 1626.

" Whether an Accuſation upon common Fame, " by a Member of the Houſe, be a parliamen- " tary Way?

Sir Thomas Wentworth, Mr. Noy, Mr. Selden, Sir Dudley Diggs, Sir John Elliot, Mr. Sandys, and other leading Members, being for the Affirmative, it was reſolv'd, That Common Fame is a good Ground of Proceeding for the Houſe of Commons. Whitlock mentioning Sir Thomas Wentworth with Noy and Selden, 'tis probable there was a Vacancy when his Shrievalty was out, and he got into the Houſe.

The Court taking the Allarm, a Meſſage is brought by Sir Richard Weſton, a moſt ungracious Meſſenger, taking notice of the ſeditious Speech of Mr. Coke and Dr. Turner's Articles againſt the Duke of Buckingham, but indeed againſt the Honour and Government of the King and his Father. As Mountague is the Church, ſo Buckingham is the State. His Majeſty cannot ſuffer an Enquiry on the meaneſt of his Servants, much leſs againſt one ſo near him; and wonders at the fooliſh Impudence of any Man, that can think he ſhou'd be drawn to offer ſuch a Sacrifice, much unworthy the Greatneſs of a King, and Maſter of ſuch a Servant. He deſires the Juſtice of the Houſe againſt Delinquents, that he be not conſtrain'd to uſe his Regal Power; as was done ſome Years after, when he enter'd the Houſe in Perſon to ſeize five of their Members. This Language wou'd hardly become the Chairman of a Quarter-Seſſions to a petty Country Jury, which is the loweſt of all Images, much leſs of a Monarch of Great-Britain to the moſt illuſtrious Aſſembly in the World. Dr. Turner explain'd himſelf, ſaying, To accuſe upon Common Fame, is warranted by the Imperial Laws, and by the Canons of the Church; that this Houſe in the Time of Henry VI. did accuſe the Duke of Suffolk; and that Sir Richard Weſton himſelf, the Bearer of this wiſe Meſſage, did preſent the common Undertakers upon common Fame. The next Day the Doctor wrote a Letter to the Speaker, to excuſe his not attending the Houſe by Reaſon of Sickneſs, and ſubmitting to their Judgments, but not acknowledging any Fault. Sir Richard Weſton's Meſſage had the Effect which generally attends Precipitation and Raſhneſs, and which Arcby might eaſy have foreſeen. The Parliament grew ſtill the more warm againſt the Duke, who was the great Grievance; and the King's ſupporting him againſt the Cry of his People, made the Grievance ſtill the greater. Whitlock tells us, Sir John Elliot made a bold and ſharp Speech. Echard calls this being in a Fury; Sir William Walter told the Houſe that the Cauſe of all Grievances, was that which was in the Court of Lewis the XIth of France; all the King's Council ride upon one Horſe, as did Oliver the Barber, who govern'd Lewis as much as Villiers govern'd Charles. Amidſt theſe Agitations the Commons remember'd the King's Neceſſities, and voted him three Subſidies, and three Fifteenths, to which they afterwards added a Fourth. This ſhew'd that their inſiſting upon Redreſs of Grievances, was not a Pretence only to put off Supplies. His Majeſty reſenting their Proceedings againſt his Favourite, more than their dutiful Behaviour in the Supply, ſummon'd both Houſes to attend him at Whitehall, where he declared to them with the uſual Prudence and Temper, That he call'd them for ſeveral and diſtinct Reaſons; the Lords to thank them for their Care of the Publick, and the Commons to tell them of their Errors. That is, Villiers and Laud underſtood the State and Intereſt of the Nation better than Wentworth, Noy, Selden, Diggs, &c. 'Tis all of a Piece, and the Keeper is taught to imitate his Maſter's engaging Stile. " After the great Affairs are ſettled, and " Satisfaction given to the King's Demands, he " will hear and anſwer their juſt Grievances, as the juſt Grievances in the laſt Parliament were

The King's fine way of ſpeaking.

A.D. 1626. " anſwer'd after the Subſidies were given. His " Majeſty excepts to the not puniſhing Coke and " Turner." He then prais'd the Duke and his Merit from King and Parliament, declaring his Majeſty's Pleaſure that they proceed no further in the Enquiry touching him. Cou'd any Men in their Wits imagine, that 500 Gentlemen, Repreſentatives of a powerful People, cou'd look with any thing but Contempt on the Perſon that dar'd to bully them; yet ſo it is, and Coventry goes on; The Supply is not ſuitable to the Engagements; his Majeſty requires a further Supply, and your Reſolutions of it by a Day, elſe you are not to ſit long, nor will the King expect a Supply this Way: He will have Recourſe to Loans, Benevolences, Ship-Money, Monopolies, and the like: He will no longer ſuffer the Parliament to raiſe Money for the publick Service, which I think was as direct a Menace as cou'd be, that he wou'd no longer maintain the Conſtitution. Himſelf ſpoke after the Keeper, and mentioning Coke, ſaid, It is better for a King to be invaded, and almoſt deſtroy'd by a foreign Power, than to be deſpis'd by his own Subjects: remember the calling, ſitting, and diſſolving of Parliaments is in my Power. And ſhou'd he not alſo have remember'd, that the raiſing of Money for the Support and Defence of himſelf and his Kingdom, was in the Power of the Parliament? The Wiſdom and Moderation of theſe Counſels are equally conſpicuous and exemplary. The King wants Money, and yet irritates thoſe that are to give it; the Miniſters are conſcious of the Weakneſs and Errors of the late Management, and yet treat thoſe who are to amend it, as Fools and Scoundrels: For beſides the fooliſh Impudence in the fine Speech above-mention'd, Coventry told them the King had taken notice of their ſuffering the greateſt Council of State, Villiers and Laud, to be cenſur'd and traduc'd by Men whoſe Years and Education cannot attain to that Depth. The famous Selden, the Glory of the Engliſh Nation for Learning and Abilities, did cenſure evil Counſellors, and his Education is here cenſur'd. Coke and Turner are meant indeed, but Selden, Glanville, Pym, Herbert, Wandsford, Sherland, and other principal Members before mentioned, did alſo ſeverely cenſure the Duke. Whitlocke obſerves there were in this Houſe many Perſons of extraordinary Parts and Abilities; and as to their Eſtates, one may make a Judgment by what H. L'Eſtrange ſays of the next Parliament, conſiſting in a manner of the ſame Members, Their Eſtates modeſtly eſtimated, were able to buy the Houſe of Peers, the King excepted, though an hundred and eighteen, thrice over; a proper Aſſembly this, to bear the Inſults of a weak and imperious Adminiſtration. Sir John Elliot, one of the leading Members, is repreſented by Echard as out of his Wits; but as he begins his Character and Account of him with a ſtaring Falſity, we are not oblig'd to believe the reſt of it: He was a Man of a new Family, his Authority is Dr. Prideaux Grandſon to Elliot; and yet with all this Evidence it is notoriouſly falſe: How then ſhall we give Credit to him, when he has no other Evidence but his own frail Word? My Authority is Mr. Brown Willis, Son-in-law to Daniel Elliot Eſq; Sir John's Grandſon, who in his Notitia Parliamentaria, writes thus: Of the Antiquity of the Elliots, it being expected I ſhou'd ſay ſomething, I hope the Reader will pardon my making a little Excurſion, while I ſhall only remark, that they flouriſh'd ten Generations before they ſeated themſelves at St. Germains about the Year 1540, which was almoſt an hundred Years before this new Gentleman Sir John Elliot appear'd, who was in the thirteenth or fourteenth Generation. I hope this is ſufficient to teach us not to take the Archdeacon's Word in his Characteriſticks.

More fine ſpeaking.

The Parliament bully'd.

Coke, 223

Sir John Elliot.

Such Speeches and Meſſages as we have been repeating, cou'd not but ſet the Houſe in a Flame, and fill every honeſt Engliſh Heart with Indignation. The Houſe of Commons immediately reſolv'd themſelves into a Grand Committee, order'd the Doors to be lock'd, and all Proceedings to ceaſe. His Majeſty being inform'd of the great Exceptions taken at his laſt Speech, commanded the Duke of Buckingham to give Satisfaction at a Conference to be held between both Houſes, according to Echard: It is thus related by Larrey, " The Commons wou'd not forbear their Proſe- " cution, and all they cou'd be brought to ſhew " their Deference to the King, was to conſent that " Buckingham ſhou'd come by his Order to the " Parliament, which ſhou'd be extraordinarily aſ- " ſembled on that Account in the Painted-Cham- " ber, and there in Preſence of Lords and Com- " mons, give Account of his Adminiſtration and " of all his Employments. The Houſes met ac- " cordingly at the Place appointed, Buckingham " did not fail to be there, and appear'd with all " the Moderation and Humility of a Man before " his Superiors." We read in Clarendon, He had a great Contempt for the Parliament. " He thought to " carry his Point by this humble and moderate Car- " riage, and deliver'd a ſtudy'd Diſcourſe on all his " Actions and Negotiations as Ambaſſador and as " Admiral, &c." He ſaid he did nothing in ſingle Counſels, excus'd his not going with the Fleet, his Maſter commanding him into the Low-Countries to treat with the Miniſters of Denmark, Sweden, and Holland. He gave a plauſible Turn to moſt of the Allegations againſt him, and expreſs'd himſelf at the Cloſe of the Speech, in the Manner which he thought wou'd be moſt effectual to take off the Edge of their Reſentment. " Join unani- " mouſly with your Sovereign to ſupport the Pro- " teſtant Religion, aſſiſt him to relieve Part of his " Family, perſecuted by the Houſe of Auſtria for " Religion's Sake; re-animate the firſt Ardor of " the Engliſh Nation for the Recovery of the " Palatinate, and haſte to eſtabliſh the King's Si- " ſter and his Nephews in their Eſtates and Dig- " nities." What muſt one have thought of the Lords and Commons of England, if they cou'd have been impos'd upon by his pretended Zeal for the Proteſtant Religion, when they all knew very well that his Family were moſt of them rank Papiſts, and himſelf the greateſt Protector they ever had here ſince the Reformation? It is true, the People deſir'd nothing more paſſionately than that the Intereſts of the Royal Houſe of Bohemia, the Heir of which is our preſent gracious Sovereign, ſhou'd be vigorouſly ſupported; and the Duke's naming the Aſſiſtance of a Family who was ſo dear to them, had the greateſt Effect upon the two Houſes, but not ſufficient to put a Stop to the Proſecution. The Lord Conway ſpoke afterwards by his Majeſty's Command, and vouch'd for the Duke that whatever he had done was by Order: To anſwer the Charge of miſ-ſpending the publick Money, he gave an Eſtimate of the Expence of the Fleet and Army, the Succours ſent to Count Manſfeldt, and of the building ſeveral Forts in England and Ireland; but it was by no means ſatisfactory. The Commons being return'd to their Houſe, every Member in his Place made a Proteſtation, Whether he heard Mr. Coke ſpeak the Words charg'd upon him or not, and every one deny'd the hearing of them. They then drew up a Remonſtrance, which was preſented to the King, denying thoſe Words ſaid to be ſpoken by Mr. Coke, excuſing Dr. Turner, and avowing their Proceedings againſt the Duke, or any other Subject; praying the King not to give ear to officious Reports of private Perſons for their own Ends. They expected a preſent Anſwer, which, ſays Echard, poſſibly might have had happy Effects, if it had been a good one. Then Buckingham muſt have been puniſh'd, Laud diſgrac'd, Mountague ſilenc'd, evil Counſellors remov'd, the Palatine War carry'd on with Vigor, Papiſts proſecuted, Puritans reliev'd, Peace

Inſtead of a preſent Anſwer, the King ſaid he cou'd give no preſent one; and then the reverend Hiſtorian offers two Reaſons for it, which as they are jumbled together make but ordinary Work: The King was either conſcious of his own Integrity and the Duke's Fidelity, or perfectly averſe to all Meaſures that might retard the War. His Majeſty's Integrity to be yok'd with his Grace's Fidelity, under ſo heavy a Charge againſt him by the Houſe of Commons, is very extraordinary, as is that very wiſe Reflection of retarding the War; whereas the only Way to have the War proſecured, was to have deliver'd up the Duke to national Juſtice, and the Subſidies wou'd ſoon have been raiſed to carry it on Houſe of Lords diſſatisfy'd.

Tho' the Lords had been thank'd by the King, yet it was not long before a Diſcontent appear'd alſo in that auguſt Aſſembly, who petition'd the King againſt the Precedency challeng'd by the Scots and Iriſh new made Peers, but had this cold Anſwer, I will take Order therein. They were alſo diſcontented at the Impriſonment of the Earl of Arundel in time of Parliament, for his Son's marrying the Duke of Lenox's Siſter, whom his Majeſty had deſign'd for the Lord Lorn. The Earl of Arundel had five Proxies, which were loſt by his Impriſonment; and no Precedent was found of any Peer's having been committed in Seſſion of Parliament, except the Biſhop of Wincheſter in Edward IIſt. Time. The Lords paſs'd a Vote againſt it, which was follow'd by a Remonſtrance and a Petition for the Releaſement of the Earl; but no Anſwer being given to it, they petition'd again, and the King expreſs'd his Diſlike of it: But after a Petition or two more, Arundel was releas'd with ſo much Reluctancy, that according to the Archdeacon, the Favour was rather deſpis'd than acknowledg'd. Thus was there ill Blood made in the Houſe of Lords as well as in the Houſe of Commons; and inſtead of giving way in the leaſt to the preſent Diſpoſition of the People, the King's Counſellors, Villiers and Laud were the chief, put him upon Counſels which added Fuel to the Fire they were kindling in the Nation. Mr. Pym Chairman of the Committee of Religion, reported a Letter to the Lord-Mayor of York for the Reprieve of ſome Jeſuits, Prieſts, and other Recuſants; which Letter was compar'd with the Original in the Signet-Office, and his Majeſty took Offence at their being too inquiſitive after his Actions. Now Innocence defies all Inquiſition, and is the better pleas'd the more it is enquir'd into, which makes one doubt whether Echard's Coronation Robe was not of his own making. The Parliament juſtify'd the ſearching the Signet-Office, as warranted by Precedents on the like Occaſions.

Earl of Briſtol.

We have mention'd the Diſpleaſure of the Court againſt the Earl of Briſtol, who was not permitted to come to the laſt Parliament; and his Writ of Summons to this being detain'd, he petition'd the King that he might have it, as what had never been deny'd to any Peer: But the Lord Conway ſending him a dilatory Anſwer, the Earl petition'd the Houſe of Peers, and the Peers petition'd the King, that his Writ might be iſſu'd, which was done; but with a Letter from the Lord-Keeper Coventry to the Earl, ſignifying his Majeſty's Pleaſure that he ſhou'd forbear Attendance. How impolitick and irregular are their Proceedings? His Lordſhip not ſeeming ready to comply, the Keeper Coventry, for there was at this Time no Want of Inſtruments to ſet up the Prerogative againſt Privilege, inform'd the Lords that the King wou'd have the Earl ſent for as a Delinquent to anſwer Offences in Spain and ſince his Return. Sir Robert Heath Attorney-General exhibited eleven Articles againſt him, the other nine in a former Charge were left out. The Earl of Briſtol had given in Anſwer to thoſe Articles in King James's Time without any Replication; and the charging him again with them now, was plainly to prevent his articling againſt Buckingham, as it was known he intended. One of the Articles againſt Briſtol was for intimidating King James, by magnifying the Power of Spain in writing thus to him, If you love your Quiet, take heed how you attack ſuch a formidable Enemy; if you ſhou'd, there will be an End to your Pleaſure and Tranquility, and your innocent Diverſions, ſuch as Hunting and Feaſting will be interrupted. A fine Letter this, to be written by one of the wiſeſt Miniſters of State to the very wiſeſt Monarch of the Age. The Earl was alſo accuſed of intriguing with Spain to introduce Popery into England, and ſolliciting King James to releaſe Jeſuits; of miſinforming the King with relation to the Marriage-Treaty; of ſaying, He car'd not what the Succeſs of it wou'd be, he wou'd make his Fortune by it; of occaſioning the Prince's perilous Journey to Spain; of perſuading the Prince to change his Religion, &c. This terrible Accuſation, tho' ſupported by the King's Name and Authority, did not ſurprize the Earl of Briſtol, depending either on his own Innocence or the Affection of the Parliament. Being brought to the Bar of the Houſe of Lords, he ſpoke thus after the Articles againſt him had been read, I am a Freeman, and a Peer untainted, and have ſomewhat to ſay of high Conſequence. He was order'd to proceed: Then, ſaid he, I accuſe that Man, the Duke of Buckingham, of High-Treaſon, and will prove it: Accordingly he tender'd to the Houſe twelve Articles againſt him, and the Lords receiv'd them: The chief were, That he had plotted with Gondemar to bring the Prince into Spain to change his Religion; that he frequented the Popiſh Service in Spain, and ador'd their Sacrament; that he had broken the Match out of his own particular Ends; that he had abus'd King James by a ſiniſter Relation of thoſe Affairs. Out of both theſe Charges, 'tis probable one may pick ſome Truth, for the Earl and the Duke do both agree that there were Endeavours us'd to change the Prince's Religion, and that King James was abus'd with falſe Informations about the Treaty of Marriage; and it is more than probable the one was as guilty as the other; but the Duke's Guilt is apparent, according to Larrey, Moſt of the Hiſtorians, as well Proteſtants as Papiſts, agree about the Duke of Buckingham's Popery, excepting the Earl of Clarendon, who diſagrees with moſt Hiſtorians, and I am not the only Writer who has taken notice of it. Speaking of the Duke of Buckingham's ingratiating himſelf with King James's laſt Parliament, and his falling ſo ſoon into the Diſpleaſure of K. Charles's two firſt Parliaments, he, or ſome body in his Name, ſays, The Duke's Behaviour met with wonderful Applauſe; the Commons came to a haſty Reſolution to diſſuade the King from the Match, and frankly and reſolutely to enter into a War with Spain; towards the carrying on of which, they rais'd great Mountains of Promiſes, and prevailing in the firſt, never remember'd to make good the latter, which too often falls out in ſuch Counſels; which is only in every Word untrue, tho' it is one of the Paſſages given us by the Author as Inſtances of ſober Hiſtory; but I will produce an hiſtorical Paſſage that ſeems to have much more Sobriety in it: It is not to be wonder'd at, that the Parliament who was ſo active and ready to undertake a War for the Reſtitution of the Palatinate under King James, were now ſo unactive under King Charles. They had got better Knowledge of the Favourite's Deſigns, and wou'd not be his Bubble to raiſe Armies under the Pretence of that Reſtitution, only to ſatisfy the Vanity of an offended Miniſter. That they gave Mountains of Money inſtead of Mountains of Promiſes, appears by the frequent Complaints in this King's two firſt Parliaments of its being waſted and miſſpent. A.D.1626. Lord Conway articled againſt.

The Earl of Briſtol exhibited Articles alſo againſt Secretary Conway as the Duke's Creature, and unfit to be one of his Judges. The Lords wou'd not commit the Earl, nor wou'd they permit his Cauſe to be mov'd into the King's-Bench, as his Majeſty wou'd have had it. They order'd that the Articles exhibited againſt him ſhou'd not hinder his Teſtimony againſt the Duke. The Earl of Eſſex, the Lord Sheffield, and the Lord Say, were moſt zealous in the Proſecution of the Duke of Buckingham; and a few Days after the Earl of Briſtol deliver'd in his Anſwer to the Charge againſt him, introducing it with a Speech to clear two Objections, his ill Affection to the Proteſtant Religion, and his good Affection to Spain. He produc'd ſeveral Letters of Thanks for his Care in the Buſineſs of the Palatinate, and anſwer'd punctually every Article touching the Match with Spain, producing the Declaration for Privilege to Roman Catholicks, which was little leſs than a Toleration. He laid great Blame on the Adviſer of the Prince's Journey to Spain, and ſet forth how induſtrious he had been to hinder the Duke's perſwading the Prince to change his Religion. He owns he had in Diſcourſe given his Opinion for marrying the Elector Palatine's Son with the Emperor's Daughter; ſo that the Son, if he were bred in the Emperor's Court, might have Proteſtant Tutors, and Freedom of Religion for himſelf and Family. He declar'd he intended nothing but Honour and Service to the King, and humbly ſubmitted all to their Lordſhips Judgment. The Houſe of Peers ſeem'd to be mov'd with his Speech, and ſatisfy'd of his Innocence; and the Charge brought againſt him with ſo much Heat vaniſh'd and appear'd no more, tho' the Attorney-General pray'd the Lords to give more Credit to the Evidence of the King in favour of the Duke than to the paſſionate Accuſation of the Earl. The Commons proceeded againſt Buckingham as far as an Impeachment, which was ſent up to the Lords by eight of their Members. Sir Dudley Diggs introduc'd it with an eloquent Speech, comparing England to the World, the Commons to the Earth and Sea, the King to the Sun, the Lords to the Planets, the Clergy to the Fire, the Judges and Magiſtrates to the Air, the Duke of Buckingham to a blazing Star. The Impeachment was founded on Dr. Turner's ſix Queries; to which was added a new Article, that of the Plaiſter apply'd to King James's Side or Belly in ſo ſuſpicious a manner, which occaſion'd ſuch Symptoms, that a great many People, and the King himſelf, ſays Larrey, ſuſpected it was Poiſon. We read in Lilly, "That King James was really and abſolutely poiſon'd by a Plaiſter apply'd by Buckingham's Mother to that King's Stomach, as was evidently prov'd before a Committee; and even the moſt ſober of the King's Friends held him very much overſeen to deny a Parliament Juſtice in matter of Poiſon, the Party poiſon'd being his Father". Sir John Elliot ſpoke laſt, and recapitulated the Heads of the Charge, comparing Buckingham to Sejanus; for after the Example of that baſe Flatterer, he ſtil'd himſelf the Companion of his Maſter's Labours, while he uſurp'd the ſovereign Authority, and ſully'd its Glory. As his Crime was the ſame, ſo he did not fail to wiſh him the ſame Puniſhment. It was wonder'd by many, according to Echard, that conſidering the Duke's Power and Influence, greater Offences were not objected againſt him: By which it appears, that with ſuch Men as the Hiſtorian, the engroſſing of Offices, employing unfit Perſons becauſe related or ally'd to him, neglecting his Duty as Lord High-Admiral and Lord-Warden of the Cinque-Ports, the plundering of 20000 Pounds out of a French Ship, the extorting 10000 Pounds from the Eaſt-India Company, the delivering up ſeven Ships to the French for the Deſtruction of the reform'd Religion in France, the putting off Offices, Honours, and even Biſhopricks to Sale, the patronizing Romiſh Prieſts and Jeſuits is nothing, and deſerv'd not the Pains the Commons took to bring him to account for it. As ſoon as Sir Dudley Diggs and Sir John Elliot had done ſpeaking, they were beckon'd by two Gentlemen to come out of the Houſe of Lords, and going to them, found them to be two Gentlemen of the King's Chamber, who had two Warrants to carry Elliot and Diggs to the Tower, contrary to the Opinion of the Judges, that their Reſtraint was an Arreſt of the whole Body. The Archdeacon inſerts a Letter written, as he pretends, by an eminent Hand to the King concerning the Duke's Impeachment; which being as compleat a Piece of Sophiſtry as any in the Hiſtory of the Rebellion, or his own Hiſtory, I ſhall in part repeat; No Favourite was ever call'd to Account but it was follow'd by Rebellion; witneſs the Earl of Somerſet in the laſt Reign, the Earl of Eſſex in Queen Elizabeth's, &c. Richard II. Henry VI. and Edward VI. were deſtroyed by it. Excellent Hiſtory! Leiceſter, Hatton, and Raleigh in Queen Elizabeth's Time were worſe than the Duke. This is their way of talking; they aſſert poſitively without any Proof, and if that will not paſs for Argument they have no other. No Lawyer durſt ſpeak againſt them; if you decourt Buckingham, the Monarchy will fall with him; but Felton cut his Throat and the Monarchy remain'd as it was, till Laud and his Brethren had fill'd up the Meaſure of the Iniquities of theſe Times. If the Parliament prevail in him, they will make Privy Counſellors, Lord-Stewards, and Lord-Chamberlains, How he conjures! Ambaſſadors, Auditors, &c. The Truth of theſe wonderful Predictions afterwards appear'd in the Event. But there was another Paper which probably the Archdeacon never heard of, left on the King's Table, and it is a much more wonderful one, tho' there is no Spirit of Prophecy in it; The principal Actors in this Scene are Papiſts or Puritans; the Papiſts hate the Duke for breaking the Match with the Infanta; the Puritans, becauſe he, being ſuch an admirable Divine, looks upon them as Sectaries; the reſt are Bankrupts, Debauchees, Republicans, and the like; which appearing ſo evidently by the Names of the Duke's Proſecutors, 'tis pity the reverend Author had not honour'd his Hiſtory with this Letter alſo.

Impeachment of the Duke of Bucks.

Larrey, 78

The King went to the Houſe of Lords, and complain'd bitterly of the Commons for their Want of Reſpect to him in accuſing as a Delinquent a Peer of the Realm honour'd with his Truſt, and for whoſe Innocence his own Honour and Conſcience oblig'd him to give Teſtimony; but the Commons ſent Sir Nathaniel Rich with a Meſſage to the Lords, deſiring the Duke might be committed, which the Lords did not think fit to do; and the Commons growing ſtill more warm, turn'd themſelves into a grand Committee, lock'd up their Doors, and reſolv'd to proceed no further till they were righted in their Privileges. Sir Dudley Charlton in vain endeavour'd to allay this Heat, by blaming Sir Dudley Diggs and Sir John Elliot. Sir Dudley deny'd he ſpoke the Words that gave the Offence, and was releas'd; ſo alſo was Sir John Elliot, who inſtead of denying his Speech, juſtify'd the Paſſages objected againſt him, and the Houſe paſs'd a Vote in Juſtification of him, Sir Dudley Diggs, and all the other Members who manag'd the Impeachment; and to ſhew their ſtrict Regard to Juſtice, committed Mr. Moore, another of their Members, for ſpeaking Words reflecting on the King.

Cambridge

'Tis worth obſerving that Mr. Echard applauds the Wiſdom and Diſcretion of the Univerſity of Cambridge in chuſing the Duke of Buckingham their Chancellor at this very Juncture, when the Parliament was proſecuting him as the greateſt Enemy to the Rights and Liberties of the People. Fuller ſays, a grand Party there unſought, unſent, unſu'd, according

*A.D.*1626. according to his usual Jingling, gave their Suffrages for Thomas Earl of Berkshire, second Son to their late Chancellor, Thomas Earl of Suffolk, and that the Duke carry'd it by very few Voices. The Parliament intended to write to the University about it, but the King wou'd not let them; on the contrary he wrote himself to Cambridge, and applauded the new Election, because, as the Archdeacon observes, it shew'd their Dislike to the Commons. A few Days after the Duke deliver'd in his Answer to the Articles of Impeachment, which he introduc'd with a very handsome artful Speech to the Lords; That his Accuser, Common Fame, was too subtle, and the House of Commons too great for him to contest with all, but he doubted not in time it wou'd be found that Common Fame had abus'd them both. Echard assures us, the Duke's Answer was a kind of new Grievance. When these Men pretend to Wit, 'tis as awkard as the Ass's setting up for a Fop. His Adversaries expected a Defence of a more disdainful Nature, but there appear'd a Water-Spout on the Thames, which making a furious Assault on the Duke's House, gave these Adversaries a Handle to have it pass for portentous among the Vulgar, especially when at the same time a great Part of the Church-yard Wall of St. Andrew's Holborn fell down, several Graves were laid open, and Coffins tumbled into the midst of the Street, in a Storm of Hail, Rain, and Thunder, which some said was rais'd by Dr. Lamb a Wizard and Quack, whom the Duke employ'd and protected. The King sent to the Parliament to quicken them in the Matter of Subsidies, and the Parliament petition'd about Recusants, naming those in Places of Trust, and praying they may be remov'd. They also presented an Address by their Speaker, professing their Affection and Loyalty, and desiring his Majesty not to permit the Duke to have any more Access to him. To which the King return'd no Answer. A very likely way to get Subsidies! and the Commons foreseeing they should not sit long unless they wou'd give Money and forgive the Duke, agreed upon a Remonstrance against him, and against taking Tonnage and Poundage, tho' not granted by Act of Parliament. This hasten'd the Dissolution, tho' the Lords drew up a Petition to the King not to dissolve them, expressing themselves very dutifully and affectionately, "We are your Ma"jesty's Hereditary Great Council: Permit us
"then to represent the Evils we foresee both at "home at abroad, that must be the Consequence
"of dissolving this Parliament. Your Glory and "the Happiness of your Subjects consist in a hap"py Union between them and your Majesty.
"This is the greatest Security of your Majesty's "Authority and their Love. By this way alone
"your Majesty will obtain what you desire, and "you will possess the Riches with the Hearts of "the Nation. Their Treasure will be always o"pen in a Parliamentary Way: But every thing is "to be apprehended from a Dissolution, that will "break all those sacred Ties; which we most hum-
"bly beg your Majesty to reflect on seriously".

Larrey. King's ill Conduct.

The Earls of Manchester, Carlisle and Holland were deputed to deliver this Petition to the King; but he answer'd only, I am determin'd, and will hear nothing to the contrary. Echard says the Petition was never deliver'd. Villiers and Laud were his chief Counsellors; and what they deserv'd for shutting his Ears against such wholsome Counsel as the Lords gave him, let the Reader determine. This is that Opiniatreté which was the distinguishing Character of King Charles I. and which is a sure Sign of Want of good Sense and good Nature. Lilly the Astrologer tells us, "The old Scotish La"dy his Nurse was us'd to affirm, that he was of "a very evil Nature even in his Infancy; and
"the Lady, who afterwards took charge of him,
"cannot deny it, but that he was beyond mea-
"sure wilful and unthankful"; which, as well as *A.D.*1626. some other Particulars I shou'd not have quoted after the Astrologer, for whose Science I have a hearty Contempt, did they not agree with the Facts in other Histories. All the Counsel Laud and Villiers gave him render'd his Government daily more and more unpopular; and what must be the winding up of such a Bottom was not hard to foresee.

Parliament dissolv'd.

On the 15th of June, this great, warm, and ruffling Parliament, as Whitlock calls them, was dissolv'd by Commission; and the same Day the Earl of Bristol was imprison'd, and the Earl of Arundel confin'd, that nothing might be omitted to increase the Aversion the People had to the Ministry. There is no Gloss in Clarendon for this Rashness and Obstinacy. "The Course of ex-
"empting Men from Prosecution, says my Author,
"by dissolving of Parliaments, made the Power
"of Parliaments much more formidable; as con-
"ceiv'd to be without Limit, since the Sovereign
"Power seem'd to be compell'd (as unable other"wise to set Bounds to their Proceedings) to that
"Cure, and to determine their Being, because it
"cou'd not determine their Jurisdiction". An Anonymous Historian tells us the Parliament had their Proofs ready against Buckingham. The Commons Remonstrance against the Duke, which they had not time to deliver, was printed and dispers'd. He was charg'd in it with being the Author of all the Misunderstandings between the King and his People, and of almost all the Grievances they complain'd of. The King publish'd a Declaration containing the Grounds and Causes for dissolving this and the former Parliament, and a Proclamation for suppressing the Parliament's Remonstrance; which must be own'd to be the shortest way of answering it. The Parliament said in their Remonstrance, "How can we suffer a Man so dan"gerous and ill designing in the Administration,
"to enjoy the chief Offices of the State? How "can we grant Subsidies to your Majesty, which "must pass thro' his Hands, and which he will "employ to ruin our Liberties and Religion? Is "it not he that has put your Majesty on levying
"Tonnage and Poundage, which were granted to "the late King only during his Life, and which "cannot be rais'd after his Death without a new "Bill? We cannot look on these pernicious Coun-
"sellors but with Horror, who engage your Ma-
"jesty in such Measures, as a good King, such as "your Majesty, ought not to take. We repeat
"it, That we look on the pernicious Counsellors
"as Vipers, as publick Plagues, and as capital Ene-
"mies to the King and People". Bishop Laud was one of the Chiefs of the Council, fatal, say they, to both. The Remonstrance again: "The King
"cannot exact Contributions but in a Parliamen-
"tary Way, nor the Parliament see their Pri-
"vileges violated witho it complaining and Mur-
"murs. Your Majesty promised that there shou'd
"be no Occasion for such Complaints: How "comes it that one of your Ministers has the "Power to make you break so solemn an En"gagement? Remove so dangerous an Enemy
"from your Court and Person. Free us from "our just Fears, and then your Majesty shall "find us ready to give such Supplies, as can be "expected from a People to a King who is infi"nitely belov'd; and we are ready to sacrifice our "Lives and Estates to make you the most power-
"ful Prince that ever sate on the Throne of Eng-
"land, and are uneasy only for our Liberties and "Religion". The Archdeacon has learnt of the Author of Clarendon's History to sink such Papers as he does not like, or so to curtail them that the Spirit of them is lost. Thus we have only a word or two of this Remonstrance, of which his Majesty in his Declaration after the Dissolution of the Parliament, says a thing extremely unbecoming the

The Lord Clarendon, if he was the Hiſtorian, ſays, He engag'd his old unwilling Maſter and the Kingdom in a War with Spain; not to mention the bold Journey thither on the Breach of the Match, in a Time when the Crown was ſo poor; and this only upon perſonal Animoſities between him and the Duke of Olivarez, &c. Was this ſerving the late King faithfully? Clarendon again: The Duke took great Pains to leſſen the King's Affection to his Wife. Was this to ſerve him himſelf faithfully? I cou'd fill many Pages with Inſtances directly oppoſite to that Aſſertion; but theſe are, I think, ſufficient to give one a juſt Notion of the Integrity as well as the Senſe of that Declaration, where indeed it was not forgotten to extol his ſupreme, immediate and independent Authority of Calling, Adjourning, Proroguing and Diſſolving the Parliament. What has all this to do with ſcreening a Criminal from Juſtice, and with taking Tonnage and Poundage againſt Law? The Right of my Prerogative is inſeparable from the Crown, and for which I am bound to give an Account to none but God my only ſuperior. And was not the People's Money as much their Right? And if he took it from them illegally, as he did, tho' there was to be a ſevere Account given of it at the laſt Judgment, yet it was the People's Right inſeparable from their Birth, to keep what was their own, and to hinder his taking it from them againſt Law if they cou'd.

Illegal Taxes.

Several other illegal Ways beſides that of Tonnage and Poundage were made uſe of to extort Money from the People; as a free Gift. By this means, ſays Larrey, to give new Grounds of Complaint, and to transfer the Nation's Hatred of the Favourite to the King. Knighthood, an old, obſolete, nonſenſical Project, attended with Circumſtances that render'd the Grievance as monſtrous as it was oppreſſive. The King at his Coronation ſet forth a Proclamation containing, That in regard of the Infection then ſpreading thro' the Kingdom, he wou'd diſpenſe with thoſe Knights, who by an ancient Statute were to attend at that Solemnity; and they were thereby requir'd not to attend. However, within a few Months after he took Advantage of their Abſence, and rais'd a vaſt Sum of Money out of their Eſtates at the Council-Table; where they pleading the ſaid Proclamation for their Juſtification were anſwer'd, The Law of the Land is above any Proclamation. Like that Tyrant, ſays Coke, who when he cou'd not by Law execute a Virgin, commanded her to be deflower'd, and then put to Death. Another ſays of it, He ſet up the Project of Knighthood, and call'd to account all Gentlemen and others that attended not his Coronation, tho' he had before forbidden their Attendance by Proclamation. Thoſe two impartial Hiſtorians Mr. Echard and the Author of the Hiſtory of the Rebellion have not the leaſt Hint of this Proclamation, but inſiſt upon the Foundation it had in Right, a ſhame to the Lawyer who ſaid it, that becauſe 15 l. a Year made a Man liable to a Knight's Tax, when 15 l. a Year was as much as 150 at the Time when Knighthood was reviv'd; therefore every Man of 40 l. a Year ſhou'd pay it, when 40 l was no more than 4 l. in Edward the Second's Time, when that romantick Tax was rated at 15 l. a Year. Loans and other lawleſs Ways and Means to pick the People's Pockets were thought of; Projects very grievous, unjuſt, ridiculous and ſcandalous were ſet on foot, as we read in Clarendon; for there is a Force in Truth which will ſometimes oblige even its Enemies to confeſs it.

A.D.1626.

There was hardly any thing talk'd of, but the Parliament's Remonſtrance and the King's Declaration. The major Vote was apparently on the Side of the Remonſtrance, which ſunk deeply into the Minds of the aggrieved People; but the King's Declaration ſhew'd only that the Court rather thought ſomething ſhou'd be ſaid, than really that they had any thing to ſay againſt it.

Loan.

The Loan was regulated by the Sum the Parliament had voted for Subſidies and Fifteenths; as if the King exacted no more than the Houſe of Commons had given him, tho' indeed they had given him nothing. His Majeſty promis'd to call another Parliament as ſoon as his Affairs wou'd permit him, to make good the Subſidies which he anticipated by the Loan. The Peers offer'd their Contributions readily, and the Papiſts offer'd double; but the Court underſtanding on what Conditions, did not think proper to revoke the Penal Laws, and give new Umbrage to the Proteſtants for ſo poor a Conſideration as 10 or 20000 l. to which their double Payment might at that time amount. Archdeacon Echard owns that Laud undertook to juſtify the levying of this illegal Impoſition; and drew up Inſtructions which were ſent to the two Archbiſhops to be diſpers'd among the inferior Clergy, and to be publiſh'd in all Pariſhes. He adds, There were plauſible Reaſons for raiſing this Money without Act of Parliament; which is Nonſenſe. There cannot be a plauſible Reaſon for acting contrary to Law. The Subſidies might have been levy'd regularly, if the Court wou'd have let the Parliament have proceeded regularly againſt Buckingham. The Wiſdom of this Miniſtry appears farther in Echard's Account of the Loan. "The Reluctance of private Perſons to "pay it made the Government moſt ſevere in the "Execution of the Project; and the Severity "made the People more averſe to it. So that the "Steps taken to promote the Deſign caus'd it to "have leſs Succeſs, and to appear more odious". But then he takes upon him to inſinuate, that without this illegal Tax they had hazarded the Loſs of all their Eſtates; and proceeds, The Clergy were earneſtly excited from above to promote and advance this Deſign, in which they labour'd very heartily.

Clergy, the bad and the good.

The Reader is deſir'd to underſtand always when we ſpeak of Clergy on theſe Occaſions, ſuch Clergymen as Neile, Wren, Mountague, Coſins, Manwaring, Sibthorp, and all under the Influence of Laud; that the ſincere Proteſtants of the true Church of England, ſuch as Moreton, Carlton, Davenant, Uſher, Browrig, Hall, Featly, Prideaux, Oldſworth, Shute, Udal, Ward, Gouge, Sibs, and a great Number of pious, learned Divines, always bore their Teſtimony againſt Laud's Innovations in Church and State; and it ought to be remember'd to the Honour of the Univerſity of Oxford, that great Diſcontents grew there, to uſe Dr. Fuller's Words, for the multiplying Innovations in Divine Service; which I remark here, that the Reader may diſtinguiſh ſuch Divines as Sibthorp and Manwaring from true Church of England Miniſters, who in all times ſince our Church was reform'd have been the Support and Ornament of the Reformation. It is to Laud only and his Creatures that muſt be imputed the ſpiritual and temporal Grievances of this Reign; and we never mean any other Clergy, when we ſpeak of the Miſchiefs and Miſeries they were the Occaſion of.

Clergy preach up arbitrary Power.

Sibthorp and Manwaring undertook to prove out of Scripture, that the King might impoſe publick Taxes without Conſent of Parliament, and that the People were bound in Conſcience to obey his Will and Pleaſure. This Doctrine was preach'd by Sibthorp in an Aſſize Sermon at Northampton. He Sibthorp's Sermon.

*A.D.*1626. publiſh'd it under the Title of Apoſtolick Obedience, and dedicated it to the King, whoſe Royal Diſpoſition to arbitrary deſpotick Power he muſt ſure'y be well acquainted with, or he durſt not have been ſo impudent as to have prefix'd his Majeſty's Name to it. Manwaring preach'd two Sermons to the ſame purpoſe before the King and Court with great Applauſe. He alſo publiſh'd them under the Title of, Religion and Allegiance. Let us therefore ſee what the Allegiance and Religion of Laud'an Clergy are made of. The King is not bound to obſerve the Laws of the Realm concerning the Subjects Rights and Liberties. His Majeſty being thus abſolv'd for breaking the Coronation Oath, it is ſaid farther, His Royal Will in impoſing Taxes without Conſent of Parliament binds the Subjects Conſcience on Pain of Damnation. As impious as this Doctrine is, 'tis every whit as falſe. But there wou'd be no Terror in his impotent Threat, and his Brethren might have preach'd to Eternity without bringing a Penny into the Exchequer, if the Writs to the Sheriff and the Sheriffs Myrmidons had not plunder'd the People by that pretended Authority. Thoſe who refuſe to pay the Loan offend God. Wretched Sycophant. Thoſe who refuſe to do things contrary to Law are guilty of Sin: They offend God, there's their Religion; and the King's ſupreme Authority, there's their Allegiance, and become guilty of Impiety, Diſloyalty, and Rebellion. For this wonderful Preachment, and being puniſh'd for it, Manwaring, ſenſeleſs and worthleſs as he was, got a good Biſhoprick, tho' Echard himſelf confeſſes, Manwaring's and Sibthorp's Sermons occaſion'd ſome hard Reflections upon the Clergy in general, when in ſo large a Body only two were found to run into ſuch Extremes. There needs no Authority to prove this ſo barefac'd a Falſity, only two who preach'd up arbitrary Power. The thing ſpeaks itſelf. General Ludlow tells us, This was not the only Work of which the Clergy were judg'd capable, and therefore divers of them enter'd the Liſts as Champions of the Prerogative, aſſerting that the Poſſeſſions and Eſtates of the Subjects did of Right belong to the King, and that he might diſpoſe of them at his Pleaſure; thereby vacating and annulling as much as in them lay all the Laws of England that ſecure a Property to the People. Not a Syllable of this in Clarendon or Echard. It was then as in our Days: Thoſe evil Counſellors who betray'd the People's Liberties generally made uſe of the meaneſt, moſt ignorant, and moſt immoral of the Clergy to carry on their Deſign. They cou'd not make Tools of the Pious, Learned, and Wiſe. A. Wood acknowledges Sibthorp was a Perſon of little Learning and few Parts; only made it his Endeavour by his Forwardneſs to gain Preferment. Such a one was Sacheverel in our Days; and ſuch will all thoſe Clergy be, who turn Religion and Allegiance into Superſtition and Slavery. All their Preaching did not reconcile the People to the Loan. They may ſometimes be preach'd out of their Opinoins, but ſeldom or never out of their Money, when the Law is on their Side. The Deputy Lieutenants and Juſtices of the Peace in Dorſetſhire ſaid the Caſe was without Precedent. The ſame ſaid the Citizens of London. But the Privy-Council told them Precedents in former Time was Obedience, and not Direction. All falſe again and ſophiſtical. There were no Precedents of Obedience contrary to Law without Objection, which theſe ſage Counſellors, and Laud among the reſt, call Direction. Some of the Perſons who refus'd the Loan were preſs'd for Seamen, ſome for Soldiers, and the Country Gentlemen were thrown into Priſon in Counties diſtant from their Seats, particularly Sir Thomas Wentworth, Sir John Hotham, George Ratcliffe, Eſq; Sir William Conſtable, Yorkſhire; Sir John Wray, Sir William Armyn, Sir Thomas Grantham, Sir Edward Ayſcough, Lincolnſhire; Sir William Wilmer, Sir Eraſmus Dryden, Richard Knightley, Eſq; Northamptonſhire; Sir Walter Earl, Sir John Strangways, John Tregonwell, Eſq; Dorſetſhire; Sir John Heveningham, Sir Samuel Barnardſton, Suffolk; Sir Harbottle Grimſton, Sir Francis Barrington, Eſſex; Sir Robert Poyntz, Henry Powle, Eſq; Glouceſterſhire; John Hampden, Eſq; Sir Edward Hampden, Buckinghamſhire; Sir Maurice Berkley, Somerſetſhire; Sir John Corbet, Shropſhire; Sir William Chauncey, Richard Anderſon, Eſq; Hertfordſhire; Peter Dalton, Eſq; Cheſhire. Sir Beauchamp St. John, Bedfordſhire; Sir John Elliot, William Coriton, Eſq; Cornwall; Sir Thomas Darnel, Mr. Norwood, Sir Peter Hayman, Kent; and others, Knights of Shires, Citizens and Burgeſſes in Parliament. This is another of thoſe popular Steps which diſtinguiſh K. Charles's Reign from all others The Archdeacon tells us, The Gentlemen were branded as Puritans, while the Papiſts, who were moſt liberal in the Loan, were careſs'd by the Courtiers, which ſtill added to the popular Diſguſts; yet he is afterwards amaz'd how Diſguſts heap'd upon Diſguſts ſhou'd turn Diſcontent into Indignation, and Indignation into the worſt Sort of Action Civil War.

Beſides the Loan there was a Benevolence requir'd: Another Way of forcing People to give a free Gift. Commiſſions were iſſu'd for Muſters, martial Law was executed, and the Inhabitants of the Sea Coaſts were commanded to repair to, and dwell upon their Eſtates. Soldiers were billeted, and great Outrages committed by them. Sir Randolph Crew, a very worthy Magiſtrate, was remov'd from the High Office of Lord Chief Juſtice; and Sir Nicholas Hyde, whoſe greateſt Merit was his drawing the Duke's Anſwer, had his Place given him. To crown all theſe ungrateful Meaſures, the Biſhop of Lincoln was proſecuted in the Star-Chamber for ſpeaking againſt the Loan. Laud was promoted to the Biſhoprick of Bath and Wells, and ſoon after to the Deanery of the Royal Chapel, for his Services, ſays Echard; but has not one Piece of real Service to remember. It muſt be for theſe Services, or the ſake of the good Company he was in, that the venerable Body of Doctors at Cambridge treated him with Splendor, he being then attending the Duke of Buckingham, whoſe Services too had made him too powerful for the Parliament. The judicious Fuller informs us, the Duke preſented the Beadles with fine ſilver Staves having the King's Arms engrav'd upon them, not forgetting his own, for the greater Honour of the Eſquire Beadles and the Univerſity.

Benevolence.

Illegal Taxes and arbitrary Proceedings.

With the Money rais'd by the Loan and Benevolence, a Squadron of Ships was ſent to the Elbe to ſecure the Commerce of the Engliſh trading to Hamburgh; but we do not hear how it came to be interrupted.

*A.D.*1627.

The main Fleet was fitted out at Portſmouth. 'Twas ſaid to be deſign'd againſt the Algerines, but it was really intended againſt France, and for one of the moſt unaccountable Wars that ever a Prince enter'd into, conſidering that neither King Charles nor the Duke cou'd have the leaſt Concern for the Safety of Rochelle, a City they had lent the French King Ships to reduce a Year before; tho' now Satisfaction was demanded for employing them in that Service, and for the Capture of Engliſh Merchant Ships to the Value of 30000 l. tho' the Duke of Buckingham was himſelf the Aggreſſor by ſeizing the St. Peter of New Haven, and taking 20000 l. out of her in Jewels and other rich Commodities.

The Fleet againſt France.

The Reſentment on the French King's Part was for diſmiſſing the Queen's French Servants, whoſe Inſolence was become intolerable. The King told them himſelf he wou'd bear it no longer, and they muſt be gone. Her Majeſty's Prieſts had been ſo bold, as to enjoin her in Penance to walk barefoot to Tyburn to pay her Devotions, where ſo many Popiſh Prieſts had receiv'd Martyrdom and Saintſhip, for plotting againſt the Religion and Laws of

A.D.1627. their Country. The Biſhop of Mende, and Madam de St. Gieorge, who were the greateſt Offenders, began to make Apologies, but the King turn'd ſhort upon them, ſaying, I name none, but I tell you my Reſolution. The Queen fell into a furious Paſſion, and flew into great Indecencies in Words and Actions, upbraiding him with want of Love, which he endeavour'd to diſprove by the ſofteſt and moſt ſoothing Expreſſions; but failing in that, he had Recourſe to his Authority, ſaying, Be ſatisfied, it muſt be ſo. About one hundred and twenty of theſe French Domeſticks were ſent back to France, after they had been paid their Wages and Penſions to the full. The Lord Carlton was diſpatch'd to Paris, to notify this Action, and explain the Cauſes of it; but it was too great a Diſgrace to a Daughter of France, to be put up without ſome Shew of Reſentment. The French Court ſaid the Marriage Articles were violated, and Orders were given to confiſcate all Engliſh Ships in the Ports of France. This Broil was the chief Pretence of the War, and truly 'tis a kind of Riddle which wants Interpretation, that Buckingham ſhou'd begin a War at one end of France to ſee his Miſtreſs at another, as was inſinuated; or that ſo good a Friend to Popery, ſhou'd be concern'd for the Safety of Proteſtants. It was not only talk'd in England, that Buckingham's chief Deſign in the French War was to mortify Richlieu his more happy Rival, at leaſt as he imagin'd, and ſee his Miſtreſs the Queen of France: It was alſo the Talk in France, and even in the Court, where the Dutcheſs de Chevreuſe did not ſtick to ſpeak of his Fleet and Forces with Joy, and the Queen herſelf did the ſame among her Confidents. Madam de Motteville tells us, nothing was more grateful to her and the Dutcheſs de Chevreuſe, who was in Love with the Earl of Holland. Her Majeſty took Pleaſure in hearing the Wiſhes of the Dutcheſs for the Proſperity of the Engliſh.

Buckingham's Paſſion for the French Queen.

Some Months before this the Queen of England began to be out of Conceit with her Husband, whoſe ſullen Temper was not at all ſuitable to her Gaiety. Buckingham heighten'd her Diſguſt into an Averſion, by telling her frankly, that if he pleas'd he cou'd ſet them together by the Ears; and he did it to ſuch a Degree as to make her grow melancholy, and long to return to France. In order to which ſhe endeavour'd to gain Buckingham, knowing what a paſſionate Deſire he had to renew his Viſits to Queen Anne of Auſtria. He came into it with Eagerneſs, and did her ſo great Service, as to obtain Leave for her from the King her Husband, on Condition ſhe procur'd Leave for Buckingham from the Court of France to accompany her. She wrote ſo to her Mother Mary de Medicis; but neither that Princeſs, nor the King her Brother, wou'd conſent to it. Buckingham's Pretence was to compoſe the Difference between the two Crowns by Treaty; and being deny'd in that Propoſition, he in Revenge put the King upon this War, which ſeems to be pretty near the Truth. Be it as it will, he got a Fleet and Army together, and came before Rochelle with 100 Sail of Ships about the middle of July; but the Rochellers, as much in Diſtreſs as they were, had not ſuch a good Opinion of the Duke's Friendſhip towards them, as to put themſelves immediately into his Hands, and told Sir William Beecher, the Duke's Meſſenger, they were bound by Oath not to do any Thing without the Conſent of the reſt of the Religion. Buckingham began his Expedition with a Memorial in his own Name, not his Maſter's; wherein he took Notice of the French King's refuſing Paſſage to Count Manſvelde's Army beforemention'd; which Affront had been born with two or three Years, and the Ships to reduce Rochelle were lent ſince that; ſo abſurd was the Cauſe as well as Courſe of this War.

Mott. Mem. 17.

Iſle of Rhe

The Duke de Sobiez Brother to the Duke de Rohan, being aboard the Engliſh Fleet, adviſ'd Buckingham to land the Army in the Iſle of Oleron, as an Enterprize more feaſible than that of the Iſle of Rhe, which was ſtronger and better provided. This was agreed upon, but Sobiez was no ſooner gone to his Friends in Rochelle, than Buckingham alter'd his Reſolution, and ſail'd to the Iſle of Rhe, where he landed 1200 Men about the firſt of Auguſt. The French encounter'd them, but were repuls'd, and the whole Army came ſafe aſhore. Toiras Governor of the Iſland had five Batallions of Foot, and ſix Squadrons of Horſe to oppoſe Buckingham's landing; but the Fire of his Cannon drove away the French, and the Engliſh landed with little or no Loſs. Larrey thinks if the Duke had attack'd the Fort and Citadal immediately, while the French were in Conſternation, he might have made himſelf Maſter of both; but inſtead of uſing that Diligence, he ſpent his Time in making Lines about his Camp, and gave the Enemy an Opportunity to finiſh their Works, and put them out of Danger. Some Days after he beſieg'd the Citadel in Form, and finding a greater Reſiſtance than he expected, he endeavour'd to reduce it by ſtarving the Garriſon; but Relief arriving from the Continent, 8000 Men commanded by Mareſchal Schomberg, the Duke after a brave tho' unfortunate Aſſault on the Citadel, rais'd the Siege, and in his Retreat was purſu'd by the French now ſuperior to him in Numbers. The Garriſon of Fort le Prie attack'd the Engliſh in their Rear, and routed them in a narrow Lane or Cauſey. The Horſe fell in upon the Foot, who tumbled into the Salt-Pits and periſh'd, or in the Ditches on both Sides. Coming to a Bridge, the Crowd was ſo great, that many of the Engliſh were drown'd in the River; however, they made a Stand at this Bridge, and the French perceiving they were reſolv'd to ſell their Lives dearly, left the Purſuit, and Buckingham reach'd his Ships with the Remains of his Army. There were ſlain in this wretched Expedition Sir William Heydon and the martial Sir John Burroughs, with many gallant Officers, and above 2500 Soldiers, tho' Buckingham did his utmoſt to leſſen the Loſs in the Reports that were made to both King and People. I have met with another Account of this Retreat in a contemporary Hiſtory: "The Night before the Retreat, the "Duke call'd a Council of War, and there ſhew'd "them the Neceſſity of a Retreat, and that himſelf in martial Diſcipline being wholly unexperienc'd, left the managing of the next Day's "Action to them, offering the Service of his "Perſon to any Hazard whatever, as far as any "private Soldier. The Council unanimouſly choſe "Sir William Courtney to manage the Retreat, a "heavy, dull, covetous old Man, who having "been twenty or thirty Years a private Captain "in Holland, was by Sir John Burroughs's Means "made Colonel in this Expedition; and Burroughs "being dead, the Command for that Day was "given to old Courtney; but he either through "Want of Judgment or Forgetfulneſs, having not "ſufficiently provided for the Security of the Engliſh Rear, many of them were cut to Pieces; "and had not Sir Pierce Crosby with 800 Iriſh, "made good their Retreat, the whole Army had "been loſt." Courtney himſelf fell into a Salt Pan, and eſcap'd by his Man Anthony's crying out, Oh, ſave my Captain; but the poor Fellow loſt his own Life in attempting it. A Doctor of Phyſick who was in this Expedition at Rhe, hearing ſeveral Officers tell his Majeſty there were but three or four hundred kill'd, cou'd not forbear undeceiving him, aſſuring him there were two thouſand ſlain, for which Truth he was forbidden the Court. We have not ſeen one good Step taken by this notable General, whoſe Heroiſm makes ſuch a Figure in Echard's Hiſtory. The Engliſh who had been accuſtom'd to ſee their Generals return with Triumph in all Enterprizes during the glorious Reign of

*A.D.*1627. of Queen Elizabeth, conceiv'd the utmoſt Indignation againſt Buckingham and his Adviſers, of whom Laud was the chief, as appears by the Cry at that Time, There muſt ſome be ſacrific'd, and Laud as ſoon as any. That Prelate hearing of it, told the King, who anſwer'd, I deſire you not to trouble yourſelf with any Reports, till you ſee me forſake my Friends. Theſe Friends were Villiers, Laud, Neile, Weſton, Conway, &c. who flatter'd him with abſolute Power; and his Enemies were thoſe generous Patriots who defended the Rights and Liberties of his Subjects in Parliament. The Archdeacon acknowledges that the King did not at all reſent the Diſhonour which was thrown on the Engliſh Name by his Friend Buckingham. Yet the Peoples Reſentments were increas'd by it, all Tongues and Pens were ſharpen'd againſt this inglorious Expedition; the Citizens murmur'd at a viſible Decay of Trade; the Merchants were diſcourag'd from building of Ships; the Mariners came in Multitudes to Whitehall clamouring for their Pay; Land Soldiers were kept up and billetted, and martial Law continu'd to be executed. In ſum, the Duke was univerſally deteſted, and upon his Account every Grievance and Misfortune were aggravated and repreſented in the moſt hideous Manner. Compare this Account of the Times with that in Clarendon. The Kingdom proſper'd exceedingly, and enjoy'd a longer Peace, a greater Plenty, and in fuller Security than had been in any former Age. During the whole Time that theſe Preſſures were exercis'd, the Nation enjoy'd the greateſt Calm, and the FULLEST Meaſure of FELICITY that any People in any Age had been bleſs'd with, to the Wonder and Envy of all Chriſtendom. And in another Place he tells us what thoſe Felicities were; "Upon every Diſſolu- "tion of Parliament, ſuch as had given any Of- "fence were impriſon'd or diſcharg'd. New Pro- "jects were every Day ſet on Foot for Money, "which ſerv'd only to offend and incenſe the Peo- "ple. Many Perſons of the beſt Quality and "Condition under the Peerage, were committed "to ſeveral Priſons with unheard of Circumſtan- "ces, for refuſing to pay Money requir'd by theſe "extravagant Ways. Supplemental Acts of State "were made to ſupply Defects of Law, and ſo "Tonnage and Poundage, and other Duties on "Merchandiſe, were collected by Order of the "Board, which had been poſitively refus'd to be "ſettled by Act of Parliament. New and greater "Impoſitions were laid upon Trade, obſolete Laws "were reviv'd and rigorouſly executed, the Coun- "ties were incens'd, the Endeavours to raiſe Men "by preſſing found Oppoſition, and the Authority "was not ſubmitted to, as being counted illegal. "Many were executed by martial Law, which "rais'd an Aſperity in the Minds of more than "the common People; and this Diſtemper was "ſo univerſal, that all wiſe Men look'd upon it as "a Prediction of the Deſtruction that wou'd fol- "low; nor was there Serenity in the Countenance "of any Man." I believe this is one of the Parts of Clarendon's Hiſtory, which his Lordſhip wrote himſelf, notwithſtanding how inconſiſtent the one Paſſage is with the other; for the Earl muſt have felt ſome Part of thoſe Preſſures in which he was ſome time paſſive before he became active.

Enormous Grievances.

The Engliſh having ſo ingloriouſly left France, the French King order'd the Siege of Rochelle in Form, which Cardinal Richlieu undertook in Perſon, and with the Reduction of that City, began the Deſtruction of the Proteſtant Religion in France: The Pretence was that the Rochellers had invited the Engliſh to enter France and give them Aſſiſtance; whereas in truth, till Buckingham made the Rupture to ſatisfy his own private Reſentment, King Charles was ſo far from aſſiſting the Rochellers, that he lent the French King Ships to reduce them; and when the Duke came firſt before the City, the Jealouſy which they had conceiv'd of his Inſincerity, hinder'd their joining heartily with him. Larrey ſays, He was accus'd of correſponding with the Enemy, and of Treaſon. Again; his Imprudence and Slowneſs were taken for Treaſon and Correſpondence with the Enemy. He adds, Notwithſtanding this ill Succeſs, the King continu'd bewitch'd to his Favourite; he receiv'd him with great Marks of Affection, and careſs'd him as much as if the Fleet had return'd victorious. Another Inſtance of the deſpightful Conduct of this Adminiſtration which ran counter to every thing that was laudable and popular. And conſidering where Envy and Spite were wont to inhabit in the Days of Monkery, one can't well impute theſe envious and ſpiteful Counſels to any one with more Reaſon and Probability than to Laud.

*A.D.*1627. P. 103. P. 106.

While Buckingham was making War in France, the Court was more ſucceſsful in their War againſt the Liberties and Properties of the People. Sir John Elliot, one of the Gentlemen who were in Goal for not paying the Loan, petition'd the King, ſetting forth the Illegality of that Tax, or any Tax without Conſent of Parliament, alledging his Conſcience cou'd not ſubmit to it, and praying his Liberty, but cou'd not obtain it. Sir Peter Hayman one of the Barons of the Cinque-Ports, another Gentleman who refus'd the Loan, was ſent to ſerve in the Palatinate. Five of theſe Gentlemen were brought by Habeas Corpus to the King's-Bench, and by their Council took Exceptions to the Return; For that it had not the Cauſe of their Commitment, but of their Detainer in Priſon, per ſpeciale Mandatum Regis, which is a particular Cauſe; and the Law is moſt tender of the Liberty of the Subject. This was argued by Noy whom a Place had not yet corrupted, by the great Selden, Brampſton, and Calthorpe, who pray'd that the Priſoners might be releas'd. Heath the King's Attorney, who had been corrupted by a Place, argued in Maintenance of the Return, and there was a Chief-Juſtice Sir Nicholas Hyde ready to do what he wou'd have him; ſo he declar'd as the Opinion of the Court, that the Return was poſitive and abſolute by the King's Command, that the Matter of the Return is ſufficient, &c. and that the Priſoners, Gentlemen of the beſt Faſhion in England, ought to be remanded. This worthy Judge Hyde and his Brethren gave their righteous Opinion alſo for executing by martial Law; and the FELICITY of the Times muſt doubtleſs be inconceivably great, as we read in Clarendon, when the Law was in ſuch Hands as Hyde's.

Hyde an ill Judge.

Now it was that Archbiſhop Abbot was ſequeſter'd from his ſacred Office and Juriſdiction; not as Echard tells us, becauſe he was grown infirm and unactive, and many thought him uſeleſs and unfit; which is as falſe as every Word that is ſaid of this moſt reverend Father of our Church by the Author of Clarendon's Hiſtory. It was, as Welwood aſſures us, becauſe he refus'd to licenſe Sibthorpe's ſcandalous Sermon, which the King himſelf ſent to him by Mr. Murray to have his Imprimatur, and the Authority of the Archbiſhop for that inſolent Prieſt's erroneous Doctrines, which eſtabliſh the King's Will for Law. His Grace refuſing to licenſe it, Murray came to him again, telling him his Majeſty inſiſted upon it; but that not prevailing, he was told in a third Meſſage, If he did not do it, the King wou'd take another Courſe with him. Upon this his Grace deliver'd his Objections in Writing, ſome of which I will repeat to ſhew with what Reaſon Echard call'd the Archbiſhop uſeleſs and unfit, than which one can hardly call himſelf any thing worſe. His Grace repreſented, "That the Paſſage in Sibthorpe quoted out "of St. Matthew to recommend the Tax, plainly "ſhew'd the hard Condition of the Jews under "the Yoke of the Roman Emperors, their Ma- "ſters and Conquerors, but it was no Ways pro- "per to eſtabliſh the Right of ſuch a Tax in the "Engliſh

The Archbiſhop againſt Sibthorpe.

A.D.1627. "Engliſh Nation; that the Tax laid upon the "Jews was a Poll Tax; and that Richard II. by "levying ſuch a Tax, caus'd an Inſurrection, "which was attended with horrible Maſſacres; "and that a good King, ſuch as his Majeſty was, "ought to exact nothing from his Subjects but "according to the Laws." The Archdeacon tells us this Archbiſhop was not fit to be a Biſhop as many thought. But Dr. Fuller gives us a better Reaſon for his Unfitneſs; He was averſe to comply with the Court Deſigns, which made him obnoxious to the King's Diſpleaſure; but the Blame of the Proſecution did moſt light upon Biſhop Laud, Men accounting he endeavour'd to ſupplant him whom he cou'd not be contented to ſucceed. The Stale Pretence to ſuſpend him was his accidental ſhooting the Park-Keeper at the Lord Zouch's, which is already ſpoken of. Larrey confirms Laud's buſying himſelf in this bad Work; he ply'd the King to ruin the Archbiſhop, who charg'd Laud with that Act of Injuſtice, and repreſenting to his Majeſty that his Objections to Sibthorp's Sermon proceeded from a Spirit of Rebellion. This is the ſame Laud who in Clarendon is ſtil'd a Man of immenſe Virtue; but as to Archbiſhop Abbot, he was ignorant, remiſs, illiterate, and unmannerly. There are ſo many Falſities in that Author's Character of his Grace, that one does not know where to begin with detecting them. He affirms as poſitively as a Man can affirm any thing upon Oath, he was made Biſhop of Clar. falſe. London before he had been Parſon, Vicar, or Curate of any Pariſh Church in England, or Dean or Prebendary of any Cathedral Church. I beg the Reader to mind this bold Aſſertion, and the Truth and Moderation of it, when he comes to other Characters in that impartial Hiſtory. A. Wood an Hiſtorian in the ſame Intereſt, aſſerts on the contrary, In the latter End of 1599, he was made Dean of Wincheſter, and in February 1609 tranſlated from Coventry and Litchfield to London. In Clarendon it is ſaid, He was totally ignorant of the Conſtitution of the Church. In A. Wood we read the Title of one of his Books, which is directly the Reverſe of ſuch Ignorance, A Treatiſe of perpetual Viſibility and Succeſſion of the Church, &c. In Clarendon he is accus'd of Raſhneſs; in A. Wood he is commended for Vigilancy. In Clarendon we are told he had Learning ſufficient for a Head of a College, which is ſaid by way of Contempt; in Wood, He was a Man of Learning, and an able Stateſman. Welwood tells us, Dr. Abbot was a Man of conſiderable Learning and genteel Education; the latter of which is as unuſual in a Headſhip, as Piety in a rigid Prieſthood. The whole Character of Dr. Abbot in Clarendon is of a Piece with this Invective and Invention. Laud's is as much invented, but then it is all Eulogy, and conſequently ridiculous. I ſhou'd be aſhamed of aſſerting without proving; and the Proofs of what I ſay here, will be but too frequent in the Courſe of our Hiſtory: Five Biſhops were deputed to take the Archbiſhop's holy Office from him, and exerciſe it themſelves, whoſe Names ought to be remember'd to their Diſhonour, as the good Archbiſhop's will ever be with Honour. Dr. George Mountaine Biſhop of London, Dr. Richard Neile Biſhop of Durham, Dr. Walter Curl Biſhop of Rocheſter, Dr. John Howſon Biſhop of Oxford, Dr. William Laud Biſhop of Bath and Wells. Larrey obſerves Dr. Abbot was not accus'd of any Crime which made him unworthy of the Miniſtry, and complain'd of the Injuſtice done him, making it appear that he was only guilty of diſpleaſing Buckingham and Laud, Favourers of the Papiſts, excepting that, he defy'd his greateſt Enemies to lay any other Thing to his Charge. The Archbiſhop cou'd not help putting Buckingham in mind of his being inſtrumental in his Preferment at Court; but as Laud was guilty of the fouleſt Ingratitude to Archbiſhop Williams, ſo was this greater Favourite Buckingham alike guilty towards his Benefactor the Lord Archbiſhop of Canterbury, whom he had never ſince ceaſed to perſecute. As the ungrateful Man is the moſt infamous of all Creatures, let his Title and Fortune be what it will, ſo whereever that Vice is found, one may be ſure there is no true Virtue in its Company.

The Papiſts in Ireland offer'd to pay 5000 Men conſtantly, if they might have a Toleration for their Religion. Some adviſ'd the King to accept their Offer on thoſe wicked Terms, pleading he might lawfully take what they were forward to give; but that Notion dropt at the Interpoſition of the Biſhops in Ireland, eſpecially that pious Prelate Biſhop Downham, who preach'd effectually againſt it, from this Text, That we being deliver'd from the Hands of our Enemies, might ſerve him without Fear.

The Peoples Jealouſies were not like to be leſſen'd by the Diſcovery of a Deſign to bring over 1000 German Horſe, for which 30000 Pounds was paid to Philip Burlemarch a Dutch Merchant. Theſe German Troops were to be ſent to England under the Command of Sir William Balfour and Colonel Dalbier. Echard calls theſe Levies a neceſſary Preparation for the King's foreign Engagements. With whom? If with any foreign Power for the Palatine Service, the Germans were near the Place of Action, and every Step towards England was out of their way. If for a War againſt Spain or France, With whom had the King engag'd for a Body of Horſe? The People had indeed ſome fooliſh Fears that this foreign Cavalry might be made part of a ſtanding Army.

About the ſame Time a Commiſſion was granted to twenty-three Lords and others to raiſe Money by Exciſe. Laud was one of theſe Commiſſioners. The Archdeacon owns this was a diſobliging Meaſure, a notorious Violation of the Law, and Invaſion of the Peoples Properties, was a diſobliging Thing; it is the very Pink of Civility. The Miniſters being puzzled by the Difficulties they had brought their Maſter and themſelves into, Recourſe is had to a wiſer Counſellor Sir Robert Cotton, whoſe great Learning and Abilities render'd him worthy the Truſt that was put in him. He made a very judicious Speech to the King and Council, adviſing his Majeſty to call a Parliament, to begin with Religion, and ſatisfy them about the Obſervation of the Laws againſt Papiſts, and about raiſing Money without their Conſent; for whatever ſpecious Reaſons are given for it, the People cannot bear it, looking on every Tax that is not authoriz'd by Parliament as Tyranny, breaking in upon their Laws, and impoſing of Servitude. "Take away "theſe Cauſes, ſaid Sir Robert Cotton, diſcontinue "the raiſing Taxes, releaſe the Priſoners, demand "of your Parliament the Subſidies you have Occaſion for; you are certain to obtain them by "this Method, and to be Maſter of your Subjects "Purſes, if you are Maſter of their Hearts, and "ſhew them the Sincerity and Tenderneſs of your "own." He clos'd all with the Means of reconciling the Duke to the People, and that was to give him the Credit of this good Counſel, and have it thought that he adviſ'd the calling a Parliament. The Nation, continu'd Sir Robert, look on with Horror, becauſe the Diſſolution of the two Parliaments are imputed to him; their Sentiments will be different when they behold him as the Author of the third. Sir Robert Cotton's Advice was follow'd, the Priſoners who had exclaim'd againſt the illegal Taxes were releas'd, and it was reſolv'd to call a Parliament.

About the ſame Time a Society of Prieſts and Jeſuits was diſcover'd at Clerkenwell, and among their Papers was found a Coppy of a Letter written to their Rector at Bruſſels on the Subject of the approaching Parliament, wherein 'twas ſaid, We have planted the ſovereign Drug Arminianiſm, and it thriv'd wonderfully under the Culture of Neile

The Biſhops of Winchester, Bath and Wells, Chichester, and Norwich, Neile, Laud, Mountague, and White, are at the Head of the Arminians, and my Lord Buckingham ſupports them with all his Credit; the King intends to eſtabliſh arbitrary Government, and becomes daily more and more an Enemy to the Puritans. If the Adminiſtration during the whole Courſe of this Reign did not confirm what the Prieſts wrote, their Letter wou'd not have been worth taking notice of: Echard has ſunk it, and ſo he ſerves every thing that makes againſt theſe Arminian Prelates.

Biſhops ſuch.

King for arbitrary Government.

*A.D.*1628. Writs being iſſu'd for ſummoning a Parliament, it boded no Good to Buckingham, that the Gentlemen who proſecuted him, and almoſt all thoſe who had been impriſon'd about the illegal Taxes, were elected Members. The Archbiſhop of Canterbury, the Biſhop of Lincoln, had Writs of Summons; ſo had the Earl of Briſtol; and ſmoother Methods were put in Practice to prepare for the enſuing Seſſion on the 17th of March. The Biſhop of Lincoln receiv'd a Letter from the Lord-Keeper Coventry, a Month before the Parliament met, to diſſuade him from appearing, but the Biſhop reſolv'd to ſtand on his Privilege, and wrote thus to the Lord-Keeper; I muſt crave ſome Time to reſolve by the beſt Counſels which God ſhall give me, whether I ſhall obey your Lordſhip's Letter, tho' mentioning his Majeſty's Pleaſure before my own Right, which by the Law of God and Man I may in all Humility maintain; which he did accordingly, and his Writ was not deny'd.

Parliament

The Court took another diſobliging Meaſure at the very beginning of the Parliament, by picking out Laud to preach the Sermon at the opening of the Seſſion, when his Majeſty made a Speech to the Two Houſes, admoniſhing them to expedite their Buſineſs; and acquainting them with the common Danger, he then demanded Supplies, but told them if they did not do their Duty, he muſt uſe ſuch other Means as he may to prevent Ruin. He bad them not to take this as a Threatning; and then gives them a diſcreet and decent Reaſon for it, I ſcorn to threaten any but my Equals. The Language of this Reign has an Air quite different from that of all other Reigns, and the Sentiments are the ſame, imperious and poſitive. The Parliament are treated as the French ſay de haut en bas, very contemptuouſly. There does not ſeem to be the leaſt Occaſion for this Menace, unleſs the King had reſolv'd to do nothing for them, which ſhou'd diſpoſe them to do ſomething for him. Coke takes Notice of this haughty way of ſpeaking before ſo auguſt an Aſſembly. His Majeſty is not equal to any one Member of Parliament, and ſuperior to the whole Body; but Decency wou'd not admit the Prince to ſay ſo much to his People. What a Monſter does the King make of a Parliament; they are Mr. Coke's Words, the Head ſo incomprehenſibly big, and the Body ſo ſcornful and little; but if it ill becomes any Man to glory in his own Actions, it worſe becomes him to glory in that which he himſelf had not done; ſo that admit the King had been ſo ſuperlatively great, as to ſcorn all the World beſides, yet it wou'd have better become any other to have ſaid it than himſelf. A Member of the Houſe of Commons expreſs'd his Senſe of this Sally thus, Is this the Idea the King has of theſe Aſſemblies ſo much eſteem'd by our Fathers and his Predeceſſors Britiſh, Saxon, and Norman? Thoſe Princes us'd to call them the Aſſembly of Sages, the ſupreme and general Council of the Kingdom, &c. Things were chang'd under the late King, who by putting Slights upon Parliaments, occaſion'd Diſcontent in them. We with Sorrow ſee the Son tread in his Father's Steps; whether it proceeds from his being educated in that unhappy Averſion, or that it is inſpir'd by his pernicious Favourite. However, his Majeſty told the Two Houſes, he wou'd gladly forget and forgive what was paſt, and hop'd they wou'd not follow former Courſes of Diſtraction. The Lord-Keeper Coventry, whoſe Speeches were no more popular than the King's, ſpoke of the general Affairs of Chriſtendom, the Enemies and Dangers to this Kingdom: He perſuaded the Parliament to be ſpeedy and liberal in their Supplies, and aſſur'd them his Majeſty had forgotten all former Diſtaſtes; which was very evident by his holding the Duke of Buckingham ſtill in his Boſom. The Commons made Choice of Sir John Finch for their Speaker, which ſhew'd that the Houſe was then in no ill Diſpoſition towards the Court, if the Court had ſhewn the leaſt Readineſs to give them Satisfaction about Grievances. *A.D.*1628.

The King's uſual Stile

After the Speaker was choſen, a Writing was dropp'd on the Table by one of the Members, containing the Particulars of thoſe Grievances, and an earneſt Exhortation to the Commons to remember there cou'd be no Safety but in the lawful Power of the Prince and the Freedom of Parliament. "How long, ſaid the Writer, are we to be treated "like Children, and diverted in our Purſuit! We "are bugbear'd with Enemies abroad, to prevent "our ſeeing thoſe that are at home. If the firſt "are ſo much to be fear'd, why were they made "ſo? The late King left us in Peace with all the "World, what Neceſſity was there that his Succeſſor ſhou'd declare War againſt Spain and "France? Did he conſult his Parliament, and "muſt we pay for the Follies of a Favourite who "has engag'd him therein without Reaſon? We "are apprehenſive of greater Evils from the Am-"bition of this Man, than from that of the Houſe "of Auſtria; and the Arminian Biſhops Neile, "Laud, and Mountague, whoſe Protector he is, "are no leſs formidable than the Jeſuits." Now read Clarendon, and you will know what Judgment to make of his Sincerity and Impartiality. The Church flouriſhed with learned and extraordinary Men; we have juſt named them; and which in other good Times it in ſome Degree wanted, was ſupply'd withal to feed thoſe Lamps. There the Chriſtchurch Men ſhine out moſt apparently. The Proteſtant Religion was more advanc'd by Dr. Laud than it had been from the Reformation; Trade increas'd to that Degree, that we were the Exchange of Chriſtendom; the Royal Navy very formidable at Sea, &c. There is a great deal more of it, and all ſo diametrically contrary to the Truth, that my Patience cannot hold out to the End.

One of the firſt Petitions of this Parliament was to leave the Care of the Royal Navy before-mention'd to his Majeſty's faithful Subjects the Commons, who wou'd give ſuch Orders that nothing ſhou'd be wanting, neither as to the Number of Ships, Men, or Proviſions. It was complain'd, that by the Duke of Buckingham's pernicious Counſels the King laid Taxes on the People, and kept foreign Troops in the Kingdom; and as if England had no Soldiers of her own, ſome were brought from Scotland, others ſent for from Germany. The Behaviour of the Deputy Lieutenants in the ſeveral Counties got them the Name of Janiſaries; and as bad as the Judges were, they were forc'd to give a Check to the arbitrary Proceedings of the Attorney-General. Theſe and other Matters being debated in the Houſe of Commons, they came to the following Reſolutions, Sir Edward Littleton in the Chair;

Illegal and arbitrary Government.

*AD.*1628. Sir Thomas Wentworth againſt the King's Proceedings.

The Adminiſtration was by theſe Votes declar'd illegal, and the Government arbitrary, tending to the Deſtruction of the Conſtitution of England. The Commons did not incline to grant Supplies till they were ſatisfy'd in theſe things. Many warm Speeches were made by Sir Thomas Wentworth not yet corrupted, Sir Robert Phillips, Sir Francis Seymour, Sir Edward Coke, Mr. Creſwel, Mr. Selden, Mr. Hakewell, and others. Sir Benjamin Rudyard indeed was of Opinion to truſt to the King as to the Grievances, and go upon the Supply; but both King James and King Charles had been ſo often truſted, and with ſuch ill Effect, that the major Vote of the Houſe did not fall in with Sir Benjamin's. Sir John Cook, Secretary of State, ſeconded that Knight, and with the ſame Succeſs.

Papiſts favour'd.

Notwithſtanding what the Author of the Hiſtory of the Rebellion told us of the Advancement of the Proteſtant Religion, the Lords and Commons of England were truly ſenſible of the contrary, and join'd in a Petition againſt Popery and Papiſts: "That the Laws againſt Romiſh Prieſts might be "executed: That Children may not be tranſport-"ed beyond Sea to be bred Papiſts: That Recu-"ſants may be confin'd according to Law: That "they may not be permitted to reſort to Ambaſ-"ſadors Houſes to Maſs: That they may not be "in Offices: That the Judges give Account of the "Proceedings againſt them: That their Children "may be brought up in the Reform'd Religion". The Anſwer to this was favourable enough, as other Anſwers to ſuch kind of Petitions uſually were; but the Papiſts knew better than to be much diſturb'd by them. The Commons were reminded of the Supply; and they reminded the Court of the things in which they were aggriev'd. Sir Nathaniel Rich, Sir John Elliot, and Sir Henry Martin reflected on the late Management of the War, and ſeem'd averſe to any new foreign Expeditions, from which no body expected any good, while they were conducted by Villiers. Sir John Cook deliver'd a Meſſage from the King to clear Buckingham from ſome Words ſuppos'd to be ſpoken by him in Council. He declar'd the Duke was the firſt who mov'd the King to this Parliament; and his Majeſty had ſaid he counted it his Glory to be King of Freemen. This Meſſage was well receiv'd by the Parliament; and ſo was another brought the next Day by the ſame Meſſenger, Sir John Cook, That his Majeſty wou'd preſerve all their Rights and Liberties, upon which the Houſe debated the Supply, and unanimouſly gave the King five Subſidies to the great Joy of the Court; it being, as his Majeſty owns, the greateſt Gift that ever was given in Parliament. Secretary Cook reported to the Houſe the King and the Duke's great Satisfaction in the Subſidies with which they were pleas'd; but Sir John Elliot with good Reaſon expreſs'd his Diſlike, that the Duke's Name ſhou'd be intermingled with the King's, contrary to the Cuſtom of our Fathers, and the Honour of our Time. If they had bought off this Elliot inſtead of Wentworth, it might have been better both for the Duke and the Publick.

A happy Juncture loſt.

At this Juncture it wou'd have been very eaſy to have eſtabliſh'd a good Underſtanding between the King and his People. Had Buckingham retir'd to a private Enjoyment of his immenſe Riches; had the Lord Archbiſhop of Canterbury been reſtor'd to the Exerciſe of his ſacred Function, of which he had been unjuſtly depriv'd; had Mountague been puniſh'd, Laud decourted; had the Papiſts been deliver'd over to the Law, as Echard ſays the pious King promis'd; had Neile, Wren, and other ſuch Prelates, fall'n under the Weight of Parliamentary Diſpleaſure, and the general Hatred of the People; had the Petition of Right, which was then on foot in the Houſe of Commons, and ſoon after confirm'd by the King, been duly obſerv'd; all which was moſt juſt, reaſonable and eaſy; there is no room to doubt but this Prince might have reign'd as happily and glorioufly, as ever did any one of his Predeceſſors; he being as obſtinate in his good Meaſures as in his bad, and influenc'd in both rather by the Will of his Miniſters than his own. Inſtead of ſuch prudent and ſafe Methods of Government, it was his Majeſty's Unhappineſs to hear no Counſel but what came from Villiers, Laud, and ſuch like Counſellors; for whom there was no Safety, but in the abſolute Power of the Prince; which they therefore endeavour'd to raiſe as high as he wou'd have it, and ſucceeded too well in their Endeavours.

Illegalities and Irregularities inſtanc'd by chief Members of Parliament.

After this a Conference was appointed between the two Houſes about the Liberties and Properties of the Subject, which was open'd by Sir Dudley Diggs, Sir Edward Littleton, afterwards Lord Keeper, ſpoke at large concerning perſonal Liberty. Mr. Selden ſhew'd, that the late Impriſonments of the Gentlemen for refuſing the Loan were without Precedent. Sir Edward Coke maintain'd the Argument as to the rational Part of the Law. The Managers prov'd, that the above-cited Reſolutions of the Commons were Part of Magna Charta, ſix Acts of Parliament, twelve Precedents in Terms, and thirty one more. Secretary Cook quicken'd the Supplies, and told the Houſe the King deſir'd them not to make any Receſs in the Eaſter Holidays, that the Buſineſs might be diſpatch'd; but this was thought to break in upon the Commons Right of Adjournment. Secretary Cook moving to have the Vote of Subſidies turn'd immediately into an Act, was ſeconded by Sir Dudley Diggs: But Sir Thomas Wentworth, ſtill untainted in his Principles, propos'd a middle Way, which was reſolv'd upon, That Grievances and Supply go hand in hand. Sir John Cook had been over-preſſing with relation to the Subſidies, conſidering he knew the Inclination of the Houſe; but he gave great Offence in his next Meſſage about them, ſaying, I muſt with ſome Grief tell you, that Notice is taken of this Houſe, as if they preſs'd not upon the Abuſes of Power only, but upon Power it ſelf. This touches the King, and us who are ſupported by that Power. He was bid to explain himſelf; but he anſwer'd, I cannot deſcend to Particulars, or go farther than his Majeſty gave me Warrant to deliver. Two Days after he preſs'd the Supply again; and the Commons drew up a Repreſentation to juſtify their Proceedings, as to the Subſidies and Grievances, which was deliver'd by their Speaker with a Petition againſt billetting of Soldiers. The King anſwer'd, They ſhou'd go on ſpeedily with their Buſineſs without more Apologies, and he wou'd give them a more ample Anſwer to this Petition in convenient time.

Sir Tho. Wentworth oppoſes the King.

The Secretary's ſeverе Speech.

The Commons continuing their Debates about Grievances, and how the Subject ſhou'd be ſecur'd againſt them in time to come, Sir Edward Coke mov'd the Houſe to ſue the King by Petition, that his Majeſty wou'd give the People Aſſurance of their Rights by Aſſent in Parliament, as he uſes to paſs other Acts, which produc'd the famous Petition of Right, containing ſeveral Articles of Complaints of great Hardſhips, Infringements of, and References to Magna Charta, and ſeveral former Acts of Parliament; in the Cloſe of which was the petitioning Part to continue for ever as a Law, That no Man ſhou'd pay any Tax, or ſuch like Charge, without Act of Parliament, or be confin'd or moleſted concerning the ſame; That no Freeman be impriſon'd or detain'd, but in ſuch manner as the Law directs; That all martial Law be revok'd. The King's Serjeant Aſhley argu'd againſt this Petition before the Houſe of Lords, ſaying, It tended to Anarchy, for the King muſt be allow'd to govern by Acts of State. The Peers reſented his Boldneſs, committed him, and he made a Recantation. Another of his Majeſty's Serjeants, Sir ---- Davids, ſpoke much more like a wiſe Man and an Engliſh-

man;

A.D.1628. man; and notwithſtanding the Obligations of his Poſt, defended the Subjects as well as the Sovereign's Rights, aſſerting the Engliſh Monarchy to be truly Regal, but not Tyranical; and that the Government was over free Men, and not Slaves; which probably occaſion'd the ſame Expreſſion in the Meſſage from the King.

While the Petition was preparing, the King came to the Houſe of Lords; and ſending for the Commons, the Lord-Keeper made a Speech to them, urging the Diſpatch of the Supply, and informing them he was commanded to let them know, his Majeſty did hold Magna Charta, and the other ſix Statutes they inſiſted upon to be in Force; and that he will maintain all his Subjects in the juſt Freedom of their Perſons and Eſtates; that he will govern according to the Laws and Statutes of the Realm; and they ſhou'd find as much Security in his Royal Word, as in any Law they cou'd make. One can form no favourable Judgment of the Abilities of the King's Counſellors from their Speeches and Actions. How groſs is this eternal begging of Money without redreſſing one Grievance, when they knew the Commons wou'd give none till that was done? If his Majeſty did really intend to keep his royal Promiſe, what Harm was there in a Law to oblige him and his Succeſſors to do it. An honeſt Man takes it not ill that he is bound to do what he intends; and a wiſe Man will never expoſe his Honour to be queſtion'd. Larrey obſerves, the King on his ſide gave fine Hopes; but they were ſaid to be ſuperficial and indefinite, and promis'd all, but perform'd nothing. It was therefore neceſſary to have a more preciſe Explanation, ſuch as the Petition of Right. Secretary Cook, who repreſented the Univerſity of Cambridge, made a Speech for relying on his Majeſty's Royal Promiſe: But Sir Benjamin Rudyard mov'd, that the Effect of the King's Promiſe might be put into a Bill, which was carry'd; tho' the King ſent another Meſſage to them to take his Word, and he was again refus'd. 'Tis unaccountable that Laud and the other Counſellors ſhou'd thus expoſe their kind Maſter's Honour. The Prerogative was not prejudic'd by this new Law; his Majeſty had promis'd by the Keeper to obſerve the Subſtance of it. And why ſhou'd theſe Men again and again make him deſire to have his Word taken, when it was evident the Parliament would not take it? The generous Sir Robert Philips ſaid freely, We are now come to the End of our Journey, and an Anſwer to this Meſſage will give Happineſs or Miſery to the Kingdom. Sir Thomas Wentworth, even yet uncorrupted, declar'd, Since there had been a publick Violation of the Laws by the King's Miniſters, nothing cou'd ſatisfy but a publick Amends; and as himſelf was the Precept, ſo was he alſo the Example. The Court was very uneaſy at this new Law, which had nothing in it to make a Prince uneaſy who reſolv'd to make the Law the Meaſure of his Government. They wou'd fain have put a Stop to it if they cou'd, but the Subſidy Bill lay in the way. The Commons wou'd have the Petition paſs'd firſt, and the King ſent to them to diſpatch the other: for they muſt ſit no longer than ten Days. His Majeſty cou'd not help it. He muſt always ſpeak en maiſtre, and ſhew the Parliament their Subjection and Inferiority; which tho' very juſt, is diſagreeable and indecorous. The hurrying of the Subſidies was eaſily ſeen through. The Commons addreſs'd that they might proceed with their Petition of Right. Coke tells us, Sir Robert Heath, Attorney-General, pleaded eagerly, yet impertinently againſt the Bill, which met with ſome ſmall Oppoſition in the Houſe of Lords, where the Duke of Buckingham, Laud, Neile, and ſuch like Prelates did what they cou'd to cruſh it: But the Repreſentation of Grievances was ſo lively in the Speeches of the beſt Members of that illuſtrious Aſſembly, that the Court Lords and Prelates cou'd not hinder their Fellow Subjects of this Happineſs, as earneſtly as they endeavour'd it. Archbiſhop Abbot urg'd his own Caſe, how he was ſhut out of his Houſes at Lambeth and Croydon by Laud and other Biſhops; how he had been confin'd at Ford, a mooriſh Place, on purpoſe to kill him, as Coke ſays; and debarr'd from the Management of his Juriſdiction, which Laud aſſum'd in Defiance of Law or Conſcience. Biſhop Williams ſpoke learnedly and elegantly for the Petition, yet he made an Amendment to it, which paſt the Lords, but the Commons threw it out: That as they deſir'd to preſerve their own Liberties, ſo they had Regard to leave entire that Power wherewith his Majeſty was intruſted for the Protection of his People; which was thought needleſs, and to leſſen the Energy of the Petition, inſomuch that his Lordſhip cou'd not eſcape the Cenſure of being ſprinkled with Court Holy-Water. However, Coke tells us, neither the King nor Laud ever after forgot what he ſaid in Favour of the Petition. This is that pious Laud on whom the Earl of Clarendon and Archdeacon Echard are ſo laviſh of their Declamation and Rhetorick. The Lords having heard the King's Counſel againſt the Petition, how monſtrous was it to hear Engliſh Men plead againſt the Liberties and Properties of the People of England? Heard alſo the Commons in Defence of it. The Courtiers puzzled the Cauſe as much as they cou'd, and were not aſham'd to declare themſelves againſt their own and the Commons Rights, till they enter'd into a Committee of the whole Houſe; and the Lord Say mov'd, that thoſe Peers who ſtood for the Liberty of the Nation, and might make their Proteſtation, ſhould be recorded; and the other oppoſite Party ſhou'd, with the Subſcription of their Names, enter their Reaſons; which ſhou'd alſo be recorded, that ſo Poſterity might not ſeek who they were that ſo ignobly betray'd the Freedom of their Country; as the Lord Keeper Coventry, Lord Treaſurer Weſton, Villiers Duke of Buckingham, Howard Earl of Arundel, Hay Earl of Carliſle, Rich Earl of Holland, Howard Earl of Suffolk, Cecil Earl of Salisbury, Earl of Newport, Marquis of Hamilton, Earl of Denbigh, Lord Conway, Lord Carlton, Villiers Earl of Angleſey, Earl of Carnarvon, Earl of Dover, Cecil Earl of Exeter, Laud Biſhop of Bath and Wells, Neile Biſhop of Wincheſter, White Biſhop of Norwich, Buckeridge Biſhop of Ely, Goodman Biſhop of Glouceſter, Montein Biſhop of London, Howſon Biſhop of Oxford, Dove Biſhop of Peterburgh, Harſnet Archbiſhop of York, Mountague Biſhop of Chicheſter, Edward Cecil Viſcount Wimbledon, William Lord Petre, Earl of Lindſey, Earl of Newcaſtle, Compton Earl of Northampton, Mordaunt Earl of Peterburgh, Savage Earl Rivers, Somerſet Earl of Worceſter, with others, who for the Merit of their noble Poſterity ſhall not now be remember'd. The Houſe of Peers were ſurpriz'd at the Lord Say's Speech. The Betrayers dreaded the Mark that in ſuch Caſe wou'd be put upon them. For Larrey aſſures us, that Lord deſir'd they might be diſtinguiſh'd from the other Lords by ſitting by themſelves on the other Side of the Houſe. So the Petition paſs'd the Peers with a Salvo to the Right of the Sovereign. The Commons in a Debate on this Amendment juſtify'd their legal Rights with Reaſons worthy a Roman Senate. Mr. Noy ſaid, to add a Saving is not ſafe. Doubtful Words may beget ill Conſtruction. Beſides, the Words are not only doubtful, but unknown to us, and never us'd in any Act or Petition before. Sir Thomas Wentworth, who had not yet ſold his Birthright, ſpoke thus: If we admit of this Addition, we leave the Subject worſe than we found him, and we ſhall have little Thanks for our Labour when we come home. Let us leave all Power to his Majeſty to puniſh Malefactors, but theſe Laws are not acquainted with ſovereign Power. We may not recede from our Petition neither in part nor in whole.

A.D.1628. whole. We cannot read theſe two remarkable Inſtances of the true Spirit of Engliſhmen without weeping over the Frailty and Corruption of human Nature. Theſe two Gentlemen, now ſo good Patriots, will in a Year or two become the Inſtruments not only of ſovereign but arbitrary Power. Wentworth eſpecially apoſtatis'd in the moſt ſhameful manner, to arbitrary adding military Power; and when his tragical End was the Effect of his Apoſtaſy, Echard aſſures us, never ſo white a Soul flew into the Boſom of Abraham. Sir Edward Coke to ſeveral unanſwerable Reaſons added, Take we heed what we yield unto. Magna Charta is ſuch a Fellow, that he will have no Sovereign. I wonder this ſovereign Right was not in Magna Charta, or in the Confirmations of it. If we grant this, by Implication we give a ſovereign Power above all theſe Laws. Power in Law is taken for a Power with Force. Let us hold our Privileges according to the Law. That Power which is above this, is not fit for the King or People to have it diſputed. Further; Mr. Selden ſaid, If the Salvo has no Reference to our Petition, what does it here? I am ſure others will ſay it hath Reference, and ſo muſt we. How far does it exceed all Examples of former Times, no Man can ſhew the like. The greateſt Antiquary in the World, the great Dictator of Learning in England, as Foreigners ſtil'd him, the great Selden declares in the Houſe of Commons, That never was the like Attempt as this in the Reign of King Charles the Firſt to eſtabliſh a Tyranny on the Ruins of Liberty. For what elſe can we call the ſetting up the ſovereign Power above the Law? The Lords had afterwards a Conference with the Commons on the Subject of the Amendment. The Lord Keeper Coventrry who ſpoke for it was anſwer'd by Mr. Maſon. At another Conference, Serjeant Glanville argu'd the legal, and Sir Henry Martin the rational Part of the Petition; which they perform'd ſo well, that their Lordſhips were ſatisfy'd, and agreed to throw out the Salvo, and paſs the Petition of Right as the Commons had drawn it, after it had been in Debate ten Weeks. The King came to the Houſe of Peers the ſecond of June, and made this ſhort Speech to both Houſes. I am come hither to perform my Duty: I think no Man can think it long, ſince I have not taken ſo many Days in anſwering the Petition, as you have ſpent Weeks in framing it; and I am come hither to ſhew you, that as well in formal things as eſſential, I deſire to give you as much Content as in me lies. Then the Bill was read, and the King deliver'd his Anſwer to the petitioning Clauſe of it before repeated in writing. The King willeth that Right be done according to the Laws and Cuſtoms of the Realm, and that the Statutes be put in due Execution, that his Subjects may have no Cauſe to complain of any Wrong or Oppreſſion contrary to their juſt Rights and Libereies; to the Preſervation whereof he held himſelf in Conſcience as well obliged, as of his Prerogative. The Archdeacon Echard has in many Places ſhewn himſelf to be a ſage Hiſtorian; yet his Sagacity no where appears more than in the following Reflection: IF this had been taken as a free and full Anſwer, it might have caus'd a happy Union of King and Parliament. IF the Parliament wou'd have taken it for what it was not: IF they wou'd have taken it for an Anſwer, whereas it was only a Meſſage deliver'd in his Preſence, and was, as he owns himſelf, ſcant and dubious, then all wou'd have gone well. But the Commons inſiſted upon it, that their Petition ſhou'd have the ſame enacting Anſwer pronounc'd in the ſame manner as Acts of of Parliament were paſs'd. The Lords were of the ſame Opinion, and join'd in an Addreſs to his Majeſty to paſs it accordingly.

Sir Sir Edw. Coke. Mr. Selden.

Sir John Elliot reminded the Houſe of the Grievances which remain'd unredreſs'd, and Mr. Rous complain'd of a ſcandalous, wicked, ſeditious Sermon preach'd by one Dr. Roger Manwaring; upon which a Committee was appointed to examine it, and Mr. Pym the Chairman reported it thus to the Houſe: His Charge having digeſted many Charges into it, is become a Monſter of Charges. The main and great one is this: A Plot and Policy to alter and ſubvert the Frame and Fabrick of this State and Commonwealth. For this End he labours to infuſe into the Conſcience of his Majeſty the Perſuaſion of a Power not bounding itſelf with Laws, which King James calls in one of his Speeches Tyranny with Perjury. He endeavours to perſuade the Conſciences of his Subjects, that they are bound to obey illegal Commands under Pain of Damnation. He robs the Subjects of the Property of their Goods, and brands them that will not loſe this Property with ſcandalous and odious Titles, to make them hateful both to Prince and People. We ſee here by whom the fatal Diviſion between Prince and People was begun. Such was the Doctrine that procur'd Preferment, and ſuch the Clergy whom Laud mark'd in his Regiſter for Orthodox. The Commons Impeachment againſt Manwaring being carry'd to the Lords, that ſeditious Prieſt had this moderate Cenſure, To be impriſon'd during the Pleaſure of the Houſe; to be fin'd a thouſand Pounds; to make his Submiſſion at the Bar of the Houſe of Peers, and the Bar of the Houſe of Commons; to be ſuſpended three Years; to be diſabled from preaching at Court; to be diſabled of having any Eccleſiaſtical Dignity, and his Book to be burnt. To ſhew how well the Court was diſpos'd to that happy Union Echard ſpeaks of, they immediately made him Dean of Worceſter, and ſoon after Biſhop of St. David's. But before Laud cou'd get him a Place on the Bench of Biſhops, he made his Submiſſion at the Bar of the Houſe with Tears in his Eyes, acknowledging that the Sermon for which he was made a Member of that moſt honourable Aſſembly, was raſh, ſcandalous, and unadvis'd, full of dangerous Paſſages, Inferences, and ſcandalous Aſperſions. He own'd that the Sentence paſs'd upon him for his great Offence was juſt. He begg'd Pardon of God, the King, and the Parliament, &c. A fit Man this, to be pick'd out for one of the firſt Dignities of the Church. Here were wiſe Counſellors and wiſe Prelates to make the King run himſelf further into the Diſaffection of the People for the ſake of a worthleſs, inſolent Chaplain.

A.D.1628. Dr. Manwaring. Who began the Diviſion between King and People. Laud's Orthodox Clergy. Manwaring cenſur'd. Impolitick Management of the Miniſtry.

The Anſwer to the Petition of Right remain'd ſtill as it was given; and his Majeſty ſent a Meſſage that he would not alter it. The more raſh and unadvis'd, becauſe he did alter it: for the Subſidy Bill having been read but twice, and the Houſe reſolving not to take that Anſwer, the King ſent another Meſſage to them, Not to entertain any long Buſineſs, for that he wou'd conclude the Seſſion in a few Days. He alſo admoniſh'd them not to lay Aſperſions on the Government, ſemper idem. There is really ſomething pleaſant in theſe Meſſages hardly conſiſtent with the Gravity of Hiſtory. It was allow'd there had been Male-Adminiſtration; but it muſt not be mention'd, becauſe it wou'd aſperſe. To ſpeak the Truth of any one who has done ill, is neceſſary towards having it righted; but if you ſo ſpeak, you aſperſe. To ſcandalize, to accuſe falſly, is Aſperſion. It is not pretended, that what was ſaid in Parliament of the bad Management at this time was not true; yet the Court will not have it talk'd of, becauſe they muſt then be aſpers'd. Sir John Finch, for ſuch an Action as his ought never to be mention'd without his Name, roſe from the Speaker's Chair, and apprehending that Elliot was about aiming at the Duke, he enjoin'd him Silence, telling him there was a Command laid upon him not to proceed. How regular, how politick, how prudent, how diſcreet theſe Gentlemen are: The Speaker ſtops Sir John Elliot's Mouth with a Command from ſome body, who had no Buſineſs in that Houſe.

Pleaſant things. Finch's Inſolence.

*A.D.*1628. Sir Dudley Diggs cry'd out in great Concern, Muſt we not proceed; let us ſit in Silence: We are miſerable, and know not what to do. The Lord Clarendon ſays, they were ſo happy as to be the Envy and Wonder of Chriſtendom. There was for awhile a profound Silence in the Houſe; at laſt Sir Nathaniel Rich ſaid, We muſt now ſpeak, or for ever hold our peace. Some Members objected, that probably Sir John Elliot had given the King Offence by ſomething ſpoken in a late Speech of his. In a Reign ſo full of ill Counſels and ill Steps, 'twas impoſſible to ſpeak and not offend as often as the Miniſters were mention'd. However, not only Sir John Elliot, but every Member of the Houſe of Commons was vindicated by this Vote, "That there had been no undutiful Speech in that "Houſe from the Beginning of the Parliament to "that Day. Then the Commons turn'd them- "ſelves into a Committee, to conſider what is fit "to be done for the Safety of the Kingdom, and "no Man to go out upon Pain of being ſent to "the Tower". The Speaker, like a noble publick-ſpirited Briton, begg'd leave to be gone, when he had ſuch a Call from his Country for his Service. Upon which Mr. Whitby was put into the Chair. Mr. Wandsford mov'd that they ſhou'd not fear to make a Remonſtrance of their Rights. Sir Edward Coke ſaid. Let us palliate no longer: If we do God will not proſper us. I think the Duke of Buckingham is the Cauſe of all our Miſeries; and till the King be inform'd of that, we ſhall never go out or ſit with Honour. That Man is the Grievance of Grievances. Let us ſet down the Cauſes of all our Diſaſters, and all reflect on him. Mr. Selden adviſ'd, that a Declaration be drawn to expreſs the Houſe's dutiful Carriage, and ſet forth the Violation of their Liberties; to ſhew how that great Perſon the Duke had rais'd Diſtractions, fearing to be queſtion'd. All this time, ſaid that illuſtrious Senator, we have caſt a Mantle on what was done laſt Parliament; but now being driven again to look on that Man, let us proceed with that which was then ſo well begun. In Concluſion the Houſe agreed upon ſeveral Heads, containing more of the Lord Clarendon's Felicities, as Innovations in Religion, Miſgovernment, Misfortune, and the late Deſigns with the Cauſes of them. When the Queſtion was putting that it ſhou'd be inſtanc'd that the Duke was the Cauſe of all thoſe Evils, the Speaker return'd from Court, where he had been to learn his Leſſon, tho' he was the Parliament's Servant, and told them the King commanded for the preſent that the Houſe ſhou'd adjourn, and all Committees ceaſe till to-morrow the 17th of June, when his Majeſty wou'd come to the Parliament and paſs their Petition.

Accordingly the King came to the Houſe of Peers; and the Commons attending, the Bill was read by the Clerk, and at the End of it his Majeſty ſaid, Soit droit fait comme il eſt deſire. Upon which there was a general Shout of both Lords and Commons, and an univerſal Joy within Doors and without. The King made a ſhort Speech: I aſſure you my Maxim is, that the Peoples Liberties ſerve to ſtrengthen the King's Prerogative, and the King's Prerogative to defend the Peoples Liberties; and now if this Parliament have not a happy Concluſion, the Fault is yours, and I am free from it.

Amb. Phil. Shout in the Houſe of Lords.

Another happy Juncture loſt.

This again was a happy Juncture for a laſting Reconciliation between the King and Parliament, if Buckingham's Fate had not follow'd his Majeſty like an evil Genius. Had he had Capacity enough to have known the Danger he was in by defying the Legiſlature, he wou'd ſurely have ſav'd himſelf by withdrawing from Court, and have ſav'd his Maſter the Odium of ſtanding out againſt the Cry of his People. But Laud was his moſt intimate Friend and Counſellor; and as there is hardly one Act of Diſcretion and Moderation in that haughty Prelate's whole Life, ſo it is no wonder he ſhou'd inſpire the Duke with the moſt revengeful and reſolute Sentiments. Echard tells us the Archbiſhop of Canterbury, Biſhop of Lincoln, the Earl of Eſſex, the Earl of Warwick, and other Proteſtant Lords were admitted to kiſs the King's Hand. The Biſhop of Lincoln had alſo private Talk with his Majeſty and the Duke of Buckingham; wherein he repreſented, "That in order to "gain the Affections of the People, the Puritans "who were many and ſtrong ſhould be a little "conniv'd at and indulg'd, which wou'd make "them more pliant". The King anſwer'd, I thought of this before, and will do ſo; but inſtead of ſo doing, the Biſhop was brought into the Star Chamber, as a Reward for his good Advice, which he purſu'd in his Dioceſe; and being reproach'd for it by Sir John Lamb, one of his Spiritual Court, and the infamous Silthorp, his Lordſhip ſaid it was not only his own but the royal Pleaſure. Which Words Lamb and Sibthorp carry'd to Laud, and he to the King then at Biſham. Upon which it was reſolv'd, that a Bill ſhould be exhibited in the Star-Chamber againſt the Biſhop on the Evidence of thoſe two wretched Delators Lamb and Sibthorp for revealing the King's Secrets, being a ſworn Counſellor, of which more hereafter.

The Duke of Buckingham being ſtill the great Spring which mov'd the Wheels of Government, the Houſe of Commons did not think themſelves ſecure even in the new Law, and therefore they proceeded with their Declaration at the Motion of Sir John Strangeways, Knight of the Shire for the County of Dorſet: Let us perfect our great Remonſtrance, ſaid the Knight; for King James was wont to ſay, he knew that by Parliament which otherwiſe he cou'd never have known. The Reader will obſerve in many Places of this Hiſtory, how the Poſterity of certain Names deviated from the Honour of their Anceſtors. Some Members, as Sir Humphry May, Sir Henry Martin, Sir Benjamin Rudyard, were ſweeten'd by the paſſing of the Petition of Right, and endeavour'd to moderate Matters. But the Grievances were too many and too crying to ſtop the Mouths of Strangeways and other Members, who in many Speeches enlarg'd upon them; and in ten Days the Remonſtrance was ready to be preſented to the King. We have read Clarendon and his Copier Echard's Encomiums on his Majeſty's Zeal for the Proteſtant Religion, and on the flouriſhing Trade and State of the Nation; we have read what full and gracious Anſwer the King gave to the Addreſſes for proſecuting Papiſts, and we ſhall now ſee on what ſolid Foundations thoſe Encomiums were built. The Parliaments Remonſtrance complain'd of "Innova- "tions and Alterations of Religion; the great "Eſteem and Favour many Papiſts receive at "Court; their publick Reſort to Maſs contrary to "his Majeſty's Anſwers to the Parliament's Peti- "tions; Letters to ſtop Proceedings againſt them; "the daily Growth of the Arminian Faction, fa- "vour'd and protected by Neile Biſhop of Win- "cheſter, and Laud Biſhop of Bath and Wells, "whilſt the orthodox Party are ſilenc'd". Here the Reader will take notice, that thoſe Miniſters Laud mark'd in his Regiſter with a P for Puritan were really Orthodox, and thoſe he mark'd with an O for Orthodox were Papiſts, or their Abettors. Neile was inform'd againſt by Mr. Oliver Cromwel, according to Whitlock, tho' he was not then one of the Houſe. The ſecond Article of the Remonſtrance was concerning the Dangers "of Innova- "tion and Alteration of Government occaſion'd "by billeting Soldiers, by procuring 1000 German "Horſe and Horſemen, by a ſtanding Commiſſi- "on to the Duke to be General at Land in Time "of Peace". The Parliament do in theſe two Articles directly charge the Government with favouring Popery and arbitrary Power. Let the Reader ſtop here and conſider a little, how I have made

The Deſign to alter the Conſtitution.

A.D.1628. made out that ſuch a Deſign form'd ſoon after the Death of Queen Elizabeth, was continu'd to the beginning of this Reign, and continues ſtill by the Evidence of the Parliaments Remonſtrance.

England diſhonour'd by Buckingham.

" It complains of the Diſaſter at the Iſle of Rhe, " of the Diſhonour to the Nation, never ſo diſhonour'd in the Days of the Plantagenets and Tudors: The Loſs of Trade, the Increaſe of which the Lord Clarendon boaſts of; and all theſe Evils and Dangers, the Houſe of Commons impute to the exceſſive Power of the Duke of Buckingham, humbly ſubmitting it to his Majeſty's Wiſdom, Whether it can be ſafe for himſelf and Kingdom to have ſo great Power truſted in the Hands of any one Subject whatſoever, or to continue the Duke near his Perſon? Archdeacon Echard informs us, that the King was very much diſobliged by it, but he gives us no Hint how the Commons were diſoblig'd; for at that very Inſtant did his Majeſty order the Information againſt the Duke fil'd by the Attorney General in the Star-Chamber, to be taken off the File, the King declaring, himſelf knew the Duke's Innocency of thoſe Things mention'd in the Commons and the Earl of Briſtol's Articles: And when the Parliament deliver'd their Remonſtrance to him in the Banquetting-Houſe, he told them with ſome Indignation, He little expected ſuch a Remonſtrance after he had paſs'd the Petition of Right; and as to their Grievances, he wou'd conſider of them as they deſerv'd. Finch the Speaker is ſaid to be an Incendiary between him and his Parliament, conſtantly diſcloſing to him whatever paſs'd in the Houſe, and giving the worſt Turn to what was ſaid there.

Dr. Lambe kill'd.

In the mean time Dr. Lambe a Quack and Creature of the Duke's, was ſet upon in the Streets of London by the Rabble, who call'd him Witch, Devil, and the Duke's Conjurer. This Scoundrel, who got his Living by ſelling Noſtrums and ſometimes Poiſon, was talk'd of as being concern'd in poiſoning King James. The French Hiſtorian ſays Buckingham employ'd him to execute his private Intrigues and moſt odious Deſigns. The Mob fell upon him in open Day, and, continues my Author, for Proof that this was the unanimous Conſent of the People, not a Man ſtirr'd to his Aſſiſtance, but every Body rejoic'd at his Death, and applauded his Murderers. The Fellow had been indicted as a Wizard, and doubleſs he was as much a Witch as ever old Woman was that burnt for't. He had alſo been try'd for a Rape; however he was ſtill the Duke's Favourite and Confident as well as Dr. Laud. I am far from applauding the Murderers, nor in any Caſe approve of Rabble Juſtice, there being no Rule but the Law for Executions of any kind. Lambe knew well enough he was mortally hated for his Maſter's ſake as much as his own, and it was to dare the Mob to Vengeance, to be ſeen walking in London Streets in the Face of Day. Buckingham himſelf durſt not do it at that Time; if he had, one might juſtly have fear'd what the Conſequence wou'd have been by theſe bold Rhimes then in every Body's Mouth.

And probably the Rage of the People might ſo far infect Lieutenant Felton, that he took Fire upon the Remonſtrance againſt the Duke, and reſolv'd to be his Executioner. Lambe was become a Perſon of Importance on Account of Buckingham's Favour, and as ſoon as the Court had News of his Death, a Council was call'd, who order'd the Lord-Mayor Sir Richard Dean to find out and puniſh the chief Actors in this Tragedy, but none were found, ſays Whitlocke, and the City was fin'd 6000 Pounds to make ſome Attonement for the Loſs of ſo uſeful a Perſon. Echard aſſures us, he had ſpecial Acquaintance with the Duke; and tho' he was a Wizard and a Raviſher, Larrey ſays his greateſt Crime was his Attachment to the Duke.

A.D.1628.

A Report was made to the Houſe of Commons of certain Words ſpoken againſt them by the Duke of Buckingham, who deny'd them, and charg'd one Melvin a Scotſman for ſpeaking Words againſt himſelf, That he intended to put the King upon a War againſt the Commonalty. It is worth obſerving that this was fourteen Years before that War broke out; and tho' Melvin had not the Spirit of Truth in him with reſpect to the Duke, yet one can't deny but he had the Spirit of Prophecy.

A Prophecy of the civil War.

His Majeſty being at laſt tir'd with the Complaints againſt the Commiſſion of Exciſe, cancell'd it, notwithſtanding Biſhop Laud was Commiſſioner. This Commiſſion was not of the Nature of the preſent, but a Power to certain Lords and Commons to levy an Exciſe, not ſtated and eſtabliſh'd as that Duty is now.

Exciſe.

The Commons order'd another Remonſtrance to be drawn concerning the Peoples Rights as to the Payment of Tonnage and Poundage on Merchandize, and voted, That the taking it without Conſent of Parliament was illegal, as was alſo the laying any Impoſition on Goods without ſuch Conſent. Two Articles of Right as certain as that there are ſuch Things as Law and Juſtice, tho' in theſe Times they were not ſo much conſider'd as they ought to have been. The King came to the Upper-Houſe, while this Remonſtrance was reading in the Lower, and ſending for the latter, ſpoke to them thus, It may ſeem ſtrange that I come ſo ſuddenly to end this Seſſion before I give my Aſſent to the Bills: I will tell you the Cauſe, tho' I muſt avow that I owe the Account of my Actions to God alone. You obſerve the Stile. One wou'd think every Man is accountable for his Actions to Reaſon and Juſtice. Again; Every body knows that a while ago the Houſe of Commons gave me a Remonſtrance, how acceptable may be eaſily imagin'd, and for the Merit of it I will not call that in queſtion, for I am ſure no wiſe Man can juſtify it. Selden, Coke, Glanville, and the major Part of the Parliament did juſtify it, and his Majeſty calls them Fools for it. The Archdeacon giving himſelf the ſame Airs, ſays, The King after this Manner ſhew'd his Reſentment. Mr. Coke, whoſe Authority is at leaſt as good as Echard's, turns it thus, Did ever King of England but this King's Father, treat a Parliament or either Houſe at this Rate before? At the Opening of the Parliament he call'd them Fools if they wou'd not do as he wou'd have them; and now he calls them ſo again, or no wiſe Men, for telling him their Grievances. We have ſeen by their Counſels what wiſe Counſellors his Majeſty had about him, Villiers, Laud, Conway, Weſton, Neile. The Fools the King ſpeaks of here, are the above-mention'd Selden, Coke, Glanville, Pym, Wandsford, Diggs, Whitby, Noy, Wentworth, Philips, Hakewell, Seymour, Strangeways, Martin, Rich, Creſwell, Littleton, Hobart, Strode, Hollis, Waller, Hampden, Hayman, Coriton, Valentine, Elliot, Corbet, Heveningham, &c. Of one of theſe, Wentworth, the Archdeacon affirms, he was a more able Miniſter than Wolſey, Cromwell, Burleigh, Walſingham, or in a word, a more able Miniſter than ever was known in Britain from the Reign of Caſſibelan to that of King James; yet this, the wiſeſt of Men, juſtify'd the Remonſtrance; which ſhews the Inconvenience of ſpeaking in a Paſſion, or rather of hearkening to proud, malicious Counſellors, ſuch as Villiers and Laud. I do not repeat the whole Speech, it being all in the ſame Stile. His Majeſty told the Parliament he cou'd not want Tonnage and Poundage; and having paſt the Subſidy and other Bills, the Lord-Keeper prorogu'd them. One of thoſe Bills was for Reſtitution in Blood of Carew Raleigh Eſq; Son to Sir Walter Raleigh, and another to confirm the Letters Pattents made by King James to the Earl of Briſtol, who upon Buckingham's Death ſo well reconcil'd himſelf

*A.D.*1628. ſelf to the Court, that 'twas viſible he ſided with the Country only becauſe the Country ſided with him. The reverend Hiſtorian affirms the King had made the greateſt Conceſſions. Every thing is ſuperlatively good with him that gives Credit to the Cauſe he eſpouſes. Theſe greateſt Conceſſions are really nothing at all: For the Petition of Right did but confirm old Statutes, it added no new Liberties; and Clarendon ſays 'twas no Prejudice to the Crown, which he and Echard always underſtand Liberties to be. The latter owns that as great as theſe Conceſſions were, the Court endeavour'd to evade them, tho' the Parliament had purchas'd them with the largeſt Subſidies that had ever been granted. Thus was this Parliament alſo diſmiſs'd with Anger, and by the following Reflections we may perceive what wiſe Men his Majeſty's Counſellors were. " The Crimes for which " the King inveigh'd ſo againſt the Parliament, " were for repreſenting their Grievances, and the " dangerous and feeble State of himſelf and the " Kingdom; for explaining how the Cuſtoms had " been taken againſt Law, yet declaring their Rea- " dineſs to relieve him, and reconcile him to his " Subjects. For whom was it the King thus con- " tended? But for a Favourite who againſt his " Father's Will, and Advice of his Council, with- " out a Declaration or Reaſon ſhew'd, the next " Day after the King's Father's Death, excited " him to make War againſt the King of Spain, " and after made him diſſolve the Parliament, as " we read in the Biſhop of Litchfield's Life of " Archbiſhop Williams, to ſave himſelf from be- " ing impeach'd in it. So he did the ſecond Par- " liament, and then engag'd the King in a War " againſt France, wherein he himſelf was the Ag- " greſſor; and in the Management of thoſe Wars " brought greater Loſs and Diſhonour to the Na- " tion than ever was before; a Favourite who " impoveriſh'd the Crown to ſupport his intole- " rable Ambition and Avarice."

Ill Counſellors.

England in Diſgrace

Buckingham, when he left France, promis'd the Rochellers to ſend them Relief, but his own Indifference in the Quarrel of thoſe Proteſtants, or his own Danger and Difficulties at home, hinder'd him from going abroad. The Rochellers ſent Deputies after Deputies for nine Months together, to preſs him to perform his Promiſe. King Charles wrote a Letter to the Mayor, Sheriffs, Peers, Burghers, and Inhabitants of the City of Rochelle, dated the 19th of May 1628.

Rochellers

Gentlemen,

The King's Letters to them.

BE not diſcomforted tho' my Fleet be return'd, hold out to the laſt, for I am reſolv'd that all my Fleet ſhall periſh rather than you ſhall not be reliev'd; and to this End I have countermanded it, and have ſent Ships to make them change their Deſign that they had taken to come back. I ſhall ſhortly ſend you ſome Number of Ships to re-inforce it, and with the Help of God the Succeſs will be happy for your Deliverance.

Your good Friend,

CHARLES R.

A Week after his Majeſty wrote them another Letter, and ſent it by a Soldier, ſeal'd with the Arms of England.

Gentlemen,

I Have been troubled to hear that my Fleet was upon the Point of returning without anſwering my Commands, which were to force the Entry of your Proviſions whatever came of it; and have given it new Orders to return into your Road, and not ſtir till it has reliev'd you with Victuals, or that I have ſent them an additional Strength, for which I have caus'd Men to work with all Diligence. Be aſſured that I will never abandon you, and that I will employ all the Force of my Kingdom for your Deliverance, until it pleaſe God to bleſs me with giving you an aſſur'd Peace. *A.D.*1628

Gentlemen,

Given at our Palace at Weſtminſter, May 27. 1628. Old Stile.

Your good Friend,

CHARLES R.

The Author makes theſe Obſervations upon the two Letters, " That which follow'd ill ſuited with " theſe fine Promiſes, which at the bottom ſerv'd " only to amuſe the poor Rochellers, if we may " judge by the Proceedings of Buckingham and " Denbigh, and their Fleet before Rochelle, and " by the tricking Delays made uſe of here for " ſending Relief, which in the End was of no " Service to the Beſieg'd, for it aſſiſted them with " no manner of Proviſions or Victuals, only ſerv'd " to tantalize them at a Diſtance, but to their " ſad Coſt and Miſery; for when the Engliſh " ſhew'd themſelves at the Head of the Bay, the " Mayor and his Council caus'd more than 200 " Hogſheads of Pilchards, which were little cor- " rupted, to be thrown away for fear of bringing " a Contagion into the City, and believing they " ſhou'd have no Need of them, Succours being " ſo near the Gates. But Cardinal Richlieu, who " was at the Siege in Perſon, was well inform'd " that the Fleet wou'd not do him any great Hurt, " nor the City much good; and he knew pretty " well it only rode there to make a Shew and no " more: For what the Deputies built in the Day- " time with the King, the Queen overthrew in " the Night, and kept the King her Brother from " receiving any Damage, not valuing how much " ſhe thereby wounded the ſacred Word of her Huſ- " band, or the Honour of the Engliſh Nation." Ludlow ſpeaks of the fatal Conſequences of the Loſs of Rochelle; by this Means that ſtrong Town of Rochelle, wherein the Security of the Proteſtants of France chiefly conſiſted, by this Treachery was deliver'd up to the Papiſts, and thoſe of the Reform'd Religion in all Parts of that Kingdom expos'd to the Rage of their bloody and cruel Enemies. P. 66.

P. 67.

Of the Fleet which thus in vain appear'd before Rochelle, the Duke of Buckingham was to have been Admiral and General of the Land Forces, as at the Expedition of the Iſle of Rhe. About the latter End of Auguſt he went to Portſmouth to embark with Succours for that diſtreſs'd City. He had a Power, ſays Larrey, ſtrong enough to beat the French and raiſe the Siege; but it had no better Succeſs than the former; and if you believe a great many Hiſtorians, no better Deſigns. This was not, however, Buckingham's Fault, whoſe Death prevented the Execution of his Intentions, whether they were to betray or ſuccour the Beſieg'd. For tho' there is not the leaſt Hint of Double-dealing in thoſe impartial Hiſtorians Clarendon and Echard, Buckingham, if not his Maſter, was very much ſuſpected not to be in earneſt in the French Expeditions. On the 23d of Auguſt, as the Duke was coming out of his Chamber to Breakfaſt, juſt as Sir Thomas Fryer, one of his Colonels, was taking Leave of him, one Felton, a diſcarded Officer, ſtabb'd him to the Heart with a Knife, accompanying his Blow with theſe Words, Lord have Mercy on your Soul. The Duke fell dead to the Ground without ſpeaking a Word, tho' ſome pretend he was heard to ſay in falling, the Villain has kill'd me. The Murderer might have eſcap'd, if he had not been frightened with the Noiſe of the Domeſticks, who cry'd out the French had murder'd the Duke, laying it to the Duke de Sobiez's Charge, who often ſollicited the Duke of Buckingham ſo earneſtly to haſten the Succours, that thoſe who ſaw him did ſometimes think he was quarrelling about it; Felton, to excuſe the French, who were like to be maſſacred, ſtept forth and ſaid, I am he who did it, let no in-

A.D.1628. nocent Man ſuffer for it; ſo he was ſeiz'd without offering to eſcape, and ſent to Priſon.

Ghoſt. If any one has the Curioſity to read a very long Story of the Ghoſt of Sir George Villiers, the Duke's Father, which appear'd to warn him of his Fate, he may find many Pages upon it in the Lord Clarendon and Archdeacon Echard's ſober Hiſtories; but unleſs the Reader is diſpos'd to give more Credit to it than I do, it will be no more worth his while to read it, than I think it worth mine to write it. Echard ran away with this old Woman's Tale, as with that of the Devil and Oliver Cromwel, and thought it a wonderful Rarity, as being in ſuch a notable Hiſtory as that of the Rebellion; but unfortunately it was told before by Lilly the Aſtrologer in his Obſervations on the Life of King Charles I. and indeed the Conjurer had much more Right to raiſe this Devil than the Earl of Clarendon or the Chriſtchurch Men; who, be what they will, are not reckon'd among the Conjurers. Lilly informs us, the Ghoſt of Sir George Villiers appear'd to old Parker of Lambeth, who had been intimate with Sir George the Duke's Father, and bad him go tell his Son the Duke of Buckingham, to refrain ſuch and ſuch Company, or he wou'd come to Deſtruction, and that by ſuch a Token. The Duke ſlighted the Advice, and the Ghoſt coming to Parker a ſecond time, pull'd out a Dagger or Knife, ſaying, that ſhou'd end his Son if he refrain'd not that Company. Parker carries the Meſſage, and the Duke deſir'd him to trouble him no more about it. A Month after he met Parker on Lambeth-Bridge, and ſaid, Now, Mr. Parker, what ſay you of your Dream? Parker reply'd, I wiſh it may never come to paſs. But within ſix Weeks, ſays Lilly, he was ſtabb'd, and ſoon after the Dream or Viſion Parker dy'd. The Duke had doubtleſs himſelf boding Thoughts of ſome untimely End to a Life which his Conduct had render'd odious to the People; and what he ſaid to Biſhop Laud when he took his Leave of him, is more credible than the Apparition, I know your Lordſhip has good Acceſs to the King, pray put his Majeſty in mind to be good to my poor Wife and Children. The King was at Southwick, Sir Daniel Norton's Seat, four Miles from Portſmouth, when the melancholy News came to him: He receiv'd it with remarkable Concern and Sorrow; but thro' the whole Kingdom, according to Larrey, the Duke's Name was never mention'd but to be ill ſpoken of. However, his Majeſty's Favour follow'd him to the Grave, and he had the Honour to be bury'd in Weſtminſter-Abbey among the Tombs of the Monarchs of England. In common Prudence only, the Court ſhou'd have taken hold of this Opportunity to have wip'd off the Odium againſt the Government contracted by Buckingham's Male-adminiſtration. He was dead, and it was only to have left him where Life did to have caus'd a good Agreement between King and People. But as I have hinted elſewhere, and muſt again hint, this Government ſeem'd to ſtudy what wou'd be moſt unpopular, and to rule in Spite. The Memory of Buckingham was generally hated, and therefore the Lord Clarendon, with particular Applauſe, tells us, The King admitted very few into any Degree of Truſt, whom he believ'd to have been his Grace's Enemies; which indeed is not true, for he admitted Sir Thomas Wentworth, one of the Duke's greateſt Enemies, into the greateſt Degree of Truſt. Again; no Prince ever expreſs'd a more tender Concern to the Family, and all that was dear to this great Man, as was Biſhop Laud in an eſpecial manner; and yet the Archdeacon acknowledges his great Misfortune was the Want of a wiſe Friend. Then it was no Misfortune to him that, as Larrey ſays, he hated Parliaments, was a bad Proteſtant, a barefac'd Arminian, a maſqu'd Papiſt, a Man of no Religion or Experience. The Aſſaſſin Felton was at firſt far from repenting of the bloody Act, but at laſt he became ſenſible of his Sin, and begg'd when he was condemn'd, that the Hand which did it might be cut off before he was executed. He declar'd he was provok'd to it by the Remonſtrance againſt him, and his having been ſo often ſcreen'd from Parliament. While he lay in Priſon in London, he was viſited by many, to whom he vindicated the Puritans, whoſe Enemies charg'd them with ſetting him on; and Felton proteſted they knew nothing of his wicked Intent. It is very likely that Biſhop Laud wou'd have extorted ſuch a Confeſſion from him; for of all the Lords of the Council, that pious Prelate was the only one who, contrary to the Laws of the Land, threaten'd him with the Rack. Felton reply'd, I know not whom I may accuſe, perhaps Biſhop Laud or any other in that Torture. His Majeſty ſeem'd inclin'd to the Biſhop's merciful Motion, by ordering the Judges to give their Opinion upon it, and they all agreed that by Law he might not be put to the Rack. Being try'd and condemn'd at the King's-Bench, he was executed purſuant to the Sentence, and his Body ſent to Portſmouth, where it hung on a Gibbet for ſome time, and was afterwards ſtolen away Gibbet and all.

A.D.1628.

Laud's Cruelty.

Felton hang'd.

As many ill Qualities as may be deduc'd from the Duke of Buckingham's Actions, it ought to be remember'd that he was generous, eaſy of Acceſs, polite in his Manners, pleaſant in Converſation, and had a Genius equal to his Station, conſidering the Buſineſs that was to be done in it, if he had not been a Slave to his Paſſions, in which the Luſt of Power and Women was moſt prevalent. Revenge and Cruelty were laid to his Charge, and ſuch a Haughtineſs towards thoſe who had diſpleas'd him, that 'tis ſaid he once told the Queen herſelf, I wou'd have you know there have been Queens beheaded in England. After his Death Laud, now Biſhop of London, grew daily more in Favour with the King, to his Majeſty's great Misfortune; there not being a Man in England who was leſs fit for his Service, whether we conſider his Temper or his Abilities in ſo difficult and troubleſome a Juncture.

Buckingham's Character.

Laud a Favourite.

I am very far from giving into Tales of Ghoſts, Apparitions, Preſages, and Omens, with which the Lord Clarendon and Echard's Hiſtories abound, yet I can't help taking notice of an Accident which happen'd as Laud and Neile were conſecrating their good Brother Mountague, for at that very Inſtant News came of the Duke's being ſtabb'd.

One of the firſt Things Laud did after his Promotion to London, was to procure a Pardon for their other good Brother Roger Manwaring, and a very rich Benefice to be holden by Diſpenſation, with the Rectory of St. Giles's in the Field. This Prelate, ſays Larrey, was extremely ſollicitous to keep up the King's Hatred and Diffidence of Parliaments. All that was done this Year, or the following, ſerves only to inflame or to incenſe both Parties more and more againſt each other. Can any thing be plainer than the Source of all the Misfortunes which befel this King and Kingdom? Was it not his Majeſty's ſuffering himſelf to be govern'd by other Men's Paſſions, and giving Ear to the Counſels of ſuch fiery Spirits as Laud, which Judge Whitlocke ſaid was hot enough to ſet the World in a Flame?

Manwaring preferred.

We have mention'd the Remonſtrance againſt Tonnage and Poundage, which was drawn up by the Parliament, and the Delivery of it prevented by a Diſſolution. Wiſe and ſober Men wou'd at leaſt have abated of the Rigor of levying that illegal Tax, or not have permitted it to be levy'd with Circumſtances to render it ſtill more odious. But the Miniſters in this Reign had infected the publick Officers with a Contempt of Law, and a tyrannical Air, which muſt be very provoking to a free and injur'd People. John Rolle Eſq; a Merchant and Member of Parliament for Kellington in Cornwall, had his Goods ſeiz'd by the Cuſtom-houſe Officers, for not paying ſuch Cuſtoms as Weak Counſellors.

*A.D.*1628. the Farmers demanded. Mr. Rolle apply'd to the Commiſſioners for Redreſs, and one of them told him, Privilege of Parliament extended only to Perſons and not Goods. Whatever Language theſe Gentlemen us'd then, Members of Parliament now never hear it at that or any other Board. If all the Parliament were in you, ſaid another of them with more Inſolence, we wou'd take your Goods. "Thus it is, according to Larrey, that "theſe odious Miniſters of arbitrary Power, by "their Proceedings, make ſuch a Power inſup-"portable, and by their Oppreſſions ſome Times "incite the People to Rebellion." About the ſame Time Mr. Richard Chambers a Merchant of London, had his Goods alſo ſeiz'd under the ſame Pretence. Mr. Chambers brought a Writ of Replevin: The Barons of the Exchequer granted an Injunction againſt it. The Merchant offer'd to give Bond for the Payment of ſuch Duties as the Court ſhou'd direct; but the Barons refus'd his Security, and wou'd oblige him to pay what the Farmers requir'd; which Chambers refuſing, the Cuſtom-houſe Officers, very ready at ſuch Work, detain'd double the Value of the Cuſtoms out of Mr. Chambers's Merchandize. Samuel Vaſſal Eſq; a Merchant of London, and afterwards Citizen in Parliament for that Capital, was proſecuted by the Attorney-General Sir Robert Heath, for not paying 5 s. 6 d. for every hundred Pounds Weight of Currants. Mr Vaſſal pleaded the Statute de Tallagio non concedendo; the Attorney-General demurr'd; Mr. Vaſſal join'd in the Demurrer, but the Court of Exchequer wou'd not hear his Counſel, ſaying, The King is in Poſſeſſion, and we will keep him ſo. Rare Judges! They committed Mr. Vaſſal to Priſon. The Proceedings agreeing very ill with the Petition of Right, the King commanded it to be printed, with his Anſwer and other Additions Norton the Printer confeſs'd he had wrought off 1500 Copies without thoſe Additions; but they were ſuppreſs'd by Warrant, and the Attorney-General commanded that no more ſhou'd be printed, and thoſe that were ſhou'd not be publiſh'd. Coke adds, Theſe were the juſt and religious Acts of this pious King; and can any Man believe the Parliament at their Meeting ſhou'd, without Breach of Truſt, ſit ſtill, and not repreſent theſe Things to him? Far from thinking ſo much like an Engliſh Man as Mr. Coke, Grandſon of the great Lawyer and Judge Sir Edward Coke, Archdeacon Echard draws the Curtain, and diſcovers the King in ſecret Council with his Miniſters juſt before the next Seſſion of Parliament; and Directions were given, "That if the "Houſe of Commons proceeded to accuſe the "King's Servants, to aſperſe his Counſellors, to "ſpeak of them is to aſperſe, to handle Matters of "Religion improper for them, there Laud appears "as much as if he had given it under his Hand and "Seal, to raiſe Objections againſt his Majeſty's "Speech, then the Privy-Counſellors were to in-"timate that thoſe Debates tended to a Breach, "and the King ſhou'd immediately declare he "wou'd not ſuffer it. Thus, continues Echard, were Matters prepar'd for the ſecond Meeting of Parliament. The Simplicity of the Hiſtorian in telling this Tale, is very ſingular. The ſecret Committee of Council adviſ'd the King before-hand to hear no Complaints againſt his Servants, and to ſupport the Abettors of Popery in their ſuperſtitious Innovations. Theſe were call'd Arminians: For beſides the heretical Doctrine of Arminius, which King James had labour'd ſo much to root out in Holland, the Engliſh Arminians preach'd another Hereſy, that the King's Power was abſolute and arbitrary, and muſt be obey'd under Pain of Damnation.

Evil Counſellors.

There was another Preparation for the Meeting of Parliament, the Conſequence of which was like the Conſequences of almoſt every Step of this Miniſtry, the making more ill Blood, and preparing Matters for the future terrible Diviſion between King and Parliament. Weſton the new Treaſurer had bought off Sir Thomas Wentworth from the Country Party, and he was made a Privy-Counſellor, Lord-Preſident of the North, and Viſcount Wentworth. The Archdeacon tells us with the former Simplicity, Being thus gain'd, he became a devout Friend to the Church. Exquiſite Nonſenſe! As if Bribery and Treachery wou'd lead a Man to true Religion and Devotion. The Lord Digby, whom the Earl of Clarendon and Mr. Echard allow to be as much for Church and King as Dr. Laud, ſaid of this great Man, and Noy ſoon after alike corrupted with the Attorney-General's Place, "Sir Thomas Wentworth and Mr. Noy were "moſt keen and active Patriots when the Petition "of Right was in Agitation, and Wentworth the "firſt Mover and Inſiſtor for this Clauſe, That for "the Comfort and Safety of Subjects, his Majeſty "wou'd be pleas'd to declare his Will and Pleaſure, "that all his Miniſters ſhou'd ſerve him according "to the Laws and Statutes of this Realm. And "to whom now can all the Inundations upon Li-"berties under Pretence of Law, and the late "Shipwreck of our Property be attributed more "than to Noy? And all thoſe other Miſchiefs, "whereby this Monarchy hath been brought al-"moſt to the Brink of Ruin, ſo much to any as "to that GRAND APOSTATE to the Common-"wealth Sir Thomas Wentworth? Who, ſays Echard, coming to a right Underſtanding with Biſhop Laud, they two enter'd into an inviolable League of Friendſhip: What muſt that League be but a Confederacy againſt the Commonwealth, which the Lord Digby tells us the Grand Apoſtate Wentworth had betray'd?

Wentworth a Confident of Laud's.

Before the Parliament met, there had been a Feint made to relieve Rochelle with the Fleet and Forces which were to have been commanded by Buckingham. The Earl of Lindſey, their Commander after the Duke's Death, ſail'd to Rochelle, but return'd without doing any Service. Upon this the Rochellers, in the laſt Diſtreſs and Deſpair, were forc'd to ſurrender themſelves, their Religion, Rights, and Liberties, and thoſe of all the Proteſtants in France, into the Hands of their moſt cruel implacable Enemy Cardinal Richlieu, as has been already hinted. The Germans under Dalbier were diſpos'd of to the King of Denmark, to whoſe Aſſiſtance were ſent the Lord Vere and General Morgan with a good Body of Troops; but all Enterprizes in theſe Times, had the Succeſs which attends raſh or ungrateful Counſels: And had not Biſhop Laud and his Brethren triumph'd in the Star-Chamber, High-Commiſſion Court, and Spiritual Courts, there wou'd have been no Triumphs in this Period of our Hiſtory. Coke on this Occaſion ſpeaks the Truth, tho' a little coarſely; "The War "againſt France was not more inconſiderately be-"gun about two Years before, than the Peace "made with it was ſecret. The firſt Time it "was heard of, was at the Siege of Privas, where "the Peace was proclaim'd between Lewis XIII. "and his good Brother of England. The Reform'd "were aſtoniſh'd and confounded that the King "of England, who brought them into the War, "ſhou'd leave them out of the Peace. Upon "this Privas ſurrenders, ſo does Caſtres, and then "Nimes. The Duke de Rohan is forced to ſub-"mit, the Power of the Proteſtants is rooted out, "and while the King of England is making War "againſt the Parliament, Richlieu marches into "Italy, takes Saluſſes and Pignerol from the Duke "of Savoy, which prepar'd the Way for the ex-"orbitant Power of Lewis XIV." But Mr. Archdeacon has a good Excuſe for abandoning the Reform'd in France. The King by aiding thoſe of Rochelle, train'd up his own Subjects in the School of Rebellion, and taught them to confederate with Foreigners, and at length brought down the Judg-

A.D.1629. ments of Heaven upon his own Head. If this will bear Reflection, it muſt be by Perſons of more Patience and Inſenſibility than I can boaſt of. We are told there were ſome popular Steps taken at this Time, Archbiſhop Abbot is ſent for to Court, and receiv'd with Solemnity; Dr. Potter, a true Proteſtant Divine, is made Biſhop of Carliſle; and Mountague's Appeal call'd in by Proclamation, after he was made a Biſhop, to ſhew what an Abhorrence the Court had for a Doctrine which they wou'd not ſuffer to be condemn'd.

A.D.1629. On the 20th of January the Parliament met, and Echard wonders they had not entirely bury'd their Jealouſies after the Petition of Right had been ſo exactly obſerv'd by filling the Fleet and Marſhalſea with Priſoners for not paying Cuſtoms levy'd without Conſent of Parliament. The Houſe of Commons took the Matter into Debate immediately, The Jealouſy of the Nation, to uſe Larrey's Words, appear'd rous'd, the ſame Complaints, the ſame Commotions, and the ſame Ardor as in the foregoing Seſſion on the Petition of Right. The Caſe of Mr. Rolle, a Member, was enquir'd into; upon which another Member ſpoke thus, "It is "Time now, Gentlemen, to ſhew your Zeal for "the Defence of your Laws; your Liberty is at "Stake if you do not haſten to its Support. It "is attack'd in its Sanctuary, in the Perſon of one "of your Members. Nay, even all the Parliament is attack'd by the Inſolence of the Officers of Cuſtom: The Seizure of Perſon and "Goods is put into Practice: They begin by "plundering and impriſoning, and afterwards ask "our Conſent to our Slavery, by giving our Sanction to the Bill for the raiſing this Tax, &c." The King on his Side order'd the Parliament to attend him at the Banquetting-Houſe, where "He "commended the Houſe of Lords, who having "the Honour by their Dignities to be near the "Majeſty of Kings, were by that Means more "affectionate to the Crown; but complain'd of "the Houſe of Commons, who, he ſaid, were "too reſtleſs, too jealous, too factious; and under Colour of preſerving their Privileges, diſputed the Rights of the Sovereign. He ſpoke "of the Tax in queſtion, as of a Right he held "by the Gift of the People, and never had a "Thought of holding it otherwiſe." How then came the Goals ſo full of Merchants, for not yeilding to pay it till 'twas ſo given? As to arbitrary Power, he told them he had as great an Averſion to it as they; which having particular Reference to the Impriſonment of the Subjects for refuſing Payment of Cuſtoms not granted by Parliament, is very extraordinary. The Courtiers hurrying on the Bill of Tonnage and Poundage, caus'd a juſt Jealouſy that they wanted to have it diſpatch'd to rid themſelves of the Parliament, and therefore the latter reſolv'd not to paſs it till they had provided for the Security of Religion; for notwithſtanding the Lord Clarendon repreſents it every where as more ſecure than ever, others knew the contrary; and Mr. Rous a Member of the Houſe of Commons ſpoke thus; "What we "are now upon, Gentlemen, is of greater Concern "than our Laws and Liberties, it concerns the "Security of our Religion to which our Laws "and Liberties are link'd, and become ſo inſeparable, that the diſ-uniting of the firſt certainly "deſtroys the two other." We ſhou'd remember they were told not to meddle with Religion, it being a Thing improper for them. It was indeed to meddle with Laud, and that was now as bad as their meddling with Villiers before. Mr. Rous went on, "We ſuffer Popery to come in again "into the Land, and to increaſe; we have open'd "our Gates to it, and like another Trojan Horſe, "it has got within our Walls." He enlarg'd upon the Growth of Arminianiſm, which is the Egg of Popery: If you ſuffer it to hatch and grow up, you'll ſoon hear the Arminians, Laud, Neile, Piers, Wren, Mountague, Lyndſay, Skinner, ſpeak the Language of Papiſts. He concludes, Let us now, by the unanimous Conſent and Reſolution of us all, make a Vow and Covenant henceforth to hold faſt to our God and our Religion, which are the Centre of the Publick Peace, and ought to be ſo of our Care and Debates. Mr. Pym ſaid, "The Toleration of Popery, and the "Liberty given to Arminianiſm, wou'd deſtroy the "Kingdom if not ſpeedily prevented; that the "Doctrine was pernicious, and oppoſite to that "of the firſt Reformers, and the Canons of the "Church of England. He added, It is the Duty of Parliaments to eſtabliſh the true Religion, and puniſh the falſe. If it was their Duty, it cou'd not be improper for them. That the Parliaments have always inſiſted on their Right to do it; that they have confirm'd general Councils; that Henry III. did nothing againſt the Pope but with Advice of Parliament. And he exhorted the Houſe to preſerve their Rights, to enquire into the falſe Doctors and their Books. He mention'd the Novelties introduc'd by Coſins into his Church, where Images of Saints and Angels were ſet up, as alſo Crucifixes and lighted Candles, with other Romiſh Cuſtoms. Secretary Cook brought a Meſſage to haſten the Tonnage and Poundage; and again another to the ſame Purpoſe; but the Houſe reſolv'd that Religion ſhou'd take Place before that Bill. Sir Francis Seymour made a warm Speech in this Debate, but Means were afterwards us'd to gain him as Sir Thomas Wentworth had been gain'd. Worthy Sir Robert Philips ſaid, Two Sects are damnably crept in to undermine the King and Kingdom, the one Popery, the other Arminianiſm. Is there a Vicar or Curate, who wou'd not ſtare to hear it ſaid that Archbiſhop Laud was a Sectary, yet ſo he is term'd by this noble Patriot Sir Robert Philips. Such Speeches cou'd not but be moſt ungrateful to the Court and their Creatures. One Lewis cry'd, The Devil take the Parliament. It ſeems he was a Diſciple of pious Biſhop Laud; and Archdeacon Echard does not approve of the Parliament's ſending for Lewis, becauſe the Words were not ſpoken in St. Stephen's Chapel. Secretary Cook brings a third Meſſage for the Tonnage and Poundage Bill, which was thought ſo reaſonable, ſays the Archdeacon, that Sir Thomas Edmunds one of his Majeſty's domeſtick Servants, preſs'd earneſtly for a Compliance. 'Tis a Quibble to ſay how ſimple this Hiſtorian is, he certainly ſhou'd have produc'd another Spokeſman to have ſeconded Sir John Cook effectually. Mr. Coryton reply'd to Edmunds, and the Houſe ſent an Anſwer to his Majeſty, that theſe Meſſages were inconvenient, breeding Debate and Loſs of Time. Sir John Elliot ſpoke with his uſual Warmth, We ſee ſome among our Biſhops who are not orthodox; witneſs the two Biſhops complain'd of the laſt Meeting of Parliament, Neile and Laud. Let us enquire whether there are not ſuch amongſt us; let us not be afraid to exclude them from the Government both in Church and State, leſt they corrupt one and the other. It is the Clergy's Buſineſs to inſtruct the People, but it belongs to the Parliament to reſtrain the Clergy when they err from ſound Doctrine. The Church of England wou'd be in a piteous Caſe if it was otherwiſe; if ſhe was abandon'd to thoſe new Doctors who trump up to us a new Liturgy that was unknown to our Reformers. It is our Buſineſs to be watchful over theſe ill-meaning Paſtors, and not to ſuffer them to infect the Church and deſtroy the orthodox Faith. The Houſe of Commons being mov'd with the Speeches of theſe three Members, after ſome Debate paſt the Vow propos'd by Mr. Rous:

We the Commons in Parliament aſſembled, do claim, proteſt, and avow for Truth the Senſe of the Articles which were eſtabliſhed by Parliament in the thirteenth Year of our late Queen Elizabeth, which by the publick

A.D.1629. lick Act of the Church of England, and by the general and current Expoſitions of the Writers of our Church have been delivered unto us; and we reject the Senſe of the Jeſuits and Arminian, and all others wherein they differ from us. Both Houſes join'd in an Addreſs to the King for a general Faſt. The Anſwer was an angry one, Fighting will do you more good than faſting, tho' I do not diſapprove of the latter. The Houſe of Commons ſoon after preſented a Declaration, that "They were reſolv'd to apply themſelves entirely to the ſecuring of their Religion, "which was equally in Danger from Arminians "and Papiſts; they hop'd their Zeal wou'd meet "with his Majeſty's Approbation, becauſe his Piety and Glory were concern'd in the Peace of "the Kingdom; that Schiſm and Hereſy ſhou'd "not prevail over the Reformation." How aſtoniſhing is this? They here call Biſhop Laud a Schiſmatick; that very Biſhop who had proſecuted the moſt religious and learned of our Divines as guilty of Schiſm. "They pray'd that their Care of Re-"ligion might have Precedency of the Tonnage "Act;" and he requir'd the contrary, adding, I am zealous for the Defence of the Church, and well inform'd it is in no Danger. But that Information came from Laud, whom the Parliament did not look upon as a Member of the Reform'd Church of England, but as one fallen into the Schiſm and Sin of Arminianiſm. And now, according to Echard, the Spirit being rais'd, it was the Art of ſubtle Men to keep it up. This is the poor Sophiſtry, which runs thro' his Hiſtory; a wretched Copy of Clarendon's. How ſoon wou'd the Art of theſe ſubtle Men have been render'd uſeleſs and vain by the King's hearkening to the humble and earneſt Petition of the Parliament for the Security of their Religion againſt Popery and its Abettors? Had the Laws been put in due Execution againſt Papiſts, and the Authors of popiſh Innovations been diſcountenanc'd, the Art of the ſubtle Men wou'd have been of no more Uſe to them, than the Wiſdom of the wiſe Men proves to be in the Hiſtory of the Rebellion. The Houſe debated a Declaration of the King's prohibiting Diſputes about Religion, which they judg'd to be the Advice of Laud and Mountague. They complain'd of the King's pardoning the latter; and obſerv'd, that tho' the Warrant to draw his Pardon was for him only, yet three other ſuch Divines were put in, Coſens, Sibthorp and Manwaring. Upon which a Member cry'd out, In this Laud is contracted all the Danger we fear; for he that procur'd theſe Pardons may be the Author of theſe new Opinions. In the Height of the Debate about Religion, Mr. Rolle's Warehouſe was lock'd up by a Purſuivant, and himſelf call'd out of the Houſe and ſerv'd with a Subpœna. Sir Humphry May, a Privy-Counſellor, declar'd the King and Council knew nothing of it; and the Attorney-General wrote to Mr. Rolle to excuſe it as a Miſtake. The Matter was referr'd to the Committee of Tonnage and Poundage, who receiv'd Petitions from ſeveral Merchants under Proſecution for refuſing to pay that Cuſtom as the Farmers demanded it. Mr. Noy, who was not yet Attorney-General, ſaid, We cannot ſafely give unleſs we are in Poſſeſſion; for it will not be a Gift but Confirmation; neither will I give without a Declaration in this Bill, that the King hath no Right but by our free Gift. If it will not be accepted as it is fit for us to give, we cannot help it: If it be the King's already, we do not give it. It was high time to take off a Man who had ſo much Law and Reaſon about him, and who conſequently muſt do a great deal of Miſchief where Reaſon and Law were againſt him. The Houſe ſent to the Barons of the Exchequer to vacate their Orders for ſtopping Merchants Goods. The Barons anſwer'd, Thoſe Orders did not determine the Right of Tonnage and Poundage. Thus the Merchants had been all along impriſon'd and plunder'd for refuſing to pay a Tax, which the Judges durſt not determine they ought to pay. The Anſwer of the Barons being unſatisfactory, the Houſe reſolv'd to enquire farther into their Proceedings. At the ſame time an Information was prepar'd in the Star-Chamber againſt Mr. Chambers, while his Petition lay before the Parliament; which the Houſe ſo reſented, that they ſent Sir William Acton, Sheriff of London, to the Tower. Several Cuſtom-Houſe Officers being examin'd, and charged with Breach of Privilege in the Caſe of Mr. Rolle, the King ſent a Meſſage to the Houſe, that what they did was by his own direct Order. 'Twas ſaid in the Debate, that theſe Interruptions proceeded from ſome Prelates and others Abettors of the Popiſh Party, who fear to be diſcover'd, and wou'd provoke to a Breach. Here again we are told that Laud, Neile, Mountague, and the like Prelates, were uſing not the Art of ſubtle Men, but the Zeal and Fury of Bigots, to make a Breach between his Majeſty and his People. It is neceſſary for me to remind the Reader often of the Deſigns of the Enemies of our happy Conſtitution in Church and State, for that they have endeavour'd in their Hiſtories to turn the Tables upon us, and prove that the Lovers of the Proteſtant Religion and Liberty were the Authors of that fatal Breach. Enquiry was made concerning ten popiſh Prieſts arraign'd at the King's-Bench, of which one only was condemn'd, and he repriev'd, and the other nine were releas'd. Sir Robert Philips complain'd, that 500 at a time have been ſeen coming from Maſs in Somerſet-Houſe; and that there are 940 Engliſh Scots and Iriſh in Religious Houſes in the Netherlands maintain'd by the Papiſts of England. The reverend Hiſtorian confeſſes, that tho' the Secretary and Attorney-General gave fair Accounts of the King's Juſtice and Mercy in Execution of the Penal Laws, yet they cou'd not qualify the general Outcry. What a Wonderment he makes of it? We have ſeen how frequently his Majeſty had promis'd to have thoſe Laws duly executed at the Parliament's Requeſt. Here are ten Romiſh Prieſts arraign'd, one of them only condemn'd, he repriev'd, and nine releas'd by Hyde the Chief Juſtice. Echard is amaz'd that the Houſe of Commons wou'd not take the Secretary and Attorney-General's Words againſt the Matter of Fact then before them.

The Parliament adjourning for three or four Days, when they met they receiv'd a Meſſage from his Majeſty to adjourn, being weary'd with their great Delays, ſays Echard, and ill Succeſs. At other times the King's chief Struggles were for Supplies, but now he ſtrove only for Confirmation of what he had poſſeſs'd ſince his Acceſſion to the Crown. He takes care not to ſay againſt Law, becauſe without Conſent of Parliament; and it is plain enough his Majeſty was ſo willing to have his Right to Tonnage ſuppos'd to be hereditary, notwithſtanding what he himſelf had ſaid to the contrary, that he was determin'd not to ſatisfy the Parliament concerning Religion for a Preſent which leſſen'd the Idea he had conceiv'd of his Prerogative, and ſubjected a Tax the Crown had been many Years in Poſſeſſion of by the Gift of the Parliament only, to the ſame Gift ſtill: A Tenure the King did not think ſo honourable, or ſo certain, as that of Inheritance. Sanderſon, ſuch another Hiſtorian as Echard, tells us the King cou'd not in Honour ſuffer the Commons, that School of Diſſention, to inſiſt on a Right to diſpoſe of their own Money; tho' in the ſame Page he allows that his Majeſty took that Tax preſuming it wou'd be given him: and ſo it had been without queſtion, if the King wou'd have ſatisfy'd the Parliament concerning Religion. P. 130, 134.

The Meſſage to adjourn had been comply'd with very unwillingly, the Houſe of Commons look-

*A.D.*1629. looking upon it as a ſort of Infringement of their Privileges; and when they met again it was with the ſame Zeal for the Defence of their Liberties. Sir John Elliot began the Debate with a Complaint againſt the Lord Treaſurer Weſton, whoſe Merit was an inviolable Attachment to Popery and arbitrary Power, tho' he was an occaſional Conformiſt, and went to Church with the other Courtiers. Under Colour of that Conformity he did the Papiſts more Service than he cou'd have done had he gone to Maſs. The Character given of him in the Lord Clarendon's Hiſtory has more viſible Marks of Invention than moſt of the other Characters. " His Education had been very good " amongſt Books and Men. After ſome Years " Study of the Law in the Middle Temple he tra- " vell'd into foreign Parts, and at an Age fit to " make Obſervations and Reflections, out of which " that which is commonly call'd Experience is con- " ſtituted". A very elaborate Deſcription of the Conſtitution of Experience. Reflections and Obſervations upon Facts in antient and modern Hiſtory wiſely made, are more uſeful than what a Man can ſee or hear in his Travels, which ſurely is never call'd Experience; and tho' Weſton travell'd at an Age fit to make Obſervations and Reflections, it is not explain'd to us that he made them. But it is ſaid, that having ſpent his Fortune at Court, and drawn in his Friends to be bound for him, he was at laſt promoted, and doubtleſs had too much Experience to think he cou'd repair his broken Fortune by defending the Liberties and Properties of the Subject. The following Allegory has a Quaintneſs in it which is not very common: " He did ſwim in thoſe troubleſome and " boiſt'rous Waters, where the Duke of Bucking- " ham rode Admiral with a good Grace"; to ſwim with a Grace in a Storm is a Flower in Eloquence; " when very many who were about " him were drown'd, or forc'd on Shore with " ſhrewd Hurts and Bruiſes; which ſhew'd he " knew well, how and when to uſe his Limbs and " Strength to the beſt Advantage; ſometime on- " ly to avoid ſinking, and ſometime to advance " and get ground". I have made this ſhort Digreſſion to let the Reader a little into the Nature of the Lord Clarendon's Characters, which are ſometimes too fulſome, ſometimes too malicious, always too partial to give great Delight to an honeſt Mind. 'Tis acknowledg'd in the Hiſtory of the Rebellion, that the Treaſurer Weſton's Wife and all his Daughters were declar'd of the Roman Religion; and tho' he himſelf and his Sons ſometimes went to Church, he was never thought to have Zeal for it; and his domeſtick Converſation and Dependants with whom only he us'd entire Freedom were all known Papiſts. Such was the Favourite of a King, whom the ſame Hiſtorian repreſents as zealous for the Proteſtant Religion; but he explains it all away afterwards: Weſton never had Reputation and Credit with the Popiſh Party; not with the Party with whom he only us'd entire Confidence, his Friends and Dependants; which is ſo much in Probability, that a Man muſt be an Infidel not to believe it. Sir John Elliot ſpoke againſt Neile Biſhop of Wincheſter, and more eſpecially againſt the great Lord Treaſurer, in whoſe Perſon all Evil is contracted. I find him acting and building on thoſe Grounds laid by his great Maſter the Duke, and that his Spirit is moving to theſe Interruptions. Theſe Men break Parliaments for fear Parliaments ſhou'd break them. I find him the Head of the great Party the Papiſts. Echard too ſays he had no Credit with them. All Jeſuits and Prieſts derive from him their Shelter and Protection. Buckingham is dead, but he revives in the two Chiefs, Neile and Weſton, who are animated with the ſame Spirit, and tread in the ſame Steps; but let not that hinder us from doing our Duty. He was going on when Sir John Finch the Speaker deliver'd a Meſſage from his Majeſty commanding them again to adjourn. Thus in five Days they had had two Meſſages to adjourn, both of them unparliamentary and irregular. The Houſe ſaw that as often as they offer'd to make Enquiry into Male-Adminiſtration their Debates wou'd be ſtopp'd by a Command to adjourn. They reſented this Irregularity in the Speaker, whoſe Duty it was not to deliver any ſuch Command: for the Adjournment did properly belong to themſelves. Sir John Elliot being about to deliver a Remonſtrance on the Subject of his Complaint, which bore hard on Neile and Weſton; that Court Tool the Speaker Finch boldly refus'd to read it, nay, the very Clerk was ſo far gain'd too, that he alſo refus'd it. Sir Miles Hobart fearing the Speaker wou'd have deſerted the Service lock'd the Door of the Houſe, and Mr. Strode ſaid, Let the Remonſtrance be read, that we may not be turn'd off like ſcatter'd Sheep, and ſent home as we were laſt Seſſions with a Scorn put upon us in Print. Then Sir John Elliot read the Remonſtrance, and it was propos'd to put the Queſtion; but Finch the Speaker cry'd, I am otherwiſe commanded by the King. The great Selden, a Name of more Weight than any Name in the Hiſtory of the Rebellion, ſaid, Dare you not put the Queſtion when we command you? If you will not put it, we muſt ſit ſtill and do nothing. We are here by Command from the King under the great Seal, and you before both Houſes are appointed our Speaker, and do you refuſe to perform your Office? Sir Robert Philips urg'd Precedents for the Right of the Houſe to adjourn itſelf; and that moſt learned Lawyer and reverend Judge Sir Edward Coke ſaid, The King prorogues, but the Houſe adjourns. Finch cou'd make no other Anſwer to this, than that his Majeſty had expreſsly commanded him to riſe as ſoon as he had deliver'd the Meſſage of Adjournment. Accordingly he roſe and left the Chair. But Mr. Denzil Hollis and Mr. Benjamin Valentine drew him back, and held him down in it by Force. We muſt interrupt the Story to obſerve that his Majeſty by this Meſſage exerciſed the moſt arbitrary Act of Power, which ever was acted by King of England, and that in the moſt flagrant manner, in plain Violation of the Privileges of Parliament. Sir Thomas Edmunds and other Privy-Counſellors, then in the Houſe, endeavour'd to free the Speaker. Mr. Hollis cry'd, He ſhall ſit till he pleaſes us to riſe. Finch fell a weeping; the Betrayers of the Cauſe of Liberty have generally ſuch noble Spirits; and ſpoke thus with an Interruption of Tears, I do not ſay I will not, but I dare not. He deſir'd they would not command his Ruin, in regard he had been their faithful Servant; but he durſt not ſin againſt the expreſs Command of his Sovereign. Mr. Selden reply'd, I ever lov'd your Perſon, but I cannot chuſe but condemn you now, that you being a Servant of the Houſe ſhou'd refuſe their Commands; which Obſtinacy will be a Precedent to Poſterity, if it ſhou'd go unpuniſh'd. He therefore wiſh'd him to proceed; which he ſtill refus'd, and fell a weeping afreſh. Sir Peter Hayman, a Countryman of his, ſaid, I am ſorry you are my Kinſman, for you are the Diſgrace of your Country, and a Blot of a noble Family. Poſterity will remember you with Scorn and Diſdain. For my part, ſince you will not be perſuaded to do your Duty, I think it fit you ſhou'd be call'd to the Bar, and a new Speaker choſen. Finch knew well enough their Power was not to laſt long, and there was nothing to be got by them, but much by obeying the King; ſo he remain'd inflexible. Echard not regarding what thoſe very eminent Lawyers Selden and Coke had ſaid of the Right of the Commons, and the Duty of a Speaker, applauds Finch's Fidelity to the King, which prevail'd over his Duty to his Country. The Houſe perceiving it, and knowing this was the only Opportunity they ſhou'd have to bear their Teſtimony againſt a long

" 1. Whoever ſhall bring in Innovations in Religion, " or by Favour ſeek to introduce Popery or Arminianiſm, or Opinions diſagreeing from the " true and Orthodox Church, ſhall be reputed a " capital Enemy to this Kingdom and Commonwealth. 2. Whatſoever Counſellor ſhall adviſe " the taking or levying the Subſidies of Tonnage " and Poundage not granted by Parliament, " ſhall be reputed an Innovator in the Government, and a capital Enemy to the Kingdom " and Commonwealth. 3. If any Merchant or " Perſon whatſoever ſhall voluntarily yield or pay " the Subſidies of Tonnage and Poundage not being granted by Parliament, he ſhall likewiſe be " reputed a Betrayer of the Liberties of England, " and an Enemy to the ſame". After we have ſeen how all theſe Enormities were committed, and ſhall ſee how the Miniſters will continue to commit and increaſe them, is it not very merry to hear Warwick tell us they voted againſt Innovations in Religion, and paying Tonnage and Poundage, as if there had been ſuch a Deſign? There is ſomething extremely ridiculous in it when Effronterie and Stupidity meet together. The King hearing of theſe Diſorders, ſays the Archdeacon, he means only Votes of Parliament, ſent a Meſſenger to the Serjeant of the Houſe of Commons to bring away his Mace; this is no Diſorder with him, which being remov'd from the Table would ſtop all Proceedings. Whoever knows leaſt of the Conſtitution knows that the Serjeant is a Servant to that Houſe, and that no King ever pretended to take him from their Service on purpoſe to ſtop Proceedings. The Door being lock'd his Majeſty was ſo provok'd, according to the reverend Hiſtorian, that without more ado he ſent to Maxwell, Uſher of the Black Rod, to call them up to a Diſſolution. He too finding the Door lock'd, the next Recourſe is to Arms. He in great Indignation, to uſe the Archdeacon's Words, ſent for the Captain of his Guards to force an Entrance. But the Parliament having ſate thus two Hours adjourn'd to the 10th of March, as they were commanded, and the forcible Entry into their Houſe was not made till ſome Years after. Biſhop Williams, who foreſaw the diſmal Effects of ſuch arbitrary Counſels and Actions, endeavour'd to prevent the fatal Effects of them, and importun'd the Lord Weſton to carry this Meſſage from him to his Majeſty: That the Parliament might meet again for all this, and that there might be a Conference between the Two Houſes to debate about Differences; that he hop'd the Lords wou'd check, if not cenſure the Commons, who were ſo very rude. His Advice to let the Parliament ſit was good, but his Reaſon very unpromiſing, and given rather to flatter the imperious Humour of the Court, than that it was his Judgment; which was too good to imagine the Lords wou'd take upon them to cenſure the Commons for aſſerting their Rights, which they did in the preceding Votes; and did no more than was their Right to do both as to the Speaker and Proteſtation, whatever is inſolently and impertinently ſaid to the contrary.

Inſufferable Tyranny.

P. 41.

Echard miſtakes in placing the Impriſonment of the Members before the Diſſolution of the Parliament. His Guides Warwick and Sanderſon affirm they were impriſon'd after the Parliament was diſſolv'd. The King came to the Houſe of Peers on the 10th of March, and made a Speech to them without ſending for the Commons, who being to be ſeverely handled in it, 'twas certainly very decent, tho' not very regular, to let them be out of the hearing of it. It is merely the undutiful and ſeditious Carriage of the Lower Houſe, ſaid his Majeſty, that has made the Diſſolution of this Parliament. Then after ſome Praiſes beſtow'd on the Houſe of Lords, he ſaid, It is ſo far from me to adjudge all the Houſe alike guilty, that I know that there are many there as dutiful Subjects as any in the World. Every Engliſhman having a Duty to his Country as well as to his King, one knows not well what is meant by dutiful in this King's Speech, unleſs it be an abject, ſlaviſh Submiſſion to arbitrary Power. What follows in the Speech, It being ſome few Vipers, is a Figure which in Plebeian Rhetorick is term'd calling of Names; but the Objection I make to it is, that theſe few Vipers were by much the Majority of this Houſe of Commons. The Parliament being diſſolv'd, the King as he was diſrobing in a ſort of Fury ſaid, He wou'd never put on thoſe Robes again. He publiſh'd a Declaration of the Cauſes why he did it; wherein, according to Echard, is a fair Account of his taking Tonnage and Poundage contrary to Law. He complain'd of the Parliament's falling upon his Miniſters, in which they were miſled by ſome Vipers, who like Empericks and lewd Artiſts, more calling of Names, ſtrove to make new Work, and to have ſome Diſeaſe afoot to keep themſelves in Requeſt, and to be employ'd in the Cure. What Elegance, what Decorum! and at the ſame time how keen the Satyr, and how conſiſtent with the Imperial Stile! There were as ſevere Writings publiſh'd againſt theſe Miniſters, particularly Weſton and Laud, who were accus'd of adviſing the Diſſolution of the Parliament, and in thoſe anonymous Writings threaten'd with a tragical Exit, if, ſays Larrey, they did not repent of their Wickedneſs, which was alledg'd to be ſo enormous, that neither God nor Man con'd let it eſcape unpuniſh'd.

Mr. Hollis was ask'd a Queſtion becoming the Wiſdom of Roman Senators, Why did you ſit above ſome of the Privy-Council ſo near the Speaker's Chair? He reply'd, I ſeated myſelf there ſome other times before, and took it as my Due there, and in any Place whatſoever; on Account of his noble Birth, Son to the Earl of Clare. That he came into the Houſe with as much Zeal as any other to ſerve his Majeſty; yet finding his Majeſty was offended, he humbly deſir'd to be the Subject rather of his Mercy than of his Power. The Treaſurer Weſton anſwer'd, You mean rather of his Majeſty's Mercy than of his Juſtice. Mr. Hollis reply'd, I ſay of his Majeſty's Power. Sir John Elliot was charg'd for Words ſpoken; to which he anſwer'd, Whatſoever was ſaid or done by me in that Place, and at that Time, was in the Capacity of a publick Man, and a Member of the Houſe; and I am and ever will be ready to give an Account of my Sayings and Doings there, whenever I ſhall be called unto it by that Houſe, where I conceive I am only to be queſtion'd; and in the mean time I being now but a private Man, I will not now trouble myſelf to remember what I ſaid or did there as a publick Perſon. Which ſeems to denote that the Parliament was not then in Being; and if the Council had queſtion'd theſe Gentlemen before the Houſe broke up, they wou'd doubtleſs have been queſtion'd themſelves ſeverely. Sir Miles Hobart's Offence was locking the Door of the Houſe, and putting the Key in his Pocket. Sanderſon tells us he was accus'd as doing it by the Command of the Houſe: But Sir Edward Peyton informs us, he was remember'd for it on another Occaſion. An ordinary Officer, one Richard Plumley, pretending a Quarrel with Sir Miles, took an Advantage of him, pull'd him out of his Coach, and beat him ſo that he dy'd. Plumley was ſo far from being puniſh'd, that he was made Admiral of the Iriſh Seas, and knighted when juſtly he ſhou'd have Proclamation againſt Parliaments.

The Declaration before-mention'd was follow'd by a Proclamation containing this frank Confeſſion of the Deſigns of the Court to ſubvert the Conſtitution of the Engliſh Government: The Calling again of a Parliament is for ill Ends divulg'd and ſpread about. His Majeſty did therefore declare, that the late Abuſes had driven him out of the Courſe of frequent meeting his People in Parliament, and did command his Subjects not to preſcribe him any time for Parliaments. " From theſe plain in-Brit. Con. p. 361. " conteſtable Facts, ſays Mr. Acherley, may be " taken a View of the Matters controverted be- " tween this King and his Parliament; what were " the Power his Majeſty aſpir'd to, and what were " the Rights the Lords and Commons contended " for". The Lord Clarendon, or ſome body for him, is forc'd to confeſs here, the People concluded no more Parliaments were to be expected, and that therefore there was really an Intention to alter the Government; of which a greater Inſtance cou'd not be than this publick declaring, as was interpreted, there ſhou'd be no more Parliaments. The French Jeſuit Orleans, who was a Confident of our abdicated King James, and whoſe Hiſtory is recommended to us by Archdeacon Echard, gives us more of this Secret than a cunning Man wou'd have done. Clarendon owns the King held the Queen in perfect Adoration; and Orleans ſhews us how ſhe put him upon the fatal Deſign of altering the Government. I muſt in Juſtice to the Queen declare, That ſhe being a Daughter of France was full of that Spirit which warms the Blood of abſo-

The above-mention'd Gentlemen were not only impriſon'd, but the Studies of ſome of them, as the great Selden, Mr. Hollis, Sir John Elliot, Mr. Long and Mr. Strode were ſeal'd up, and Proſecutions order'd againſt moſt of them in the Star-Chamber, to break the ſtubborn Spirit of Liberty, which gather'd Strength by Oppoſition; ſo the chief Aſſertors of it were tempted to make their Peace with the Court. Something has been ſaid already of that grand Apoſtate Sir Thomas Wentworth, who gave himſelf up Body and Soul to Laud and his Meaſures. The good Queen juſt mention'd perſuaded the King to make Laud his Favourite on the Death of Buckingham; and ſhe afterwards got Laud to gain Wentworth to aſſiſt her in the wicked Project to introduce a tyrannical Government. The Biſhop of Lincoln was ſpoke to to gain Sir John Elliot; but his Virtue was impenetrable. Sir John Saville cou'd not reſiſt the Temptation; and he was made a Lord, and Comptroller of the Houſhold. Sir Dudley Deggs was alſo found frail in the Day of Trial, and was made Maſter of the Rolls. Heath after a little more Court Drudgery was remov'd to the Bench of Judges to make room for Noy to be Attorney-General, and Sir Edward Littleton was made Sollicitor. Theſe Men did not give themſelves up by Halves, or keep any Reſerve of Conſcience or Honour, Littleton only in ſome ſmall Degree excepted. It may be ſaid of all the reſt what I have read of Noy, he ſacrific'd all his Knowledge of the Law, and his great Learning, to the Favour of Laud, and had as deep a Hand in all the illegal Practices of this Miniſtry as any one. Inſtead of declaiming on the Characters of theſe odious Miniſters, as Echard does after Clarendon, I will repeat what a learned Writer ſays of their Admini-

The Miniſters therefore " caus'd three Members of the Houſe of Com- " mons, Sir John Elliot, Denzil Hollis and Benja- " min Valentine to be proſecuted by his Majeſty's " Attorney-General for Words ſpoken by them " in their Debates in Parliament; and without any " Regard to Parliamentary Privileges theſe Mem- " bers were condemn'd and fin'd, Sir John Elliot " 2000 Pounds, Mr. Hollis 1000 Marks, and Mr. " Valentine 500. All of them were impriſon'd " till they ſhou'd pay their Fines, which Impri- " ſonment was accompany'd with ſome arbitrary " Severities; for theſe Gentlemen were deny'd not " only Pen, Ink, and Paper, but their Wives were " in their Sickneſſes deny'd Admittance, and con- Tyrannical Proceed- " ſequently the Rigor of the Puniſhment com- ings, " prehended an additional Sentence of Divorce " between them and their Wives, inſomuch that " Sir John Elliot, after many Years Confinement, " ſunk and dy'd under the Oppreſſion. But this " Proſecution and Condemnation being a Wound " given to the two Eſtates of Lords and Com- " mons in their tendereſt Privilege, and having " rais'd great Diſcontents, was in the Reign of " King Charles II. revers'd and unanimouſly de- " clar'd illegal: In which Reverſal, as in a Look- " ing-Glaſs, the Proſecution, Impriſonment, and " Death of that Patriot, and the Power of the " Miniſters by which he, and in him the un- " doubted Rights and Privileges of Parliament, " and of all the Commons of England were tram- " pled under Foot, appear to this Day in Colours, " adminiſtring a Deteſtation of ſuch Proceedings." Deteſted.

I chuſe to keep to this Lawyer-like Stile, for the greater Authority of the Quotation, which proves how this King's Miniſters executed the Project to alter the Form of Government, in the Opinion of thoſe who can beſt judge of it, the Lawyers of England.

Walter Long Eſq; of Wiltſhire was proſecuted in the Star-Chamber in an unprecedented Manner, ſays the ſame learned Lawyer, for ſuffering himſelf to be choſen a Burgeſs for Bath when he was High-Sheriff of Wilts. He was condemn'd and fin'd 1332 l. for abſenting himſelf from that County during the Seſſion of Parliament, and impriſon'd in the Tower. " This was an Addition, continues my " Author, to the Number of Violations of parlia- " mentary Privileges, which in theſe Times were " treated as the vileſt Clogs to Government." That Queſtion had been lately determin'd in the Caſe of Sir Edward Coke, who being made High-Sheriff of Buckinghamſhire to prevent his being elected a Member of Parliament, was notwithſtanding choſen a Burgeſs for a Borough in another County, and his Election was voted and reſolv'd to be good by the Houſe of Commons. Mr. Acherley again; " The King's Miniſters being thus freed of Fear, " quarter'd great Companies of Soldiers and Sea- " men on private Houſes; many People were put " to death by Martial Law, who ought to have " been

" ly, in the Opinion of this learned Lawyer, many " People were murder'd. Others by the ſame Mar-

" which by the Laws of the Land they deſerv'd."
This is confirm'd by the Lord Clarendon himſelf, who has given us ſo much Eulogy on the Bleſſings of this Reign: It rais'd an Aſperity in the Minds of more than the common People: This Diſtemper was ſo univerſal, that the leaſt Spark ſtill meeting with the wiſe Men about the King wou'd adviſe him to take one Step towards curing that Diſtemper, and calming the Minds of the People. Clarendon a-

" was reſolv'd to act without the Aſſiſtance of " Parliaments, rather than give them any Satiſ-
" faction. He continu'd to levy Taxes that were " not granted him to ſupply his Wants: Tonnage
" and Poundage were collected; and to that was " added another Tax on the Inhabitants of the " Sea-Port Towns and Foreſts, which was levy'd
" with as much Haughtineſs and Rigor as if they baſſador Sir Henry Vane, who was alſo ſent to Ger- many about the Palatinate, was treated in a more rough, ſcornful, and diſhonourable Manner, than any even of King James's Miniſters who had been ſent on the ſame Errand. Such was his Majeſty's Reputation abroad, ſuch the Happineſs and Tranquility at home.

A Peace being concluded with France, Echard Peace with France and Spain.
tells us the Articles contain'd nothing extraordinary.
However the King was pleas'd at the Inſtance of the Queen to order the Releaſement of ſeveral Popiſh Prieſts and others, who were then confin'd in ſeveral Priſons according to the Laws. Her Majeſty was about the ſame Time brought-to-bed of a Prince who was chriſten'd Charles, but dy'd an Hour after. The War with Spain, if it de-ſerves that Name, remain'd ſtill on the ſame foot.
The Engliſh as well as the Spaniards committed few Acts of Hoſtility; but the Court of Spain thought fit to ſend Sir Peter Paul Rubens, the famous Painter of Antwerp, Secretary and Gentleman of the Chamber to the Archdutcheſs Eu- genia, to propoſe a Treaty of Peace; and as the Archdeacon diſcreetly expreſſes it, he ſeem'd to offer Reſtitution of the Palatinate, which our Court no doubt ſeem'd to accept of; but the Negotiation had no Effect till Don Carlos de Colonna came over next Year, and concluded the Treaty between England and Spain, which was ſolemnly ſworn upon a Latin Bible brought for that Purpoſe by Biſhop Laud.

Among other illegal Ways of raiſing Money, a Monopolies.
Corporation of Starch-Makers was ſettled, who were to pay a round Sum for their Monopoly, a Precedent for other Monopolies on a like Payment. One Atkinſon being ow'd a great Sum of Money by a Servant of the King's, ſu'd him for his Debt. Immediately the Earl of Montgomery
Lord-Chamberlain, ſent the Creditor to Goal for ſuing him without his Leave. Atkinſon brought his Habeas Corpus, and was diſcharg'd. The Earl reſenting it, committed Atkinſon again to Priſon in Contempt of the Court, and, ſays Whitlocke, to the Admiration of all wiſe Men; for there were ſome Men of Wiſdom on the Side of the Laws and Liberties of the Engliſh Nation. Three of the Judges, Jones, Whitlocke, and Croke, granted a new Habeas Corpus, which the faithful Hyde Chief-Juſtice refus'd: But before the Return of it, the Earl of Montgomery, upon wiſer Thoughts, releas'd
Atkinſon. Heath the Attorney-General, not yet a Judge, fit, as Whitlocke ſays, for ſuch Work, exhibited an Information in the Star-Chamber againſt him, without reflecting on the Government; yet

the Court fin'd him 2000 Pounds, and order'd him to make a Submiſſion, which this generous Citizen refuſing as unjuſt and falſe, the Fine was eſtreated into the Exchequer, where he pleaded Magna Charta and other Statutes againſt it, as not being by legal Judgment of his Peers, nor ſaving his Coke, 288
Merchandize; but the Barons wou'd not ſuffer his Plea to be fil'd: He was thrown into Priſon, and a Habeas Corpus deny'd. Thus, ſays Coke, " You
" ſee the Fruits of the Petition of Right, and the " King's repeated Declarations to maintain the " Laws of the Land, and the Liberties and Pro" perty of the Subject." Whitlocke adds, after 12 Years Impriſonment and long waiting for Satisfaction for his Loſſes, Chambers at laſt dy'd in Want.
The Judges were ſomewhat perplex'd about the Habeas Corpus for the Parliament-Men, and wrote Ill Judges.
a Letter to his Majeſty, That by their Oaths they were

A.D.1629. were to bail the Priſoners. The Lord-Keeper Coventry, as fit a Man as Heath, wou'd not acknowledge that he had ſhew'd the Letter to the King as the Judges had deſir'd him, but told Judge Whitlocke whom they deputed to receive his Anſwer, that he and his Brethren muſt attend the King at Greenwich; where his Majeſty expreſs'd himſelf to be diſpleas'd with their Determination, and commanded them not to deliver any Opinion in the Caſe. The Priſoners were afterwards remov'd to ſeveral Priſons, and a Letter came from the King to the Judges, that this was done becauſe of their inſolent Carriage at the Bar. At laſt the Judges declar'd they wou'd bail them upon Sureties for their good Behaviour. The famous Selden pray'd that his Sureties might be taken, and the Matter of the good Behaviour omitted as a diſtinct Thing. The reſt of the Priſoners ſtood to what Selden mov'd, but the Court remanded him and them to the Tower. Who wou'd not gladly have ſuffer'd in that Cauſe for which the great Selden was a Sufferer? And how idle is it for the Author of the Hiſtory of the Rebellion to talk of Law, Learning, Wiſdom, and Reaſon, while Selden was a Priſoner for the Defence of them. The Shame of keeping theſe Patriots in Goal was ſo great, that it was intimated to them, if they wou'd petition the King they ſhou'd be releas'd, but they refus'd to do it; and ſome of them moving for better Uſage in their Priſons, it cou'd not be obtain'd; which ſufficiently proves the Deſign of this King and his Miniſters to alter the Form of Government, or in other Words to deſtroy the Conſtitution of England, which was reſtor'd at the Revolution, and has ſince then ever flouriſh'd.

Members of Parliament ill treated.

Tumult.

Some time this Year there happen'd a very great Tumult in the Street, occaſion'd by the arreſting one Billingham, an Iſle of Rhe Captain, who was reſcu'd by the Templars under Pretence that the Serjeants took him within their Precincts. The Lord-Mayor Sir James Cambel march'd at the Head of 500 Citizens to recover the Priſoner, and a hot Skirmiſh enſu'd, in which ſome of the Lord-Mayor's Company were kill'd, and ſeveral wounded; but the Tumult being ſuppreſs'd, the Offenders were ſeiz'd, and two of the principal, Captain Aſhurſt, and Mr. Stamford Servant to the late Duke of Buckingham, try'd, condemn'd, and executed at Tyburn. Stamford had before been pardon'd for Murder.

Sir Robert Dudley.

A Book appear'd at this Juncture written by Sir Robert Dudley, under the Name of the Duke of Northumberland then in Italy: It was entitled, A Propoſition for his Majeſty's Service, to bridle the Impertinency of Parliaments. 'Twas a Project to raiſe Money without them; for diſperſing which, the Earl of Somerſet, the Earl of Bedford, the Earl of Clare, Mr. Selden, Sir Robert Cotton, and Mr. St. John, were committed to Priſon. But Sir David Fowlis diſcovering the Author of that Pamphlet, theſe Lords and Gentlemen were releas'd. Sir Edward Peyton makes more of this Manuſcript, and inſinuates that it was written with the King's Privity; his Story is this, "Pickern Maſter-Falconer, P. 58. "found the written Project in the King's Cabi- "net, it being open, and ſeeing what it was, he "brought it to Car Earl of Somerſet, who ſhew'd "it to Sir Robert Cotton, the Earl of Clare, Mr. "St. John, and Mr. Selden, who had frequent Meet- "ings; Sir Robert had a Man who in his Cups told "it to a falſe Brother, and he betray'd them all." The Court found it neceſſary to proſecute theſe Gentlemen for ſpreading their Libel, in order to clear themſelves; but the Proſecution was ſtopp'd in reſpect of the great Joy on the Birth of the King's Son.

A.D.1630. Earl of Pembroke's Death.

We muſt open the next Year with the ſudden Death of William Herbert Earl of Pembroke, which is ſaid to have been foretold by the famous Fortune-Teller the Lady Davis, who was impriſon'd for it. Her Prophecy was, that he ſhou'd not out-live his Birth-day when fifty Years old. The ſame was predicted, according to A. Wood, by Mr. Thomas Allen of Glouceſter-Hall in Oxford. He was very pleaſant and healthful that Day; he ſupped at the Counteſs of Bedford's, and when he came home, ſaid, He wou'd never truſt a Woman Prophet for Lady Davis's ſake. He ſeem'd very well after he was in Bed, ſomewhat late in the Night, and had not been there long before he fetch'd a deep Sigh and dy'd away. By his Death the Office of Chancellor of the Univerſity of Oxford became vacant, and no doubt his Succeſſor, right or wrong, will be Dr. William Laud Biſhop of London; who, notwithſtanding the Oppoſition made by Biſhop Williams's Intereſt, had a great Majority of Voices. Mr. Archdeacon cannot help it. Now it happens that he was not choſen duly at all; for in the Hiſtory of his Tryal printed by Order of Parliament, we read, "By indirect Means P. 71. "this Prelate procur'd himſelf to be elected Chan- "cellor upon the Death of the right honourable "William Earl of Pembroke in April 1630, whoſe "noble Brother was then really elected by moſt "Voices, tho' miſ-calculated by Practice in the "Scrutiny by this Prelate's Creatures. What Al- "terations were there made upon his Advance- "ment and Chancellorſhip, will appear by theſe "ſubſequent Depoſitions of Sir Nathaniel Brent, "Mr. Corbet of Merton-College, Mr. Nixon Alder- "man of Oxford, Mr. Bendy, Dr. Wallis, &c. Echard of this Dr. Laud again; He was the greateſt Patron of Religion, the greateſt Promoter of Diſcipline and Government; as will be ſeen with a Vengeance in Dr. Leighton's unjuſt, barbarous, and bloody Treatment by him; The greateſt Benefactor to the Deſigns of Piety, &c. It will not bear repeating. He ſays after this, The Parliament having omitted the proper Seaſon for Accommodation: His ſtupid Meaning is of yielding up all their Rights to the Will of the Prince: The Court was neceſſitated to have Recourſe to ſuch Ways of raiſing Supplies, as upon great Exigencies had been practis'd in former Times. Here he takes upon him to form a Judgment by his own private Senſe, directly oppoſite to the Senſe of the Nation. He knew the proper Seaſon to accommodate Matters better than the Parliament of England, but he is not ſo fair as to tell us that Accommodation cou'd not be made without their giving up all Redreſs of Grievances; and he then aſſerts, directly oppoſite to the Opinion of Selden, Coke, Glanville, Whitlocke, and even Noy and Littleton, before they apoſtatiz'd, that his Majeſty did no more than what was uſual, and his Right in raiſing Money without Conſent of Parliament. This Writer has been ſufficiently dealt withal elſewhere; but as his Hiſtory apes that of the Rebellion, it muſt ſometimes undergo Animadverſion. Let us read what a learned Lawyer ſays on this Subject; "The deepeſt, moſt dangerous Ach. 364. "Wound that was ever given this Conſtitution, "was the aſſuming a Legiſlative Power to impoſe "Taxes in a new Manner." The Archdeacon avers it was formerly practis'd; it refers to Ship-Money, of which more hereafter

A.D.1630.

Money Projects.

A Commiſſion was granted ſomething like that to Empſon and Dudley in Henry VII's Time. It was to compound for defective Titles to Poſſeſſions, as Empſon and Dudley's was to take Fines and Forfeitures on obſolete Penal Laws. The Judges oppos'd this Deſign, and were the Occaſion of quaſhing it. But tho' the King receeded, yet the Tendency he diſcover'd to it, depriv'd him of the Merit of dropping it; for it look'd according to the Archdeacon, as if the Court were purſuing Meaſures not juſtifiable by Law. Indeed almoſt all their Meaſures did ſo look, and this therefore was the leſs to be wonder'd at.

The next Project was Wentworth's, but it was only the Revival of that mention'd after the Coro-

*A.D.*1630. nation to raiſe Money by Knighthood. This Impoſition was equally illegal, whimſical, and ridiculous, as far as any thing can be ridiculous, which is illegal. The learned Barriſter tells us, "His "Majeſty's Miniſters levy'd Money by Fines and "Impriſonments upon all Men of 40*l. per Annum* "and upwards, who refus'd to take upon them "the Order of Knighthood, tho' in Reſpect of their "Eſtates and Qualities they were altogether unfit." Ach. 363.

Knighthood.

Larrey enlarges on it. "The King had Recourſe "to extraordinary Levies to ſupply his Neceſſities. The Creation of a great Number of "Knights was one Project, and the Subject of "Mirth and Raillery in thoſe Times; for it ſeems "as if Knighthood was but of little Uſe in a Reign "wherein all was quiet and peaceable. The King "had ended all War, and had no Enemies unleſs "he look'd on his Subjects as Enemies, who oppos'd introducing Innovations in Church and "State." The good Lord-Keeper Coventry was one of the Commiſſioners for levying of this merry Tax, which oblig'd the Yeomen of England to paſs over the Heads of the Eſquires and Gentlemen, and commence Knights. Thus they were thruſt into Knighthood, or into a Goal upon refuſing to pay this unjuſt romantick Impoſition, which turn'd Induſtry into Errantry. 'Tis a poor Excuſe for extorting this Payment, that but 14000 Pounds of it came into the King's Purſe, tho' 100000 Pounds was taken out of the Subjects. To oppreſs the People, and let others have the Benefit of it, if Benefit can ever come from Oppreſſion, adds Weakneſs to the Injuſtice; and ſeveral as unwarrantable Projects and Monopolies had the like Infirmity.

Power abroad.

Notwithſtanding the King's Wants, according to the Archdeacon, the King exerted ſome Power in foreign Parts. How quaintly he expreſſes it! Woods Rogers of Briſtol exerted ſome Power in the South-Sea, and took a Town, which we fear is more than we ſhall find in this Piece of Hiſtory. The King was ſo far from being in Want, that there was a flowing Treaſury, as we read in Acherley: "By all which unpleaſing and provo"king Ways, the King receiv'd vaſt Sums of Mo"ney, not only from Perſons of Quality, but from "Perſons of any reaſonable Condition throughout "the Kingdom." It wanted but a ſmall Portion of common Senſe to foreſee that a ſevere Account muſt one time or other be given for Money extorted thus from the People. The victorious Guſtavus Adolphus King of Sweden had penetrated into Germany, with a brave tho' ſmall Army, to deliver the Germans from the Tyranny of the Houſe of Auſtria, in which the King of England was nearly concern'd; and Echard informs us, he reſolv'd to take hold of this Opportunity to recover the Palatinate for the Elector Palatine. His Ambaſſador at Ratisbone met with nothing but fair Words, and he therefore ſent an Army of 6000 Men under the Marquis of Hamilton to join the King of Sweden. Theſe Forces were rais'd in Scotland, and before the Marquis cou'd embark, the Lord Ochiltrey charg'd him with High-Treaſon, as raiſing that Army to make himſelf King of Scotland. Weſton the Treaſurer encourag'd this Charge, and urg'd it home to the King, who freely told Hamilton what he was accus'd of, but added, That the World may know what Confidence I have in you, you ſhall lie this Night in my Chamber. For, to uſe Echard's Words, it was the King's Principle never to ſuſpect or deſert his Friends. Theſe Men never conſider what they ſay; the King's Miniſters are his Friends. Cou'd they do no ill, and muſt they never be deſerted? A very wiſe Principle truly, and like to have good Effects in a Government no better belov'd than this was, which affected rather to provoke than appeaſe the People. We are coming to an Inſtance of this Diſpoſition, which cannot be written or read without Horror and the utmoſt Indignation againſt Laud, who was the Cauſe of it. 'Tis a Scandal to all Hiſtory, and has no Parallel in any other. I have large Memoirs relating to it, and ſhall therefore enter into the Detail. *A.D.*1630.

Laud's Cruelty.

The horrid Treatment of Dr. Leighton.

Alexander Leighton Doctor of Divinity in the two Univerſities of St. Andrews and Leyden, one Zachary Grey a Cambridge Doctor of Laws, as impudently as falſly aſſerted he never took his Doctor's Degree, was Father of the ſeraphick Dr. Leighton Archbiſhop of Glaſgow, and Sir Ellis Leighton who however was a Scandal to his Name. When the High-Commiſſion Court and Spiritual Courts had render'd Laud and his Brethren odious to the Nation, ſeveral Gentlemen and Citizens came to Dr. Leighton's Houſe in Blackfriars, to deſire him to draw up Articles againſt the Oppreſſion of thoſe Prelates, which after much Perſuaſion he did; and thoſe Articles being expatiated upon, made a Book call'd Sion's Plea againſt Prelacy. The Gentlemen and Citizens deſir'd him to go beyond Sea and print it, but he wou'd not do it till ſeveral pious, learned, and judicious Miniſters and others, ſome of them Members of Parliament, ſet their Hands to it in Approbation of its Contents. Dr. Leighton then went abroad, and return'd with an Impreſſion of it, to his very great Charge and Loſs. Two Copies of the Book were deliver'd to the Parliament a few Days before they were diſſolv'd, and it was not long after that as he came out of Blackfriars Church, Croſs and Tomlins, two High-Commiſſion Purſuivants, arreſted him, and dragg'd him with great Force and Violence to the Houſe of Laud Biſhop of London, who returning from Clapham with Dr. Corbet in his Coach, Leighton demanded to be heard. Croſs made as if he ſhou'd; but inſtead of it, he brought him through a ſubterraneous Paſſage to a Door not open'd ſince Queen Mary's bloody Reign; and having provided Bolts to put on his Hands, he was carry'd with a huge Multitude of Bills and Staves to Newgate, where in the Entry his Wife was almoſt kill'd, and himſelf was caſt into a naſty Dog-hole full of Rats and Mice, no Light but from the uncover'd Roof, no Place but the Ruins of an old Chimney for Fire; no Bedding, and no Meat nor Drink from Tueſday-Night to Thurſday-Noon. In this doleful Place and Plight they kept him, with two Doors ſhut upon him, for the Space of fifteen Weeks, ſuffering none to come at him, not even his Wife in all that time. I copy this from a Manuſcript drawn up by Dr. Leighton himſelf, and afterwards preſented to the Parliament. Four Days after his Commitment, the High-Commiſſion Court Purſuivant, with other Ruffians belonging to that impious Court, came to Dr. Leighton's Houſe in Blackfriars under Pretence of ſearching a Presbyterian's Houſe for Jeſuits Books, laid violent Hands upon his diſtreſs'd Wife, and us'd her with ſuch barbarous Inhumanity as is a Shame to expreſs. They rifled every Soul in the Houſe, and held a cock'd Piſtol to a Boy's Breaſt of five Years old, threatning to kill him if he wou'd not tell where the Books were; at which the Child was ſo frightned that he never recover'd himſelf. They ſpoil'd and carry'd away all the Doctor's Books, Houſhold-Stuff, Apparel, Arms, &c. notwithſtanding Mrs. Leighton told them there wou'd be a Day of Reckoning for it. They took away alſo a great Number of Books belonging to the Doctor from one Mr. Archer, with whom he had left them for Security. The Keeper of Newgate deny'd him a Copy of his Commitment, and the Sheriffs of London, Arthur Abdy and Robert Cambel, refus'd to bail him upon his Wife's Petition according to the Statute in that Behalf, one of the Sheriffs ſaying, He wiſh'd the Laws of the Land, and Privileges of the Subject, had never been named in Parliament. At fifteen Weeks end he was ſerv'd with a Subpœna, and an Information was laid againſt him

A.D.1630. him by that fit Tool Sir Robert Heath then Attorney-General, who came to him in Newgate, and told him the King was inform'd he wou'd not be examin'd. Dr. Leighton reply'd, I have the more Wrong, and the contrary will appear; I am willing to be examin'd by the meaneſt of his Majeſty's Subjects coming with lawful Authority, tho' I refus'd to anſwer before the High-Commiſſioners, as having no lawful Authority. He then gave his Reaſons, with which Heath ſeem'd to be ſatisfy'd. Sir Henry Martyn and Dr. Reeves two Civilians, with the Clerk of the High-Commiſſion Court, and ſeven or eight of the Commiſſioners, had before been with him in Newgate to examine him, and he refus'd it; for that they had by an unlawful Warrant violently caſt him into a loathſome Priſon; that by the Laws of God and Man they were forbidden to meddle with the Body or Goods of the Subject. Sir Henry Martyn and Dr. Reeves told him they were order'd by the King to take his Examination. Dr. Leighton ſaid, 'tis more than I know; if you will lay aſide your Commiſſion, and examine me by the King's Command, I will anſwer. Sir Henry Martyn reply'd, Not ſo. Dr. Leighton to him, Not ſo neither as you wou'd, will I be examin'd; which made Heath the Attorney accoſt him as he did. Sir Henry and he had much Diſcourſe about the King's Supremacy, the Hierarchy, going to Religious Aſſemblies different from Church-Worſhip, Faſting and Prayer; by which it appears that if Sir Henry Martyn underſtood Civil Law no better than he did Divinity, Dr. Leighton wou'd have made as good a Judge of the Admiralty. Reeves ſaid, I believe in my Conſcience you have done more Hurt than the Jeſuits; but that Civilian making his Belief ſerve inſtead of Reaſon and Argument is not much to be regarded. Sir Henry Martin looking ſtedfaſtly upon Leighton, and ſeeing his Countenance thro' long faſting, beaſtly Lodging, and other Affliction very pale and meagre, the Tears ruſh'd into his Eyes. But Reeves, another Tool of Laud's, was inſenſible, as was alſo the Attorney Heath, who on Aſſurance that he ſhou'd come off as he pleas'd, got a Confeſſion out of the Doctor that he wrote the Book he was charg'd with; and at a ſecond Conference promis'd him not only Pardon but Favour, if he wou'd confeſs who ſet him on; which Dr. Leighton refuſing, he was immediately brought into the Star-Chamber Court, and requir'd to put in Anſwer to a long Invective call'd an Information; which he did very amply, and to the Satisfaction of all religious, reaſonable Perſons. But no Council durſt plead for him; and tho' he was ſo ill in Priſon, that four Phyſicians and an Attorney certify'd his Caſe to be deſperate, ſuppos'd to be the Effect of Poiſon, yet abſent, ſick, and unheard, the following Sentence paſs'd upon him, as it is verbatim in his Petition to the Parliament. "This horrid Sentence was to be inflicted "with Knife, Fire and Whip at and upon the Pil- "lory, with 10000 l. Fine; which ſome of the "Lords of the High-Commiſſion Court conceiv'd "ſhou'd never be inflicted, only it was impos'd "as on a dying Man to terrify others. But Dr. "Laud and his Combinants caus'd the ſaid Sen- "tence to be executed the 26th Day of Novem- "ber following with a witneſs: for the Hangman "was arm'd with ſtrong Drink all the Night be- "fore in Priſon, and threatning Words to do it "cruelly. Your Petitioner's Hands being ty'd to "a Stake (beſides all other Torments) he receiv'd "thirty-ſix Stripes with a terrible Cord. After "which he ſtood almoſt two Hours in the Pillo- "ry in cold Froſt and Snow; and then ſuffer'd "the reſt, as cutting off the Ear, firing the Face, "ſlitting of the Noſe. Here the Clerk of the Houſe of Commons, when the Petition was read, was order'd to ſtop; and when he was going on again, the Compaſſion of the Houſe was ſuch, that he was bid to ſtop again till they had recover'd themſelves; but Laud and his Brethren of the High-Commiſſion Court heard it all with Pleaſure, as with Pleaſure does Echard write it. The Petitioner proceeds: "He was made a Theatre of Miſery to Men and "Angels; and being ſo broken with his Suffer- "ings that he was not able to go, the Warden of "the Fleet would not ſuffer him to be carry'd in "a Coach, but hurry'd him away by Water to "the farther endangering of his Life, &c." Dr. Leighton between the paſſing and Execution of the Sentence found Means to make his Eſcape out of the Fleet; which News was immediately carry'd to Laud. It was brought to me on Thurſday Night, ſays that cruel Prelate in his Diary. By this and what follows out of the ſame Diary, we ſee who it was who was moſt buſy in this bloody Work. "He was taken again in Bedfordſhire, and brought "back to the Fleet. On Friday Nov. the 26th "Part of the Sentence was executed upon him "in this manner, much the ſame as we have related it. And ſays Biſhop Laud again: "On that "Day ſevennight his Sores upon his Back, Ear, "Noſe and Face being not cured, he was whipp'd "again at the Pillory in Cheapſide, and there had "the Remainder of the Sentence executed by "cutting off the other Ear, ſlitting the other Side "of the Noſe, and branding the other Cheek". This helliſh Cruelty which the Parliament cou'd not bear the hearing of, does Biſhop Laud dwell upon, not in a publick Aſſembly only, where he might be oblig'd to hear it, but in his Cloſet where he might have avoided it, and yet he meditates upon it with Delight. This is the Biſhop of whom Echard ſays, No Man in the World was ſo fit to make a Chancellor of the Univerſity of Oxford, conſidering his Religion and Charity. Mr. Elphinſton and Mr. Anderſon, two Scots Gentlemen, were fin'd 500 l. apiece for helping Dr. Leighton their Countryman to fly from this infernal Puniſhment, without any Crime committed, as appears by the Parliament's giving him 6000 l. and making him Warden of that Priſon where he ſo long liv'd in loathſome Confinement. The Laudean Prelates were the Jehu's of this Court, and had the greateſt Hand in all the tyrannical Proceedings there. One of them, Harſnet of York, when Mr. Long a Member of Parliament was brought into it for attending the Service of the Houſe, being Sheriff of Wiltſhire, brow-beat Mr. Long's Council, who pleaded ancient Records touching the Privileges of Parliament to exempt Members from the Juriſdiction of that deteſted Court: Don't trouble us, ſays Harſnet, with Moth-eaten Records: We ſit here not to be guided by Precedents, but to make Precedents; and ſo proceeded to cenſure. Was it not high time to take care of ſuch Prelates and ſuch Practices? Not only the Star-Chamber, but Weſtminſter-Hall was exercis'd with ſome irregular Caſes, as the Archdeacon ſays it. Sir Henry Martyn made a great Complaint to his Majeſty againſt the Judges of the King's-Bench for granting Prohibitions againſt his Court. The King commanded the Judges to appear; and they juſtify'd their Proceedings to be according to Law, from whence they cou'd not depart by vertue of their Oaths; which proves plainly that his Majeſty's Privy-Couſellors made light of the Law, when their Paſſions or Intereſts were controul'd by it.

About three Years before this there was eſtabliſh'd a Society for buying in Impropriations for augmenting poor Vicarages, and maintaining a Preaching Miniſtry. An excellent Project! and it had the Succeſs it deſerv'd. It is incredible what large Sums were advanc'd in a ſhort time towards ſo laudable an Employment, according to Dr. Fuller. This Society choſe four Divines, Dr. Gouge, Dr. Sibbs, Mr. Offspring, Mr. Davenport; four Lawyers, Ralph Eyre, Eſq; Simon Brown, Eſq; of Lincoln's-Inn, Charles Sherland, Eſq; of Gray's-Inn, John White, Eſq; of the Middle-Temple; and four Feoffees.

*A.D.*1630. Merchants, Mr. John Geering, Mr. Richard Davis, Mr. George Harwood, Mr. Francis Bridges to be their Feoffees; who ſucceeded ſo well, that Fuller thinks within 50 Years Purchaſes wou'd rather have been wanting than Money to make them. Theſe worthy Feoffees preſented the moſt religious and ſober Miniſters to the Livings they purchas'd, whom Laud look'd on with a jealous Eye, leſt they ſhou'd prove a Thorn in the Sides of Epiſcopacy; though when that Prelate oblig'd Noy the Attorney to proſecute the Feoffees in the Exchequer, Fuller owns it appear'd they preferr'd no Miniſters, whoſe Sufficiency and Conformity were not firſt examin'd by the Biſhop. Mr. White, afterwards Chairman of the Committee upon inſufficient ones, offer'd Biſhop Laud, that if he diſlik'd either the Feoffees or their Divines, they wou'd willingly ſubmit to any Alteration. But Laud would be ſatiſfy'd with nothing leſs than the diſſolving a Society, who had the Impudence to ſet up a pious Preaching Miniſtry. And it had been well if he had not puſh'd the Matter farther. The Court of Exchequer condemn'd the Proceedings of the Feoffees as dangerous to the Church, and pronounc'd their Gifts and Feoffments illegal, broke the Society, and ſeiz'd the Money which had been given by religious Perſons for the Subſiſtence of religious Miniſters. Dr. Fuller charges Laud with this worſt Sort of Sacrilege.

Mr. Huntley, a Miniſter, perſecuted.

Mr. Huntley, a Miniſter of Kent, having been thrown into Jail by the High-Commiſſion Court, brought his Action againſt Barker the Keeper, and ſome of the Commiſſioners by Name, whom after long Debate the Judges order'd to anſwer. Laud, chief of that deteſtable Court, took the alarm, and repreſented to the King that the Commiſſioners wou'd be ruin'd, if they were accountable for their Doings. Upon which his Majeſty ſent Dr. Reeves, his Advocate, to the Lord Chief Juſtice, requiring him to proceed no farther. The Judges in this ſingular Caſe reſolv'd not to break their Oaths, but to inſiſt upon it that the Commiſſioners ſhou'd anſwer; and thoſe petty Tyrants had behav'd ſo ill, and were become ſo obnoxious and odious, that even the Privy-Council approv'd of it, notwithſtanding the Oppoſition of Laud Biſhop of London, and Neile Biſhop of Wincheſter, who ſpoke vehemently againſt it.

Birth of K. Charles the IId.

On the 29th of May the Queen was deliver'd of a Son at the Palace of St. James's about Noon. At which time a Star appear'd in a clear Sky to the Wonder of numberleſs Spectators, according to Echard; as if it prognoſticated what a Bleſſing he was to be to this bleſſed Nation, as will be ſeen in his Hiſtory. The Hiſtorians who make the moſt of this Prognoſtick, are a little puzzled how to reconcile the Glory of this Appearance with that Prince's Misfortunes and Miſmanagements. Sanderſon, as conſiderable an Author as Echard, aſſures us it was a Miracle wrought by God in Favour of the new-born Prince; and the latter takes notice of it in the ſame manner. Larrey obſerves upon it: Theſe Interpreters of the heavenly Signs carry'd their Predictions higher; and they wou'd needs have it that this wondrous Star promis'd the Prince, whoſe Birth it ſhone on, not leſs than the Conqueſt of the Eaſt, which way it pointed. But if it had been a Blazing Star it cou'd not have been more diſagreeable to the Puritans, who did not at all join in the ſurpaſſing Exultation on that Occaſion. Heylin thinks he has got great Advantage againſt the Proteſtants for their Behaviour at the Birth of the Prince; and I ſhall ſhew how in his own Words: "I can tell you it was otherwiſe "with too many of the Puritans, who had laid "their Line another way, and deſir'd not that the "King ſhou'd have any Children; inſomuch that "at a great Feaſt in Friday-ſtreet, when ſome of "the Company ſhew'd great Joy at the News of "the Queen's firſt being with Child, a leading "Man of that Faction, whom I cou'd name were "it worth while, did not ſtick to ſay, I can ſee "no ſuch Cauſe of Joy for the Queen's being with "Child; God has already provided better for us than "we deſerve, in giving ſuch a hopeful Progeny to "the Queen of Bohemia brought up in the Reform'd Religion; whereas it is uncertain what "Religion the King's Children will follow, when "brought up under a Mother ſo devoted to the "Church of Rome. I remember very well, that "being at a Town one Day's Journey from London when the News came of the Prince's Birth, "there was great Joy ſhew'd by all the reſt of the "Pariſh in cauſing Bonfires to be made, and the "Bells to be rung, and ſending Victuals unto thoſe "of the younger Sort, who were moſt buſily em-"ploy'd in that publick Joy: But ſo that from the "reſt of the Houſes being of the Presbyterian or "Puritan Party, there came neither Man nor "Child, nor Wood nor Victuals, their Doors be-"ing ſhut cloſe all that Evening as in a Time of "general Mourning and Diſconſolation". Here is an Accuſation againſt the Presbyterians and Puritans by their moſt inveterate Enemy Heylin, a Creature and Tool of Laud's, that their Souls ſighed for the Succeſſion of the Proteſtant Line, which now is in Poſſeſſion of the Throne of Great Britain, even before the Birth of the two laſt Kings of the Houſe of Stuart. The Queen of Bohemia, as has been intimated elſewhere, had endear'd herſelf and her Poſterity to all true Proteſtants in Britain by her great Zeal for the Reform'd Religion; inſomuch that when it was propos'd to marry her Son to the Emperor's Daughter, if he was educated in the Imperial Court, the pious Queen declar'd ſhe had rather be his Executioner, than ſuffer her Child to be bred up in Idolatry. Shou'd we not hope, as we pray, for an Eternity of Bleſſings on the Poſterity of a Princeſs, who in the midſt of Misfortunes preferr'd Religion to Empire? And may not the Puritans and Presbyterians reaſonably value themſelves on their early Devotion to the Intereſts of that Royal Houſe who now wear the Britiſh Crown. A Merit their Adverſaries have ſo little Claim to, that they take Pride in nothing more than the wicked and obſtinate Oppoſition they have conſtantly given it, and conſtantly will give it, notwithſtanding they may thro' falſe Policy be employ'd and careſs'd, which will bear farther Remarks in a more proper place.

Puritans not pleas'd with it.

They long for the Proteſtant Succeſſion.

It was not the ſober and religious inferior Clergy only, who met with Vexation, the Fathers of our Church felt the Weight of the Diſpleaſure of Laud and his Brethren. The very learned and pious Dr. Davenant Biſhop of Salisbury, one of the moſt eloquent Preachers of his Time, preaching in his Courſe a Lent-Sermon at Whitehall before the King and Court, and handling the Point of Predeſtination according to the 17th Article of the Church of England; the King took Offence at it, and Harſnet Archbiſhop of York, and Neile Biſhop of Wincheſter, told him ſo after Sermon, as did alſo the Earl of Montgomery Lord Chamberlain. Accordingly he was two Days after ſummon'd to appear before the Privy-Council, where Biſhop Davenant preſented himſelf on his Knees; and Dr. Fuller tells us, he might have continu'd on his Knees for any Favour the Biſhops Laud, Harſnet, or Neile ſhew'd him; but the temporal Lords bad him riſe and ſtand to his Defence, being as yet only accus'd not convicted. Harſnet ſpoke with great Vehemence againſt him, upbraiding him with King James and the preſent King's Favour to him, and charging him with diſobeying the King's Declaration forbidding the meddling with controverted Points in Sermons. The Biſhop of Salisbury ſaid very juſtly, that an eſtabliſh'd Article of the Church cou'd not be deem'd a Point in Controverſy, and his preaching upon it therefore was no Breach of the Royal Command: But Harſnet, to whom Laud

*A.D.*1631. left this invidious Work, continu'd to rebuke the Biſhop with his wonted Fierceneſs; and to make the Matter up as well as he cou'd, his Lordſhip ſaid, I am ſorry I underſtood not his Majeſty's Intention, if I had I ſhou'd have made Choice of ſome other Subject which might have given no Offence; and for the Time to come I ſhall conform myſelf as readily as any other to his Majeſty's Command. The Earl of Arundel approv'd of Biſhop Davenant's Anſwer, and adviſ'd him to ſay no more, the Privy-Council being ſatisfy'd that his Sermon was not an intended Violation of his Majeſty's Declaration: So his Lordſhip was diſmiſs'd, and the Lord Chamberlain afterwards introducing him to the King, he kiſs'd his Majeſty Hand. Thus ended an Affair which, as Fuller obſerves, the good Biſhop's Adverſaries Harſnet, Neile, &c. hop'd wou'd make him fall totally and finally from the King's Favour.

St. Paul's Church. It is not one of the leaſt important Paſſages in Archdeacon Echard's Hiſtory, where he relates at large the Activity of Biſhop Laud in the Repair of the Cathedral of St. Paul. I ſhou'd have taken as much Pleaſure as himſelf in viewing the maſterly Strokes of that great Architect Inigo Jones; I ſhou'd have been as much charm'd with the Corinthian Pillars, the Cherubims, &c. but I ſhou'd not have been in Aſtoniſhment, as he is, that this new Structure of the principal Church in the Metropolis of the Kingdom met with Exceptions and Murmurings, occaſion'd by Laud's cauſing Shops and Houſes to be pull'd down without the Conſent of the Owners, to make room for the Building. If the Owners did not conſent, their having a reaſonable Compenſation is no Satisfaction. Common Senſe teaches every one, that for a Man to be turn'd out of his Houſe, Way of Trade and Living, is not to be compenſated by paying him a reaſonable Price for his Houſe. If the Owners did not conſent, the Sheriff of London was requir'd to force their Property from them, to demoliſh their Houſes, and drive away the Tradeſmen to ſeek out new Dwellings and Shops. Laud got Briefs for Contributions throughout the Kingdom, and Letters Monitory were ſent from the Lords of the Council to quicken the Gentlemen in the Country in raiſing Money for ſo righteous and religious a Work. Sir Francis Knollys and Sir Thomas Vachel, two Juſtices of the Peace in Berkſhire, who were not over forward in it, as not liking either Laud or his Projects, were check'd for delaying to gather in the Contribution-Money, and not giving liberally themſelves. By this compulſory Method great Sums of Money were rais'd, and this one Thing, according to Archdeacon Echard, was enough to remove all other Prejudices againſt Laud. The Privy-Council having little elſe to do, and being under the Influence of that Prelate, publiſh'd an Order that no Body carry any Thing in the Church which may profane it; that Parents ſhou'd be puniſh'd for Childrens playing in the Church at any Time, &c. We defy all Hiſtory to ſhew any thing ſo trifling in the Acts of any Council that was ever thought worth naming.

Hamilton in Germany. We muſt now take ſome Notice of the Marquis of Hamilton's Expedition in Germany, where he commanded an Army of 6000 Engliſh and Scots, ſent to the Aſſiſtance of the great Guſtavus Adolphus. A Treaty had been made between the King of Sweden and the Marquis, without any mention of King Charles, for fear of offending the Emperor. Neither was any mention made of recovering the Palatinate. This Fear and Precaution of the Kings, ſays Larrey, appear'd in his Letter to the Queen of Bohemia, excuſing his making Peace with Spain, as being done with a View of engaging that Monarch to mediate for the Reſtitution of the Elector Palatine's Dominions. That is to ſay, continues the French Hiſtorian, King Charles ſuffer'd himſelf to be amus'd by the Artifices of the Spaniards as his Father had been before, being as timorous and irreſolute as he, dreading War, and loving Peace. The Lord Clarendon is ſo far from owning any thing of this, that he aſſures us King Charles was very formidable to all the Kings in Europe, and had as great a Reputation abroad as any of the Plantagenets. The 16th of July Hamilton ſail'd from Yarmouth for Zealand in Denmark, where arriving ſafely, he went directly to that Court. From Zealand he proceeded to Pomerania, where he landed his Army, and went himſelf to wait upon the King of Sweden, then preparing for the Battel of Leipſick. His Majeſty appointed thoſe Forces to cover the Towns in that Province, to ſecure his Retreat in Caſe he was forc'd to make one. Guſtavus was victorious in the Battel, and wrote a Letter to the King of England with his own Hand, to inform him of his Succeſs, and exhort him to continue his Aſſiſtance; but in the main he did not much rely upon it; and cou'd not, according to Larrey, confide in a Prince who kept ſuch Meaſures with one of the moſt dangerous Enemies of the common Cauſe. We ſhall in the next Year ſee to what Purpoſe the Marquis of Hamilton and his 6000 Men were ſent to Germany.

In England there was an uncommon Trial of a Nobleman Mervin Lord Audley Earl of Caſtlehaven, for a Rape committed on his own Wife by his Servant Broadway, himſelf holding her while his Man raviſh'd her; and for Sodomy with Fitzpatrick another of his Servants. The Lord-Keeper Coventry was made Lord High-Steward on this Occaſion, aſſiſted by eight Judges. The Trial was in Weſtminſter-Hall, and there were twenty-ſeven Peers. The horrid Crime was ſufficiently prov'd, all the Peers, except Dudley Lord North, voted him guilty of the Rape, and fifteen of them declar'd him guilty of the Sodomy: So he was condemn'd to be hang'd, but the Sentence was mitigated, and he was beheaded on Tower-Hill. Broadway and Fitzpatrick were executed at Tyburn. Audley's Trial.

*A.D.*1631.

The next Project to raiſe Money was by ſealing of Cards and Dice, and that of Knighthood was proſecuted with Vigor. Wentworth now at the Head of all arbitrary Counſels, dipp'd deeply in the Guilt of this ſcandalous Project, and procur'd three of his Countrymen James Maliverer Eſq; William Ingleby Eſq; and Thomas Moyſer Eſq; all of Yorkſhire, to be fin'd ſeverely, Maliverer 2000 Pounds, as a Compoſition for the Order of Knighthood, whereas he might have been a Baronet for half the Money. Other Perſons were fin'd grievouſly in other Parts of England to their utter undoing, according to Ruſhworth. A Charter was granted to the Soap-Makers of Weſtminſter for 10000 Pounds down, and 8 Pounds a Year, which brought a good Revenue into the Exchequer yearly. Two Proclamations publiſh'd at this Time were worth remembring, one for the better Direction of thoſe who come to Court to be cur'd of the King's Evil, the other againſt eating and ſelling of Fleſh in Lent. Projects for Money.

Biſhop Laud was all this while very buſy with his Proſecutions in the High-Commiſſion Court, and in all other Courts where he had Influence. Mr. Thomas Ford of Magdalen College Oxon, Mr. Giles Hodges of Exeter-College, were ſummon'd to appear before the Vice-chancellor of Oxford, Dr. Smith Warden of Wadham-College, from whom Fuller tells us they appeal'd to the Proctors, as ſuſpecting Smith to be partial. Their Crime was for touching upon Controverſy contrary to the King's Inſtructions, which were intended chiefly to hinder the preaching againſt Popery and Arminianiſm. The Proctors were Mr. Atherton Bruch of Braſen-Noſe College, and Mr. John Doughty of Merton, who receiv'd their Appeals. Laud immediately complain'd to the King then at Woodſtock, and his Majeſty immediately appointed the Buſineſs to be brought before himſelf, who heard the Cauſe in Auguſt, and Oxford Divines expell'd.

*A.D.*1631. the Iſſue of it was, Mr. Ford, Mr. Thorn, and Mr. Hodges were ſentenc'd to be baniſh'd the Univerſity; and the two Proctors Mr. Bruch and Mr. Doughty were turn'd out of their Offices. At the ſame time the very learned and reverend Dr. Prideaux Rector of Exeter-College, and Dr. Wilkinſon Principal of Magdalen, receiv'd a ſharp Admonition for giving countenance to thoſe three Divines who were expell'd Oxford for preaching againſt the Hereſy of Arminius, which Laud took into his Protection. Mr. Ford refus'd to make any Addreſs to be reſtor'd to the Univerſity; and the Rage of Biſhop Laud did not ſtop at his Expulſion, for being inform'd that the Town of Plymouth intended to chuſe him Lecturer, Letters were ſent to require them not to do it on Pain of the King's Diſpleaſure. There is nothing but Severity and Irregularity.

Sir Giles Allington.

While the infamous Tryal of the Lord Audley was depending, Sir Giles Allington's Caſe was proſecuted in the High-Commiſſion Court. The Knight had marry'd his Niece contrary to Admonition and Authority, as Echard phraſes it. Sanderſon affirms he had the Opinion of Council upon it before Marriage. The Archbiſhop of Canterbury had indeed admoniſh'd him againſt it as inceſtuous, and he was afterwards queſtion'd for it in the High Commiſſion Court. Allington was rich and cou'd bleed freely, ſo they were very loath to part with him. Sir Giles apply'd to the Court of Common-Pleas for a Prohibition. The Court order'd a Rule for it. Immediately Biſhop Laud runs to the King again, who blam'd the Judges, and Laud threaten'd to excommunicate them if they granted a Prohibition; ſo the High-Commiſſioners proceed and ſentence Allington to pay 12000 Pounds to the King, and give 20000 Pounds Security not to cohabit or be in private with his Wife, as alſo to do Penance in the Cathedral of St. Paul's London, and Great St. Mary's at Cambridge in which County he liv'd. He and his Wife paſs'd thro' that Ceremony; but, ſays Sanderſon, no Penalty of the Purſe, or Shame of the Sin, cou'd keep them long aſunder.

St. Paul's.

Biſhop Laud going forward with repairing and decorating his Cathedral, ſet up certain Images, which, according to Ruſhworth, were to the Diſcontent of many Perſons. The King came himſelf to viſit this Church in a kind of Proceſſion. Above 80000 Pounds were gather'd by the Briefs, beſides 19000 Pounds laid out by Sir Paul Pindar. Echard aſſures us the Prebends were afterwards turn'd out of their Stalls, and Horſes put in their Places by the Puritans.

Hamilton.

We have hinted that the Marquis of Hamilton had been accuſed of High-Treaſon, and now the Lord-Keeper and Judges conſider how to examine into the Truth of it. The Lord Rea a Scotch Baron impeach'd Ramſay and Meldrum, two of his Countrymen, for exciting him to go beyond Sea to join in the Conſpiracy; but they poſitively denying it, and no Witneſſes being produc'd, David Ramſay, who was a Soldier, offer'd to clear himſelf by ſolemn Combat. The Lord Rea accepted the Challenge; upon which a Court of Chivalry was erected, and Robert Earl of Lindſey made Lord-High-Conſtable of England on that Occaſion. The Sureties for the Lord Rea were Sir Robert Gordon, Sir Piercy Crosby, Sir Walter Crosby, Sir William Forbes, and William Innys Eſq; For Ramſay the Earl of Abercorn and the Earl of Roxburgh. Mr. Selden was one of the Lord Rea's Council, and Tuttle-Fields was appointed to be the Place of Combat; but before it was to be decided, his Majeſty ſent Richard St. George King at Arms, with a Letter to the Lord High-Conſtable, by which he revok'd his Letters Pattents for the Tryal of this Cauſe.

Hamilton in Germany.

In the mean time the Marquis of Hamilton, by Command of the King of Sweden, quarter'd his little Army at Cuſtrein, Frankfort upon Oder, Landſberg, Croſar, and other neighbouring Towns in Pomerania, where a third Part of his Soldiers languiſh'd and dy'd of various Sickneſſes. The Marquis was afterwards order'd to join General Banier and beſiege Magdeburgh, which was attempted without Succeſs, and Hamilton receiv'd Orders to march to Halberſtadt. Sir Henry Vane was then in the King of Sweden's Camp, Ambaſſador from England, but cou'd get no other Anſwer from that Prince about the Palatinate, than that he cou'd not undertake the War with the Bavarian, who was in Poſſeſſion of it, unleſs King Charles wou'd enter into a War with Spain, which he knew was not to be expected when a Treaty of Peace had been juſt concluded between the Kings of England and Spain. The Marquis of Hamilton was ſoon after this recall'd, and an End put to an Enterprize which like all the foreign Enterprizes of the Engliſh ſince Queen Elizabeth's Death, is hardly worth our Remembrance. *A.D.*1631.

*A.D.*1632. The King of Sweden fell the next Year in the Field of Lutzen, where his Army was crown'd with Victory; and the King of Bohemia dying of the Infection at Mentz, the Earl of Arundel was ſent to Holland to invite the belov'd Queen and her Children into England; but that Princeſs excus'd her not accepting the Invitation on account of her great Sorrow, which render'd her uncapable of taking ſuch a Journey.

Kings of Sweden and Bohemia.

Ld Wentworth and Mr. Bellaſis.

This Year the Lord Viſcount Wentworth was ſent Deputy to Ireland to tyrannize there as he had done in the Court of the North, of which he was Lord-Preſident, and of which Mr. Edward Hyde ſaid in Parliament, It was a Maſs of new exorbitant intolerable Power. He had not been long Preſident of the North, before he procur'd Mr. Bellaſis Son and Heir of the Lord Viſcount Faulconberg, to be ſummon'd before the Council for ſtanding with his Hat upon his Head, and looking in his Face as he paſs'd by him with the Mace carry'd before him. Mr. Bellaſis anſwer'd that his Face was turn'd another Way, he being talking with the Lord Fairfax, and the Lord Wentworth paſs'd before he was aware of it. The Council commanded him to kneel, which he did ſeemingly only, and poſitively refus'd to ſign a Submiſſion that he was ſorry he had given Offence to the ſaid Lord, upon which he was ſent to Priſon. When he was ſummon'd to appear again, he ſaid he hop'd it wou'd be underſtood that his Submiſſion was to have relation to the Lord Wentworth's Place and not to his Perſon; but his Friends prevail'd with him to ſubmit in the Form that was tender'd to him, thinking his Honour was ſav'd by giving the Board and Wentworth eſpecially to underſtand how he himſelf underſtood his Submiſſion.

Mr. Sherfield's Suffering.

The Archdeacon telling us of ſeveral Church-Promotions, extols Biſhop Laud's great Care in recommending Perſons to Eccleſiaſtical Preferments who were of the greateſt Probity; and then is ſo weak as to name them, Neile tranſlated to the Archbiſhoprick of York, Curl tranſlated to Wincheſter, Pierce promoted to Bath and Wells, Lyndſay to Peterborough. He informs us alſo that he got Mr. Francis Windebank his old Friend, to be made Secretary of State, tho' ſuch an Advocate and Patron to Romiſh Prieſts and Jeſuits, to uſe his own Words, that he was himſelf reckon'd a Papiſt. Now it was that Biſhop Laud's Integrity ſhone out bright again in the Proſecution of Henry Sherfield Eſq; Recorder of Salisbury. That worthy Gentleman was ſcandaliz'd at ſome Painting in Glaſs in a Window of St. Edmund's Church in that City, where the Creation of the World was repreſented in Emblems which ſuited ill with Religion, for Almighty God was painted there like an old Man. The Recorder order'd that blaſphemous Picture to be taken down as a Diſhonour to the

A.D.1632. Reformation, for which he was cited to the Star-Chamber, where he pleaded the Scripture that forbids ſeverely the making any Pictures of the Deity, and the Act of Parliament 13 Q. Eliz. which orders ſuch Pictures to be pull'd down as Monuments of Superſtition, purſuant alſo to another Statute of Edward VI. Notwithſtanding this Plea of Religion and Law, and the very plain Plea of Reaſon and Senſe, the Court fin'd him 500 Pounds. Laud who ſate then in Court, endeavour'd to juſtify the Blaſphemy of painting the Creator like a Creature, and was ſo very weak as to quote the Antient of Days; but the Earl of Dorſet reply'd, The Antient of Days is the Eternal God, who is injuriouſly repreſented in that Picture as an old Architect with a Pair of Compaſſes drawing the Plan of the Univerſe. "The People murmur'd, ſays "Larrey, at Mr. Sherfield's Sentence, who they "thought had Scripture and Law on his Side." Mr. Nathaniel Bernard Lecturer of St. Sepulchers London, in a Sermon preach'd at St. Mary's in Cambridge on this Text, The Glory is departed from Iſrael, becauſe the Ark of God was taken away, was by Procurement of Laud cenſur'd in the High-Commiſſion Court, for delivering ſome ſmart Paſſages againſt Poſſibility of Salvation in the Church of Rome according to the Decrees of the Council of Trent. Mr. Bernard was order'd to make a Recantation which was drawn up for him, but he refus'd to ſign it, and was fin'd 1000 Pounds, ſuſpended his Miniſtry, condemn'd in Coſts of Suit, and thrown into Goal, where he dy'd, his ill Uſage there ſhortening his Life. But Dr. Fuller obſerves, He that maketh Inquiſition for Blood, either has been or will be the Avenger of it. Laud was the Man meant here. Dr. Comber, ſays Fuller, Vice-chancellor, gave ſpeedy notice of the Sermon to Dr. Laud Biſhop of London. But as quick as he was, the Biſhop's Univerſity-Agents had ſent him Information of it before. About the ſame Time the very eminent Mr. Arthur Hilderſham Miniſter of Aſhby de la Zouche, who had been ſilenc'd before by Biſhop Neile, and reſtor'd by Dr. Ridley Archbiſhop Abbot's Vicar-General, was again ſilenc'd by the Spiritual Court at Leiceſter, where Sir John Lamb and Sibthorpe did Laud's Buſineſs; but the Piety and Merit of this celebrated Divine, made even the vile Court of Leiceſter aſham'd of keeping ſuch a Miniſter out of his Pulpit, to which they reſtor'd him a few Months after. This Year another Proclamation was publiſh'd for keeping of Lent; and another, that all Gentlemen keep their Reſidence at their Manſions in the Country, and not inhabit in the City of London or Places adjacent, that they might not bring Infection to Town with them. Every Year is productive of Proclamations; ſometimes twenty, ſometimes more yearly. Not a word has been heard of a Parliament for about four Years, and Laud rules without Controul in the Star-Chamber, High-Commiſſion, and other ſpiritual Courts; and how the Proteſtant Religion advanc'd, we may find ſooner in Fuller's than in Clarendon's Hiſtory. A grave Divine preaching before the Univerſity at St. Mary's Cambridge, had this Paſſage in his Sermon, As at the Olympian Games he was counted the Conqueror who cou'd drive his Chariot Wheels neareſt the Mark, yet ſo as not to hinder his running or to ſtick thereon: Metaque Fervidis Evitata Rotis; ſo he who in his Sermon can preach near Popery, yet no Popery, there is your Man. "Indeed it now began to be "the general Complaint of moſt moderate Men, "that many in the Univerſity, both in the Schools "and Pulpits, approach'd the Opinions of the "Church of Rome nearer than ever before," as Dr. Fuller writes; who being an orthodox Divine, and of that Univerſity, and of that Time, muſt know theſe Things better than Clarendon and Echard, who both aſſure us on their exemplary Veracity, that great Care was taken by Biſhop Laud to prefer Perſons of the greateſt Probity in the Church, tho' we read theſe Perſons came nearer Popery than ever. 'Tis neceſſary to digreſs thus on Eccleſiaſtical Affairs, to ſhew how induſtriouſly thoſe two Writers conceal the Attachment of Biſhop Laud and his Brethren to the Papal Hierarchy and Superſtition, in Oppoſition to the Senſe of the moſt pious and moſt worthy of our Proteſtant Biſhops and Clergy.

P. 166.

Echard begins his Account of the King's Journey to Scotland, as pompous as all other his Relations, where he intends that the King or Biſhop Laud ſhall make a ſhining Figure. "The Scots "Nation, ſays he, tho' very falſly, by King James's "pacifick Deportment whilſt there, and his obli- "ging Bounty whilſt in England, had with great "Plenty enjoy'd a continual Peace for above forty "Years, which none of their Records can give "an account of for ſo long a Time before." The Author of the Memoirs of the Church of Scotland, writes quite contrary to this: "Nothing but a dark "Proſpect of Perſecution, and a Cloud threatning "Diſſolution to the Church, now appear'd; the "Priſons were fill'd with depriv'd Miniſters, and "the remote Parts with the Baniſh'd, the King's "Letters coming every Poſt, preſſing to more "and more Severities, &c." Such was K. James's pacifick Deportment, and King Charles, his Son, according to the ſame Author, was no leſs zealous than his Father in the Epiſcopal Part of Church-Affairs, and the Church of Scotland got no Advantage by the Change. Both theſe two Kings were afraid of drawing their Swords againſt any foreign Power; and this abject Fear which render'd them contemptible to all Nations round them, is the pacifick Deportment ſo much declaim'd upon by ſuch Writers as the Archdeacon. They tell you you are in profound Peace, when the Laws of both Kingdoms are violated, and the beſt Men in both are either thrown into Goals, or driven from their Habitations into remote Baniſhment. No two Kings were ever ſtouter in their Attacks on the Britiſh Conſtitution: But what ſays Coke of one of them? King Charles proſpering, as he thought in his domeſtick War, having taken more Priſoners in it, I mean Members of Parliament and Hertfordſhire Conſtables, than his Father and he had done in all their Wars againſt France, Spain, and the Empire, for the Recovery of the Palatinate, was very unwilling to enter into a forcign, &c.

P. 290.

Echard then gives us what he calls a true Hiſtory of the Church of Scotland, much like the Truth of his other Hiſtory. It was govern'd firſt by Superintendents, and afterwards by Biſhops; but he does not ſay that thoſe Superintendents were ſubjected to the General Aſſembly of Presbyters: And he is no more true than he is in other Places, when he tells us thoſe Superintendents were remov'd to make way for Biſhops again; Epiſcopacy being never ſuffer'd in Scotland till ten Years after King James had conform'd to the Church of England. The Church of Scotland all this while exercis'd a compleat Presbyterial Government, and no other. There were exact regular Meetings of Kirk or Parochial Seſſions, Presbyteries, Synods, and General Aſſemblies; the Nobility upon all Occaſions ſign'd the Book of Polity, the Foundation of the Presbytery, and thoſe Miniſters who retain'd the Title of Biſhops, did not, as the Archdeacon affirms, govern the Kirk, having nothing left them but a miniſterial Authority, and were equally ſubjected to Presbytery, Synod, Aſſembly, &c. The Hiſtorian gives us a melancholy Inſtance of it in the Perſon of the titular Biſhop of Orkney, who, as a private Miniſter, was cenſur'd by the Aſſembly for ſolemnizing the adulterous Marriage of the Queen, King James's Mother, with Bothwel, for which they depriv'd him, and reſtor'd him to his Miniſtry afterwards upon his Humiliation. They were allow'd to be call'd Biſhops; but to uſe the

*A.D.*1633. Words of the Scots Hiſtorian, they were really only Superintendents, and not that neither very long, for the Aſſembly Anno 1574, voted the Biſhops to be only Paſtors of one Pariſh, and delated ſeveral of them for not preaching: They actually depos'd the Biſhop of Dunkeld, and delated the Biſhop of Glaſgow for the like Offence. The next Year the Aſſembly voted, That the Name of Biſhop is common to every one that hath a particular Flock, over which he hath a peculiar Charge to preach the Word and adminiſter the Sacraments. No Biſhop was to appoint Miniſters without the Conſent of the Flock, nor to ſuſpend other Miniſters without the Conſent of his Brethren. Such were the Biſhops in the Scots Kirk, and ſuch their Way of governing. They preach'd God's Word, adminiſter'd the Sacraments, and were called Biſhops ſometimes, and ſometimes Presbyters; as Tallents tells us after Binius the Biſhops of Rome or Popes were for 200 Years after Chriſt. Tho' Echard inſinuates that the Kirk Biſhops had as much Power as Spotſwood and Sharp uſurp'd afterwards in the Archbiſhoprick of St. Andrew's. The Archbiſhop of Glaſgow, the Biſhops of Dunkeld, Galloway, Brechin, Dumblain and the Iſles were of this very Aſſembly, and acknowledg'd they underſtood themſelves to be Biſhops in ſuch a Presbyterial Senſe only, for which they are cenſur'd by Archbiſhop Spotſwood. Two Years after, in 1577, the Aſſembly ordain'd that all Biſhops be call'd by their own Names; and the next Year they voted the very Name of Biſhop to be a Nuſance. If Echard's true Hiſtory is ſuch, what muſt his falſe be. He proceeds: In the Year 1580, Epiſcopacy was condemn'd as contrary to the Word of God, and Presbytery eſtabliſh'd by Tumult. There is ſomething elſe beſides Falſhood in this Aſſertion, which is ſo common in his other Hiſtories that I need not name it, and it breaks in too much upon Decency. The Preamble to the Act which paſs'd in 1580, ſhews it was not the Effect of Tumult; Foraſmuch as Epiſcopacy, &c. was brought in by the Folly and Corruption of Men's Inventions to the great Overthrow of the true Kirk, the whole Aſſembly in one Voice, after Liberty given to all Men to reaſon the Matter, none oppoſing themſelves in the Defence of the ſaid pretended Office, findeth and declareth the ſame unlawful, as being unſcriptural, and having no Warrant from the Word of God. In the Year 1592, ſpoken of by the Archdeacon, King James gave his Royal Aſſent to a Statute confirming the Privileges of the Kirk, their Aſſemblies, Synods and Presbyteries, by a very good Token, of which not a Syllable from the reverend Hiſtorian; That the Aſſembly then ſitting order'd a Deputation to the King, to admoniſh him, in the Name of the Eternal God, to have reſpect in time to the Eſtate of true Religion, to the many Murthers and Oppreſſions daily multiply'd thro' Impunity, and to diſcharge the kingly Office in both, as he will eſchew the fearful Challenge of God, and avert his Wrath from himſelf and the whole Land. Which Admonition, it is ſaid, the King never forgave them. Indeed he cou'd not but be much more taken with the Compliment of Archbiſhop Whitgift, that he had the Holy Spirit in him, than with ſuch homely Truth as the Scots Kirk told him, and conſequently like Whitgift's Church much better than that he was educated in. The Archdeacon continues his true Hiſtory thus: " King " James finding the increaſing Power of the Mi- " niſters and Preachers, which often overtopp'd " that of the Civil Magiſtracy, took Occaſion " and Advantage from ſome of their Exorbitan- " cies and Miſcarriages to reſtore Epiſcopacy in " the Nation by a Parliament, A. D. 1612". Had there been one word of Truth in this Paſſage beſides the Reſtoration of Biſhops, we wou'd have forgiven it. The firſt Exorbitance and Miſcarriage we meet with after the Statute for eſtabliſhing the Kirk, was an Act of the ſame Aſſembly, ordaining, That no Miniſter within this Realm utter from the Pulpit any raſh or irreverent Speeches againſt his Majeſty or his Council, or their Proceedings, under Pain of being depos'd. Which, ſays the Scots Hiſtorian, effectually clears them from the Charge of being mutinous, and of refuſing to ſubmit to Authority. Indeed the Synod of Fife did the next Year order a Faſt, for the Reaſons mention'd at large in Calderwood; and ſome of their Members were deputed to the King, to tell him that which his true Subjects think, the Words of the Deputation, touching his too much bearing with, favouring and countenancing Papiſts and Traytors, his Negligence in repreſſing Idolatry, &c. And to declare freely to his Majeſty the Reſolution of all godly and faithful Subjects, That they are ready to give their Lives rather than to ſuffer the ſame. Did Whitgift, Bancroft, Neile, Laud, Harſnet, Wren, Coſens, Mountague, and their Brethren of the ſame Stamp, talk ſo to him after he came to England? How can the Presbytery hope to continue in Scotland, when at the Inſtigation of thoſe Prelates he was about to extirpate it in England? Inſtead of the Archdeacon's Exorbitances and Miſcarriages read the Scots Hiſtorian. " In the next Year following, " and then after, the Miniſters ſtruggled with the " Defection of the Times, the refractory Diſpo- " ſition of the Prince, which the reverend Hiſto- " rian terms his Pacifick Deportment, and the " growing Inſolencies of the Courtiers, till they " were cruſh'd". The Miſcarriages and Exorbitances are all on the Court Side; and Echard beſpatters the Church of Scotland with them, to juſtify the Inſolencies of the Courtiers. It is not deny'd but the Miniſters had ſome Reaſons for their Admonitions. The King ſaid he wou'd not decline the Judgment of the Aſſembly, provided it was done privately. To which an old Presbyter, Andrew Melvin, reply'd bluntly, We cannot juſtify private Rebuke for open Offences. Some time after this his Majeſty and the Presbyters were in a manner reconcil'd. The King in a ſolemn Speech thank'd God that he was bred in that Kirk, the pureſt Kirk in the World; and ſaid thoſe bitter things againſt the Church of England which are repeated in the Introduction He took a ſoft Way to have his Ends of them for their Admoniſhments. He began with the poorer Miniſters, whom in my Author's Words he wheedled or bought off. He then eaſily got an Aſſembly to petition the Parliament in the Name of the Church, that ſome Commiſſioners from them might ſit and vote with that Repreſentative. The Presbyters greedily enough ſwallow'd this Bait. After which little Oppoſition was made to the Appellation that was to be given them, which cou'd not well be any other than that of Biſhop. But theſe Presbyters forming an Aſſembly at Dundee, it was not reckon'd legal, ſo many Presbyteries proteſting againſt it, and another Aſſembly met at Aberdeen; however, the former gain'd their Ends, the King ſupporting them; and an Act paſs'd three or four Years before he came to England, to admit the Kirk's Commiſſioners to ſit in Parliament as Biſhops. After which Epiſcopacy with the Dignities, Powers and Revenues arriv'd by ſeveral Gradations to the Pitch King James intended, to mortify the Presbytery for their Admonitions. The Scots Hiſtorian cloſes his true Hiſtory of this Matter thus: " I have been more " particular in this Part, as it relates to the Man- " ner how Epiſcopacy got at firſt Footing in the " Church of Scotland; that the Fraud, the Artifice " and hypocritical Fawnings, the arbitrary and " outrageous Dealings which were practis'd with " the Miniſters might appear, as alſo the Strug- " glings and Oppoſition it met with for ſo many " Years. The Time drew near that the King " was to receive an Addition of Glory, and be " called to a Kingdom infinitely more opulent,

In the mean time he dai- " ly ſpent the Hours in Conteſts with the Mini- " ſters, oppreſſing, impriſoning, removing, baniſh- " ing; ſo that he no ſooner was become a King " of an Epiſcopal Church, but as was always na- " turally the Spirit of Epiſcopacy in Scotland, he " became a Perſecutor: nay, a Perſecutor of that " very Church, which, as before is obſerv'd, he " had in the Face of the Aſſembly, with Eyes " and Hands lifted up to Heaven, ſolemnly prai- " ſed and bleſſed God for being born in it". Now Echard: He nominated thirteen new Biſhops for ſo many Epiſcopal Sees as had been in the Church in the Days of Popery; which Biſhops he alſo arm'd with the Power of an High Commiſſion, the better to cure the Spirit of the Presbyterians. He advanc'd towards an Uniformity with the Worſhip and Ceremonies in England. " This was the Time, in " the Words of the Scots Hiſtorian, when Mr John " Spotſwood, who was proſecuted even by the " King's Friends in the Church for having been " openly at Maſs in France, was protected by the " King from their Cenſure, and afterwards made " Archbiſhop of St. Andrew's". King James was ſo earneſt in advancing abſolute Power in Scotland, that he offended even his own Biſhops by propoſing in Parliament when he was at Edinburgh, A. D 1617. that whatever he himſelf did with the Advice of the Archbiſhops and Biſhops in the external Polity of the Church ſhou'd have the Force of an Eccleſiaſtical Law. The Miniſters ſign'd a Proteſtation againſt that notorious Invaſion of the Rights of the Kirk. Wherefore he reſolv'd to exerciſe that Power without the Ceremony of an Act. One of his wiſe Reaſons for it was, that King David gave Orders concerning Church Mat-

The " High Commiſſion was the higheſt Exerciſe of Ty- " ranny that was ever practis'd by any King in " Great Britain, ſince Laws and Conſtitutions " were allow'd to be the Rule of Government; " for it actually put the King in Poſſeſſion of the " Bodies and Goods of all his Subjects, and em-

" power'd him to uſe them as he pleas'd without " the ordinary Forms of Juſtice, and merely by " the Agency of the Clergy, making the Biſhops " Inſtruments of arbitrary Power, not only to de- " ſtroy the Liberties of the Church, but even of " the whole Country, Clergy and Laiety. There's " ſcarce any Kind of Cruelty, Injuſtice and Op- " preſſion to be nam'd in the World, which was " not practis'd on the Miniſters of the Church; " the Biſhop of St. Andrew's telling them at one " of his Meetings, He ſhou'd proceed to Sentence " without having Regard to Wives, Children or " Eſtate". When the Articles of Perth were brought into Parliament in the Year 1621. to be paſs'd into an Act, they met with great Oppoſition. But the King by the Management of the Members, ſays the ſame Author, and the Aſſiſtance of the Biſhops got a Majority to vote it. Many noble Lords declaring their Diſſent to it with much Earneſtneſs, as the Earl of Rothes, Earl of Montieth, Earl of Eglington, Earl of Linlithgow, Earl of Kintail, Lord Gray, Lord Roſs, Lord Yeſter, Lord Cathcart, Lord Couper, Lord Burlie, Lord Torpichen, Lord Balmerinoch, Lord Elphingſton, Lord Forbes. The Earl of Mortoun, the Earl of Buchan and the Lord Lauderdale ſtaid without the Parliament-Door, becauſe they wou'd not vote for it; and of the Commiſſioners for Shires and Burghs forty-four voted againſt it, beſides nine Lords and twenty-ſix Commiſſioners that were Neuters, and came not to the Houſe. So far was the Hierarchy from being the general Senſe of the Scots Nation, as the Archdeacon and other Eccleſiaſtical Writers wou'd make us believe. Upon King Charles's Acceſſion to the Throne, the Epiſcopal Party receiv'd all poſſible Encouragement. The Archbiſhop of St. Andrews was made Lord Chancellor of Scotland, and eight other Biſhops Privy-Counſellors, to the unſpeakable Diſcontent of the People, as well Nobility as Gentry and Populace. For tho' a long and cruel Perſecution had in ſome meaſure ſuppreſs'd that Spirit of Liberty which animated the Scots after the Reformation, yet the Diſguſt rais'd by the Tyranny of the High-Commiſſion Court lay hidden like latent Embers, and only wanted Wind to be blown into a Flame.

That Wind cou'd not be wanting when King Charles carry'd Laud with him to Edinburgh, there being a Kind of Fatality in all this Prince's Counſels leading to the Ruin that attended them. The Earls of Arundel, Northumberland, Holland, Pembroke, Southampton, and other Lords waited on his Majeſty to Scotland, where he was crown'd the 18th of June by Spotſwood Archbiſhop of St. Andrews, aſſiſted by the Biſhops of Roſſe and Murray. One muſt believe that Laud's Activity, ſo much applauded by Echard, appear'd here as well P. 297. as in other Places. Larrey ſpeaks thus of him: " The Archbiſhop of Glaſgow ought to have been " on the Right of the Archbiſhop of St. Andrews; " but Laud, who had the Direction of the Cere- " mony, ſeeing he was not in his Pontifical Robes " as the others were, being a Perſon who abhorr'd " Pomp, had the Boldneſs to pull him forcibly " from his Place, and to ſubſtitute the Biſhop of " Roſſe in his ſtead. To this outrageous Inſult " Laud added Words that were not leſs inſulting: " Are you a Churchman, and dare you appear here " without a Habit ſuitable to the Epiſcopal Digni- " ty and the Solemnity of this Day? The Scots ſaw " by this Action what was to be expected from " ſuch a Man, who was zealous for Epiſcopacy " even to Superſtition; but they knew him much " better ſoon after". Echard himſelf can't help ſpeaking ſome Truths on this Occaſion: "The Scots " look'd with an evil Eye on the Biſhop of Lon- " don, and with a worſe when they heard him " preach in the Royal Chapel chiefly on the Be- " nefit of Conformity, and the Reverence due to " Ceremonies. They grew more exaſperated when " the King during his Stay erected and endow'd " an Epiſcopal See at Edinburgh, and committed " the framing and compoſing a Liturgy for the " Church of Scotland to a ſelect Number of " Biſhops". Theſe ſeveral Steps were with great Indignation complain'd againſt. And Laud's Foot was viſible in every one of them, that Prelate haunting his Majeſty like his evil Genius.

The King in Scotland.

The Parliament which the King held at Edin- Scots Par- burgh granted him a Subſidy, and paſs'd ſeveral liament. Acts in a few Days; but warmly oppos'd two Bills which were brought to them relating to Eccleſiaſtical Affairs. " They thought, ſays Larrey, the " King's Zeal for Epiſcopacy was but an ill Omen, " and look'd like a melancholy Prelude to their " Diviſions. The firſt of the two Bills was for " revoking Alienations formerly made of Tithes and " other Eſtates of the Clergy". This Act was not conteſted ſo much as the ſecond concerning Eccleſiaſtical Habits, the Direction of which was to be

*A.D.*1633. left to his Majesty, and so the Surplice wou'd be impos'd on the Kirk, for which they had an Abhorrence. Larrey assures us the Presbyterians had the major Vote in this Parliament. And how wise were the Counsellors who put the King on such a Novelty at such a Juncture? His Majesty endeavour'd to intimidate the House by drawing a List of their Names out of his Bosom, and telling them he wou'd mark down those that were well or ill affected to him, and that he wou'd remember both. He was pleas'd to tell his Parliament in England, he scorn'd to threaten his Inferiors; but this Menace is no great Proof of it. However, many of the Members persisted strongly in their Opposition, and thirteen of the Lords spoke with as much Vehemence as the Commons. Some time after a Pamphlet appear'd, in which the Scots complain'd that there was an Infringement of their Laws and their Religion by the King's awing the Parliament with his Presence. The Pamphlet was written by one William Hagg who fled for it; but being found in the Custody of the Lord Balmerine, he was charg'd with it, try'd by his Peers for Treason in concealing it, and condemn'd to lose his Head; but, says Echard, he obtain'd a most gracious Pardon. I wonder he had not translated Salmonet: The King cou'd not resist the Mildness of his Nature, always delighting in Mercy, which he preferr'd to all his other Virtues; as appear'd by his putting this Lord in the last Hazard of Life for a little Pamphlet which had but too much Truth in it. Neither of these impartial Historians let us know how Balmerino came by this most gracious Pardon, as Mr. Ackerley does. The Scots in general associated to execute military Justice after the old Scotish Fashion by cutting to pieces the Judges, and by burning their Houses, if Balmerino was executed. Archbishop Spotswood was in so much haste to carry his Information against this Peer after the King to London, that he began his Journey on a Sunday. Indeed Salmonet the French Papist is a little fairer in this than the Archdeacon; for he gives us a Hint of the Scots Resentment at the Tryal of Lord Balmerine: The People got together at the Palace Gate, and threaten'd the Judges as they went in.

The Earls of Rothes, Cassils and Lothian; the Lords Lindsay, Torpichen, Sinclair, Couper, and four more enter'd their Dissent to the Habit Act. But the Majority being prepar'd to pass it, their Opposition had no other Effect than to shew the Court the good Reasons which ought to have hinder'd the bringing in the Bill. Rushworth tells us, 'twas observ'd that at the Dissolution of the Scots Parliament the King look'd on those Lords with an unfavourable Aspect. The Presbyterians presented a Petition to him complaining of the five Articles of Perth, which had occasion'd so great a Division in the Church, that the Episcopal Clergy were generally abandon'd by their Flocks. King Charles animated by Laud, they are Larrey's Words, press'd the Observance of those Articles, and the Presbyterians were obstinate in their Refusal. Salmonet informs us, that the Rumour of a Liturgy was already spread amongst the People, who were alarm'd at it, and disgusted at the making all the Bishops Privy-Counsellors. He errs in that, there were only eight of the thirteen Bishops made Lords of the Privy-Council. In this Ferment did the King leave his antient Kingdom, and every Step he took after his Return to England serv'd only to increase it.

P. 12.

No sooner was he return'd to Whitehall than he gave fresh Occasion of Disgust to both Kingdoms by advancing Dr. Laud to the Archbishoprick of Canterbury, vacant by the Death of the most Reverend, Learned and Pious Dr. Abbot. Laud had been twice offer'd a Cardinal's Cap: But Echard affirms, that upon his Refusal the Tempter left him for ever. One of the most flagrant Falsities in Story; for as I have observ'd twice elsewhere, the Lord Wiquefort informs us in his Treatise of the Ambassador and his Function, that he treated with Count Rosetti, the Popish Agent in England, for a Pension of 48000 Livres a Year; which if the Pope wou'd have settled upon him, he wou'd not only have accepted of the Cardinal's Cap, but have gone to Rome, and have dwelt with the Pope and his Cardinals as long as he liv'd. Larrey also takes notice of this Negotiation. We have already observ'd, that the Author of Clarendon's History represents good Archbishop Abbot as unfit for that high Station. The Reader is desir'd to compare it with what follows out of the French Historian: "While Abbot was alive "Laud observ'd some Measures: for tho' that Prelate was in Disgrace, he was never the less respected by the Church, by the Universities, and "the whole Kingdom. Tho' he was stripp'd of "Part of the Temporalties of his Bishoprick, and "deprived of the Functions; yet the Character of "so eminent a Post which he still held, and his "Learning and Integrity were Barriers which Arminianism durst not attempt to force". The Archdeacon enters again into Laud's Panegyrick, and with some Tautology repeats that "his Heart "was entirely set on the Advancement and Grandeur of the Church. He continu'd Archbishop "in great Splendor seven Years. His Proceedings "were with the utmost Vigor and Authority. He "brought the Grandeur and Advancement of the "Church of England to that Height, that it shew'd "rather a Rivalship than a Resemblance of the "Church of Rome". What an Applause is there, to rival the Idolatry of the Roman Worship, and the Tyranny of its Hierarchy. "In this and all his "great and pious Designs, he had the hearty Concurrence of the King, and caus'd his Friend "Dr. William Juxon to be made Bishop of London and Lord High Treasurer, and many of "the inferior Clergy to be advanc'd into Civil "Offices; Doctors and Ministers of Parishes were "every where made Justices of the Peace. As "he lov'd Pomp and Ceremony, he promoted "Beauty and Regularity. He caus'd the Communion Table to be plac'd Altar-wise, and to "be rail'd in. He was strict about the Surplice "and Vestments. His Greatness was too big for "Opposition. He was a vigorous Actor, and had "a singular Influence at the Council Table, in the "Star-Chamber and High-Commission Courts, so "many Channels to convey the Royal Authority "to Subjects for the Good of them and the Publick. But what gave the greatest and most "Dislike to him, was that he wou'd not suffer "the common Vices of great Men to go unpunish'd". He design'd the Discipline of the Church shou'd be felt, as it was with a Vengeance while 'twas subjected to his Tyranny. This is scarce a half Length of Laud's Picture, as the Archdeacon has drawn it; but it contains enough to shew the Painter might have done it winking, as well as with his Eyes open according to real Likeness. I will not copy much after Prynne, because what he says of this Prelate may be thought to be sharpen'd by the Sharpness of his Sufferings owing to Laud's Revenge and Cruelty. I will now content myself with what a foreign Author writes of him upon his Advancement to the Archiepiscopal Dignity. "Historians "say this new Phaeton's Head was turn'd with "Advancement, and that he did not fall from "the Height which Fortune rais'd him to, till "after he had set England, Scotland, and Ireland in a Flame. As Primate of England he "undertook to govern the Church; nor had he "less Power in Scotland, supporting the Bishop of "St. Andrews and the Bishop of Dunblaine there. "In Ireland the Lord Strafford did whatever this "Prelate pleas'd, so that his Spirit spreading thro' "the

The High-Commiſſion Court was "eſtabliſh'd in his Favour, and made up of Ec-"cleſiaſticks and Seculars devoted to him: The "Star-Chamber was not leſs on his Side, and no-"thing that reſiſted him went unpuniſh'd, &c." I coud fill a large Volume with ſuch like Hiſtory of Laud, but I am and ſhall be tir'd with writing ſo much of him, which his thruſting himſelf into almoſt all Sorts of Buſineſs, renders unavoidable.

Church of Scotland. As ſoon as the King was return'd from Scotland, he ſends back Articles of Orders to be obſerv'd by the Dean of the Chapel-Royal in the Palace of Holy-Rood at Edinburgh; for Prayers to be perform'd there twice a Day after the Engliſh Manner; that the Communion be receiv'd monthly on the Knees; and that he who officiates on Sundays and Holidays, do it in a Surplice; which Orders the Biſhop of Dumblaine then Dean durſt not obey for fear of exaſperating the People. Biſhop Laud had a Warrant from the King to correſpond with that Dean, to whom he wrote ſeveral Letters to promote the Deſign, and to inform the King who comply'd with his Pleaſure, and who did not. The Biſhop of Dumblaine anſwer'd, He did what he cou'd, but the Times requir'd Patience. A plain Proof that Laud's Innovations in the Church of Scotland, was in direct Oppoſition to their Religion and the general Inclinations of the People; which if he knew it, was to ſacrifice a kind Maſter to his own Bigottry and Obſtinacy; and if he did not know it, he was very unfit to ſit in the Seat of Council.

Ruſhw.

On the 13th of October the Queen was brought to-bed of her ſecond Son James, who was created Duke of York, and in time ſucceeded his Father in his Kingdom and his Misfortunes. The Tyranny of the Star-Chamber Court, and the ſlaviſh Submiſſion of the Judges who ſate there to the Will of Laud, is no where better ſeen than in the Tryal of William Prynne Eſq; of Lincoln's-Inn, for writing a Book againſt the Stage and the lewd Practices of the Players, which Jeremy Collier, a Prieſt of the ſame Principles with Laud, expos'd ſo ſucceſsfully ſome Years ago: But it is not at all ſtrange that a Biſhop ſuch as Laud, and a Miniſter of State ſuch as Cottington, &c. who are about an Edict enjoining the Profanation of the Lord's-Day, ſhou'd worry a learned Gentleman in a more barbarous Manner than ever was baited Bull, for writing againſt obſcene Plays and Players. The Book entitl'd Hiſtriomaſtrix, was publiſh'd ſix Weeks before the Queen acted a Paſtoral at Somerſet-Houſe. The Words excepted againſt were only in the Index, Women Actors notorious Whores; which Place the Prelates and their Inſtruments, in the Words of Whitlocke, ſhew'd to the King, and inform'd both King and Queen, that his Book was purpoſely written againſt her and her Paſtoral; which the Reader will obſerve to be the moſt brazen Falſhood that harden'd Fronts cou'd be guilty of, the Book being publiſh'd ſix Weeks before the Paſtoral was acted. The Lord Commiſſioner Whitlocke proceeds, Yet the King and Queen tho' thus exaſperated, did nothing againſt Prynne till Laud ſet Dr. Heylin to work, who bore Prynne a great Malice for confuting ſome of his Doctrines, to peruſe the Hiſtriomaſtrix, and to collect the ſcandalous Points out of them; which Heylin did, tho' as Prynne affirms, not at all warranted by the Text of his Book. The Archbiſhop went with theſe Notes to Mr. Attorney Noy on a Sabbath-day Morning, and charg'd him to proſecute Prynne, whom in the mean Time the Biſhops and Lords in the Star-Chamber ſent cloſe Priſoner to the Tower. The Lord-Commiſſioner informs us why theſe Biſhops order'd this inhuman Proſecution, Prynne had anger'd them by ſome Books of his againſt Arminianiſm and the Juriſdiction of Biſhops, and by ſome Prohibitions which he had mov'd. Beſides that the Book Hiſtriomaſtrix was publiſh'd ſix Weeks before the Queen's Paſtoral was acted; it contain'd a thouſand Pages, and muſt be written many Months if not Years, and therefore cou'd not be intended againſt the Queen, as the Lord Commiſſioner tells us the Biſhops and their Inſtruments repreſented, and that it was purpoſely written againſt her Paſtoral, which cou'd not be in Being when Mr. Prynne wrote his Book. There is ſo good Authority for what we ſay of the Proceedings of theſe Biſhops and their Inſtruments, that I hope the Reader will ſpare a little Attention here: For this Accuſation of theirs being notoriouſly falſe, the Proſecution againſt Mr. Prynne, and the unjuſt and barbarous Uſage he met with from Laud and his Brethren, ought always to be remember'd when Clarendon and Echard are declaiming on their Piety; for nothing can be plainer than that this bloody Act was founded on the greateſt Injuſtice which cou'd be practis'd in a Court; and that Laud's Activity was never more ſignal than in this impious Proceſs. Mr. Hudſon a Lawyer of Gray's-Inn, who open'd the Information againſt Mr. Prynne, told the Judges very frankly he was proſecuted becauſe he wrote againſt Plays, and the King, Queen, and Lords of the Council delighted in them; which the Lawyer aggravated by adding, that he alſo wrote againſt Maypoles. Noy that Grand Apoſtate, as the Lord Digby call'd him, charg'd Mr. Prynne with writing againſt St. George for England. Wou'd one think ſuch Stuff as this ſhou'd paſs in a Court where Perſons of Rank at leaſt were Judges, whatever their other Qualifications might be? Noy added, that Prynne had call'd Stage-Players Rogues, and had fallen upon Men's Hair, Women's Hair, Biſhops, and Bonefires. They are his very Words, and the Caſe is at large in Ruſhworth, to which I refer. The Reader will find the moſt eminent Lawyers in England, as Mr. Atkins afterwards Judge Atkins, Mr. Holburn afterwards Sir Robert Holburn, Mr. Jenkins, Mr. Hern, pleading for Mr. Prynne their Brother Lawyer with equal Reaſon and Sobriety; and both Lawyers and Judges againſt him foaming at the Mouth with Virulence in Defence of a Parcel of deſpicable Wretches whom the Law terms Vagabonds. For as to harmleſs Interludes and Paſtorals repreſented by young People of Quality, Prynne diſown'd any Intention againſt Actors or Spectators; and Mr. Atkins explain'd the real Meaning of the Book in opening Mr. Prynne's Anſwer. "That the ſaid Prynne taking into his "ſerious Conſideration the frequent Reſort of ſun-"dry ſorts of People to common Stage-Plays a-"bout the City of London, and having read di-"vers Councils, Laws, and Statutes of this and o-"ther Realms againſt the frequenting common "Stage-Plays, and the Judgment and Opinion of "ſeveral Divines, and other antient Authors and "divers Writers, allow'd by publick Authority, "and his own Judgment, running with thoſe, not "intending to have relation to the King, Queen, "State, or Government, or your Lordſhips, did "about ſeven Years ago compile this Book enti-"tled Hiſtriomaſtrix." When thoſe righteous Judges the Star-Chamber Lords came to paſs their Cenſure, they all made Speeches, there being no more Shame to ſpeak than to judge in ſuch a Cauſe. The Lord Cottington ſpoke firſt as well as he cou'd,

Mr. Prynne's Sufferings.

*A.D.*1633. Rushw. 231. and among other such Passages said, Prynne in writing it was assisted immediately by the Devil, or rather he assisted the Devil; so he condemn'd him to pay the King 5000 Pounds, to stand twice in the Pillory, to have both his Ears cut off, one in each Place, and to be perpetually imprison'd. He did not forget to have him degraded at Oxford; upon which the pious, meek, and charitable Archbishop of Canterbury Dr. Laud, who sate with remarkable Pleasure among Mr. Prynne's never to be forgetten Judges, cry'd out, I am sorry Oxford ever bred such an evil Member. Thus according to the Custom of the Star-Chamber, the Chief-Justice Richardson spoke before Sentence, and said he thought the Devil deserv'd to be punish'd for the Book as well as Prynne. What Mouths they had? His own Words are, I wou'd to God in Heaven the Devil, and all else that had their Heads and Hands in the Book were, &c. For I think they are all ill Willers to the State, and deserve severe Punishments as well as Mr. Prynne doth. The Nonsense shocks one as well as the Injustice; and when by his Sentence he had shut up Prynne in Goal for Life, without Pen, Ink, and Paper, he added, yet let him have some pretty Prayer-Book, that was all they knew of Religion, to pray to God to forgive him his Sins. Richardson and other such Judges, had no Notion of praying without Book. The Earl of Dorset said, The Devil had put Spectacles on Prynne's Nose. Did not Tully, Hortensius, and the Senators of old Rome talk thus? The Earl concluded with an Encomium on his Popish bigotted Queen; Were all such Saints as she, I think the Roman Church were not to be condemn'd. For this Saintship I refer the Reader to Sir Edward Peyton, whose Words I do not make use of. It is not that I do not believe them, but to keep my History as clean as possible. The End of the Earl's Speech was, I declare you to be a Schism-Maker, a Sedition Sower, a Wolf in Sheep's Clothing; and then for a Name in Latin, Omnium malorum nequissimum. I fine you 10000 Pounds; then his Lordship gives his Reason for it, which is more than you are worth; I will not set you at Liberty no more than a mad Dog; I condemn you to perpetual Imprisonment, as those Monsters that are no longer fit to live among Men. His Lordship's odoriferous Breath holds out still longer; Now for corporal Punishment, my Lords, whether I shou'd burn him in the Forehead and slit him in the Nose? The Reader will remember that all this courtly Language and human Sentiments, are address'd to a Gentleman of greater Endowments both of Learning and Parts than his Judges, especially his Lordship, who goes on sweetly, I shou'd be loath he shou'd escape with his Ears, for he may get a Peruke and so hide them, or force his Conscience to make use of his unlovely Love-locks on both Sides; therefore I wou'd have him branded on the Forehead, slit in the Nose, and his Ears cropt too. Nay, after the Execution of the execrable Sentence, which wou'd hardly bear reading, but that we shall see these unrighteous Judges severely accounting for it even in this World, in their Persons and Estates, Noy in a Speech to this hated Court said, He is mercifully dealt withal, he has been in Prison, he has been degraded, he has had his Ears cut off, and undergone all Shame. Such were the Judgments of the Star-Chamber, which, according to Echard, was the Bulwark for the Liberty of the subject; and he regrets the Loss of it afterwards, when for this and other the like sanguinary, unjust, and unheard of Proceedings it was abolish'd. "The Star-Chamber, says Larrey, did "not contribute less than the High-Commission Court "to carry on Laud's Designs, who, as it is said of "Wolsey, had a Desire to be stil'd the Transalpine "Pope." Father Orleans owns he was suspected to have had such an Ambition; yet the Author of the History of the Rebellion is positive that he was nothing ally'd to Popery. How he was ally'd to Injustice and Cruelty, we have seen in Mr. Prynne's infamous Prosecution; and how to Profaneness, we shall see by his procuring a new Book of Sports to profane the Lord's-Day. *A.D.*1633.

Divine Cathol. 68, 69.

P. 507.

A French Popish Author speaking of Charles I. says, That like his Father he lov'd to retire from Error, witness his Endeavours to compromise the two Religions, ours and his own: He had the Archbishop of Canterbury Laud always with him, who being in his Heart a good Catholick, inspir'd the King his Master with a strong Desire to re-establish the Liturgy in Scotland, believing that if he cou'd but once gain that Point, there wou'd then be so little Difference between the orthodox Religion Popery and theirs, that it wou'd be easy to lead the King into it by Degrees. The Archbishop advis'd him to begin with Scotland, as the fartherest from the Heart of his Kingdom, telling him that a Commotion there wou'd not be so much to be fear'd. Of this more hereafter; but what we have taken out of the French Papist's Book, proves the Falsity of the Assertion in Clarendon's History, that Laud was nothing ally'd to Popery. It proves that he was a very good Papist in his Heart, and that he excited the King to impose the Common-Prayer Book on the Scots, which was the beginning of the Civil Wars. Thus the Light at Noon-day is not more apparent, than that this domineering Prelate was the Cause of those ruinous and sanguinary Wars that ensu'd between this Prince and his People. M.M. 195.

A Proclamation for Sports and Pastimes on the Sabbath-day, had been publish'd in King James's Reign, and there was no better Reason for publishing it again now, than that it was generally detested by the People, who every where trembled to see Sabbath-breaking enjoin'd by an Edict. Larrey writes of it thus, Neither King James's Authority, nor the Charms which Pleasure always carries along with it, cou'd prevail with the People, who look'd upon the Day of Rest to be profan'd. Thus his Edict had more Persons against it than for it, and consequently was but indifferently put in Execution; but nevertheless his Successor had a mind to revive it; and he was worse obey'd than King James. He added a new Decree to his Proclamation, which was more odious than the former. And it is observable that Laud refin'd upon all the extraordinary illegal Acts of Government in the former Administration. Dr. Fuller informs us, the Archbishop was charg'd with not only reviving but enlarging the Book of Sports. He adds, in the Language of a true Protestant Doctor of the Church of England, "Many moderate Men are of Opi- "nion, that this Abuse of the Lord's-Day was a "principal Procurer of God's Anger since poured "out on this Land in a long and bloody Civil "War." One of the best Reasons given by King James for commanding his Subjects to commit this Sin was, that for want of Wrestling, Cudgel-Playing, and the like, on Sabbath-Days, they were render'd unfit for his Wars. 'Tis Heylin who says it, tho' his Brother Echard does not think there was any thing military in it, but that Drinking, Gaming, and Dancing on the Sabbath-Day, was commanded with a pious Intention. Book of Sports. P. 306. P. 147. Obs. L'estr. p. 113.

The Custom of Revels, Wakes, and other Parish Festivals, was at that Time grown to a great Enormity. Drunkenness, Lewdness, and Riot, were but the least Part of it; Fighting and Blood generally accompany'd it; no County in England was then, and is now more debauch'd and disturb'd by Revels and Clerks Ales than that of Somerset; and it was so scandalous even in Queen Elizabeth's Reign, that there was this Order made against it at the Sessions held at Bridgwater the 10th of September 1593. At that time twelve-month there was a ſecond Order made, That no Church-Ales be admitted in any Part of this Shire. It was ſign'd by the Juſtices at Bridgwater the 28th of September 1595. John Popham who was alſo Lord-Chief-Juſtice of England, Sir George Sydenham, George Speke Eſq; Alexander Colles Eſq; Alexander Popham Eſq; Sir Edward Hext, Sir Henry Berkley, Henry Walrond Eſq; John Fraunces Eſq; John Lancaſter Eſq; Thomas Phillips Eſq;

In March 1627, Sir John Denham one of the Barons of the Exchequer, being then in Somerſetſhire on the Weſtern Circuit, had a Petition deliver'd him againſt Revels and Church-Ales by the following Miniſters, Mr. Adam Abraham, Mr. William Gyllet, Mr. Ralph Turner, Mr. John Ford, Mr. John Fathers, Mr. George Drake; and the Baron iſſu'd an Order accordingly. Theſe Orders were this Year reviv'd by Judge Richardſon who went the Weſtern Circuit for Lent-Aſſize, at the Requeſt of the Juſtices, without the Conſent of Dr. Pierce Biſhop of Bath and Wells, who immediately gave his Patron Laud notice of it, and he immediately complain'd to the King. He alſo wrote to Pierce to know whether thoſe riotous Meetings might not be kept with Decency and Sobriety. Biſhop Pierce's Anſwer was, that if the Order of the Judges againſt Revels was revok'd, it wou'd be acceptable to the Gentry; which is ſo directly contrary to the Truth, that one cou'd not believe a Clergyman was guilty of it, if the Truth was not before us. It was at the earneſt Requeſt of the Gentlemen of Somerſetſhire, that the Judges Richardſon and Denham, iſſu'd their Orders to Lawrence Muſgrave and all the Conſtables in that large County, to hinder ſuch unlawful Riots and Revels, thoſe Gentlemen giving for Reaſon at the Aſſizes, "That "many Perſons had been indicted for murdering "Baſtards begotten at Revels, and for other grand "Diſorders occaſion'd by thoſe intemperate Meet-"ings;" of which Dr. Pierce ſays not a Syllable in his Letter to his Patron the Archbiſhop; and what he ſaid of the Gentry, is ſo far from being true, that when Judge Richardſon came their Circuit again the next Year, they deſir'd him to repeat that Order, and he puniſh'd ſome Perſons for the Breach of it; which, and his requiring the Order to be read in Churches, irritated Archbiſhop Laud beyond Meaſure; and he complain'd of him again to the King, who now was oblig'd to concern himſelf in this unworthy Buſineſs, and Richardſon was ſummon'd to appear before the Council, where his Majeſty commanded him to reverſe the Order at the next Aſſizes, as he wou'd anſwer the contrary at his Peril; which he did, but in the following Terms of his Charge; I at your Requeſt, together with my Brother Denham, have made a very good Order for ſuppreſſing unruly Wakes and Revels, wherein I thought I had done God, the King, and the Country good Service; but ſome ill-affected Perſons, Biſhop Laud and Biſhop Pierce, have miſinform'd his Majeſty concerning this Order, who has given me an expreſs Command to reverſe it, which I conceive is hardly in my Power to do, becauſe it was no Order made by myſelf, but by the joint Conſent of the whole Bench, and a mere Confirmation and Enlargement of divers Orders made by the Judges and Juſtices in this Circuit, in Queen Elizabeth's, King James's, and King Charles's Reigns, before ever I came into theſe Parts. He then produc'd the Precedents as we have inſerted them, and added, But being commanded to reverſe the Order, I do as much as in me lies revoke it; yet I doubt not if the Juſtices of the Peace will truly inform his Majeſty of the Grounds of the former Order, and of the great Diſorders occaſion'd by Wakes and Church-Ales, his Majeſty will give Order to revive it: Upon which all the Juſtices there preſent, and it was a numerous Bench, drew up ſuch a Petition, that they might have Favour and Allowance to ſuppreſs all unlawful Aſſemblies of Church-Ales, Clerk-Ales, Bid-Ales, and to puniſh all Diſorders then uſually committed; and giving their Reaſon, For that ſince the Rumour of the revoking former Orders, The Profanation of the Lord's-Day, riotous Tippling, Contempt of Authority, Quarrels, Murders, have increas'd, &c. This Petition was ſign'd by John Lord Fawlet, Sir William Portman, Sir John Stawel, Sir Ralph Hopton, Sir Francis Popham, Sir Edward Rodney, Sir Francis Dodington, Sir John Horner, John Harrington Eſq; George Speke Eſq; William Capell Eſq; Edward Pawlet Eſq; John Windham Eſq; William Baſſet Eſq; Robert Hopton Eſq; Thomas Lutterel Eſq; William Fraunces Eſq; Robert Cuffe Eſq; Richard Cole Eſq; William Walrond Eſq; Gerrard Wood Eſq; Anthony Stocker Eſq; William Every Eſq; George Pawlett Eſq; John Symes Eſq; Men, ſays Fuller, who in Birth, Brains, Spirit, and Eſtate, were inferior to no County in England. John Harrington Eſq; Cuſtos Rotulorum of the County, was directed to carry this Petition to their Lord-Lieutenant the Earl of Pembroke, and deſire him to deliver it to the King. Biſhop Pierce gives the Archbiſhop quick Information of what was coming, and the Earl of Pembroke happening to be out of Town, Laud haſtens the Publication of the ſecond Book of Sports, for which he wrote this Warrant with his own Hand, to be ſign'd by his Majeſty, to juſtify himſelf if he ſhou'd be queſtion'd. *A.D.*1633.

CHARLES R.

CAnterbury, "See that our Declaration concern- "ing Recreations on the Lord's-Day after Even-
"ing-Prayer be printed."

After the publiſhing of this Declaration, the Lord Chief-Juſtice Richardſon returning from his laſt Weſtern Circuit, was again ſummon'd before the King and Council for not revoking his Order about Revels as far as in him lay; where he was ſo reprimanded by the Archbiſhop, that when he came from the Board, the Earl of Dorſet meeting him with Tears in his Eyes, ask'd how he did? Judge Richardſon reply'd, Very ill, my Lord, for I am like to be choak'd with the Archbiſhop's Lawn Sleeves. And for this Cauſe alone he was by Laud's Means, to his great Grief and Loſs, put from riding the Weſtern, and forc'd to go the Eſſex Circuit, reputed the meaneſt of all others, and which no Juſtice but the puny Judge or Serjeant us'd to ride. I hope none will after this deny that the whole Guilt of the Sin of profaning the Sabbath by an Edict, lies at Laud's Door. What a Tool Pierce was to him, appears ſufficiently in the above-mention'd Letter written in anſwer to Laud, wherein he further tells him, that by Information of ſeventy-two Prieſts of his Dioceſe, he found that the Churches had been better frequented ſince the People were commanded to play upon Sundays: That they had not heard of any Diſorders at Revels; that they are of Opinion to keep Revels for a Memorial of the Dedications of their ſeveral Churches, for the civilizing of the People, for compoſing of Differences, and for many other Reaſons; which I myſelf who write this Hiſtory in this very County, and have known the wicked Cuſtoms of theſe Revels above forty Years, do know to be every Word falſe in Fact at leaſt: Yet Biſhop Pierce ſays he examin'd his ſeventy-two Prieſts apart, and they agreeing all in their Repreſentation of the Purity and Convenience of Revels, he cannot help liking his ſeventy-two to the Septuagint, or ſeventy-two Interpreters who agreed ſo ſoon in the Tranſlation of the Old Teſtament, ſuch Heads had they, and ſuch Hearts in theſe felicitous Times. But we that believe no more of his ſeventy-two Interpreters, than we do of his ſeventy-two Parſons, cannot be out of Humour at Sabbath-breaking Laud's acting.

See Dr. Prideaux.

*A.D.*1633. meeting with a Compoſition of ſo much Simplicity and Inſincerity.

One of the worſt Effects of the Edict for Sabbath-breaking, was the ſuſpending a great Number of religious and worthy Divines by the Proſecutions of Laud and his Brethren in the Spiritual Courts, for not reading that profane Edict in ſacred Places. Wren Biſhop of Norwich, and Pierce juſt mention'd, were the moſt active in promoting this Sabbath-breaking. William Lilly, who was the Top-Aſtrologer of his Time, contemporary with theſe Things, writes thus of them, of this Wren in particular: "There was alſo one Wren "Biſhop of Norwich, born in London, a Fellow, "whoſe Father ſold Babies and ſuch Pedlary Ware "in Cheapſide. The Conjurer goes on in the ſame "blunt Manner. This Fellow very peremptorily "one Day, as he ſate in Judicature in the High-"Commiſſion Court, ſaid openly, He hop'd to live "to ſee the Time when a Maſter of Arts, or a Mi-"niſter, ſhall be as good a Man as any Jack Gen-"tleman in England. And verily the Pride of "this ſawcy Citizen's Son, hath been one main "Cauſe of the Ruin of the Clergy. Concerning "this Wren, I know Canterbury ſaid of him, The "raſh and unwarrantable Proceedings of Wren "will undo the Clergy. Upon his plaguing and "puniſhing many godly Clothiers in the Counties "of Norfolk and Suffolk, they were enforc'd to "leave their Native Country, and betake them-"ſelves and Families into the United-Provinces, "where they have taught the Dutch the Art and "Manufacture of Cloathing, even to the utter "Impoveriſhment of this whole Nation; and "yet this wretched Wren lives, &c." The great Body of the Proteſtant Clergy of the Church of England, Biſhops and their Inferiors, abhor'd the Impiety of Sabbath-breaking; many of them bore their Teſtimony againſt it. A Weſtern Biſhop, probably pious Biſhop Hall of Exeter, being preſs'd to return the Names of ſuch Clergymen as refus'd to read the Declaration, deny'd it utterly, ſaying, I will never turn Accuſer of my Brethren, there be enough in the World to do that Office. Beſides the Impiety of this Declaration, there was ſomething ſo monſtrous in it, that 'tis taken notice of by Foreigners: There is ſomething very whimſical and extraordinary to be obſerved in this Affair, to ſee the Court and the Church of England govern'd by her Prelates, to be for Dances and Feſtivals, and the People for whom thoſe Feaſts were inſtituted to be againſt them, as contrary to the Purity of the Reformation.

Biſhop Wren's Arrogance.

Larrey, p. 307.

It was not in Somerſetſhire only that Laud buſy'd himſelf in promoting the Profanation of the Lord's-Day, he quarrell'd with Sir Nicholas Rainton Lord-Mayor of London, for prohibiting an Apple-Woman to ſell Apples on the Sabbath near St. Paul's-Church, and with the Lord-Mayor Dean for ſhutting up Taverns, Alehouſes, Brandy-Shops, &c.

A Maſque.

The Gentlemen of the Inns of Court paid at this Time a very coſtly and ſplendid Compliment to the King and Queen, in the moſt famous Maſque that ever was ſeen; which is the more worthy Remembrance, for that Mr. Selden and Mr. Whitlocke were two of the Managers of it. The Shew, the Muſick, the Dancing, were all incomparable; the Queen danc'd in Perſon, and it is hinted by ſome Hiſtorians, that theſe Societies of Lawyers put themſelves to 21000 Pounds Charge, purely to take off the Prejudice which the Writings of their Brother Prynne might have given the Court againſt their Profeſſion.

Went-worth.

Sir David Fowles of Yorkſhire having offended the Lord Wentworth by obſtructing his raiſing Money in that County on the Pretence of Knighthood, was proſecuted in the Star-Chamber, fin'd 5000 Pounds to the King, and 3000 Pounds to the Lord Wentworth. Sir Thomas Layton High-Sheriff of Yorkſhire gave Evidence that Wentworth ſaid at their Aſſizes, The King's Little-Finger ſhall be heavier than the Loins of the Law; but it was not regarded. On the contrary, the Court of Star-Chamber flatter'd him in their Decree againſt Sir David Fowles as a modern Dedicator does his Patron in the Epiſtle. *A.D.*1633. Ruſhw. p. 220.

During the Impriſonment of Mr. Prynne, Dr. Baſtwick was brought into the High-Commiſſion Court for a Book entitl'd Elenchus Papiſmi & Flagellum Epiſcoporum Latialium, in Anſwer to one Short a Papiſt, who maintain'd the Pope's Supremacy, the Maſs, and Popery. Dr. Baſtwick in his Epiſtle dedicatory, declar'd he intended nothing againſt our Biſhops but againſt thoſe of Rome, yet he was ſentenc'd in 1000 Pounds Fine, to be excommunicated, to be debarr'd his Practice, and impriſon'd: Theſe Men will never be ſatisfy'd with Excommunication, without ſome Lay Severities, as Money, Goal, Pillory, &c. Whitlocke informs us the Doctor was ſo barbarouſly us'd for maintaining the King's Prerogative againſt Papacy; "On "the other Part, continues he, one who was a "fierce Papiſt, named Chowney, wrote a Book of "the Popiſh Religion and the Church of Rome, a-"verring it to be the true Church. The Book "was dedicated to, and patroniz'd by the Arch-"biſhop of Canterbury, ſo far was Chowney from "being puniſh'd and queſtion'd. In the Cenſure "of Dr. Baſtwick, all the Biſhops deny'd openly "that they held their Juriſdiction as Biſhops from "the King, for which perhaps they might have "been cenſur'd themſelves in Henry the IId or "Edward the IIId's Time. They affirm'd they "had their Juriſdiction from God only; which "Denial of the Supremacy of the King under "God, Henry VIII. wou'd have taken ill, and it "may be have confuted them by his kingly Ar-"guments and Regia Manu. The Archbiſhop "countenanc'd this Book of Chowney, That the "Romiſh Church err'd not in Fundamentals." Whitlocke adds, Somewhat was noted to paſs from him and other Biſhops in defaming the Holy Scriptures. The Reader may well be tir'd with ſuch Hiſtory as this is, where the Facts are ſo poor, and at the ſame time ſo diſagreeable. Nothing of greater Importance can be expected from a Government under the Influence of ſo furious and ſo imperious a Prelate as Laud, who has nothing in his Head or Heart but his own Grandeur and the Dominion of the Church. "He eagerly apply'd himſelf, ſays "Larrey, to render his Party and himſelf at their "Head triumphant. He had taken Care to be "inveſted with the King's Authority, and wou'd "ſcarce ſuffer his Majeſty to interfere with him "in his Viſitations. As preſumptuous as Wolſey, "and uſing the ſame Authority in England as "Richlieu did in France; nevertheleſs there was a "vaſt Difference between them, Richlieu and Laud. "The Cardinal, as much a Cardinal as he was, "endeavour'd all he cou'd to leſſen the unlawful "Power of the Pope. On the contrary Laud pro-"cur'd at leaſt indirectly, the reſtoring it in the "Church of England. The Cardinal made his "Maſter triumphant both at Land and Sea, but "Laud made his to loſe his Empire over the one, "and the Glory which his Predeceſſors had gain'd "on the other." As directly oppoſite to this as Falſhood is to Truth, is the Lord Clarendon's telling us, The Reputation of the Greatneſs and Power of the King, was much more with foreign Princes than any one of his Progenitors. After which I think there is no need of bringing Proofs of the Falſities and Miſrepreſentations in that Hiſtory or the Archdeacon's, which is a vile Copy of it, and that too of the worſt Parts of it.

Archbiſhop Laud began the next Year with increaſing the Odium againſt him, as well on account of his Pride and Haughtineſs, as of the Innovations he introduc'd in the Churches and Schools. In his Viſitation of the Churches he ſignaliz'd

*A.D.*1634.

Larrey, p. 311.

*A.D.*1634. ſignaliz'd his Zeal by erecting and adorning Altars for the Communion, in ordering the Sacrament to be receiv'd kneeling, the ſacerdotal Habits to be always worn in Divine Service, and the Epiſcopal Liturgy to be in uſe every where, "That, ſays "Larrey, all Puritans, as he injuriouſly ſtil'd the Laud's Innovations. "Presbyterians, and all Nonconformiſts, ſhou'd be "diſpoſſes'd of their Livings, from whom with "the Honour of their Miniſtry, he likewiſe took "away their Means of ſubſiſting; there was no "Way left for them but to ſubmit, being reduc'd "to the Extremity either of ſtarving or renoun-"cing Presbytery. The greateſt Part refus'd to "obey, alledging the Ceremonies were ſuperſti-"tious and idolatrous."

Dutch and French Churches, However, this did not ſatisfy Archbiſhop Laud, but contrary to Juſtice, Reaſon, Compact, and the Rights of the Commercial World, he reſolv'd the Dutch and French Churches ſhou'd feel the Severity of his Diſcipline as well as the Puritan. In his Metropolitan Viſitation he ſummon'd the Miniſters of the French and Dutch Churches which were ſettled here in the Reign of Edward VI. and Queen Elizabeth, to appear before his Vicar-General, by whom all Dutch and French Proteſtants, who were born in England, were enjoin'd to conform to Laud's Church-Service and Ceremonies. The Fathers of theſe French and Dutch Proteſtants, had been driven from the Netherlands and France by terrible Perſecutions, and the Liberties King Edward and Q. Elizabeth grantedthem, had been confirm'd by K. James and by this King's Royal Word. Wren Biſhop of Norwich before-mention'd, one of Laud's Inſtruments, rejected the Petition of the Dutch and French Congregations at Norwich, where they ſettled at firſt, and ſet up the Woolen Manufactures, which have been and is of inconceiveable Advantage to the Nation. Laud values not that a Ruſh, if his Eccleſiaſtical Dominion is in the leaſt leſſen'd. He threaten'd, in caſe they did not ſubmit, he wou'd proceed againſt them according to the Laws and Canons of his Church. There were Congregations of theſe Proteſtants at Ipſwich alſo, then one of the moſt trading and flouriſhing Towns in England; but Laud's Threats ſo terrify'd thoſe induſtrious People, that thouſands of Families were frighted out of Norfolk aud Suffolk. A hundred and forty of the principal Manufacturers who ſupply'd Hamburgh and all the Countries within the Sound, fled to the United Provinces from the Cruelties of the Spiritual Courts, and ſet up the ſame Manufactures there, which the Dutch knew not before, and have ever ſince carry'd on that Trade to our unſpeakable Loſs. Echard tells us that this Perſecution of the French and Dutch Churches, was one of Laud's great Deſigns: And now it was, ſays the Author of the Hiſtory of the Rebellion, that Trade increas'd to ſuch a Degree, that we were the Exchange of the World. And "Now "it was, according to Larrey, that the Kingdom "lay expos'd to the Inſults of Pyrates, the Cor-"ſairs of Algiers and Tunis came with Impunity "into the Channel which lay unguarded, plunder-"ed the Engliſh Ships, and purſu'd them to their "Ports. King Charles compleated the making "himſelf deſpis'd by the little Care he took of "his Fleets, being wholly bent on arbitrary Power "and Epiſcopacy, which was, ſaid he, its Right-"Hand." The States of the United-Provinces having recover'd the Cautionary Towns, and obſerving what a wild careleſs ſort of Government there was in England, had toc little Regard for the Rights of that Crown to the Sovereignty of the Sea, and probably took Advantage of that Careleſneſs to extend their Fiſhery farther on our Coaſts than they had preſum'd to do in former Reigns. They were not Strangers to the whole Buſineſs of the Court, which was to ſupport Laud in his Eccleſiaſtical Tyranny, little mindful of the Commerce or Honour of a Nation whom they had ſo many Ways diſguſted. The Engliſh were alarm'd when they found that the Dutch aſſerted a Right to their Fiſhery, a Book being written by the famous Hugo Grotius to that Purpoſe, entituled Mare Liberum, which was fully anſwer'd by the as famous Selden, in his Mare Clauſum, tho' he had been ſo ill treated by this King and his Miniſters for aſſerting the Privileges of Parliament. His Majeſty was willing enough to fit out a Fleet if he had had Money, but very loth to call a Parliament to give it, there being ſuch a Maſs of Grievances heap'd together ſince the laſt Seſſion, to be remov'd before Subſidies cou'd be expected; wherefore, ſays Echard, with equal Sagacity and Truth, "A Project was "form'd out of many antient Records by the deep-"ſighted Attorney Mr. Noy, to impoſe upon every "Sea-Port and Place of Merchandize, the Obli-Ship-Mo- "gation of finding ſuch a Number of Ships and ney. "Men in Proportion to their Wealth;" which the Hiſtorian follows with a Reflection as idle as 'tis ſophiſtical; The legal Rights of this Aid was never yet diſputed in any Court of Judicature. It had never yet been collected in ſo illegal a Manner, and therefore cou'd not have been diſputed; but it came afterwards into ſuch a Diſpute, that the Judges had like to have follow'd their Brother Treſilian to the Gallows for it. In order to force this Tax upon the Kingdom, Sir Robert Heath was remov'd from the Chief-Juſticeſhip of the Common-Pleas, and Sir John Finch put in his Place. Great were the Diſcourſes, ſays Ruſhworth, what the Occaſion ſhould be of that ſudden Advancement; but four Days after the Writ of Ship-Money coming forth, it was conceiv'd he was to be inſtrumental in that Buſineſs. "Nor ſhall he ſtay here, they are "Coke's Words, but be the prime Agent in break-"ing thro' the Bounds of Charta de Foreſta, by en-"larging the Limits of the Foreſt, ſo as no Man, "if the Parliament in 1641 had not prevented it, "cou'd tell where it wou'd have ſtopp'd." The firſt Writ for levying it, was directed to Sir Robert Parkhurſt Lord-Mayor of London, and the firſt Name in ſigning of it, is William Canterbury. It was read in Common-Council, upon which a Petition was drawn up againſt it by the Lord-Mayor, Aldermen, Sheriffs, and Common-Council, wherein they ſet forth, That they conceive themſelves exempted from ſuch a Charge by antient Privileges, Grants, and Acts of Parliament. Echard told us Noy. Noy had found out Records quite contrary to thoſe Acts of Parliament, and that the charging the City with this Tax was never diſputed. Larrey writes with Reaſon and Sobriety, "It wou'd ſeem as if "all that Noy had ſpoken againſt Tonnage and "Poundage Anno 1628, might be naturally apply'd "againſt this Tax Ship-Money. Abſolute Power "appear'd equally in both, and ſince there was "not the Concurrence of Parliament, this was "violating the Peoples Rights." Noy dy'd before the Writs he had contriv'd were put in Execution. The Infamy he acquir'd by his Apoſtacy from his firſt good Principles, does not hinder Archbiſhop Laud's Lamentation for his Death; I have loſt a dear Friend, and the Church the greateſt ſhe had of his Condition. The Archdeacon owns he was accounted a Papiſt if not an Atheiſt. There was ſomething very remarkable in his Will; The reſt of all my Lands, Goods, &c. I leave to my Son Edward Noy, whom I make my Executor, to be conſumed and ſcatter'd about. A. Wood ſpeaks more than he will be thank'd for; As his Majeſty was King and ſomewhat troubled at the Loſs of Noy, and the Clergy ſe- Clergy more, ſo the Generality of the Commons re- parated joyc'd, by which we have a clear Idea of the from the State of the Nation at that Time. When the People. King and the Clergy were in Grief, the People were generally in Joy; and what treacherous Counſellors muſt they be, who ſeparated their Intereſts which are inſeparable? This Summer the King A Progreſs and Queen went a Progreſs Northward, and were

*A.D.*1634. entertain'd by the Earl of Newcaſtle ſo magnificently, that it coſt him 10000 Pounds.

Sir Edw. Coke's Death. In September the great Lawyer Sir Edward Coke departed this Life, on which Occaſion his Grandſon writes as follows: "While he lay on his Death-

Coke 509. "bed, Laud's old Friend Sir Francis Windebank "came by Order of Council to ſearch for ſeditious and dangerous Papers, by Vertue of which "Order he took Sir Edward Coke's Comment upon Littleton, and the Hiſtory of his Life before "it, written with his own Hand; his Comment "upon Magna Charta, and his 11 and 12 Reports in Manuſcript; 51 other Manuſcripts, with "Sir Edward's Laſt Will, wherein he had for ſeveral Years been making Proviſion for his younger "Children. The Books and Papers were kept "till ſeven Years after, when one of Sir Edward's "Sons in 1641 mov'd the Houſe of Commons, "that they might be deliver'd to Sir Robert Coke, "Heir to Sir Edward; which the King was pleas'd "to grant, and ſuch as cou'd be found were de-"liver'd; but Sir Edward's Will was never heard "more of to this Day". Invaſions of Property were ſo common in this Adminiſtration, that ſo ſmall an Irregularity will not be wonder'd at.

Convocation in Ireland by Laud and Wentworth's Directions. One ſees what a League there was between Laud and Wentworth to deſtroy the Proteſtant Intereſt by the latter's Conduct in Ireland, where he procur'd an Act of Convocation to repeal the excellent Articles of that Church eſtabliſh'd in 1615. more conformable to the Reform'd Religion in all other Parts of Chriſtendom, than the 39 Articles which were made the new Eſtabliſhment. The Doctrine of Predeſtination according to Calvin's Explanation was ſettled by the Articles of the Year 1615, as were alſo other Calvinian Tenets. By thoſe Articles the Obſervation of the Lord's Day was reſolv'd Jure Divino, and Arminianiſm was condemn'd. But all was repeal'd by Wentworth's Convocation under his vigorous Management. The moſt reverend Father Archbiſhop Uſher gave his

P. 200. negative Vote to this Alteration; and Sanderſon is ſo ſimple as to own, that the Reaſon for making it might be in relation to the Papiſts.

Whitlock tells us great Care was taken to favour the Clergy in levying Ship-Money. All the reſt of the People, except Courtiers and Officers, generally murmur'd at it. The Lord Keeper Coventry approv'd and aſſiſted the Project as far as his Learning in theſe Matters did extend, and that was not

Clarendon wrong. far. Whereas in Clarendon, he underſtood the whole Science and Myſtery of the Law; he was moſt ſharp-ſighted in the Conſequence of things, as that of Ship-Money in particular. This again gives us a juſt Conception of the Characters in that Hiſtory, which wou'd have been more true had they been made at a venture; but the Partiality and Falſity are invented and labour'd.

Laud's Superſtition. Laud's Eccleſiaſtical Injunctions about the Altar and Ceremonies were every where vigorouſly executed. Complaint was made to the Mayor and Recorder of Abingdon againſt ſome wicked People, who refus'd to bow at the Altar, or ſtand at the Creed, for which they ought to be ſeverely puniſh'd. The Recorder anſwer'd, Theſe Offences

Recorder of Abingdon gives great Offence. more properly belong to the Eccleſiaſtical Judges than to Juſtices of the Peace; and adviſ'd the Complainants to inform the Chancellor of the Dioceſe. The Matter being of ſo great Importance, the Informers apply'd to the Council Table againſt the Recorder for putting off the Puniſhment of ſuch Delinquents; where he was gravely charg'd with refuſing to puniſh thoſe who refus'd to bow down to the Altar, and ſtand up at the Creed. The Recorder alledg'd in his own Vindication, That he knew no common Law nor Statute for their Puniſhment, eſpecially by Juſtices of the Peace; that the Complainants did not prefer any Indictment againſt thoſe wicked People; and that the Matters whereof they were accus'd were merely ſpiritual, proper for ſpiritual Judges, as they were call'd; and he might have been cenſur'd for encroaching on their Juriſdiction, if he ſhou'd have taken cognizance of them. Upon which the Council, notwithſtanding Archbiſhop Laud was one of them, were ſatisfy'd, and the Recorder was diſmiſs'd. *A.D.*1634.

Ship-Money, which in the laſt Year was confin'd to Maritime Towns only, was now extended to all Counties in the Kingdom, as being Partakers of the general Benefit, according to the ſagacious Echard, who argues with uncommon Sagacity thus: "Indeed the mighty Increaſe of the French Na-"vy, and the Invaſions of the Algerines, were a "great Proof of the Neceſſity of ſetting out a "Fleet, which under the preſent Exigencies cou'd "not be done without extraordinary Aid". Which is as fooliſh as 'tis falſe. Was the King of England afraid of his dear Brother of France? Had the Turks invaded the Kingdom, or if their Rovers were in the Channel, was it neceſſary to raiſe 300000 l. to drive them out of it, when Tonnage and Poundage were more than ſufficient for that Service? Or ſuppoſe it was neceſſary, Did not the King and his Counſellors know that it muſt be done with Conſent of Parliament? and cou'd not the Parliament have met, and have rais'd the Money before a Fleet cou'd be equipp'd? The Sophiſtry and Weakneſs of ſuch Arguments render them unworthy Remark; but the beſt of them have no better. The Lord Keeper Coventry was order'd to direct the Judges to promote this illegal Impoſition in their Circuits, and to perſuade the People to a ready obeying the Writs for Payment of the Tax, which he did with the Ability the Lord Clarendon ſpeaks of; and Whitlocke tells us P. 22. the Judges put on the Work in their Charges at the Aſſizes with great Zeal and Gravity, but did not convince many of the Legality of it; and tho' this illegal Pill was gilt, it wou'd not go down; but many People, eſpecially of the knowing Gentry, expreſs'd great Diſcontent at this Burthen, as an Impoſition againſt Law and the Rights of the Subjects. While the Judges were thus labouring to deprive them of their Property, and every Man's Door was beſet with Tax-gatherers againſt Law, ſee Warwick's Memoirs. what Warwick ſays, Every Man ſat quiet under his own Vine. The Fountains of Juſtice were clear, for the Judges were upright Men. This Writer is below Reflection. His Matter, his Manner, his Stile and Integrity are all of a piece, and ſo mean that 'tis ridiculous to be ſerious with him. Yet Echard copies him with great Pleaſure, tho' it is no better than robbing the Spittle: I can eaſily make good what I ſay, but the Digreſſion wou'd be too long. Ship-Money. Oppreſſion.

The reverend Hiſtorian copying ſtill from Warwick, excuſes this lawleſs Impoſition, becauſe the Weight was not heavy, but 236000 l. More Sagacity! The ſmalleſt Sum is as illegal as the greateſt, when taken without Conſent of Parliament. Whatever a Man pays by Violence, he is robb'd of ſo much; and if the Sum forc'd from him againſt Law and Right be ſmall, 'tis a heavy Burthen ſtill, being a Precedent for other illegal Taxes. Beſides, as the Tax was continu'd four Years, and a Million of Money rais'd by it, it made the Burthen very heavy to thoſe who bore it ſo long. Is it worth while to mention another Excuſe of War- P. 53. wick's for it? That the King kept all the Ship-Money in a Bag by itſelf, that it might be carefully and ſolely apply'd to thoſe neceſſary Uſes, as the aſſiſting the Spaniards againſt the Dutch, and driving the Mediterranean Pyrates out of the Britiſh Channel, &c.

Projects for Money. This Impoſition not being ſufficient to anſwer the Exigences, an Office was erected for Licenſing Subjects to travel; another Office for Letters; another for compounding defective Titles; another for Forfeitures for ſuch as ſpoil the Highways, and for Swearers and Curſers. Of the latter Sir Edward ward Peyton ſpeaks bluntly: King Charles granted Twelve-pence an Oath to Robin Laſhley, which was obſerv'd more to get Money than ſuppreſs Swearing, in much Eſteem from the Example of King James. All theſe things were enacted without a Statute. Proclamations ſerv'd inſtead of Laws, and ſome of them were of the following Importance: A Proclamation for the Time to cure the King's Evil; another about Butter Casks; a third about Farthings; a fourth about Soap; another about the King's Evil again: All in the Compaſs of a few Months. How happy and glorious was the Engliſh Nation!

A Fleet.

By the Help of Ship-Money a Fleet of 40 Ships was ſet out. The Earl of Lindſey was Admiral, and the Earl of Eſſex Vice-Admiral. The latter was order'd to ſcour the Channel with 20 Ships: But the Pirates were gone long enough before his coming. Now according to the Archdeacon, the Engliſh Name was glorious and terrible. Inſomuch that the Dutch durſt not attempt Dunkirk, then in the Hands of the Spaniards, for fear of the Earl of Lindſey. The French King and the States of the United Provinces were in League againſt the King of Spain. The French were to attack Dunkirk by Land, and the Dutch by Sea; but the latter drew off in Dread of the Engliſh Navy. Thus all the Service that was done by Ship-Money was the clearing the Channel of a few Turkiſh Rovers, and the frighting our Proteſtant Allies the Hollanders from a Conqueſt, which wou'd have been a good Barrier againſt Spain. Echard affirms the Dangers were really imminent, and might well juſtify the taking of Money againſt Law. The judicious Warwick: Ship-Money was rais'd with all due Caution, the Neceſſity was apparent, and the Sovereign Power hath an Authority independent of any other Conſent. They are not worth anſwering. But let the Lord Clarendon do it: The Damage and Miſchief cannot be expreſs'd, which the Crown and State ſuſtain'd by the deſerv'd Reproach and Infamy that attended the Judges. Warwick vouches for them, that they were as learned and upright as ever fill'd their Benches, there being but one illiterate Man amongſt them, Thomas Trevor; but then he too was an honeſt Gentleman. You ſee what Hiſtory they give us.

Prince Elector and Prince Rupert in England.

This Year arriv'd the Prince Elector in England, to ſollicit King Charles his Unkle to aſſiſt him towards recovering his Electoral Dignity and Patrimony. A very hopeleſs Journey! Laud was at the Head of the State as well as the Church; the Palatines were Presbyterians, and was it likely he wou'd do any Thing for their Deliverance? Prince Rupert the Elector's Brother arriv'd alſo at the Court of England. They were both receiv'd with great Ceremony, Courteſy, and Magnificence, which were all they obtain'd by this Viſit.

About the ſame Time the Queen was brought to-bed of a ſecond Daughter the Princeſs Elizabeth. The States General of the United Provinces ſent a ſolemn Embaſſy to congratulate her Majeſty's ſafe Delivery. The Ambaſſadors brought a noble Preſent: "A large Piece of Ambergreaſe, "two fair China Baſons almoſt tranſparent, a cu- "rious Clock, four fine Pieces of Painting by "thoſe two famous Painters Tintoret and Titian". Echard aſſures us the Clock was made by Rodolphus the Emperor; but Whitlocke had not heard of the Imperial Clockmaker. The reverend Hiſtorian mentions a Proclamation to reſtrain the Increaſe of Hackney-Coaches; and another to hinder the Reſort of Gentlemen and Ladies to London. If it was not for the War that was all this while carrying on againſt the Puritans by Laud's General Sir John Lamb, and an Army of Advocates, Proctors, Informers, Parators, Serjeants, Bailiffs, &c. what Buſineſs wou'd have been done in this Kingdom, the Events are below Remembrance; for ſurely the following Proclamations hardly deſerve a Place in Hiſtory. As that for the Uſe of a Net call'd a Trawl, that for ſealing of Purl, that for ſealing of Bonelace, another about Farthing Tokens, and another about the King's Evil, with many others equally important, as may be ſeen in Ruſhworth.

Proclamations.

A.D.1635.

Mr. Samuel Ward, Miniſter in Ipſwich, having ſaid ſomething againſt bowing at the Name of Jeſus, and preach'd againſt Sabbath-breaking, was proſecuted in the High-Commiſſion Court, confin'd, ſuſpended, and enjoin'd a publick Recantation; which he refuſing was thrown into Jail, where he lay a long time. Pierce Biſhop of Bath and Wells did not come behind Wren Biſhop of Norwich to ingratiate himſelf with Laud. Pierce excommunicated the Church-Wardens of Beckington in Somerſetſhire for not erecting an Altar in that Church. They appeal'd to the Archbiſhop, and he rejected their Appeal. They petition'd the King, and he rejected their Petition. So the Excommunication ſtanding againſt them a whole Year, they were committed to the ſame Priſon with Thieves and Felons, where they lay till they ſubmitted to do Penance in three Pariſh Churches.

M. Ward's Proſecution

There was this Year an Information againſt ſeveral Perſons of Quality for reſiding in Town contrary to the Proclamation, as the Earl of Clare, Lord Viſcount Newark, Lord Viſcount Monſon, Lord Mohun, Lord Fitz-Williams, Lord Tunbridge, Lord Stafford, Sir Edward Peyton, Author of the Divine Cataſtrophe, which we have ſometimes made uſe of; Sir Robert Harley, Sir Thomas Thynne, Sir Edmund Lenthall, Sir George Windham, Sir Francis Godolphin, Sir Thomas Pope, Sir Theobald Gorge, and about 30 Knights more; John Brownlow, Eſq; Thomas Pitts, Eſq; Richard Moyle, Eſq; Edmund Pye, Eſq; and about 100 Eſquires more; the Counteſs of Oxford, Lady Tyrwhit, Lady Bertie, Lady Lucy, Lady Kingſmill, Lady Egerton, Lady Offley, Lady Montague, Lady Winter, and about 20 Ladies more, who were all forc'd to make their Peace as well as they cou'd by Fines and Compoſitions. One Sir James Bagg was alſo proſecuted in the Star-Chamber for ſaying of Weſton Lord Treaſurer, I have laid many a thouſand Pounds under his Pillow. The Words were liable to a better Conſtruction than the Court put upon them. The Queen was preſent at the Trial. Finch ſpoke of the Sentence firſt, and fin'd Sir James 5000 l. to the King. Then Archbiſhop Laud made a long Speech, calling the Knight a baſe Fellow, and ending it thus: I fine him 5000 l. and Impriſonment during the King's Pleaſure. Here's a holy Primitive Biſhop, who at the ſame time alſo was one of the Lords of the Treaſury, declaiming againſt a Gentleman in a temporal Court, and giving Authority to Injuſtice by his Preſence and Preaching. The Lord Cottington was of Opinion the Knight ought to be acquitted; ſo was the Earl of Dorſet; but Laud ſeldom ſate in Court with Intention to have any one acquitted. The Votes of the Judges being equal, the Lord Keeper's caſting Vote gave it againſt Bagg; but by the King's Command the Sentence was not regiſter'd.

Sir James Bagg.

Laud's Inſolence. Ruſh. 313.

The Reverend Mr. Charles Chancey, Miniſter of Ware in Hertfordſhire, a pious and learned Divine of an antient Family in that County, was proſecuted in the High-Commiſſion Court for preaching againſt the Diſorders us'd by many on Chriſtmas Holidays, the Increaſe of Popery and Arminianiſm; that Idolatry was admitted into the Church; and that not only the Prophets of Baal, but Baal himſelf is receiv'd, and the Preaching of the Goſpel will be ſuppreſs'd. The next Paſſage in his Sermon muſt doubtleſs touch Laud to the Quick, and bring that worthy Divine into the Troubles which ended in Baniſhment. There want Men of Courage to tell Superiors in the Church of their Neglect; for that there is Increaſe of much Atheiſm, Popery, Arminianiſm and Hereſy in our Church; Hereſy

Mr. Chancey's Proſecution.

A.D. 1636. not only broach'd but maintain'd. Laud was the main Inſtigation of this Proſecution, and threaten'd Mr. Chancey's Advocate. The Court referr'd the Caſe to himſelf then Biſhop of London, who ſuſpended Mr. Chancey till he ſhou'd give it under Ruſh. 316. his Hand, that he was perſuaded in his Conſcience that kneeling at the Sacrament was commendable; that the Rail round the Communion Table was a decent convenient Ornament, &c. Which tho' he did very unwillingly, Laud had him condemn'd in great Coſts of Suit, and committed to Priſon till it was paid. His Sufferings oblig'd him afterwards to remove to New England; and they were continu'd in his Family by the ſame perſecuting Spirit. His Son Dr. Ichabod Chancey was Chaplain to Sir Edward Harley's Regiment, when Sir Edward was Governor of Dunkirk. He was outed of all Church Preferment by the Bartholomew Act, and driven with his Family into Holland. From whence in a Time of Toleration he return'd, and practis'd Phyſick at Briſtol with good Succeſs. This Digreſſion ſhews that the Malignity is hereditary in a certain Profeſſion, and that Perſecution is the very Eſſence of it.

Archbiſhop Laud was now in the Height of his Glory, ſays Echard, being a Commiſſioner of the Treaſury. It is monſtrous to write of the Epiſcopal Function after theſe People. " He met with " much Oppoſition from the Lord Cottington, " Chancellor of the Exchequer, who often impos'd " upon him, taking Advantage of the Vehemency " of his Temper; which indeed was downright " Rage, and diſguſted even his own Friends. He " found the Treaſurer's Place was honeſtly worth " 7000 l. a Year, and obſerv'd that divers Treaſu- " rers of late rais'd themſelves from private For- " tunes to the Titles and Eſtates of Earls, which " he believ'd cou'd not be done without Wrong; " therefore he reſolv'd to recommend a fit Perſon, " a Doctor of Divinity, to this High Office, and " this was Dr. Juxon, whom he brought in with-
Dr. Juxon made Lord High Treaſurer. " out Oppoſition". It was by his Recommendation alſo that he was made Biſhop of London. He met with no Oppoſition, becauſe, as the Archdeacon owns, it was done by Surprize. It is ſaid in Clarendon, On a ſudden the Staff was put into the Biſhop's Hand. Dr. Juxon was ſo far from being a fit Perſon, that he knew no more of the Revenue than any other Sportſman. Whitlocke writes
P. 23. of him, He was Parſon of Somerton in Oxfordſhire, where he had a convenient Livelihood. He was much delighted with hunting, and kept a Pack of good Hounds. Is not this extremely Apoſtolical? Lord Clarendon tells us he was a Man ſo unknown, that his Name was ſcarce heard of, who had been
P. 137. two Years before but a Chaplain. L'Eſtrange ſays he was none of the greateſt Scholars; and Clarendon, that the making him Lord High-Treaſurer inflam'd thoſe that were angry before. But Laud was under no Concern at pleaſing or diſpleaſing any one. His Buſineſs was to ſubject every thing to the Church, or rather to himſelf, and particularly the Treaſury by means of the Treaſurer. His own Words prove it in his Diary: " William Juxon, Lord Bi- " ſhop of London, made Lord High-Treaſurer. No " Churchman had it ſince Henry VIIth's Time. " I pray God bleſs him, that the Church may " have Honour. And now if the Church will " not hold up themſelves under God, I can do " no more". The Church, the Archbiſhop I mean, and not the Reform'd Church of England, were willing enough to hold themſelves up, as the Lord Clarendon acknowledges. It was look'd upon as the Gulph ready to ſwallow all the great Offices, there being others in View of that Robe, who were ambitious enough to expect the reſt. The reverend Hiſtorian proceeds: The Archbiſhop was infinitely pleas'd with what he had done, and believ'd he had provided a ſtronger Support for the Church. Then comes a long Character of Dr. Juxon copy'd from Sir Philip Warwick, who, as he tells us, knew him A.D. 1636. better than the Earl of Clarendon, who knew all Men elſe better than they knew themſelves. He does this after he had told us that a much greater Man than Warwick, Monſieur Le Clerc, took Juxon for one by no means fit for the Place. He continues: The Treaſury being thus hopefully eſtabliſh'd more Ship-Money was rais'd, and a huge Man of War built, called the Royal Sovereign. The Fame of which drew Multitudes from all Parts to ſee it, that Sight being all they were like to have for their Money. A Fleet was fitted out under the Command of the Earl of Northumberland, who ſeiz'd and ſunk ſeveral Dutch Herring-Buſſes in the North Seas. Upon which the States came to a Compoſition, and agreed to pay 30000 l. a Year for that Fiſhery, according to Echard; but only 20000 l. according to Larrey, which Whitlocke tells us the King readily took; and Coke, that it ill agreed with the King's Reaſon for levying Ship-Money, which was that Pirates infeſted our Coaſts Ships taken. to the endangering the Safety of the Nation, who were by no means ſo much afraid of Pirates, as of the Star-Chamber and High Commiſſion Courts. The Dutch at this very Juncture took a large Eaſt India Ship called the Bona Eſperanza, and confiſcated both Ship and Goods to the Value of 150000 l. as alſo the Dragon and Katherine, two Eaſt India Ships belonging to Sir William Curteen and Company, valu'd at 300000 l. Which three Ships and Cargo's amount to as much as the Payment for the Fiſhery wou'd come to in fifteen Years, tho' the 30000 Pounds yearly was not paid half ſo long. The reverend Hiſtorian again: This honourable Diſpoſal of Ship-Money, and the apparent good Effects of it, did not reconcile the People to it. They knew nothing of what he calls honourable Diſpoſal, but every Day felt the Weight of the Burthen which was illegally laid upon them.

Mr. Chambers of London, Merchant, the ſame M. Chambers. who ſuffer'd ſo much about Tonnage and Poundage, was again proſecuted about Ship-Money. Sir Edward Bromfield, Lord Mayor of London, impriſon'd him for refuſing to pay it; and Mr. Chambers commenced a Suit of Treſpaſs and falſe Impriſonment againſt Sir Edward Bromfield. The Caſe came to a Hearing in the Court of King's-Bench, where Sir Robert Berkley, one of the upright Judges of this Reign, declar'd openly, There is a Rule of Law, and a Rule of Government; and many things which ought not to be done by the Rule of Law, might be done by the Rule of Government. We muſt not forget that Warwick told us theſe Judges were the moſt righteous that ever ſat in Weſtminſter-Hall. Berkley refus'd to let the Legality of Ship-Money be argu'd by Mr. Chambers's Council, for which he was afterwards call'd to a ſevere Account. The whole City boggled at the Payment of it, and the Privy-Council were forc'd to write them a threatning Letter; which was anſwer'd by a Petition from the Lord Mayor, Aldermen and Commonalty of London, preſented to the Board by the Recorder Sir William Cockaine, and ſeveral Aldermen and Common-Council-Men, deſiring at leaſt an Abatement of 20 Ships rated upon them. Secretary Cook told them by their Lordſhips Order, That Petitions were not to be receiv'd, as tending to the Danger of the Commonwealth. If the Parliament complains, 'tis to aſperſe. If the People petition, 'tis dangerous. Cook went Miniſtry inſolent. on: The Command is given to all in general, and to every Particular of the City. The State will require an Account both of the City in general, and of every Particular of the Performance of the Command: And whereas you ſpeak of Precedents, you ſhall know that the Precedents of former Times were Obedience, and not Direction; and that there are alſo Precedents of the Puniſhment of thoſe who diſobey. Such Language as this to a Depuration from the greateſt City in the World was like to ſow rare Seed, which

*A.D.*1636. which brought forth a plentiful Crop, as will be ſeen hereafter.

Judges for Ship-Money.

The Clamour againſt this Tax was ſo loud and general, that the Courtiers were oblig'd to do ſomething new towards ſtopping the People's Mouths, and opening their Purſes. Echard's Words are as ſmooth as if the King had been about to reſtore the Rights and Liberties of his Subjects, and give due Courſe to the Laws. "His "Majeſty, who in his Nature lov'd not harſh "Proceedings, took a more ſoft and plauſible "Method, and order'd the Legality of this Tax "to be formally decided by his twelve Judges, "putting the grand Queſtion to them in Writing. "After a Conſideration of ev'ry Judge by himſelf, "and a Conſultation of all the Judges together, "they declar'd Ship-Money to be legal." Which is ſo falſe, that I am aſham'd to bring the Proofs of it againſt an Author of his Function. Every Judge was ſo far from thinking it legal by Conſideration of the Caſe with himſelf, that Whitlocke tells us Judge Croke and Judge Hutton thought it illegal, and ſign'd for Conformity only, becauſe the Majority of the Judges had done it. Mr. Coke ſays, The King having previouſly extorted the Opinion of the Judges. And Milton, "The rare Invention of "Ship-Money was found by Finch, whoſe Solli- "citations and Importunities, not their Conſidera- "tions, prevail'd with the major Part of the Judges." Whitlocke again; After much Sollicitation by the Chief-Juſtice Finch, promiſing Preferment to ſome, and highly threatning others, he got that Anſwer from them. He adds, This Opinion and Subſcription of the Judges was inroll'd in all the Courts of Weſtminſter-Hall, and much diſtaſted many Gentlemen of the Country, and of their own Profeſſion, as a Thing extrajudicial, unuſual, and of very ill Conſequence in this great Buſineſs or any other. Lord Clarendon owns Finch had too much Influence on his Brethren to induce them to concur in a Judgment they had all Cauſe to repent. Warwick who knew as much of Law as of Reaſon, affirms, All the Judges diſtinctly, to every particular Head of the Caſe, anſwer'd affirmatively, and nothing cou'd have led them hereunto but their Books. As ſilly and as falſe as this is, Echard ſteals it word for word. The Earl of Clarendon, as we have obſerv'd, declares the Judges Opinion was deſervedly attended with Reproach and Infamy. Larrey writes of it thus, The Judges in their Circuits had leſs Regard for the Laws, than Complaiſance for the Court. Clarendon, King Charles's Hiſtorian, ſays, The Council, the Star-Chamber, the Judges ſlighting of the Laws, gave Ground to the Reſentment of the Houſe of Commons, and nothing cou'd prevent the fatal Cataſtrope of the three Kingdoms. Judge Berkley declar'd at York Aſſizes, Ship-Money is a lawful and inſeparable Flower of the Crown, and the King may command Inland as well as Maritime Counties, to ſend Ships, which, he added, is not my Judgment alone, but the Judgment of all my Brethren. Falſe to Aſtoniſhment! He knew it was not the Judgment of Hutton and Croke. Nay, tho' Warwick poſitively affirms that every one of the Judges anſwer'd diſtinctly and affirmatively, yet Judge Hutton was always in the Negative, and never wou'd ſubſcribe, as the Lord-Keeper Finch witneſs'd for him, tho' Warwick has printed his Name with the reſt of the Judges. Mr. Acherley ſpeaks of this Judgment thus, "One wou'd have thought a ſmall "Share of Penetration might have ſeen thro' the "Fallacy and Flattery of ſuch an Oblation of Eng- "land's Liberties; and therefore from the Pro- "ceedings upon the Foundation of this wild Opi- "nion, the Propenſity of the Managers in thoſe "Times to an arbitrary and unlimited Power "was unhappily expos'd."

Rushw. 127.

Laud.

Every Incident which relates to Laud, is a freſh Inſtance of his Pride and Tyranny: He now claim'd a Right of Royal Viſitation in both Univerſities Oxford and Cambridge, who pleaded that the Right of viſiting was in the King alone, as King and their Founder. The Cauſe came to a Hearing before his Majeſty ſitting in Council. Sir John Bankes the King's Attorney-General pleading for the Archbiſhop, Mr. Gardiner Recorder of London for Cambridge, and Serjeant Thyn for Oxford. While Gardiner was pleading, Laud interrupted him, ſaying, I may viſit as oft as I will. His Majeſty ſpoke againſt the Puritans tho' they were out of the Queſtion. The Archbiſhop urg'd the Neceſſity of viſiting Cambridge, becauſe they come into Chapel without Surplices, and there were Chapels not conſecrated. Dr. Chadderton anſwer'd with a true Evangelical Spirit, I hope they are conſecrated by Faith and a good Conſcience. Here, as in a Mirror, one may ſee the Difference between Laud's Church and the true Church of England. The Earl of Holland was for compromiſing the Matter; If you will viſit, you may do it by Commiſſion. The Archbiſhop cry'd, No, I deſire to have my own Power. What a ſtrong Luſt of Dominion was in him? The Lord Holland urg'd the ſame when the Caſe of the Univerſity of Oxford was heard, and the Archbiſhop again cry'd out, No, I deſire to have my own Power. So, according to Ruſhworth, the King adjudg'd it againſt himſelf, as he had all along argu'd. The Archbiſhop invited the King, Queen, and Court to Oxford, where he entertain'd them with the Magnificence which he always affected. The Prince Elector Palatine was then at Court with Prince Rupert, who was actually created Maſter of Arts, as were the Earl of Eſſex, the Earl of Hertford, the Duke of Lenox, the Earl of Berkſhire, the Earl of Elgin, the Earl of Sunderland, the Lord Digby, the Lord Craven, and ſeveral other Perſons of Quality. Many glorious Speeches were made, ſays Echard, and three Comedies, which were repreſented with as much Variety of Scenes as cou'd be invented by the fine Head of Inigo Jones. The Archbiſhop was ſo taken with the Comedies, that he order'd them to be acted again; and as he writes in his Diary, All Things then going well and happily Mr. Coke repreſents Matters otherwiſe, ſpeaking of this Prelate; "Plum'd thus in his own Feathers all "Black and White, without one borrow'd from "Cæſar, whereby the more he aſſumes to him- "ſelf, the leſs he leaves the King, he now ſoars "higher. The Biſhops of the Province of Can- "terbury, in their own Names, enjoin the Re- "moval of the Communion-Table in the Pariſh "Churches from the Body of the Church to the "Eaſt-End of the Chancel, and cauſe it to be "rail'd in, refuſing to adminiſter the Sacrament "to ſuch as will not come up to the Rails and "kneel down; that the Book of Sports be read "in Churches." The cruel unheard-of Perſecution rais'd by Laud and his Brethren in the Star-Chamber, High-Commiſſion, and Spiritual Courts, ſo terrify'd the Puritans, that incredible Numbers of them left the Kingdom. All Things went well and happily, ſays the Archbiſhop and the Archdeacon. About this Time there was a Proſecution carry'd on by Laud's main Inſtrument Wren Biſhop of Norwich, againſt the chief Inhabitants of the Town of Yarmouth, as Miles Corbet Eſq; Recorder, Mr. Harris, Mr. Green, Mr. Day, Aldermen, who had impriſon'd the Parſon of that Town Mr. Brooks for his inſolent Behaviour towards their Lecturer Mr. Brinſley, who preach'd in the Chapel which had been us'd by the Dutch Congregation, till thoſe induſtrious Proteſtants were driven out of the Kingdom by the Biſhops of Norwich, Harſnet and Wren. Sanderſon confeſſes the Inhabitants crowded to hear Mr. Brinſley, and neglected Brooks; of which Laud having Information, he ſends an Inhibition to Brinſley, requiring him not to preach in the Chapel, where Mr. Brooks ſerv'd the Inhibition upon him, and the Magiſtrates ſent the Parſon to Priſon; for which the Archbiſhop procur'd an

A.D. 1636. an Order for throwing the Magiſtrates into Goal for turning Mr. Brinſley out of the Town, and the Chapel into a Warehouſe. Wou'd one have thought that ſo holy a Man as Dr. Laud cou'd have been guilty of Sacrilege? And there wou'd be no Excuſe for him, had the Dutch Presbyterian Chapel been epiſcopally conſecrated.

Foreign Affairs were little minded in England, where the Archbiſhop was wholly taken up with making Conqueſts over the Puritans. The chief Buſineſs abroad was the Pope's appointing Cardinal Barberino, his Predeceſſor's Nephew, to be Protector of the Engliſh and Scottiſh Nations, as Cardinal Ludovico was of the Iriſh. And theſe two Cardinals erected a ſpecial Society of four Orders of Jeſuits in England, of whom the Pope's Legate reſiding in England for the time being was to be Rector, and Cardinal Barberino the Principal Superintendent. At the latter End of the Year Signior Panzani the Pope's Nuntio at London, and Major Brett the Engliſh Agent at Rome, being diſcharg'd from their Negotiations, Signior Gregorio Con, or Mr. Gregory Con a Scots Papiſt, was appointed by the Pope to ſucceed Panzani as his Nuntio, and Sir William Hamilton was ſent hence Envoy to Rome: So great was the Advancement of the Proteſtant Religion by Laud and his Brethren, according to the Author of the Hiſtory of the Rebellion. At this Time, ſays an anonymous Writer, there was a great Harmony between Rome and England; the Roman Agents at London were ſo zealous for the Promotion of Popery, that it is taken notice of by the Lord Wicquefort, who informs us that the Hatred the Court of England expreſs'd towards Cardinal Richlieu, was one main Cauſe of the Troubles they met with. Why they ſhou'd hate ſo good a Catholick as Cardinal Richlieu, one can't conceive, unleſs it was becauſe he hated the Jeſuits. I may ſay for certain, ſays Wicquefort, that the Contempt the Engliſh had for that Miniſter, was one of the chief Cauſes of the King's Misfortune, and of the Diſorders of the Kingdom. This Year the Lord Scudamore was Ambaſſador in France, and being about to make his publick Entry into Paris, the Maſter of the Ceremonies ask'd the Cardinal whether he wou'd ſend his Coach to meet him. Richlieu reply'd, If the Ambaſſador will viſit me, I will ſend my Coach, but not otherwiſe. The Lord Scudamore being told it, ſaid, I will do as my Predeceſſors did: That is, he wou'd not viſit him. The Lord Fielding and the Earl of Leiceſter, had ſet him that Example; and we do not learn from Wicquefort, why there was this Coldneſs between the Court of England and the Prime Miniſter of France; but 'tis probable 'twas on account of the Queen-Mother Mary de Medicis, whom that Cardinal mortally hated, and whom the Court of England always ſided with.

The Earl of Arundel was ſent Ambaſſador to the new Emperor Ferdinand III. he ſtaid ſome Months in Germany, and treated about the Reſtitution of the Palatinate, with the ſame Succeſs the Engliſh Ambaſſadors had had ever ſince the Electorate was loſt. Indeed what Succeſs cou'd be expected from Embaſſies that carry'd nothing with them but Words, and that were not likely to be follow'd by Fleets and Armies. The Duke of Bavaria, who was in Poſſeſſion of the Elector's Territories, look'd on the Ambaſſador with Diſdain, and other Princes intereſted in the Affair did not treat him much better; ſo he left Germany in Diſtaſte and Choler, without taking any Leave.

A.D. 1637. The Plague which broke out in the laſt Year, increas'd in the following, which caus'd many to poſt into the Country: But Sickneſs or Health, Peace or War, 'tis all one; the Archbiſhop is alike buſy with his ſanguinary Proſecutions. Three Gentlemen whom he proſecuted at this Time, were of the moſt reputable Profeſſions, William Prynne

The Sufferings of William Prynne, Dr. Baſtwick, Mr. Burton.

Eſq; Utter Barriſter of Lincoln's-Inn, whom he had caus'd to be mutilated and mangled ſome Years before. Dr. John Baſtwick a Phyſician, and Mr. Henry Burton Batchelor of Divinity. Echard begins their Caſe with a direct Falſity; Their Anſwers were ſo libellous no Counſellor wou'd put his Hand to them; for Mr. Tomlins, Council for Prynne, did actually ſign his Anſwer, which was refus'd both at the Star-Chamber Office, and in open Court. Mr. Holt, another Counſellor, a Bencher of Gray's-Inn, aſſign'd Mr. Prynne, after he had drawn his Anſwer, was privately commanded not to ſign it. And when his Promiſe to do it was urg'd, he ſaid I have Orders to the contrary, and dare not do it for a hundred Pieces. Mr. Burton's Anſwer was drawn, engroſs'd, and ſubſcrib'd by Mr. Holt by Order of the Court; yet nine Days after, when it had been perus'd by the Archbiſhop, 'twas pretended to be ſcandalous, and referr'd to Sir John Brampſtone and Sir John Finch, the two chief Juſtices, to be purg'd. Accordingly they expung'd 64 whole Sheets, and would not ſuffer Mr. Burton's Council to defend the Anſwer; Sir John Finch threatning to pull his Gown over his Ears for offering it. The two righteous Judges left only three Lines in the Beginning and two in the End, amounting to a general not guilty; whereas in what they had ſtruck out, Mr. Burton had confeſs'd and juſtify'd what he was charg'd with. And becauſe he wou'd not acknowledge this purg'd Anſwer directly contrary to that he put in upon Oath, he was taken pro Confeſſo, as was Mr. Prynne for a ſuppos'd contemptuous Anſwer, which the Court of Star-Chamber wou'd not accept, tho' ſign'd by Council, and twice tender'd. This is Mr. Prynne's own Account of it printed by Order of Parliament: And tho' Echard affirms and repeats it again, it was only ſign'd by himſelf, yet we prove upon him that it was ſign'd by Mr. Tomlins his Council and himſelf too, and that Mr. Holt who drew the Anſwer, order'd it to be engroſs'd, and promis'd to ſign, was commanded not to ſign it. I do not ſo often bring Proofs of ſuch Falſhoods againſt the Author of the Hiſtory of the Rebellion and Echard, as being under any manner of Surprize at finding them in their Hiſtories. If I had found Truth there, I ſhou'd indeed have been ſurpriz'd as much as if I had ſeen Tyranny prov'd to be the Conſtitution, Superſtition and Perſecution to be Religion, Law to be Sedition, and Liberty Rebellion. Dr. Baſtwick's Council were ſo threaten'd and terrify'd, that they refus'd to ſign his Anſwer which he drew up himſelf. It was left at the Star-Chamber Office, and another Copy of it tender'd in open Court, where 'twas rejected, and the Doctor taken pro Confeſſo. This is the moſt daring and impious Act of Injuſtice that ever was attempted in any Court; and the Offences of theſe three Gentlemen were for the moſt Part perſonal againſt Laud, who ſate imperiouſly on the Bench with the Lord High-Treaſurer Juxon by his Side, and was the Man who ſet Sir John Banks the Attorney-General to work; and as Banks's Clerk Mr. Cockſhute teſtify'd upon Oath, order'd him to let him know from time to time how the wicked Work went on. Laud was charg'd by Burton with ſeveral Innovations and Alterations in Church-Service, I ſhall only take notice of one of them, becauſe it ſhews how well-diſpos'd he and his Diſciples have been from the beginning to the Proteſtant Succeſſion; 'tis the ſixth Innovation: That the Lady Elizabeth, our preſent moſt gracious Sovereign's Royal Great Grandmother, and her princely Children, be daſh'd out of the new Collect, whereas they were in the Collect of the former Book. Dr. Baſtwick's Crime was for ſaying, That Prelates were Invaders of the King's Prerogative, witneſs Laud's uſurping the Royal Viſitation in the two Univerſities, witneſs their ſolemn denying to hold their Juriſdiction of the King, and even his Supremacy, as in Whitlocke. That they

Eternal Falſhood! Laud, incapable of Moderation, juſtify'd his ſuperſtitious Innovations in a Speech of two Hours long, and then left the Priſoners to this dreadful Sentence; "That Mr. Prynne having once loſt "his Ears before, ſhould ſtand in the Pillory, have "the Remainder of his Ears cut off, and be ſtig-"matiz'd on both Cheeks with S. L. as a ſeditious Libeller." This Part of the Sentence was mov'd by Finch, who had not yet run his Country; "That Dr. Baſtwick the Phyſician, and Mr. "Burton Batchelor of Divinity, ſhou'd ſtand in "the Pillory and have both their Ears cut off, "and all three pay 5000 Pounds apiece to the "King." If this Blood was remember'd when the Archbiſhop was on the Scaffold for Execution, it muſt needs moderate the Peoples Compaſſion. Ruſhworth tells us, the Hangman rather ſaw'd off the Remainder of Prynne's Ears than cut them. Theſe three Gentlemen were afterwards committed Priſoners, one to the Caſtle of Launceſton in Cornwall, another to the Caſtle of Lancaſter, and a third to Carnarvon Caſtle in Wales. They were afterwards remov'd to remote Iſlands, Guernſey, Jerſey, and Scilly, where they were kept cloſe Priſoners, the Wives of Dr. Baſtwick and Mr. Burton not being allow'd after many Petitions to have Acceſs to them, nor to ſet footing in the Iſland, neither was any Friend permitted to have any Acceſs to Mr. Prynne. The People of England had in general an Abhorrence of this Cruelty, which one cannot write nor read without trembling. The Parliament afterwards voted the Proſecution and Sentence illegal, and their unrighteous Judges to make Reparation. Had the Offence been legally prov'd on the Offenders, the Puniſhment was by no Means adequate to it. Chriſtians, Proteſtants, and Engliſhmen, to be mangled and branded like Slaves at Morocco. A noted Divine of the Church
Dr. Fuller. of England writes of it thus, Moſt moderate Men thought the Cenſure too ſharp, too baſe, and ignominious for Gentlemen of their ingenious Vocation. Laud after this Sentence was pronounc'd, gave the Judges his hearty Thanks for it in a formal Speech, and was the leading Counſellor when the three much-injur'd Gentlemen were illegally baniſh'd. The Behaviour of theſe Sufferers argu'd alike their Innocence and their Courage. Tho' the Executioner par'd Mr. Burton's Ears ſo cloſe, that he cut the Temporal Artery, and the Blood ſtream'd down on the Scaffold, yet he never ſhrunk in the leaſt. Dr. Baſtwick was much admir'd, ſays Fuller, and highly commended for the Erection of his Mind, triumphing over Pain and Shame. He made a Speech on the Pillory, in which he ſaid, Indeed I wrote a Book againſt Antichriſt, the Pope; and the Pope of Canterbury ſaid it was written againſt him. Mr. Prynne told the Spectators, among other Things, Rather than I would have my Cauſe a leading Cauſe, to the depriving the Subjects of their Liberties, I ſuffer my Body to become an Example of this Puniſhment. As he was carrying back to Priſon, he made this Diſtich on his own ſtigmatizing.

More Tyranny. The learned Mr. Acherley obſerves on this Occaſion, That the Cruelty of theſe corporal Puniſhments, which were arbitrary and impos'd for no Offence againſt the Laws for which ſuch Puniſhments cou'd be inflicted, bound down all Gentlemen under a ſervile Fear of the like Treatment, in the midſt of the Lord Clarendon's Felicities, which he tells us were the Wonder of the World. Echard aping that impartial Hiſtory, affirms alſo, That all this Time England had a mighty Shew of Glory and Felicity, the Church was ſhining in Grandeur. Shining in Piety and Innocence, in Purity and Virtue, wou'd have been a Glory indeed; but to have told St. Paul and St. Peter their Church wou'd ſhine in Grandeur, wou'd doubtleſs to them have been a Prophecy of Antichriſt and his Equipage. He adds, the Happineſs was too great to remain unalterable. The Truth is, the diſmal Effects of arbitrary Power were felt in all Parts of the Kingdom, to which it was not confin'd, but extended to Scotland ſo much, that it became intolerable. Indeed after the bloody Outrage committed on the Bodies of theſe three Gentlemen, the Plot thickens apace, and draws daily nearer to the Cataſtrophe, which was precipitated by Laud's Rage and Raſhneſs.

A.D.1637.

We read in Ruſhworth, that "The Report of "the Sentence againſt Mr. Prynne, &c and the "ſmart Execution, flew quickly into Scotland, and "the Diſcourſe among the Scots, was that the Biſhops of England were the Cauſe thereof, that "they muſt expect to have a Star-Chamber erected in their Kingdom to ſtrengthen their Biſhops "Power there, beſides the High-Commiſſion Court." And while they were in theſe Fears, and under this Provocation, Archbiſhop Laud attempted to force the Common-Prayer-Book upon them, which occaſion'd the Tumult at Edinburgh. That Tumult led gradually to the Scots War, and that War as gradually to the Civil War in England; wherefore it is of Importance to remark how and by whom the firſt Troubles were rais'd in Scotland, which in a few Years infected England. I muſt here declare, that the reverend Hiſtorian's Hiſtory is of no Uſe to me. The whole Story on this Head is one continu'd Miſrepreſentation. Father Orleans ſpeaks ſome Truth here; "The Reſolu-"tion taken at this Time to put in Execution "what had been projected by King James for "eſtabliſhing the Engliſh Liturgy in Scotland, oc-"caſion'd an Inſurrection which afterwards involved both Kingdoms, and was properly the im-"mediate Cauſe of the Revolution." Biſhop Burnet names the Prime Mover in that Cauſe; The P. 26. Scots Biſhops were ſo encourag'd by Archbiſhop Laud, that they loſt all Temper; of which one of the moſt zealous of them, Sydſerfe, made great Acknowledgments in his old Age. Madam Motteville beforemention'd, who wrote Memoirs of Anne of Auſtria, and probably had her Memoirs relating to P. 196. England from Queen Henrietta Maria, having told us that Laud put the King upon impoſing the Common-Prayer-Book on the Kirk in Scotland, adds, "King Charles carry'd the Book one Night into "the Queen's Chamber, and deſir'd her to read "it, telling her he wanted her to peruſe it, that "ſhe might ſee how near they came to the Faith." He calls Popery the Faith. But it was not that Faith of which his Subjects ſtil'd him the Defender. Thus we ſee that the Popiſh Queen as well as Archbiſhop Laud, was one of the Cabinet-Council for impoſing a Liturgy on the Scots Preſbyterians. The faireſt Account of theſe Matters are in my Scots Hiſtory: "King Charles I. falling "in with the pernicious Counſels of Archbiſhop "Laud, renews his Father's Project, and directs "him and ſeveral of the Engliſh Clergy to reviſe "the Liturgy for the Uſe of the Kirk. Theſe "Reviſers made ſeveral Alterations, which ren-"der'd it even more diſtaſteful than the Engliſh "Liturgy itſelf. This was ſent down to Scotland, "where the People were greatly alarm'd at an In-"novation ſo much abhorr'd by them; inſomuch

Their Conſiſtories, Claſſes, and Preſbyteries, were held in the Nature of Conventicles, and there remain'd no Shadow of their former Eccleſiaſtical Policy. There were ſeveral Alterations in Laud's Liturgy approaching near the Romiſh Miſſal, and one in the Delivery of the Sacrament, which the Scots apprehended was to introduce Tranſubſtantiation.

Ruſhw. 396.

The 23d of July was the Day appointed for the Opening of this dreaded and dangerous Scene. The Dean of Edinburgh being to preach that Day in the Great Church, reſolv'd before Sermon to read the Service-Book in his Habit and Surplice. There was a great Concourſe of People expecting what wou'd be the Iſſue of the Matter. At the uſual Hour the Dean in his Surplice comes out of the Veſtry, the People gazing as at a Raree-Show, and making Geſtures of Contempt. He paſs'd thro' the Crowd to the Reading-Desk, and began to read, the Auditory continuing quiet, till on a ſudden an old Woman diſguſted at ſome Words, ſtarts up in a Fury, and crys, Villain, Doſt thou ſay the Maſs at my Lugg; then taking up her little Stool, ſhe flung it at the Dean's Head, making an hideous Noiſe. Some who ſate next to her follow'd her Example, and by Degrees the whole Church was in an Uproar. The Dean quitted the Desk, and pull'd off his Surplice for fear of being torn to Pieces. The Biſhop of Edinburgh went up into the Pulpit, and beckening for Silence, offer'd to ſpeak, but it was all to no Purpoſe: The People flung at him Sticks, Stools, and any Thing that came to hand from all Quarters, and both Biſhop and Dean made their Retreat to the Veſtry. The Lord Chancellor call'd to the Magiſtrates to appeaſe the Multitude, who were now become as tumultuous without the Church as within, and broke the Windows. They ſtroll'd about the City, and viſited every Church where the Curates intended to read Common-Prayer, which ſet all in Confuſion. The Clergy with the Magiſtrates and Courtiers, who ſtill ſtaid in the Great Church, taking hold of the Multitudes employing themſelves elſewhere, lock'd themſelves in, and boldly return'd to their Devotions. The Liturgy was again read, but the Rabble returning before they had done, waited for their coming out, aſſaulted the Biſhop in the Street, and it was not without Difficulty that he got ſafe to his Palace, notwithſtanding the Earl of Rothes a popular Nobleman had taken him into his Coach to protect him from Violence, which the Populace puſh'd no farther at that Time. The Care of the Magiſtrates, and the Power of the Court, aw'd them for the preſent, but when Harveſt was over, and they had more Leiſure, they began to ſtir a little in Oppoſition to the Service-Book.

It was ſoon found that the Generality of the Nation, as well Gentry as Commonalty, were diſguſted at it, and about two Months after great Numbers of Gentlemen well attended came to Edinburgh, where a Petition was drawn up and handed about to be ſign'd, requeſting the Council in their own Names, and the Names of all the Noblemen, Gentlemen, and others who ſhou'd agree to the ſame, that the Service-Book might be no farther preſs'd till his Majeſty's Pleaſure be farther known. My Author affirms, that an infinite Number ſet their Hands to this Petition, and amongſt them ſeveral Gentlemen of good Rank. Echard falſe again; Not a Perſon of note countenanc'd it. He and his fellow Labourers have a prodigious Advantage in the uſe of Terms: He calls it a Sedition. Thus Conſcience is with them Schiſm, Petitioning Sedition, Publick-Spirit Faction, Paſſive-Obedience Loyalty, Superſtition and Perſecution, the Church; it ſerves them inſtead of Fact and Argument; and then the Latitude and Liberty they take as to Truth, make them carry away their Cauſe with them in every Paragraph. The Council, according to my Author, pretended to reſent the Petition, and threatened the Gentlemen who preſented it, to ſend their Names to the King as diſorderly and diſaffected Perſons. Echard ſays, Wiſe Men, I wonder whom he means, for I have not yet met with one wiſe Action in all the Hiſtory, were of Opinion, that if three or four of them had been hang'd, it might have ſav'd the ſucceeding Torrent of Blood. Inſtead of giving a gentle Anſwer to the Petition, which wou'd have been ſome Sign of Wiſdom, the Council publiſh'd a Proclamation to remove the Seſſion, which is the Scots Term, to Linlithgow, in hopes of preventing the Peoples flocking to Edinburgh. They alſo diſſolv'd all Meetings on Church Affairs; which only exaſperated the Citizens who gather'd together the next Day, and the Gentlemen who had petition'd appear'd among them. They ſurrounded the Council Houſe, the Lords ſitting in Council, and demanded a more favourable Anſwer to their Petition. The Biſhop of Galloway coming thither at the Inſtant, was inſulted, as were the Earl of Traquair and the Lord-Treaſurer, from whom they took his White-Staff. A Party of them beſet the Town-Houſe, and oblig'd the Magiſtrates to ſign a Paper not to permit the idolatrous Service-Book as they call'd it. The Lords of the Council were their Priſoners, and there was no Way of freeing themſelves but by the Mediation of ſeveral Lords and Gentlemen of Quality who oppos'd the Liturgy. They prevail'd with the Populace to let the Lords of the Council go quietly to their Homes, ſome of the Citizens being their Guard. The next Day another Petition was preſented to the Privy-Council, ſign'd by nineteen Noblemen and three hundred Gentlemen of note, and the principal Inhabitants of the City of Edinburgh. This Petition was tranſmitted to the King, who inſtead of moderate Counſels, ſent down a Proclamation to remove the Seſſion to Stirling, and another forbidding all tumultuous Meetings on Pain of Rebellion. But theſe Proclamations now ſignify'd no more in Scotland than his Embaſſies did in Germany about the Palatinate. They were ſo many Words only; the People united in Defence of the Cauſe they had undertaken, the Petitioners took no Notice of the Council, but reſolv'd to proceed in their own Way for the Preſervation of their Religion and Liberties. The Earl of Hume, the Lord Lindſay and ſeveral other Lords, with a great Number of Gentlemen, enter'd a Proteſtation againſt theſe Proclamations, which they ſent to the Council; and from that time ſome of theſe Lords and Gentlemen met daily to conſider the State of the Nation. Here the famous TABLES were form'd, by whoſe Order every Degree ſate by themſelves. 1. The Nobility. 2. The Gentlemen. 3. The Burroughs. 4. The Miniſters; who all communicated their Reſolves to each other, and acted in Concert with perfect Unanimity. They minded not the Orders of Council, nor even the King's Menaces; which being inſpir'd by Laud, wanted not Severity and Irritation; but ſo far took the Adminiſtration into their Hands, as to proceed to the redreſſing of thoſe Grievances, which tho' often complain'd of, the Court wou'd not redreſs: They began

They underſtood his Majeſty highly reſented their Proceedings; but imputing his Reſentment to Laud's prepoſſeſſing him againſt them, it only animated them in the Proſecution of their new Undertaking. The impriſon'd Miniſters were every where ſet free, the baniſh'd call'd home, and all reſtor'd to their Livings, to the inexpreſſible Joy of the Scots Nation, who forbore not upon all Occaſions to expreſs their Deteſtation of the Innovations impos'd upon them by Laud and his Brethren. Some of their Biſhops renounc'd Epiſcopacy, as Ramſey Biſhop of Dunkeld, Graham Biſhop of Orkney, Fairly Biſhop of Argyle, and almoſt all the reſt of the Clergy ſubmitted to the TABLES, and took the Covenant. Is the Sun at Noon more viſible than that the Perplexity which the King had brought himſelf into, was the Effect of Archbiſhop Laud's deſperate Counſels; ſo inſenſible of the apparent Conſequences, and ſo incapable of Moderation, that he day by day hurries his Maſter into new Difficulties and Dangers? The Aſtrologer we have often quoted had a very mean Opinion of this Prelate's Capacity. Perſecution in England.

The Perſecution againſt ſcrupulous Conſciences was all this while as hot as ever in England, that both Nations might not be without Provocations. To avoid the High-Commiſſion and Spiritual Courts, many hundred Families, ſober and induſtrious People, remov'd to the Engliſh Plantations in America. It cou'd not but be a horrid Scandal to a Government to ſee its beſt Subjects chuſe to leave their dear Country, their Dwellings and Trades, and wander with their Wives and Children in thoſe diſtant Wilderneſſes, rather than continue expos'd to the Tyranny of thoſe mercileſs mercenary Courts. One cannot think it was out of Care of the publick Good, that a Proclamation was publiſh'd to prohibit their tranſporting themſelves, and block up the Paſſage of thoſe voluntary Exiles, who were willing to go to another Part of the World, where, as they ſaid, they might not meet with ſuch Diſturbance as they had met with here in England from Eccleſiaſtical Courts. What Echard quotes out of the Proclamation is not the leſs abſurd and ridiculous for the Place from whence he took it. Becauſe of the many idle and refractory Humours, whoſe only or principal End is to live without the Reach of Government. Falſe as the reſt. They were the moſt quiet, induſtrious People in the Kingdom, which every one knew they left with bleeding Hearts purely for Conſcience ſake to enjoy the Purity and Freedom of their Religion, which the reverend Hiſtorian terms a Humour. Thus with him Dr. Reynolds, Dr. Wallis, Dr. Wilkins, Dr. Bates, Dr. Wincup, Dr. Gilpin, Dr. Collings, Dr. Jacomb, Dr. Anneſley, Dr. Arthur, and thouſands more, who were profeſſedly of the ſame Religion with theſe Refugees, were humourous Fellows. As Wit is not one of the Ingredients in the Compoſition of Hiſtory, ſo neither is Stupidity; and one can make nothing elſe of both the Proclamation and his Paraphraſe. 'Tis not deny'd but that Laud, Wren, Pierce, and ſuch Prelates, made theſe conſcientious Chriſtians ſo uneaſy at home, that they ran the greateſt Risks of Life, Health, and Living to avoid them. Had Care of the State been in Queſtion, a Check upon that Tyranny, which is called Authority in the Proclamation, wou'd have given them immediate Eaſe, and the Loſs of ſo many uſeful Families have been prevented. But ſuch Chriſtian Compliance, ſo agreeable to charitable and benevolent Minds, was not to be expected from the Miniſtry at that time, nor from their Maſter. Larrey tells us, The perſecuted Proteſtants crowded the Sea-Ports to get over to America. There was a Tribe of them, ſays Echard with more Contempt than becomes him. This Tribe is now the populous and opulent Colony of New England. He adds, They caſt off all Subjection to the Engliſh Church; by which he means they conform'd to the Profeſſion and Practice of all the Reform'd Churches in Chriſtendom both in Faith, Worſhip and Diſcipline.

He owns the Proceedings in the ſpiritual Courts were now ſo ſevere, that it gave Occaſion to ſtrike at their Juriſdiction; but the ſame Judges who had given it as their Opinion, That the raiſing Money without Act of Parliament was according to Law, declar'd that the Spiritual Courts were alſo according to Law, tho' the King's Name was not us'd in them. Immediately out comes a Proclamation to give a Sanction to the Opinion of the Judges, according to the Archdeacon. And as if theſe Proclamations were really any farther minded than the People were forc'd to it, 'twas alſo to give Satisfaction to the Subjects. He proceeds: Thus was a great Point gain'd, and the Severities were never the leſs relax'd; for the Archbiſhop was inſpir'd with Virtue and Fervor, which his ſubordinate Inſtruments borrow'd from him. This is follow'd by ſome ſmall Truths, too good for the Company they keep. "Some of the Archbiſhop's Inſtruments, the Cler- "gy, endeavour'd to introduce many things, which "had too near a Reſemblance to Popery; nor "were they blameleſs in their Lives, ſeveral being "vicious to a Scandal; nor ſo humble and meek "as they ought to have appear'd; but ſo very high, "that one was complain'd of for ſaying, I hope to "ſee the Day when a Miniſter ſhall be as good a "Man as any upſtart Jack Gentleman in England. The Lord Clarendon aſſures us, and ſo does Warwick, the Church flouriſh'd with learned and extraordinary Men. And to ſhew how finely we are taught by Clarendon and Echard, mark the Agreement: There was not one Churchman in any degree of Acceptance, not thoſe Inſtruments accepted and preferr'd by Laud, of a ſcandalous Inſufficiency in Learning, or a more ſcandalous Condition of Life. Not one! I think there's no need of ſaying any thing more of theſe Hiſtorians; but the Provocation is beyond meaſure. General Ludlow, every way equal to the Lord Clarendon tho' he had written that Hiſtory, tells us, The moſt profitable Preferments in the Engliſh Church were given to thoſe of the Clergy who were moſt forward to promote Superſtition, and profane the Lord's Day. Not one!

The next Truth is extorted from Mr. Echard: The Puritans were generally free from outward Scandal, which is follow'd by a Reflection ſo vulgar and ſo puerile that it is a Shame to repeat it, except ſome Particulars in Commerce. At Billingſgate the Saying among the Fiſhery is, the Presbyterians will not ſwear, but they'll cheat. Billingſgate is not the worſt Place from whence he fetches his Wit and his Raillery. The Puritans would not whore, but they wou'd cozen; and ſure thoſe who wou'd whore, drink, ſwear and profane the Sabbath, us'd a great deal of Conſcience as to cheating, when it lay in their way; which it did not do ſo often as in that of the Puritans, who had above nine Parts in ten of the Trade of the Nation.

Puritans.

The next Man Laud took to task in this very Year was John Lilburn, a younger Son of Richard Lilburn, Eſq; of Thickley Punchardon in the County Palatine of Durham, one of the beſt Families in the Biſhoprick. Echard inſults him as a Tradeſman, Lilburn.

*A.D.*1637. man, whereas in truth he never ſet up as a Tradeſman; and if he had, the Difference in their Deſcents ſhou'd have given a Check to that Inſult. Lilburn was put to a Packer; but diſliking a Trade he left him, and was taken to be Clerk to William Prynne, Eſq; his Inclination bending to the Law. Mr. Prynne ſoon after ſuffering for his Hiſtriomaſtrix, Lilburn took his Maſter's Part, and wrote againſt his Perſecutors, for which he was brought into the Star-Chamber, Laud ſitting there again in Triumph. He was condemn'd to be whipp'd from the Fleet Priſon to Weſtminſter-Hall, where he was afterwards to ſtand in the Pillory. Tho' he was whipp'd ſo bloodily that every Heart bled for him, yet he bore it with a Courage which was amazing, and while he was in the Hands of the Tormentor expreſs'd his Indignation at the Injuſtice that was done him. He continu'd doing ſo when he was in the Pillory; of which the precious Judges of the Star-Chamber being inform'd, they ſent an Order to have him gagg'd. Mr. Lilburn had 500 Stripes with a treble Cord having Knots upon it; and it was ſaid by a Member of the Houſe of Commons in 1640. "To ſum up his Sufferings; "By Impriſonment he was made a dead Trunk, by "Whipping a Rogue, by Pillory a Cheat, by Gagging a Beaſt. They had better have hang'd him outright". We read in Ruſhworth, "When "once the Star-Chamber Court began to ſwell big, "and was delighted with Blood; which was not "till Laud's Time, ſpringing out of the Ears, Noſes "and Shoulders of the puniſh'd; and nothing wou'd "ſatisfy the Revenge of ſome Clergymen but cropt "Ears, ſlit Noſes, whipp'd Backs, gagg'd Mouths, "and withal to be thrown into Dungeons, and "ſome to be baniſh'd not only from their native "Country to remote Iſlands, but by Order of this "Court to be ſeparated from their Wives and "Children; then began the Engliſh Nation to lay "to heart the ſlaviſh Condition they were like to "come into if this Court continu'd". Theſe were felicitous Times, when, as the Lord Clarendon wou'd have us believe, the Happineſs of the golden Age was reſtor'd.

The Inſolence and Cruelty of the Laudæan Prieſthood.

Bp. Williams proſecuted.

While the Court of Star-Chamber was intent upon theſe good Works, Laud took hold of this ſeaſonable Opportunity to bring his Patron and Benefactor Biſhop Williams before them. That able Stateſman had liv'd ſplendidly for ſome Years at his Palace of Bugden in Huntingtonſhire, whereby his Hoſpitality and pleaſant manner of receiving all Perſons he grew very popular, and the neglecting ſo uſeful a Miniſter for the ſake of ſo odious a one as Laud occaſion'd ſtill more murmuring. The King and the Archbiſhop had entertain'd inſuperable Prejudices againſt him, and look'd upon him as a dangerous Affector of Popularity. To gain the good Will of the People by Acts of Humanity and Bounty is to endanger the State, which in truth had a very ſmall Share of that good Will. Again; He was a Favourer of the Puritans, and his ſubtle and ſerpentine Ways, which they never found out, gave too juſt an Occaſion to many to believe him not ſtrictly honeſt. It is the whole Drift of the learned and reverend Biſhop Hacket in his Life of Biſhop Williams to prove that he was ſtrictly honeſt. The firſt Informers againſt the Biſhop of Lincoln were Sir John Lambe, whom he preferr'd and got to be knighted, and Dr. Sibthorp. Lambe was a Spiritual-Court Officer, and what Sibthorp was, has been ſhewn already. Their Information was of terrible Importance; "That the Biſhop "had diſcourag'd them in proſecuting of Puritans; "that he ask'd Lambe whether they paid the Loan-"Money;" who ſaying they did, but were not good Churchmen, the Biſhop reply'd, If they pay the King they are the beſt Subjects, and I am ſure they will carry all at laſt. Laud had not Foreſight enough to think after that manner. The Biſhop alſo told Lambe and Sibthorpe, as thoſe Informers ſwore, that the King had communicated to him his Intentions to have the Puritans more mildly dealt with, which his Majeſty had ſaid ſeveral Years before in a Converſation with the Biſhop not at the Council-Board; and his Lordſhip having intimated as much to theſe two Perſecutors to induce them to ſtop their Hands a little, Lambe upon being refus'd an Official's Place by the Biſhop, and Sibthorpe to pleaſe Biſhop Laud, deliver'd their Information to Noy, then Attorney-General, who was order'd to draw it up in Form, and file it in the Star-Chamber. Biſhop Williams demurr'd to it as no fit Matter for the Cognizance of that Court, the Words being ſpoken of Matters done in Parliament. The Lord-Keeper and the other Judges were ſtartled at this Demurrer, and to clear themſelves referr'd it to Judge Richardſon, who having lain long under the Archbiſhop's Diſpleaſure about the Buſineſs of the Somerſetſhire Revels, to ſet all things right again over-rul'd the Demurrer in a private Chamber. Biſhop Williams then apply'd himſelf to the Lord Treaſurer Weſton for a Compoſition; but the King wou'd hear nothing till the Biſhop had confeſs'd his Fault. Upon which Biſhop Williams reſolv'd to defend himſelf; and by the Advice of the moſt learned Council in England put in a ſtrong Plea, which being argu'd in open Court was referr'd to the ſame Judge Richardſon, who in the ſame manner ſmother'd it in a Chamber. This Plea thus over-rul'd, the Biſhop put in a ſpecial Anſwer, ſetting forth the Conſpiracy of Lambe, Sibthorpe, &c. to ruin him, and advance themſelves; that their Hatred to him was for not permitting them to plunder and rob the King's Subjects in the Eccleſiaſtical Courts, by haling them into their Nets ex Officio mero, without any previous Complaint, under an imaginary Colour of Puritaniſm. Noy join'd Iſſue to this Anſwer, and Witneſſes were examin'd to prove it. But as much as Noy was in the arbitrary Proceedings of the Miniſtry after his Apoſtaſy, he grew weary of this Buſineſs, and Laud procur'd another Proſecutor, one Richard Kilvert, ſo profligate a Villain that the Archdeacon is aſham'd to name him; and Dr. Fuller writes, He wou'd do what an honeſt Man wou'd be aſham'd of, and like a Maſtiff Dog fiercely fly upon any Perſon for Profit. He was ſeconded in this Suit and abetted by the Court, who ſupported him with Money. Kilvert brib'd one Warren, an Examiner in the Star-Chamber, contrary to Warren's Oath, to reveal that the Biſhop's Cauſe depended on the Teſtimony of John Pregeon, Regiſter of Lincoln and Leiceſterſhire. To invalidate his Evidence, Kilvert ſuborn'd Witneſſes to ſwear Baſtardy againſt Pregion. The Biſhop to ſupport the Credit of his Witneſs, us'd his utmoſt Endeavours to find out the Subornation, and the Baſtardy was ſo ill prov'd, that the Baſtard was at Lincoln Seſſions father'd upon another. Another Bench of Juſtices, of whom Sir John Munſon was moſt active, father'd it upon Pregion. The laſt Order was diſſolv'd as illegal by the Court of King's-Bench, and Pregion clear'd from the Child. In this Diſpute ſomething muſt neceſſarily paſs, which look'd like Concern in the Biſhop for the Character of his Evidence, who deny'd that his Lordſhip had ſpoken the Words ſworn againſt him by Lambe and Dr. Sibthorpe. Kilvert call'd this Subornation, and dropping the firſt Information proceeded againſt his Lordſhip upon the laſt. This Band-Dog, ſays Dr. Fuller, let go his firſt Hold too hard for his Teeth to enter, and faſten'd his Fangs on a ſofter Place. Some Days before the Hearing a Privy-Counſellor, ſuppos'd to be the Earl of Dorſet, Friend to the Biſhop, interpos'd ſo far as to get the Suit compounded for 2000 l. but the Sum being offer'd, the Price was ſoon riſen in the Market, and to the 2000 l. was added the Surrender of his Deanery of Weſtminſter, Parſonage of Walgrave in Northamptonſhire, a Place he much

A.D.1637. delighted in, and Prebend of Lincoln, all which the Biſhop held in Commendam. But his Lordſhip reply'd, he wou'd in no Caſe forego thoſe few Remainders of his dead Maſter King James's Favour. The ſame Lord continuing ſtill his Interpoſition, prevail'd to have the Suit ſuperſeded for 4000 l. Biſhop Williams ſaying, I take no Delight in fencing at Law with my Sovereign, agreed to it; when a great Adverſary ſtepping in, ſuppos'd to be the great Laud, ſet his Majeſty ſo violently upon a Trial that all was fruſtrated; and what was yet worſe, the friendly Offices of the Lord of the Council was urg'd againſt the Biſhop as a Proof of his Guilt by his Forwardneſs to compound. The Court of Star-Chamber coming to the Cenſure, Sir John Finch, Lord Chief Juſtice, fin'd the Biſhop of Lincoln 10000 l. Sir Francis Windebank, Secretary of State, and a Creature of Laud's, to the 10000 l. Fine, added degrading. Both of theſe two Star-Chamber Judges fled for their Lives three or four Years after, or they wou'd doubtleſs have been Examples of national Juſtice. The other Judges brought the Fine down to 8000 l. to the King, and 1000 l. to Sir John Monſon, a Lincolnſhire Juſtice, with Impriſonment during the King's Pleaſure. The Archbiſhop of Canterbury heartily agreed to all but the degrading, which his Friend and Tool had propos'd probably on purpoſe that Laud might ſhew his Clemency in only ruining and jailing the Biſhop without that Ceremony. He preach'd near an Hour before he paſs'd Sentence, alledging that Jezabel was the firſt in Scripture who was branded with the Infamy which the Biſhop is charged with. Some of the Star-Chamber Lords, as Weſton the Treaſurer, the Earl of Dorſet, and the Earl of Mancheſter concurr'd in the Fine, hoping the King wou'd have taken to himſelf the ſole Honour of mitigating it. But the utmoſt Penny was exacted. The Biſhop was ſuſpended by the High-Commiſſion Court, which Echard on this very Occaſion calls the Glory of the Nation. He remain'd four Years a Priſoner in the Tower, and was purſu'd thither by Laud, who four Months after the Biſhop of Lincoln was releas'd was ſent thither himſelf, and never got out but to his Trial and Execution. He ſent two Biſhops and three Doctors to him in Priſon to take his Anſwer to certain enſnaring Interrogatories; which Biſhop Williams anſwer'd ſo warily, that the Biſhops and Doctors cou'd take no Advantage of it. But, as Dr. Fuller aſſures us, They painted his Lordſhip out in an ugly Shape to the King. This Trial laſted nine Days, and the Star-Chamber Court was every Day crowded, the People generally pitying the Biſhop of Lincoln, who, 'twas viſible, was to be ſacrific'd to the Envy, Jealouſy, Malice and Ingratitude of Laud, who in Defiance of the publick Hatred continu'd daily to increaſe and provoke it.

Star-Chamber Court. Is it not aſtoniſhing that the Archdeacon ſhou'd take hold of this Opportunity to write an Encomium on the Court of Star-Chamber? And let him not ſay he praiſes what it had been, and not what it was; for it wou'd be falſe, as I am about to prove. His Commendations of it are: It had for many Ages been the Glory of England. He ſets out with a Falſity; it was erected by Henry VIII. Warw. 57. about 140 Years before; for the Defence of Honour and Honeſty. It generally conſiſted of 30 or 40 of the greateſt, wiſeſt, and moſt learned of all Profeſſions in the Kingdom, and oftentimes with the King at the Head of them, ſo that no Court came ſo near the venerable Senate of Rome. I am not aſtoniſh'd that it is the Reverſe of the Truth, but that the reverend Hiſtorian ſhou'd declaim thus in Praiſe of it, when it had juſt been guilty of ſo vile an Act of Injuſtice againſt one of the Fathers of our Church. Osborn, a Gentleman of good Obſervation and Judgment, who liv'd in the beſt Days of that Court, when other Sort of Men than Weſton, Cottington, Windebank, Conway, Jermin, Finch, &c ſate there, writes thus of it: The Earl of Northumberland was caſt into the Sea of the Star-Chamber, that Den of arbitrary Juſtice, where the Keeper for the time being, two Biſhops, two Judges, and as many wiſe Lords and honeſt great Officers ſate as were pleas'd to come. The moſt of whom, tho' unable to render a Reaſon, every Wedneſday and Friday in Term Time concur, &c. to tear ſuch as refuſe to worſhip the Minion, and to yield to the Prerogative Royal. As much as the Hiſtorian praiſes this rare Court at this extraordinary Juncture, he owns the Biſhop's Sufferings were a chief Cauſe of its Suppreſſion. A.D.1637.

Philips's Life of Bp. Williams. Mr. Ambroſe Philips ſinks the whole Proſecution in the Star-Chamber, perhaps becauſe of the Subornation; which he had no Reaſon to do, Biſhop Williams being evidently clear of any more Concern about Pregion than to have his Credit legally ſupported, as being his principal Witneſs; or perhaps it was to avoid ſpeaking of Laud's Inveteracy in this unjuſt Proſecution; for tho' he confeſſes the Biſhop of Lincoln was a Man of more Temper than Laud, yet to gain him the Eſteem of ſtaunch Churchmen, he tells us theſe Biſhops were his Pattern, Whitgift, Bancroft, Overal, Harſnet; and that he diſſuaded the King from letting the Bohemian Braſsmen come to ſettle in England, becauſe they were Presbyterians, notwithſtanding they offer'd to bring over 200000 l. with them, urging the ill Examples of the Dutch and French Churches with reſpect to Diſcipline. If that is true, I don't think Mr. Echard has wrong'd him much in ſaying he had more of the Serpent than the Dove in him. The Truth is, Mr. Philips has taken ſome Pains to ſet the Biſhop's Character right with his Brethren Fellows of Colleges, but he has by ſo doing left it Mongrel with very little Merit on either Side. The Lord Wentworth, Deputy of Ireland, was ſo zealous in the Proſecution of this Biſhop, that he put off his going to his Government a Term or two, of purpoſe, ſays Heylin, to have a Fling at him.

Illegal Acts. The Events of this Year come out of the Star-Chamber Court, High-Commiſſion Court, Spiritual Courts, every one of them arbitrary and tyrannical; Council Board, or Bench of Ship-Money Judges. The Expreſſion is bald, but fit for the Subject. The whole Adminiſtration are ſo many illegal Acts of Government one after another. William Pargiter, Eſq; and Samuel Danvers, Eſq; were committed Priſoners to the Gatehouſe and the Fleet, for refuſing to pay Array Money to the Earl of Exeter, Lord Lieutenant of Northamptonſhire. The Reaſon given for levying this Money and Militia, was the Apprehenſion of an Invaſion from Scotland. Sir Robert Berkley, that upright Judge, deny'd the Writ of Habeas Corpus to Mr. Pargiter and Mr. Danvers, contrary, as in Ruſhworth, to P. 426. the fundamental Laws of the Kingdom, to former Reſolutions in Parliament, and to the Petition of Right, and contrary to the Knowledge of the ſaid Sir Robert Berkley, who was the King's Serjeant at Law. Warwick affirms, He was as learned P. 51. and as upright a Judge as ever ſate on the Bench.

Vintner's Company. Kilvert, Proſecutor of Biſhop Williams, had another Jobb cut out for him, and that was to threaten to proſecute Vintners for ſelling Wine above Price, and Breach of the Decree for dreſſing Meat. Alderman Abell, Maſter of the Company, communicated Kilvert's Meſſage to them, Ruſhw. and for fear of the Fellow they ſubmitted to the 452. Payment of 40 s. a Ton. Kilvert demanded 4 l. and it was farm'd at 3000 l. a Year. We ſee what Sort of Tools were at this Time employ'd, and about what dirty Work.

Mr. Snelling's Perſecution. P. 459. Mr. Laurence Snelling, Miniſter of Paul's Cray in Kent, was articled againſt in the High-Commiſſion Court for not reading the Book of Sports on the Lord's Day. He pleaded in his Defence the Law of God, the Laws of the Realm, the Authorities

A.D. 1637. of Councils, Fathers, and late Writers of all Sorts. The Archbiſhop ſate on the Bench in Perſon, as was uſual with him. Mr. Snelling's Anſwer was rejected, and that reverend Divine excommunicated, and turn'd out of his Living. I remember only an Inſtance or two of this Prelate's arbitrary and illegal Proſecutions: I cou'd fill a Volume with them were it neceſſary, and will do it when it is thought to be ſo.

Abp. Laud and Archy the King's Fool.

Among ſo many diſagreeable and terrible Incidents, wherein we find Archbiſhop Laud the principal Agent, let us relate one merry one, and that is the Caſe between the Archbiſhop and Archy the King's Fool, as it is told by Ruſhworth. Archy meeting the Lord Archbiſhop of Canterbury his Grace, ſoon after News had come from Scotland of a Tumult at Stirling on account of the Common-Prayer, his Majeſty's Fool, who it ſeems had counſell'd the not ſending the Service-Book thither, cry'd, Whea's Feule now? Doth not your Grace hear the News from Striveling? The Lord Archbiſhop was juſt going into the Council Chamber, where he made a formal Complaint againſt the Fool. The Matter was taken into ſerious Conſideration, and that produc'd the following Order in Favour of his Grace.

At Whitehall, March 11. 1637.

PRESENT

The King's moſt Excellent Majeſty;

The Lord Archbiſhop of Canterbury, his Grace; the Lord Keeper Coventry, Weſton Lord Treaſurer, Mancheſter Lord Privy-Seal, Duke of Lennox, Marquis of Hamilton, Earl Marſhall, Lord Chamberlain, Earl of Northumberland, Earl of Salisbury, Earl of Dorſet, Earl of Holland, Lord Newburgh, Mr. Treaſurer, Mr. Comptroller, Mr. Vice-Chamberlain, Mr. Secretary Cooke, Mr. Secretary Windebanke.

" IT is this Day order'd by his Majeſty with the " Advice of the Board, That Archibald " Armſtrong, the King's Fool, for certain Words " ſpoken againſt the Lord Archbiſhop of Canter- " bury his Grace, and prov'd to be utter'd by him " by two Witneſſes, ſhall have his Coat pull'd over " his Head, and he diſcharg'd of the King's Ser- " vice, and baniſh'd the Court; for which the " Lord Chamberlain of the King's Houſhold is " pray'd and requir'd to give Order to be execu- " ted; and immediately the ſame was put in Exe- " cution".

Bp. Williams proſecuted again.

No ſooner was one Sentence paſs'd againſt the Lord Biſhop of Lincoln, than Preparations were made for another. The infamous Wretch Kilvert had corrupted Walker the Biſhop's Secretary, Powel his Steward, and one Lund, who had all been fin'd in the Star-Chamber, and order'd to be impriſon'd: But, ſays Echard, they eſcap'd both Fine and Impriſonment, which were in a ſhort time commuted into ſuch other Offices as they were to do for Kilvert againſt their Maſter. That Villain had been put in Poſſeſſion of the Biſhop's Palace at Bugden; where " glad of the Office, ſays Mr. " Philips, he makes ſure of all that cou'd be found, " Goods of all Sorts, Plate, Books, and ſuch like, " to the Value of 10000 l. of which he never " gave Account but of 800 l. He fell'd the Tim- " ber, kill'd the Deer in the Park, ſold an Organ " that coſt 120 l. for 10 l. and Pictures which coſt " 400 l. for 5 l. He continu'd there revelling for " three Summers, and gave no Account at all for " four Cellars of Ale and Beer, with Wood, Hay, " Corn, and the like. Thus a brave perſonal E- " ſtate was ſquander'd away, and not the leaſt of " the King's Fine paid all this while, &c." Powel in rifling his Lordſhip's Papers found a Letter from Mr. Osbaldeſton, Head Schoolmaſter at Weſtminſter, to the Lord Biſhop, wherein were ſome myſterious Expreſſions, which by Interpretation and ſtretching were made to reflect on Archbiſhop Laud. Kilvert preſently prefers a new Bill againſt my Lord of Lincoln for divulging a ſcandalous Libel againſt a Privy-Counſellor; which ſhews ſufficiently that Laud and Kilvert were in League againſt Biſhop Williams. The latter deny'd he ever receiv'd the Letter; but it being found in his Box, he was again condemn'd and ſentenc'd by that barbarous Court which had before ſentenc'd him. The Words in the Letter give us the Opinion the very learned Mr. Osbaldeſton had of the Merit, as well as Virtue of Archbiſhop Laud: The little Vermin, the Urchin, and Hocus Pocus is this ſtormy Chriſtmas at true and real Variance with the Leviathan. The Vermin was interpreted to be the Archbiſhop, the Leviathan to be the Lord Treaſurer Weſton. Mr. Osbaldeſton was try'd for writing the Letter. He deny'd the Words to be ſo meant by him, and depos'd that he intended one Dr. Spicer, a Civilian, by Hocus Pocus, and the Lord Chief Juſtice by the Leviathan. But ſuch Men as the Biſhop of Lincoln and Mr. Osbaldeſton were never once brought into that Court to be clear'd; ſo tho' it was impoſſible to prove any other Conſtruction in the Words than what he who wrote them ſwore; yet, as the moſt impudent Act of Injuſtice which that deteſtable Court cou'd be guilty of, they proceeded to ſentence that honeſt and wiſe Magiſtrate. Sir John Finch fin'd the Biſhop 10000 l. ſo did the wiſe and honeſt Secretary Windebank. The reſt cut off 2000 l. and one Lord was for no Fine, ſaying out of Ovid, Qui jacet in terra, non habet unde cadet. The reverend and eminent Mr. Osbaldeſton was ſentenc'd 5000 l. Loſs of his good Living of Whethamſtead in Hertfordſhire worth 300 l. a Year, and to have his Ears tack'd to the Pillory in the Preſence of his Scholars; whom, ſays Dr. Fuller, his Induſtry had improv'd to as great Eminency of Learning as any of his Predeceſſors; inſomuch that he had above fourſcore Doctors in the two Univerſities, who gratefully acknowledg'd their Education under him. Among others of Mr. Osbaldeſton's grateful Scholars was the famous Poet Mr. Abraham Cowley, who has expreſs'd his Gratitude in a fine Epiſtle in Verſe. Nothing wou'd ſerve the Revenge of Laud but the Ears of this excellent Scholar, who being ſenſible of his implacable Spirit, and perceiving how he and his Fellow Judges wou'd determine the Matter, left the Court before he was to be apprehended, went home, and having ſettled his Affairs as well as he cou'd, conceal'd himſelf at a Friend's Houſe in London, leaving a Paper behind him with this written upon it, Gone beyond Canterbury, which was underſtood to be beyond Sea; but it rather meant beyond the Power of Laud; ſo ſafe the Place where he was hidden.

A.D. 1637. Mr. Osbaldeſton perſecuted by Laud.

Bp. Williams again.

The Archbiſhop was not yet contented with what he had done againſt the Biſhop of Lincoln. Nothing but his Degradation wou'd ſatisfy the Envy and Malice of that lordly Prelate. In order to which, a new Information with ten Articles was drawn up againſt him, tending all to blacken him for tampering with Witneſſes about Pregion, for which he had already been ſo ſeverely cenſur'd. The Biſhop put in a Plea and Demurrer, that Deus not judicat bis in id ipſum, God puniſhes not the ſame Fault twice; and that he cou'd prove it was a Conſpiracy of Kilvert with other Perſons, if he might have Freedom to produce his Witneſſes againſt them; which was deny'd him. His Lordſhip then put in a Rejoinder, and an Appeal to the next Parliament whenever it ſhou'd be aſſembled, pleading his Privilege of Peerage, his Freehold, and that he cou'd not be degraded of his Orders and Dignities. The very word Parliament frighten'd the Star-Chamber Court, who had a long Reckon-

*AD.*1637. ing to make up with them, and the Proceedings were quaſh'd ſo far as not to come to a final Cenſure. Tho' the Rage of his Perſecutors abated not againſt him, their dull Libellers made him the Subject of their Raillery and Ribaldry: Their Hiſtorians have not been more ſparing of their foul Language. Sanderſon ſpeaking of his ſevere Cenſures, ſays, His Puniſhments fitted his Villanies: For the Character of a Biſhop is no Defence againſt Defamation with theſe pretended Zealots for the Church, if the Man has made himſelf unacceptable to them by Temper and Charity. Clarendon and Echard have not indeed made uſe of Sanderſon's ſawcy Expreſſions, but their Meaning has as much Bitterneſs.

Mr Hampden and Ship-Money.

The Caſe of Ship-Money was this Year brought upon the Stage by Mr. Hampden of Buckinghamſhire, an Inland County, which he thought had no Reaſon to pay a Maritime Tax. 'Twas argu'd in the Exchequer-Chamber by Oliver St. John Eſq; and Robert Holburn Eſq; the latter yet untainted in Principle, both of Lincoln's-Inn, of Council for Mr. Hampden; and by Sir John Banks Attorney, and Sir Edward Littleton Sollicitor-General for the King. I know not whether the Reader will think what the reverend Hiſtorian ſays of this Tryal, to be more abſurd or more ridiculous. Mr. Hampden had demanded Juſtice in the Courts of Weſtminſter-Hall, and he tells us, he was moſt graciouſly allow'd to be heard. He adds, the Account of the Tryal is imperfect in Whitlocke, one of the greateſt Lawyers of his Time, who was preſent at it; but extreamly perfect in Frankland, whom I know no more of than what he tells me. The Pleadings take up 120 Pages Folio in Ruſhworth, who was a Lawyer alſo, and it appears beyond Doubt by Mr. St. John's Argument, that all the Law-Books in the Studies of the Lawyers, led them to declare that Impoſition to be illegal. Echard proceeds from his profound Skill in ſuch Matters, This Cauſe was attended with ſuch Niceties and Intricacies in the Law, as made it very difficult. There never was any thing more plain in both Law and Reaſon, than that no Man's Money ſhou'd be taken from him without his own Conſent by his Repreſentatives in Parliament; and there was not the leaſt Difficulty in it, but what was occaſion'd by the Oppoſition of Authority and Power to Reaſon and Law. Mr. St. John in the Cloſe of his firſt Day's Argument, ſets the Matter in a fair Light. "In a Time of Peace his Majeſty's Vigilancy foreſees the Danger likely to enſue; the Supplies for "Prevention of this Danger, will ſerve if brought "in ſeven Months after. The Caſe is, whether "without their Conſent in Parliament, his Majeſty may alter the Property of the Subjects Goods." Which fully anſwers the pretended Neceſſity of raiſing Money without the tedious Form of a Statute, ſince with all thoſe Forms it cou'd come in time enough to prevent Danger. All the Judges except Judge Hutton and Judge Croke, gave Judgment againſt Mr. Hampden. Croke, according to Whitlocke, was reſolv'd to deliver his Opinion for the King as the other Judges did, againſt his Knowledge and Conſcience; but a few Days before the Time, he chang'd his Reſolution by the Perſuaſions of his virtuous and prudent Lady, who obſerving the Perturbation of his Mind by his Looks, and gueſſing at the Cauſe, ſaid to him, I will be content to ſuffer any Want or Miſery with you, rather than occaſion you to do any Thing againſt your Judgment and Conſcience. She muſt certainly know what was his Conſcience and Judgment, and that his firſt Reſolution was againſt both. As for the reſt of the Judges, Hutton excepted, their Infamy will live as long as their Names.

One wou'd think that this odious Tax had exaſperated the People enough already, and that Miſchief enough had been done without ſo ſolemn a Deciſion to make an illegal Impoſition legal; but as I have frequently obſerv'd this Miniſtry with Laud at their Head, ſeem'd to ſtudy how they cou'd act moſt in Deſpite of the Nation. *A.D.*1637.

*A.D.*1638. It was the ſame Management in Scotland, where in direct Oppoſition to the Principles and Bent of the People, the ſame Laud obſtinately perſiſted in the Deſign to impoſe his own Epiſcopacy, with all its Superſtitions and Ceremonies upon a Proteſtant and pure Church; the pureſt in the World, if you will take King James the Firſt's Word for it. "The King by the Advice of Biſhop Laud, "ſays Mr. Acherley, order'd the new Biſhops there "to prepare a Liturgy, which was remitted to Eng- P. 386. "land, reviſ'd and approv'd by three Engliſh Biſhops, Laud, Juxon, and Wren. We have ſeen what Succeſs they had when they attempted to uſe it; and the ſame Author reaſons upon it thus; "In this Place it may be proper to enquire what "Profit the King's Miniſters had in View either "to themſelves or to the Crown, in forming and "carrying on theſe Undertakings, which they "knew to be in Scotland an Abomination; for it "may be demanded of what Signification was it "to the Crown, whether the national Church of "Scotland was a Presbytery or Epiſcopacy. The "Problem is difficult to reſolve any other Way, "than it was the Exerciſe of a Power which deſpis'd all Limitation and all Imaginations of a "Diſappointment." This Affair is related by the reverend Hiſtorian, as wiſely and ſincerely as the reſt, Whether this Torrent was the unnatural Overflowings of the Waters of Popularity, how florid is his Expreſſion? or the Artifice of great Men, which deſtroy'd the Sluices and Flood-gates which kept the Populacy and Presbytery in due Bounds, it is hard to determine with Exactneſs. Whether the Fuſtian or Nonſenſe of this Paſſage is moſt prevalent, is much harder to determine; for we are told the Service-Book was an Abomination in Scotland, and the Torrent, the unnatural Overflowings of the Waters of Popularity, was the very natural Effects of an old Woman's Fury who flung her Stool at the Dean of Edinburgh's Head. The Earls of Traquair, Roxburgh, and the Lord Lorn, were ſent for to Court to inform his Majeſty of the State of the Scots Nation. After the ſetting up of the TABLES, and after ſome Conſultations, the Marquis of Hamilton was order'd to go to Scotland as Lord High-Commiſſioner. Mr. Echard tells us he was met there by Multitudes of both Sexes, whoſe Applauſes conſiſted of Execrations and Exclamations againſt Popery and Biſhops; for notwithſtanding the Scots by Laud's Council were threatened to be treated as Rebels, far from being diſmay'd at theſe Threats, they are the Words of my Author, they ſtood boldly to what they had done; and when the Marquis of Hamilton propos'd two Things to them, their Anſwer will ſufficiently acquaint us that they acted like Men who were under no Apprehenſion of the Power of their Enemies. Mem. Ch. Scot. 185. His Propoſals were, 1. What they expected from the King in Satisfaction of their Grievances. 2. Whether they wou'd after Satisfaction return to their Obedience, and renounce the Covenant. The firſt they anſwer'd, We expect a free Parliament and a legal General Aſſembly, to whom we are willing to refer all our Demands. To the ſecond their Reply was, We have not forſaken our Obedience, and therefore need no Terms of Return. But as to our Covenant, we will as ſoon renounce our Baptiſm; nor will we enter into any Treaty, if it is mention'd to us a ſecond Time. Many long and tedious Debates were held, and many Expedients offer'd in the King's Name, to keep if poſſible the Biſhops in their Seats. The Marquis not being able to gain any one Point, return'd to Court to acquaint the King with the Demands and Reſolutions of the Covenanters, ſo they now begin to be call'd; upon which he was ſent back with a Declaration conſiſting of eleven Heads, granting them Things which Scots Troubles.

A.D 1638. which they wou'd have rejoyc'd at before, but now rejected. 1. To annul the Service-Book. 2. The Book of Canons. 3. The High-Commiſſion. 4. The five Articles of Perth. 5. All Perſons whether Eccleſiaſtical or Civil, to be liable to the Cenſure of Parliament and General Aſſembly. 6. No Oath to be impos'd upon the Miniſters at their Entry, but what was contain'd in the Act of Parliament. 7. The antient Confeſſion of Faith to be receiv'd and ſubſcrib'd as it was in the King's Father's Reign, with the Band thereto annex'd. 8. A Parliament at Edinburgh the 14*th of* May after. 9. A General Aſſembly at Glaſgow the 21*ſt of* May. 10. A general Pardon. 11. A general Faſt. Theſe were great Things; but as the main Thing Epiſcopacy was left behind, the Covenanters proteſted againſt theſe Conceſſions, and claim'd a Right to call a General Aſſembly, and it was call'd accordingly, the Marquis of Hamilton conſenting to it. They met at Glaſgow the 25th of November to the Number of 260 Commiſſioners, the Marquis of Hamilton preſided in it; but they took ſo little Notice of him, that after eight Days he diſſolv'd them as far as it lay in his Power. The Earl of Rothes made Anſwer, We are ſorry you will leave us, but our Conſcience bears us Witneſs we have done nothing amiſs, and therefore will not deſert the Work we are come about. The Lord Ereskin, the Earl of Argyle, and others, came to the Aſſembly, and deſir'd to be admitted into the Covenant, which the Nation in general fell in with. This Echard terms an increaſing of the Tumults. The Marquis return'd to London, leaving the Aſſembly ſitting: He beſtows as much Wit as he has to ſpare upon them; They were doing the Work of the Lord: God approv'd and ſeal'd their Proceedings; their ſitting was the Prerogative of Jeſus. He adds, Rolloch, one of them, ſaid, God ſpake thro' Doll Michelſon a Wench, who declar'd the Covenant was approv'd in Heaven; and another of them, We help the Angel of the Lord againſt the Mighty. But he is not to be truſted the more becauſe he takes his Cant and his Hiſtory from Biſhop Guthry This Aſſembly aboliſh'd Epiſcopacy, reſtor'd the Church of Scotland to her Rights, and diſannull'd whatever had been acted againſt them ſince King James impos'd Biſhops upon them. " Such Zeal and " ſuch Faithfulneſs, ſays my Scots Author, to the " Principles they profeſs'd, cou'd not fail to prompt " to all proper Means to ſupport what they had " undertaken; and the Marquis of Hamilton be- " ing gone back in Diſguſt, and having us'd ſome " threatening Speeches at his parting, they reſolv'd " not to be ſurpriz'd, but immediately to put " themſelves into a Poſture of Defence, that they " might be able to go thro' with their Undertа- " king. Their arming was not without very good " Intelligence from England of the Reſolution ta- " ken there to reduce them by Force." The Marquis threatening them to their Faces when he went from Scotland, You muſt not think to uſe your Kings now as you did formerly, when they were only Kings of Rebels; the King now has another loyal and warlike Nation at his Command, you ſhall ſoon feel it to your Coſt; wherefore the Engliſh Hiſtorians are manifeſtly partial, who ſay, the King arm'd only in his own Defence, and in charging the Scots with a Deſign to begin the War; it being manifeſt they were capable of no other Deſign than of ſecuring themſelves againſt being trampled on by a bigotted Court and incens'd Clergy, whoſe tyrannical Government had rais'd equal Diſguſt and Dread in the Minds of the People of England, which was well known to thoſe in Scotland; and the latter were aſſur'd from good Hands, they ſhou'd not want Aſſiſtance; and without hope of ſuch Aſſiſtance, it had been Madneſs for the Scots to have taken Arms.

Mem. Ch. Scot. 188.

But that Hope was as yet founded on the general Diſcontent of the Engliſh Nation, which the Scots imagin'd wou'd diſpoſe them to meet Deliverance half way. The pretended Invitation was not till after the firſt Pacification was made, as I ſhall ſhew at large. Mr. Acherley is out in placing it at the firſt Entrance of the Scots, and Echard's Account is all falſe. A.D. 1638.

When News came to London of the Proceedings in Scotland, the King deſir'd his Council to conſider, Whether the Diſobedience of the Scots was a juſt Cauſe for him to uſe the Power of Enggland to make War upon his People of Scotland, conſidering that the Numbers adhering to the Preſbytery, were the general Body of the Nation? The Epiſcopalians, whom they oppos'd, being but a handful of Men, bearing no Proportion with the others. But his Majeſty's imperious Miniſters, ſays my Author, ſoon reſolv'd in the Affirmative; not conſidering what might enſue upon the provoking a People ſo warlike and tenacious. The Scots laid Taxes on themſelves for raiſing and maintaining 18000 Men, and ſent into Sweden and the Low-Countries to invite home the old experienc'd Generals and Officers of their Nation, in whom they cou'd put Confidence, to ſerve their Country on this ſo neceſſary an Occaſion. There is not one of all the Encouragements which Echard tells us the Scots had to undertake the War, that has any Foundation in Fact or Reaſon. The only real Encouragement they had, was the Diſpoſition they believ'd the Engliſh were in to engage in the ſame Cauſe, the Defence of the true Proteſtant Religion, and the Rights, Liberties, and Properties of the two Nations. Acherley, p. 391.

I wou'd not have the Reader think that I ſet a Value on all the Authors I make uſe of; I perhaps have a meaner Opinion of ſome of them than himſelf can have; but if there's an Appearance of Truth in what they ſay, I do not much matter their manner of ſaying it; and beſides, 'tis the Misfortune of all Hiſtorians who write to this Age, that their Word will not paſs without Evidence. Now the more homely the Witneſs, and the more plain his Teſtimony, it is likely to be the more true. For which Reaſon only I make uſe ſometimes of William Lilly, Roger Coke, of Peyton, and Welden. I have intimated in many Places, that Laud's falſe Zeal, his Pride, Obſtinacy, Superſtition and Cruelty led the King into thoſe fatal Meaſures which brought him to a Scaffold; that the Clergy who were Laud's Diſciples, were the main Inſtruments in the Miſeries of thoſe miſerable Times, and that the Scots Troubles were the Beginning of thoſe in England. Let us therefore produce a Witneſs to prove it, and there cannot be a plainer Proof than this given by the Conjurer Lilly. Scots Troubles begin thoſe in England.

" In July 1637, viz. 23d Day, there was great " Diſturbance in Edinburgh about a new Service- " Book endeavour'd to be obtruded on the Scots " by the King and Canterbury. I have heard an " old Woman began the Quarrel by caſting her " Stool at the Prieſt when he read the Service- " Book. Many very modeſt Divines exceedingly " blame both the King and Canterbury for that " Book. It admitted unto the People, as I re- " member, the Communion but in one Kind. Had " his Majeſty firſt endeavour'd the Impoſition of " that lame Book upon the Engliſh, moſt Men did " believe we had ſwallow'd it, and then the Scots " muſt have done it afterwards; for the Clergy at " that time generally were ſuch idle and lazy Lubbers, " and ſo pamper'd with Court Preferment, and Places

" temporal in every Shire of England, and ſuch " flattering Sycophants, that doubtleſs the great " Hand of God was in it; that thoſe rude Scots " firſt broke the Ice, and taught us the Way to ex- " pel an inſulting Prieſthood, and to reſiſt the " King, he endeavouring by unwarrantable Means " to intrude things contrary to the divine Law of " Almighty God upon our Conſciences". The Phraſe is indeed very uncourtly, but the Fact is notorious, and nothing therefore can have a better Claim to Hiſtory. Lilly in another place ſays, " All " Men knew the Scots Troubles were promoted " by the Clergy, whom the Nobility began to " diſdain and ſcorn, and the Gentry and Yeoman- " ry of England extremely to hate; for at this pre- " ſent time the High-Commiſſion Court, rnd other " bawdy Courts, did moſt horrible Injuſtice againſt " the Perſons and Eſtates of any Gentlemen who " by Misfortune came thither".

Commiſſions were this Year iſſu'd to certain Lords and Gentlemen, with a Power to impoſe new and unheard-of Impoſts on various Commodities. The Earl of Arundel had alſo a Commiſſion to take into his Hands the military Charge of the Northern Parts; and the Earl of Worceſter a Papiſt, was impower'd to raiſe an Army of Papiſts in Wales. This, ſays my anonymous Author, was well known, that he was to maſter the Weſt Marches, and aſſiſt the Iriſh Army's landing at Milford, as Need ſhou'd require; and to further it, the Earl of Bridgwater Lord-Preſident of thoſe Marches, was commanded to reſign his Place.

By the Advice of Archbiſhop Laud, according to Whitlocke, the King haſten'd his Levies of Men and Money without Conſent of Parliament; and be-
BISHOPS WAR. cauſe this was the BISHOPS WAR, it was held fit that they ſhou'd contribute largely towards the Preſervation of their own Hierarchy; accordingly Orders were iſſu'd from the Council to the Archbiſhops of Canterbury and York, to ſend Directions to the other Biſhops to give largely, which they did, and about 1000 Pounds was rais'd in each Dioceſe by a Medium. The Doctors of the Commons gave 700 Pounds to the Biſhops War; in raiſing which Sir John Lamb the Informer ſhew'd his Activity. The Queen wrote a Letter to the Papiſts to contribute, which they alſo did very largely; and by theſe and other ſuch extraordinary Means, Biſhop Juxon had heap'd up 600000*l.* in the Exchequer for this agreeable Service. The Papiſts were ſo over-liberal, that the Pope was forc'd to write Ruſhw. to them ſuddenly to deſiſt from making ſuch Offers. In the mean time the Remonſtrances, Declarations, and Pamphlets publiſh'd by the Covenanters, were diſpers'd in England, and their Emiſſaries and Agents inſinuated into the Company of all who were any way diſcontented at the Proceedings of the State. Thoſe who had been impriſon'd for the Loan, or diſtrain'd for Ship-Money, or were otherwiſe diſoblig'd, had Applications made to them from the Scots, whoſe Deſigns were ſecretly favour'd and aſſiſted, eſpecially by ſuch as inclin'd to the Presbyterian Government, or whom the publick Adminiſtration had in any wiſe diſguſted; which muſt needs be nine Parts in ten of the People of England, who by themſelves or their Friends had been perſecuted in Perſon or Purſe during the Male-Adminiſtration of this Reign.

The King ſent a Letter to moſt of the Nobility, certifying his Reſolution of going in Perſon into the North with an Army againſt the Scots, for the Defence of the Realm of England, and Ruſhw. 791. the Glory of God, and requiring them to attend his Royal Standard at York. The Towns of Hull and Newcaſtle were order'd to be fortified at the Charge of the Inhabitants. At this Time the Church of Rome had Agents in Scotland as well as England; one of them was Chamberlain a Prieſt, whom Richlieu ſent thither to help blow up the Coals that were kindling. A Letter of his was intercepted, wherein he ſaid, Scotland is in a very ill A.D.1639. Poſture, and in evident Danger to ſever it ſelf from the Crown. And in another Letter, The King hath taken a Reſolution to tame the Scots by Force, and to this Purpoſe goeth about to raiſe an Army in Ireland, not daring to truſt himſelf with the Engliſh, who are already much irritated againſt him, by raiſing of the Shipmoney, which he pretends to raiſe to maintain his Fleet, and which they refuſe downright to pay. This Counſel of raiſing an Army, has been ſuggeſted to him by the Archbiſhop of Canterbury, and the Preſident of Ireland: Strafford is meant: who are they alone that govern him, for he hath never yet opened his Mouth, or ſpoken one ſole Word of it to his Council: The which highly diſobligeth all theſe Lords; and Men hold this Counſel of the Army from Ireland, a moſt pernicious Counſel: But I know not what better Method he cou'd take, for it is moſt dangerous to raiſe it in England, where all the World is in Diſcontent. For to raiſe an Army here, were to give them the Sword in their Hands: And they have ſuch a Correſpondence with the Scots, that they begin already to break the Altars which the Biſhops had erected, and to accuſe the Biſhops of Crimes. There was another Letter written by a Romiſh Prieſt, to one Monſieur And---, wherein he wrote thus; " Our " Scots Buſineſs troubles us ſhrewdly, and grows " worſe and worſe. They will have a Parliament, " and the King (for the Conſequence of it in " this Kingdom) will never permit it; and ſo they " have taken a Reſolution to levy an Army in " Ireland, which is held here by wiſe Men to " be a very deſperate Counſel." The Lord Clarendon aſſures us, the wiſe Men thought it very wholſome Counſel. Again, " The King conſults with King's
" none but the Archbiſhop, and the Deputy of Weakneſs.
" Ireland, which diſguſts all, and makes Men ſee " more Weakneſs in him than ever was imagin'd." The Archdeacon aſſures us, he was wiſer than the wiſeſt of his Counſellors. Among the many Pro- Proclama- clamations of Importance which were publiſh'd tions.
this Year, we find theſe; 1. One forbidding the ſending Food to the Presbyterians at New England. 2. Another to forbid the Tranſportation of Engliſh Horns. 3. Forbidding the wearing of Demicaſters 4. About Cards and Dice. 5. The Cure of the King's Evil, which generally coſt two or three Proclamations in a Year or two. 6. The Cure of the King's Evil again. 7. Concerning Starch. Thus we ſee, that beſides the levying War againſt the Scots at the Inſtigation of Laud, the Miniſters of State had not a great deal to do.

The King had got together an Army of 16000 A.D.1639. Foot, and 5000 Horſe, of which the Earl of Arundel was made General, the Earl of Eſſex Lieutenant-General, and the Earl of Holland General of the Horſe. A Fleet was alſo equipp'd, conſiſting of 16 Men of War. Sir John Pennington was Admiral of it; and Captain Popham, afterwards Admiral, commanded the City Ship; and though he was a Presbyterian, did not refuſe the Service; which gives one Reaſon to ſurmiſe there was no thought of Blows. Five thouſand Men were put aboard the Fleet, under the Command of the Marquis of Hamilton, who was to land near Edinburgh, and make a Diverſion, while the Army of the Covenanters march'd towards England.

The Reverend Hiſtorian opens this Piece of Hiſtory with ſome flat Contradictions to Truth. As, King Charles was too yielding, Laud's real Advice was for Peace. The Flower of the Engliſh Gentry chearfully put themſelves upon Action. As to the yielding, Larrey ſays, he ſeem'd to grant them all they ask'd, in order to reduce them afterwards by force of Arms. As to Laud's adviſing to Peace, ſee what the Scots Commiſſioners alledge, among a hundred Things againſt him in their Charge. Canterbury procured us to be declar'd Rebels and Traytors in all the Pariſh Kirks of England. Canterbury kindled the War againſt us. Canterbury ſaid at the Biſhops War. Canterbury was the prime Incendiary. General Ludlow tells us, how the Flower of the Engliſh Gentry chearfully put themſelves upon Action. "Though divers of the Nobility and Gentry did "appear, yet was it rather out of Compliment than "Affection to the Deſign, being ſenſible of the "Oppreſſions they themſelves lay under, and how "dangerous to the People of England, a thorough "Succeſs againſt the Scots might prove." Echard then informs us of ſome Omens, a Commodity he deals in as well as Ghoſts and Apparitions, which being now the Entertainment of old Women, Children, and Fools only, are happily plac'd in his Hiſtory, to be forgotten. A Swallow dung'd three drops of Dung, being immediately converted into Blood, cou'd never be got out by Cleanſing. Such Weight as this wou'd ſink any Hiſtory in the World. Archbiſhop Spotſwood adviſ'd the King to have no Mercy on the Scots, but to cut them off all by the Sword and the Gallows; for they were gain'd by Puniſhments, and loſt by Favours.

The Earl of Eſſex, with a Detachment of Horſe and Foot, poſſeſs'd himſelf of Berwick, which the Covenanters intended to Garriſon. Echard affirms, the Scots had not then any conſiderable Body of Men nearer than Edinburgh: But a Scots Hiſtorian writes the quite contrary. "When the King ad- Mem. Ch. Scot.
"vanc'd towards the Borders, they were ready in "the Field, and that with ſuch a reſolute Counte-
"nance, as that the Engliſh Army cared not to at"tack them. The Archdeacon: The Scots were
"but 3000 Men, ill arm'd, and ordinary Fellows."
The reverſe of this is our Scots Hiſtory. "When P. 189.
"the Earl of Holland, General of the Horſe to "the King, advanc'd in a Bravade with a ſtrong
"Brigade of Horſe, and a Detachment of Foot,
"he was driven back faſter than he came, by "half the Number of the Scots Cavalry, with
"Musketeers in their Intervals; a manner of Fight"ing which the Engliſh had not ſeen, and which
"ſome Scotch Officers had learnt under the great
"Guſtavus Adolphus. It would make too much
"Sport with the Engliſh Courage and Bravery,
"which is ſo well confirm'd in the World, to "give an Account how like Scoundrels this Army
"behav'd. An Engliſh Hiſtorian of Note ſays,
"they were rais'd by the Clergy, and imitated their
"Maſters; for as the Clergy, who prompted this "War, accompanied the King to York when he "came to take the Field, ſo the raw and undiſci-
"plin'd Army accompany'd him to the Field, but "left him when they ſhou'd have engag'd. In a "word, none of the Troops, after the firſt Skir-
"miſh, car'd to engage, or to look the Scots in the "Face; who, on the other hand, though they
"wou'd not attack the King, yet ſtood ready, and "ſhew'd all Forwardneſs to give Battel." The Reverend Hiſtorian's Account of them makes theſe Scoundrels, being the Clergy's Troop, according to the Scots Author, to be ſuch Heroes, that one of them offer'd, with 2000 Horſe only, to make the Scots creep upon their Bellies to beg his Majeſty's Mercy. It is worth Obſervation, that theſe Heroick Perſons preſerv'd this Air through the whole Courſe of the Civil War, in the midſt of Defeats and Diſgraces. They flatter'd their Maſters with hopes of their being as invincible in the Field as themſelves were in the Spiritual Courts. The Truth is, the King encamp'd on the Engliſh Side of the Tweed, and the Covenanters at Kelſo in Scotland, being about 12000 Foot, and 2000 Horſe, much inferior to the King's Forces in Number. So that thoſe Engliſh Lords and Gentlemen who were near his Majeſty, and by no means willing to have the Scots Army deſtroy'd, for fear of the ill Conſequences in England, found that it was not convenient for them to hazard a Battel at that Time, by laying too great Streſs on the Good-will of the Engliſh Officers and Soldiers. They therefore endeavour'd to bring on a Treaty, by repreſenting to his Majeſty that it was an unnatural Thing for him to make War upon his own People of Scotland, merely for endeavouring to be deliver'd from the Innovation of the Common Prayer; the ſame being in Reality a matter of Difference in Religious Forms, not material enough to be purſu'd with Bloodſhed. Ach. 391.
The Scots at the ſame time ſent an humble Repreſentation to the King, profeſſing great Deference to his Royal Perſon, and requeſting no more than a Redreſs of their Grievances. This was thought ſo reaſonable, that his Majeſty cou'd not well deny it; and the Marquis of Hamilton having only appear'd before Leith, where the Covenanters were prepar'd to receive him in another manner than he expected, and writing to the King they were ſo powerful he cou'd attempt nothing on that Side, his Majeſty was prevail'd upon to conſent to a Treaty. His Commiſſioners were the Earls of Arundel, Pembroke, Holland, Salisbury, and Berkſhire, Sir Henry Vane, and Secretary Cook. The Scots Commiſſioners were the Earls of Rothes and Dumferling, the Lord Lowdon, Douglaſs, Sheriff of Twedale, Mr. Henderſon, and Mr. Johnſon. After four or five Days Debate, the Commiſſioners on both Sides came to a Concluſion for a Pacification to continue twenty Years. Both Armies to be Disbanded. An Act of Oblivion. The King's Forts and Caſtles to be reſtor'd. An Aſſembly and Parliament to be call'd, to make a full Settlement. My Scots Author writes, "Notice was given the P. 190.
"Scots Army, that they might ſend ſome to treat
"with his Majeſty upon their Demands; which "was done, and in which all Artifice was us'd to "make a ſuperficial Agreement, that the Scots might

"rel." Several of the King's Commiſſioners were well-wiſhers to the Scots; and it is ſuppos'd, that in their Conferences with the Scotch Commiſſioners they made no Scruple of diſcovering their Thoughts to them, and aſſuring them, that though this was not an Opportunity for them to inſiſt on other Terms, yet if they wou'd keep up the Spirit, and as well as they cou'd with good Policy, the Force they had, their Friends in England wou'd let them know when it wou'd be a fit Time for them to appear again, and in the joint Names of both Kingdoms demand a Parliament in both to redreſs Grievances. There was no formal Invitation, but ſuch general Diſcourſes of the Diſcontents of the Engliſh, their Deſires to be reliev'd, and their Readineſs to aſſiſt in it. The King disbanded his Army with very diſagreeable Circumſtances, as if he had not approv'd of their Behaviour. The Gentry were ſuddenly diſmiſs'd, without any Acknowledgment of their Love and Loyalty, to uſe the Archdeacon's Words. The Earl of Eſſex was diſcharg'd without Ceremony, and ſhortly after refus'd the Command of Needwood Foreſt. The Earl of Newcaſtle was ſo affronted by the Earl of Holland, that he ſent him a Challenge, but the King interpos'd. Sir John Cook was remov'd from the Secretary's Place, and Sir Henry Vane put into it, contrary to the Endeavours of the Earl of Strafford, and purely by the powerful Influence of the Queen.

The grand Point aim'd at by the Party in England who wiſh'd well to the Scots, was to procure a free Parliament, as has been obſerv'd, which they knew wou'd remove thoſe imperious Miniſters and Meaſures that aggrieved both Nations. A Paper The Pacification with the Scots, Lud. 8.

A.D.1639. was publiſh'd highly reflecting on the fraudulent Pacification, which was order'd to be burnt by the common Hangman, as was the Pacification it ſelf, under Colour that many falſe Copies of that Agreement had been diſpers'd by the Scots. Lilly tells this Story thus, "That Day which was aſſign'd for "certain of the Engliſh Nobility and Scottiſh to "treat about thoſe Articles of Pacification the "Scottiſh Nobility were to produce, the Nobles "of each Nation being ſet, the Earl of Arundel "began with much Gravity to rebuke the Scots for "their Unadviſedneſs and Rebellion, in raiſing their "Army againſt their lawful King, and diſturbing "the Peace of both Nations; and yet he com-"mended the good Nature of the King, who was "notwithſtanding their high Provocation and Miſ-"demeanors, very inclinable to hear their juſt "Grievances; and to that Purpoſe had appointed "himſelf, and ſome other Lords of his Council, "to meet them that Day to treat with them, and "to hear their Grievances. This gallant Man was "proceeding farther in his Speech, and aggrava-"ting the Scots Offences, when, lo, unexpectedly, "his Majeſty enter'd the Room, and call'd for the "Articles the Scots deſir'd to be ratify'd, read them "ſcarce over, but took Pen and Ink immediately "and ſign'd them, without ever adviſing with any "of his Council; which ſo diſpleas'd the Nobility "of the Engliſh Nation, that the very next Day "after ſigning the Scots Articles, they all haſted "home to their own Habitations, the King ſtaying "behind, and for his daily Exerciſe playing at a "ſcurvy Game, call'd Pigeon-Holes or Nine-Pins; "his Fellow-Gameſters alſo were equal to the P. 38. "Game, viz. Lackeys, Pages, and ſuch others, "ejuſdem Generis. He again no ſooner came to "London, but, as I remember, caus'd thoſe Arti-"cles to be burn'd by the common Hangman, "making himſelf as ridiculous in doing the one, "as he was reputed weak and ſimple of Judg-P. 39. "ment in doing the other. The burning of the "Scots Articles was imputed to the Importunity "of the proud Clergy and Biſhops." The Cove-nanters were by this confirm'd in their Jealouſies that there was Hypocriſy in the Treaty. They kept up their Fortifications at Leith, their Councils and Meetings. They inforc'd Subſcriptions to the Acts of the Aſſembly at Glaſcow, contrary to the King's Declaration. They declar'd thoſe that had taken up Arms for his Majeſty, Incendiaries and Traytors. They annull'd all the Acts of the College of Juſtice. And the King, who had given them Hopes of his Preſence in the enſuing Parlia-ment, reſolv'd not to expoſe himſelf to new Af-fronts, which he was ſure to meet with at Edinburgh after this new Diſguſt, occaſion'd by burning the Pacification, which his Friends in England thought diſhonourable, but the Puritans and Peesbyterians were pleaſed with it, as it gave the Scots Time to increaſe their Strength.

Scotch Affairs. According to the King's Direction, the General Aſſembly ſat at Edinburgh, and aboliſh'd Epiſcopacy, the five Articles of Perth, the High Commiſſion and Salm. 166. Liturgy: All which was aſſented to by the Earl of Traquair, his Majeſty's High-Commiſſioner, who alſo ſign'd the Covenant, not as High-Commiſſioner, P. 2. but as Earl of Traquair. The Biſhops of Dunkeld and Orkney abjur'd Epiſcopacy, as being not founded P. 5 on the Word of God: So Larry words it, but was attended with terrible and pernicious Conſequences in ſeveral Parts of Chriſtendom, particularly in the Church of Scotland. After the Aſſembly; ſat the Parliament, who highly debated the Choice of the Lords of the Articles, in regard the Biſhops were aboliſh'd, of whom eight us'd to be nam'd by the King to be of that Number, but now it was voted that his Majeſty ſhould nominate eight Noblemen inſtead of them for this Seſſions only, and after-wards there ſhould be no Nomination for them. The Parliament fram'd an Act Reciſſory, touching the Exchequer, Judicatory Proxies, and Ward Lands; which encroaching on the King's Prerogative, his Majeſty order'd his Commiſſioners to Prorogue them: But the Parliament declar'd the Prorogation illegal, as without their Conſent; and ſent four De-puties to London; the Earl of Dumferling, the Lord Loudon, Sir William Douglas, and Mr. Robert Bar-clay, to juſtify their Proceedings. Thither alſo came the Earl of Traquair, and both Parties were order'd to be heard by a Committee of Council. For the Scotch Deputies, purſuant to Inſtructions from their Principals, refus'd to addreſs themſelves to the Council, and his Majeſty condeſcended to hear them himſelf. Many paſſionate Expreſſions and Recriminations paſt between the Deputies and Traquair; but the latter was moſt favour'd, and the King refus'd to ratify the Acts of the Aſſembly and Parliament. A.D.1639.

During theſe Scottiſh Broils, an Engagement happen'd on the Engliſh Coaſt, near Dover, be-tween the Dutch and Spaniſh Fleets: The latter, about ſeventy Sail, were bound to Dunkirk with Recruits of Men and Money for that Garriſon. The Dutch Fleet intercepted them, and attack'd them near Dover and Calais. The Dutch, though but twenty-five Sail, took two Spaniſh Galeons, ſunk another, and ſhatter'd the reſt. The Spani-ards made towards the Coaſt of England, and the Dutch follow'd them, but wou'd not attack them within our King's Dominions. The Spaniſh Reſi-dent at London, importun'd his Majeſty to keep off the Dutch for two Tides. The Dutch Ambaſſa-dor made Application to him againſt the Spaniards. The King in Amity with both, reſolv'd to ſtand Neuter; and indeed had no Maritime Strength ready at that Time, nor Diſpoſition at any Time to do otherwiſe. The Spaniſh Admiral by Night con-vey'd away fourteen Ships, and 4000 Men in them. His Majeſty ſent the Earl of Arundel on board the Spaniſh Admiral, Don Antonio d'Oquendo, to deſire him to retreat as ſoon as the Wind was fair, be-cauſe he would not have an Engagement upon his Seas; but the Wind continuing long contrary, and the Dutch Fleet being reinforc'd, encompaſs'd their Enemies within Piſtol-Shot for ſome Days: At laſt Van Tromp, the Dutch Admiral, engag'd them, and by his Men of War and Fireſhips, forc'd them to cut their Cables. Twenty-three of the Spaniſh Ships ran aſhore and ſtranded in the Downs. Don Oquendo with the reſt put to Sea, and was purſu'd by Van Tromp, who burnt the Admiral of Portugal, took eleven more of the Spaniſh Fleet, ſunk five, and drove three more on the French Coaſt: So that only ten eſcap'd, and got into Dunkirk. Whit-locke informs us many believ'd this Armado was de-ſign'd for an Invaſion of England, by Encourage-ment of the Pope's Agents and Emiſſaries; and it does not diſagree with the Pope's Orders to the Pa-piſts to deſiſt from contributing to the Biſhops War, in Suppoſition that their Money might be wanted for ſome better Service even than that.

The young Prince Elector, purſuant to the Ad-vice given him by the young Prince of Orange, came again into England at this Time, to ſollicit the King of England, his Unkle, to procure him the Command of the Swediſh Army in Germany, upon the Death of Duke Bernard. His Majeſty deſir'd the French Ambaſſador to move it to his Maſter, who willingly undertook it, and Cardinal Richlieu promis'd to further it. In the mean Time his Electoral Highneſs precipitated his Journey into Germany, and without ſtaying for the French King's procuring him that Command, he attempted to paſs through France in Diſguiſe, to reach the Swe-diſh Army; but the Engliſh Ships in the Downs ſalu-ting him, and his own Ship diſcharging a Volley at his landing at Bologne, the French ſuſpected there was a Perſon of high Rank aboard, and appre-hended him. The Prince deny'd himſelf upon Ex-amination, which increaſing their Suſpicion, he was ſecur'd Junto for Scotland. The same Night that the Scots Deputies, the Lords Dunferling and Loudon return'd to Edinburgh, a great part of the Castle-Wall fell down, with the Cannon mounted. The Covenanters suppos'd it to be done by Treachery, and wou'd not suffer it to be re-edify'd as his Majesty commanded, which highly offended him, and he concluded to force them to Obedience. In order to this, he appointed a select Council for Scottish Affairs; and at the Head of it was always Laud. Larrey writes, there were many Courtiers who condemn'd the Scots War; the end of which, as they said, was only to establish Arbitrary Power and Episcopacy; and the King was only the Archbishop of Canterbury's Knight, Laud, Strafford and Hamilton were this select Council, term'd a Junto; and they resolv'd, that at any Rate the King's Authority must be vindicated, and rescu'd from Contempt. Sanderson tells us, they voted to force the Scotch to submit.

Ach. 393. The Earl of Traquair brought with him to London, a Letter to the French King, which he had intercepted 'Twas advis'd and compos'd by Montross, and transcrib'd by Lowdon. It was sign'd by Rothes, Montross, Lesley, Mar, Montgomery, Lowdon, Forrester; directed Au Roy. They address'd to the French King, as a Sanctuary for afflicted States, praying the wonted Assistance which that Crown had always afforded to their Nation. This Letter was no doubt drawn up by Advice of Richlieu's Emissaries in Scotland, who were order'd to promise the Scots Malecontents his Master's Assistance. His Majesty was mightily concern'd at Sight of it, and objected it to the Scots as an insufferable Indignity: But the Covenanters boldly avow'd the Letter as a National Act, in which all Men, without Exception, were involv'd; arguing, that when a People are distress'd by Sea and Land, it is allow'd by the Laws of God and Man, to call for Help from God and Man. They also recriminated, That a Letter lately sent to the Pope, containing Matters utterly unjustifiable was not hid from the World. There was something merry in this Story of the Letter, which Lord Clarendon and Mr. Echard never heard of; though they had heard of a silly Tale about the Address Au Roy. In the first Draft of this Letter, instead of Rayons de Soleil, Rays of the Sun, 'twas said, Rayes de Soleil. Now Ray in French is a Thornback; and when Lord Lauderdale's Father read it, he refus'd to sign it; not because it was Treason, but because it was Nonsense; saying, the French King's Glory shin'd like a Thornback.

The Earl of Dumferling and the Lord Lowdon were come back to London with fresh Demands, to have the Prorogation taken off, the Castles of Edingburgh and Dumbarton evacuated; and an Oath which the Scots in England and Ireland were oblig'd to take contrary to the Covenant, vacated. Instead of a favourable Answer, the Lord Lowdon was sent to the Tower, for transcribing the abovemention'd Letter, where he was very likely to have MS. M. F. been dispatch'd, as by the following Story, which has to vouch it an Authority too Noble to be call'd in Question.

Lord Lowdon's Danger in the Tower. Sir William Belfour, Governor of the Tower, when Lord Lowdon was committed, some Days after receiv'd a Warrant from the King for the beheading that Lord the next Day within the Tower, for fear of any Disturbance if it had been done openly on the Hill. The Lieutenant, who was at Cards with Lowdon, chang'd Countenance, and holding up his Hands in Amazement, shew'd his Lordship the Warrant; who said to him, Well, Sir, you must do your Duty: I only desire Time to make a Settlement on some younger Children, and that you will let my Lawyer come to me for that End; to which Balfour consented; and the Lawyer carry'd away with him a Letter to the Marquis of Hamilton, informing him of the Matter, and telling him, He was a Scotchman, and must answer it to his Country. Balfour follows the Lawyer to the Marquis, whom they cou'd not presently find, it being Night, at last they found him at Lady Clayton's; and having deliver'd him the Lord Lowdon's Letter, which Balfour further explain'd, the Marquis took Sir William with him to Court, not staying for his Coach, and desired Admittance about a Business of very great Importance to his Majesty. He wes told the King and Queen were in Bed, and had given positive Orders not to admit any one. The Marquis in vain insisted on his own Right as one of the Lords of the Bedchamber, and the Right of the Lieutenant of the Tower, especially when he had any State Prisoner: Upon which Sir William knock'd at the King's Bedchamber Door, which being open'd to him, he fell upon his Knees, and having just mention'd the Warrant, his Majesty stopp'd him, saying, it shall be executed. Upon which the Marquis enters, and falling on his Knees, humbly expostulated with the King concerning it. The Queen express'd great Displeasure at his Intrusion: But the Marquis taking her up short, let her know she was a Subject as well as himself; and that the Business he came about was of the highest Concernment to his Majesty, to herself, to the whole Nation, and to himself in particular. He then spoke with great Earnestness to the King, and us'd all the Arguments he cou'd think of to dissuade him from the Execution. But all to no purpose. Sir, says he, if you persist in this Resolution, no Scotsman will ever draw a Sword for you; or if they wou'd who shou'd command them? The King reply'd, Yourself. No, Sir, said Hamilton; I dare never appear in Scotland afterwards. The King nevertheless swore twice, By God Lowdon shall dye. Then the Marquis craving Leave to speak one word more said, Sir, I desire your Majesty to look out for another House, for within four and twenty Hours there will not be one Stone of Whitehall left upon another. This touch'd the King more than all the Arguments of Pity, Justice, or distant Danger. He call'd for the Warrant, tore it, and dismiss'd the Marquis and Lieutenant somewhat sullenly. This Incident being not in Bishop Burnet's Memoirs of the Dukes of Hamilton, he was ask'd why he did not insert it, and reply'd, I knew it, but durst not tell it. He owns there the King was advis'd to proceed capitally against Lowdon, but Lord Hamilton oppos'd it. The late Duke Hamilton own'd it to be true in the late Queen's Time, adding, I'll print it if I outlive her. And this Story is so well known to all the People of the first Quality in North Britain, that I am not afraid to conclude from thence, there was no Passion so strong in King Charles the First as the Desire of arbitrary Power and Revenge on those whom he took to be his Enemies. *A.D.*1639.

About this Time it was resolv'd to call a Parliament to obtain Supplies for the Scots War. The Junto agreed to it, as the only Way to raise the Money they wanted; and as Buckingham formerly had the Merit of advising the calling a Parliament, so Strafford has it now to ingratiate him with the People. Whitlocke writes, "In the mean time, and it was a strange time for such a Business so near the Sitting of a Parliament, "the King tells "his Lords, It will be long e're the Parliament meets, "and Subsidies granted by them will be long in le-"vying: In the Interim my Affairs suffer without "some speedy Course of Supply". Upon which the Lords told him they wou'd engage their own Credit. Strafford subscrib'd 20000 l. Richmond as much. Hamilton excus'd himself on account of Inability. Most of the rest subscrib'd, and some few refus'd. The Judges and Officers of Courts of Justice Ecclesiastical and Temporal were assess'd by the Council according to the Quality and Profit of their

*A.D.*1639. their Places. But thro' a Miſtake the Six Clerks in Chancery were tax'd 2000 l. a piece, as much as their Places were then worth. The Queen appointed Sir Kenelm Digby, whoſe Father was hang'd for the Gunpowder Plot, and Mr. Walter Mountague, afterwards an Abbot in France, to negotiate with the Papiſts, who now contributed beyond their Abilities. And Sanderſon confeſſes their large Contributions gave Occaſion throughout the War to call the King's Forces the Popiſh Army.

Biſhops War.

The Scots on their Side ſend for their Commanders home, who had ſerv'd in Sweden, Denmark, Germany, and the Netherlands; and one Hiſtorian, as great an Admirer of this Government as Mr. Echard, and as great a Politician, aſſures us, they ſollicited the Turk to fall upon the Emperor, and prevent his aſſiſting King Charles againſt them. If the Jeſuits had any Hand in the enſuing Commotions, as is pretended by a Letter of Andreas de Habernfield, a noble Bohemian, Servant to the Queen of Bohemia, it muſt be from an Opinion of the Weakneſs of the Covenanters, whoſe Deſigns they hop'd wou'd end in their Deſtruction. Great Reſort was made to the Scots Commiſſioners in London, and many ſecret Councils were held with them by the diſcontented Engliſh. Whitlock names ſome of their Correſpondents: The Earls of Eſſex, Bedford, Holland, the Lord Say, Mr. Hampden, Mr. Pym, and divers other Lords and Gentlemen of great Quality, who, he ſays, were deep in with them. And Welwood ſhews us what was the Subſtance of their Correſpondence: "Informations of the Backwardneſs of "England to aſſiſt the King in this War; and that "they were well aſſur'd of Friends all over the "Kingdom, and ſome of neareſt Acceſs to the "King's Perſon". But he thinks it was not theſe Informations which encourag'd the Scots not only to march again to the Borders of England, but to invade and poſſeſs themſelves of the Northern Counties. He is of Opinion they took that bold Step by means of a forg'd Letter they receiv'd juſt when they were ready to march, ſign'd by ſeveral of the principal Noblemen of England; which is the Invitation ſo much talk'd of by Mr. Acherley, Dr. Welwood, Biſhop Burnet, and even by Archdeacon Echard, tho' very confuſedly and obſcurely. This very Letter I have read ſeveral times, and the Copy of it will now be communicated to the Publick with the exact Hiſtory of that whole Secret.

*A.D.*1640. Mention has been made of the general Encouragement given the Scots by the Engliſh to proceed in their Undertakings after the Pacification was burnt, and a new Rupture ſeem'd to be drawing on. But as the Scots had only Words, and no Engagement, nor any thing under hand, Sir Archibald Johnſton Lord of Wariſton, a Man of great Zeal and Abilities, who kept a conſtant Correſpondence with Lord Lowdon, one of the Scots Commiſſioners in England, wrote to his Lordſhip to get ſome ſolid Aſſurance of Aſſiſtance from their Friends in England. The laſt Letter to the Lord Lowdon on that Subject was dated the 23d of June 1640, and ſign'd Nathaniel Black. The Contents as follows in the genuine Scottiſh Stile.

'MIND theſe ar by Warrand of the beſt and 'prymeſt to deſire you moſt ſeriouſly to 'deal with our Friends in all Earneſtneſs, as they 'deſire the great Buſineſs to proſper for their and 'our Deliverance, that they would now at laſt 'find out the Ways of giving us full Aſſurance of 'their concurring with us in their Perſons, Means 'and Credit; for ſeing our Army, as we truſt, a-'bout 25000 Men, Horſe and Foot (if not more, 'as we have appointed and expects, but counts the 'leaſt) has now their Rendezvous at Leith this 'Week and the Beginning of the next; whereof 'ſome Regiments in Fife are come this Day, and *A.D.*1640. 'the Weſt Regiments will be here on Thurſday, and 'that before the 10th of July we will be all lying 'at the Borders ready to march in on 6 Hours 'Advertiſement; and ſeing the beſt national Heads 'amongs us in natural Parts and Wiſdom will be 'queſtioning both the Warrant and Call of our 'Voyage and Danger, and Sequels thereof, except 'firſt by one ſolid Way or other we be clear'd of 'our Friends Approbation of that our Courſe, and 'Concurrence with us in it: Therefore ye muſt 'above all deal with them, as they love their and 'our common Safety and Deliverance, now when 'it is ſo near and eaſy by their Aſſurance before 'and Concurrence after our Entry, that they wou'd 'againſt that time of our lying down on the Bor-'ders (beſides the Relations made by bare Words, 'unknown Papers, and common Carriers of Ser-'vants, whereupon we are come ſo far, but dare 'not hazard the Flower of our Nation thereupon) 'further aſſure us of their Approbation and Con-'currence, either by Subſcriptions of ſome princi-'pal Perſons ſent to us, or by ſome eminent Per-'ſon or Perſons (whom we might truſt for the 'reſt) that joining with us (allbeit it were but 'one) their ſingle Perſons immediately before our 'Entry, or by their riſing in one or ſundry Bodies 'amongs themſelves, or by ſending to us near the 'Borders ſome preſent Supply of Money, or clear 'Evidence where we ſhall find it ready near hand, 'that we might pay for our Entertainment in the 'paſſage, or by any other ſolid and certain way 'of Engagement and Aſſurance, whilke we do not 'preſume to preſcribe in the particular, but above 'all recommend it in general, that their Grant of 'it (in any way that would ſatisfy themſelves, if 'they were in our Caſe, and we in theirs) may 'farther confirm our Conſcience of our Calls, and 'ſtrengthen our Hand againſt the Apprehenſions 'of Danger from the invironing Forces of a whole 'forraine, potent Nation, if they concurred una-'nimouſly againſt us, as Invaders of them in a 'hoſtile way; whereas the Lord knows our Inten-'tions and Actions ſhall be for them as for our 'own Souls. Beſides this, there ſeems to be a 'Neceſſity of our meeting on the Borders before 'our Entry with ſome eminent and judicious Per-'ſons, that having advis'd how they may reſolve 'there (if they think it neceſſary, as we apprehend, 'but conclude nothing) that as in 1585. (beſides 'that at the Reformation) there was a League in-'tended between Queen Elizabeth and King James 'the VIth, and the two Dominions againſt the 'Council of Trent; ſo there may be ſome League 'and Band drawn up, wherein as we may profeſs 'our ſincere Reſolutions for them as for ourſelves, 'ſo as we go peaceably without wronging any 'through the Countries, all Favourers of the Pro-'teſtant Religion and Liberties of the Kingdom 'may ſubſcribe as a Mark of Diſtinction from our 'common Foes the Papiſts, Prelates, and their 'Adherents, ſome Band of this Kind for main-'taining the Proteſtant Religion, and the ſeveral 'Churches and Liberties of the Kingdom; for 'having the ſame Friends and Foes in this Cauſe; 'for making no Peace without ſettling both 'Churches and Kingdoms, and for mutual Con-'currence with others againſt our common Ad-'verſaries Papiſts and Prelates in that Cauſe; and 'to that End we take not on us to preſcribe the 'Way to be taken after our Entry, nor the parti-'cular Way of their aſſuring us before our Entry. 'But as an Aſſurance of us before our Entry, and 'Band of Conjunction after our Entry, is neceſ-'ſary for the Safety and Surety of both Nations in 'one another; ſo we leave to their Wiſdom to 'conſider this or any other Mean God ſhall direct 'them to think of moſt conducible to this great 'Work on Earth in hand. For beſides that, we 'ſhall have ready by the Grace of God our De‘ claration of our innocent Intention and Carriage ‘ ſo fully, clearly and brotherly (upon the Grounds ‘ ye ſent down) as ſhall give great Satisfaction to ‘ them all.

‘ But it's time to return to our Aſſurance be- ‘ fore hand, whereunto we ſuſpect the greateſt ‘ Impedimenr to be the Hazard of their revealing ‘ it. By God's Aſſiſtance we are reſolv'd on a ‘ ſolid way of Secrecy in the Particulars, whilke ‘ will be intruſted to a very few moſt ſure Per- ‘ ſons, (albeit by Generals we would be the more ‘ inabled to encourage the Army that will relye ‘ much on their Confidence in ſome few) as know- ‘ ing our own and the Cauſe's Prejudice in the ‘ Diſcovery and Danger of our Friends; and on ‘ the other Part, ſeing we will then be lying on ‘ the Borders ready to march in on that Aſſurance ‘ before it can be diſcover'd, and to concur with ‘ them and they with us before they can be indan- ‘ ger'd, they will be in no more Hazard by aſſu- ‘ ring us immediately before our Entry, nor they ‘ will be by declaring themſelves for us after our ‘ Entry, according to their Reſolutions and Promi- ‘ ſes: for by the Lord's Aſſiſtance we ſhall follow ‘ hard, and hinder the King's Forces from harm- ‘ ing them. And as this Fore-Aſſurance is no Pre- ‘ judice to them, (whom no doubt when all is done ‘ the King and their Adverſaries ſuſpect, and know ‘ well enough already, but for fear of Tumults ab- ‘ ſtain from meddling with them) ſo it will be a ‘ great Incouragement to us of God's Call for ‘ their Deliverance as well as for our own. We ‘ cannot think that they who reſolve to wear their ‘ Lives, Liberties and Eſtates with us in this com- ‘ mon Cauſe of Religion and Liberty, will be ſlack ‘ to give us the Fore-Aſſurances thereof by all ‘ poſſible and probable Means; as it wou'd be a ‘ Token of our Inconſiderateneſs in ſo weighty ‘ and ſo kittle a Paſſage, ſo their ſhifting or refu- ‘ ſing would be apprehended by ſome as a Ground ‘ of Jealouſy, leſt they fail'd us in our greateſt en- ‘ compaſſing Straits. God is our Witneſs, we de- ‘ ſire and intend their Deliverance as our own.

‘ It were a pitiful Caſe, that both ſhould fail for ‘ Want of Aſſurance and Correſpondence, when ‘ Matters are brought to ſo great a Height, and ‘ our Army's lying on the Borders, the ſole and ‘ principal Means in any Probability, either of ‘ God's Way or Man's Way, to effectuate both; ‘ but we truſt they will find out the Ways in their ‘ Wiſdom to give us Satisfaction herein, as by ‘ God's Aſſiſtance we intend, and ſhall endeavour ‘ in all our Ways to give full Content as in the ‘ Sight of God, to whoſe great Time and Work ‘ we are all ſubſervient in this Buſineſs for his Son ‘ and againſt the Man of Sin, by whatever Way, ‘ either by Writ or truſty Meſſengers, they re- ‘ ſolve to aſſure us before the 10th of July on the ‘ Borders before our Entry, they wou'd condeſcend ‘ as far as is poſſible, what Force will be againſt ‘ us, and both what Forces and with what Aſſiſt- ‘ ance of Horſe and Foot, and with what Money ‘ or Munition, in what Places ſeverally or toge- ‘ ther, in what Times and by what Ways, what ‘ Guides they would ſend us; what Marks to di- ‘ ſtinguiſh Papiſts and Proteſtants, Friends and ‘ Foes; to whom we ſhall give Sureties for our ‘ Entertainment when we want Money (as we ‘ ſhall often, and give every where but to Prelates ‘ and Papiſts) and all ſuch other Particulars they ‘ know we ſtand in need to be inform'd of clearly. ‘ I reſum'd all your former Letters, and has writ- ‘ ten this by Warrant of our ſureſt and ſecreteſt ‘ Heads, whilke above all I recommend to your ‘ ſpecial Care and Truſt, as the very Hinge and ‘ Merſh of our Buſineſs. Ye know my Hand, ‘ and the Subſcription of your own.

They receiv'd no direct Anſwer to this Letter; but what follows was ſent them inſtead of one, ſign'd by ſeveral Engliſh Lords, and addreſs'd to a Gentleman to be communicated to them.

Sir,

‘ ACcording to our Promiſe unto you, we have ‘ ſeriouſly peruſed and well-weighed the Con- ‘ tents of the Letter which you did deliver unto ‘ us, and have thought fit to return unto you our ‘ Apprehenſions of it, and our Anſwer unto it, ‘ and that in ſo few Words as the Greatneſs of ‘ the Occaſion will permit us to do.

‘ Firſt, We find the Deſires of the Authors of ‘ that Letter to be, that their Engliſh Friends ‘ wou'd give them ſome ſolid Aſſurance before ‘ their coming into England, that they came ‘ by their Invitations and Approbations; which in ‘ our Opinion would much wrong both our Ca- ‘ ſes; for it is publiſh'd throughout all England, that ‘ their coming into England is neceſſitated by thoſe ‘ crafty wicked Counſellors near the King, who on ‘ purpoſe to divert this Quarrel of Religion, and ‘ to make it a national Quarrel, have made the ‘ King to beſiege them by Land and Sea, taken their ‘ Ships, deſtroy'd their Trade, undone their For- ‘ tunes, and all to draw a War upon our King- ‘ dom; upon which Ground we meant to make ‘ it a Part of our Remonſtrance to the King as ‘ an unſupportable Grievance to our whole Nati- ‘ tion; which Part is abſolutely taken away from ‘ us, if they come in by the Perſuaſion of a diſcon- ‘ tented Faction here, as they will be call'd, and ‘ not by any Neceſſity the King laid upon them ‘ to occaſion their coming.

‘ Secondly, They deſire not only our Invitation, ‘ but our perſonal Conjunction with Horſe and ‘ Foot, and Men, and Money, and Credit, and ‘ the particular Names, and Times, and Places, ‘ and all by Covenant, before they enter. We ‘ know they underſtand it very well, that if Ne- ‘ ceſſity brings them, their Entry muſt be juſt; ‘ for that cannot break any Law which is ſubject ‘ to no Law, as Neceſſity is not. But if we call ‘ them in without abſolute Neceſſity compelling ‘ us thereunto, of a juſt Entry we ſhall make it ‘ an unjuſtifiable one on our Parts, as being abſo- ‘ lute Treaſon by our Law of England, to be of ‘ Council for the bringing in of any foreign For- ‘ ces, to adhere unto them, to ſupply them with ‘ Money, in the very Words of the Act of Parli- ‘ ament to reſolve what ſhall be Treaſon, in King ‘ Edward the IIId's Days, as it is printed in our ‘ Books.

‘ Now we durſt let our Friends in the North ‘ judge if we can juſtify it to our God for the Hope ‘ of never ſo good Succeſs, for moſt of the great- ‘ eſt Perſons of the Kingdom of England, to be- ‘ gin with undeniable Treaſon by their own Laws ‘ guilty, and well known by them all to be ſo. ‘ It hath been the Happineſs of the Scottiſh Nati- ‘ on, that in all their Turmoils, though in Appear- ‘ ance foul, yet they have never done any Act ‘ but what they will juſtify by the fundamental ‘ Laws of their own Nation, unto which only ‘ they are ſubject. This we aſſure you hath pro- ‘ cur'd them many Friends, and much Honour ‘ and Glory abroad; and we are confident that ‘ they wou'd not have us in our Caſe leſs ſenſible ‘ of our Honour and Piety than they themſelves, ‘ who have ſo often avow'd this in their publick ‘ Writs and publick Speeches to the King: It is ‘ not Security only that we expect from the King, ‘ but from our Conſciences and good God, who ‘ otherwiſe will be juſtly offended with us, and ‘ give us up into our Enemies Hands. But if the ‘ Scots come in their own juſt Right, as neceſſita- ‘ ted unto it without any ſuch Contract and Aſſu-

A.D.1640. ‘ rance from us, we are reſolv'd to do more, and ‘ more effectually for obtaining their and our ho- ‘ neſt Ends in a fair, juſt, and noble Way, than ‘ either they can expect or deſire in this that is ‘ propounded; but it conſiſts of ſo many Particu- ‘ lars, as it cannot well all be now recited; nor is ‘ it yet ſafe nor fit for them to know, for it is im- ‘ poſſible to keep ſuch Secrets long conceal'd in ‘ any Army. Here is not much Truſt requir'd ‘ neither, that they put in us; for Policy of State ‘ will tell them, it is better to make the Seat of ‘ War in another's Country, rather than to ſeat it ‘ in their own. Beſides, What Cauſe has this Na- ‘ tion given them ſince this Difference, to doubt ‘ of their Fidelity unto them? Firſt, The greateſt ‘ Band, the Enemies are all one, the common In- ‘ tereſt one, the End is all one; a free Parliament ‘ to try all Offenders, and to ſettle Religion and ‘ Liberty, and to make our abus'd King more ‘ great in Goodneſs than they have made him ‘ unhappy in Ill. In the Parliament, what might ‘ we not have obtain'd for ourſelves, if we wou'd ‘ have join'd to ruin them? But we foreſaw our ‘ own muſt follow preſently; and ſince the Parli- ‘ ament, What Kingdom hath ever ſhew'd more ‘ Strictneſs againſt the Importunity of the King, ‘ than this hath done, in all his Demands, Men, ‘ Money, Ships, Loans, Soldiers, or any Thing ‘ that might enable him to bring an Army againſt ‘ them; which appears by the great Violence which ‘ hath been us'd to gather Forces, and the poor ‘ Companies which are yet rais'd? How many of ‘ the greateſt Houſes of England have gotten his ‘ Majeſty's irreconcileable Diſpleaſure againſt them, ‘ for their ſuſpected Affections to them, who ſhou'd ‘ find it, were they under the juſt Cenſure of the ‘ Law? To what End was all this, I pray you, ‘ if when our Deliverances drew nigh, we ſhou'd ‘ forſake them in their greateſt encompaſſing ‘ Streights? Is not that Deliverance more precious ‘ that is begun and continu'd without the Breach ‘ of one fundamental Law, rather than that which ‘ is compaſs'd by the Subverſion of the greateſt of ‘ all? Or may not a Prince be as eaſily won to do ‘ his Subjects Right, by a juſt Expoſtulation of ‘ his Nobility and Subjects in an opportune Sea- ‘ ſon, as well as in an unlawful Convention, if ‘ they receive the ſame Fruit and Aſſiſtance by it? ‘ In Concluſion, we ſhall certainly appear (if they ‘ will believe ſo) juſt to them, juſt to God, juſt ‘ to the King, juſt to ourſelves, to our Religion ‘ and Liberties; and according to that irrefragable ‘ Poſition of their noble Example, without the ‘ tranſgreſſing either of the Laws of God or Man. ‘ This we thought fit to acquaint you with, and ‘ leave it to your Diſcretion and Fidelity to diſpoſe ‘ of as you ſhall ſee Cauſe; and ſhall ever reſt

Your reſpective Friends,

Bedford, Eſſex, Brooke, Warwick,
Say and Seal, Mandeville, Savile.

This is the important Letter which moſt Authors make mention of, but none ever ſaw, and all are miſtaken in. Welwood ſays twelve Noblemen ſign'd it; Mr. Acherley puts the Earl of Mulgrave, Earl of Clare, and Earl of Bolingbroke's Hands to it, as alſo the Hands of ſeveral Leading Commoners; whereas in Fact there were no Hands to it but thoſe of the ſeven Lords above-mention'd; and it is uncertain whether thoſe Hands were counterfeited by Lord Savile himſelf, or Mr. Henry Darley. They were afterwards cut out by Sir Archibald Johnſtoun who had the Original, and reſtor'd to every one of thoſe Lords his Name. Darley carry'd Sir Archibald's Letter ſign'd Nathaniel Black to Lord Savile from the Lord Lowdon; and this Letter pretended to be from the ſeven Lords, is doubtleſs addreſs'd to Mr. Darley, who had been with thoſe Lords, as well as with Savile. It is evidently written to an Engliſhman and no Peer, to ſhun the Danger of Correſpondence with the Scots. There is no Inſcription to it; Darnley it ſeems ſhun'd that; however, he went poſt with it, inclos'd in Savile's Letter, to the Scots on the Borders. The Lord Lowdon went for Scotland about the 28th of June, before Savile's pretended Letter cou'd be procur'd; and it is probable both the Letters, the pretended one, and his own long Letter, which was very particular, were written in Yorkſhire the 8th of July: The latter having the Authority of the other Letter, with the Lords Names to it, was without doubt a much greater Aſſurance to them, and the Hinge upon which that great Affair turn'd. A.D.1640.

The Lords whom Mr. Darley had been with, refus'd to give any Thing under their Hands in anſwer to Sir Archibald Johnſtoun's Letter. They agreed in promiſing the Scots all good Offices and Services upon Occaſion, in general Terms, but never came to Particulars, nor to a formal Invitation, much leſs to any Compact ſign'd by them. However, the Lord Savile who knew their good Intentions, reſolv'd to make the moſt of it, and he and Darley concerted the two Letters which Savile worded. His Deſign was to bring the Scots in, to proſecute and deſtroy the Earl of Strafford as an Incendiary, and then to betray thoſe Lords to the King, which he did afterwards, when Strafford was beheaded, and inſtigated his Majeſty to try them for High-Treaſon upon the very Letter he himſelf had counterfeited; and it was to procure that Letter, that King Charles went to Scotland in Auguſt 1641; which tho' he fail'd in, yet he diſcover'd ſo much of the pretended Correſpondence, as to form a Charge of High-Treaſon upon it againſt the Lord Mandeville, call'd alſo Kimbolton, and five Members of the Houſe of Commons, and enter'd their Houſe with an arm'd Force to ſeize them; and that his ſo doing brought on the Civil War, is agreed on all Hands. Saville wrote Letters to all the Lords on purpoſe to get Anſwers to them, and by their Names to thoſe Anſwers, he ſo well counterfeited the Names of the ſeveral Lords, that when thoſe Lords afterwards ſaw their pretended Hand-writing, they declar'd, ev'ry one of them, they cou'd not ſwear they did not write their Names, tho' they cou'd ſwear they had ſign'd no ſuch Letter. What follows is the Letter of poſitive Aſſurance and Particulars, written by Lord Saville to Lord Lowdon.

The reſt is cut out.

Right Honourable,

‘ HOW much more ſafe it were for me to ‘ have attended you in Perſon with Aſſurance ‘ of Liberty, than to be here in perpetual Danger ‘ of Conſtraint upon the leaſt Colour of Suſpicion, ‘ your Lordſhip, who have lately taſted the Fruits ‘ of our Engliſh Juſtice, will eaſily imagine. Yet ‘ conſulting with ſome Friends of yours here, who ‘ know the many Dependancies upon me, and Op- ‘ portunities of doing Service; whereas it is con- ‘ ceiv'd my Preſence wou'd be very neceſſary, and ‘ that by my Perſon I can contribute nothing more ‘ than what is compris'd in this Paper, it was ‘ concluded by an unanimous Conſent, that it was ‘ very requiſite for me to defer my coming till ‘ ſome other Time; and thus in Submiſſion to ‘ this Reſolution, I ſhall faithfully and fully give ‘ Anſwer to ſuch Particulars of the Letter as I ‘ conceive are of moſt Conſequence for your ‘ Knowledge and my Diſcharge.

‘ Your Lordſhip may remember that it was the ‘ 27th of June e're you did communicate the Let- ‘ ter unto me; the next Day was to be ſet apart ‘ for hearing of the Word and Prayer; two Days ‘ more were ſpent in London, to let your Friends

*A.D.*1640. ‘ know the State of your Affairs, and to ſettle a ‘ Way of giving them certain and ſpeedy Intelli- ‘ gence of your Proceedings; five Days more ‘ were ſpent on my Journey into my own Coun- ‘ try, ſo as I have neglected but three Days, and ‘ I preſume you will not ſay they were alto- ‘ gether neglected, when you have perus'd this ‘ together with the inclos'd. I conceive the main ‘ Scope of your Letter, Lord Wariſton's, may ‘ be compris'd under theſe two Heads, A fair ‘ Call before your Entry, and a Concurrence ‘ after. In anſwer to the firſt of theſe, I ſhall ‘ refer you to the inclos'd, which doth fully ‘ explain their own Senſe, and is the beſt Index ‘ of their Hearts, rather than to cloath their Ex- ‘ preſſions with any Language of my own. And ‘ thus much, my Lord, let me tell you, that altho' ‘ it be not the Way which your Letter doth de- ‘ ſire, yet upon a due Conſideration of the State ‘ of our Government, it was thought by wiſe Men, ‘ and I am perſuaded your Lordſhip will approve ‘ of it as more ſafe, more juſt, more honourable ‘ for them, and no leſs effectual and powerful for ‘ both our Ends, than your own. And good, my ‘ Lord, let not petty Jealouſies, or improbable ‘ Fears, retard ſo good a Buſineſs for the Church ‘ of God and our Common Liberties, as by his ‘ Providence is ſo near at this Time, if it pleaſe ‘ God that you ſpeed your Entry at or near the ‘ Time prefix'd in your Letter. And I beſeech you ‘ not to imagine that it is for fear of their Perſons ‘ being known, that they refuſe to be the Callers ‘ of you in, or Contractors before-hand for either ‘ Men or Money, or any other Supply, but only ‘ to keep their Conſciences and Honour clear; ‘ for their Perſons are mutually engag'd one to a- ‘ nother, upon the firſt Aſſurance of your Entry ‘ into this Kingdom, to unite themſelves into a ‘ conſiderable Body, and to draw up a Remon- ‘ ſtrance to be preſented to the King, wherein ‘ they will comprize yours and their own juſt Grie- ‘ vances, and require a mutual Redreſs. And ‘ now, my Lord, for your Satisfaction in Point of ‘ Concurrence, give me Leave to tell you that ‘ all my Intelligence is calculated only for the Me- ‘ ridian of Yorkſhire, and the more Southern Parts; ‘ for till your Entry there, you muſt expect great ‘ Difficulties, becauſe there are many Papiſts in ‘ thoſe Parts, whom none can make Friends to ‘ the Cauſe. But, alas! my Lord, What can that ‘ Number do againſt your Army, if it be ſo great ‘ as it is mention'd in the Letter, and that you ‘ make a ſpeedy Entry before they can be in a ‘ Readineſs? Grumble and mutter they may per- ‘ adventure, fight they dare not; but I ſhall pro- ‘ ceed briefly to relate Things as they appear to ‘ me upon my beſt Enquiry.

Theſe are certain.

1. ‘ In the Judgments of all that I have met ‘ with, it is approv'd that your Army and Entry ‘ are the ſole and principal Means in any Proba- ‘ bility to effectuate both our Deſires.

2. ‘ That if we claſh one againſt another, or be ‘ divided one from another, we are in extreme Pe- ‘ ril to be both loſt.

3. ‘ That ſome Covenant of mutual Defence of ‘ the Religion and Liberties already eſtabliſh'd in ‘ both Kingdoms, is alſo abſolutely neceſſary to ‘ be drawn up and ſubſcrib'd by both of us. And ‘ it is deſir'd that you will be pleas'd (as better ‘ vers'd in Buſineſſes of this Nature) to do it, and ‘ to tender it to all Engliſh as you march along; ‘ and it is preſum'd many are very ready to join ‘ with you in it.

Before your Entry theſe things are done.

‘ Biron's Troops in Carliſle have no Saddles, nor ‘ ſhall have any; 800 of the beſt have no Piſtols, ‘ nor ſhall have any.

‘ There's already of the King's Money about *A.D.*1640. ‘ 2000 l. which before you can come, in an ordi- ‘ nary March, will be perhaps double or treble ‘ that Sum. 'Tis intended for you, which you ‘ ſhall have notice of at your firſt coming into the ‘ Country, where it will be in a Readineſs; which ‘ will be a good leading Caſe to the whole King- ‘ dom.

Theſe Things are intended, and probable after your Entry.

‘ That the Sheriff and Gentry will for the Se- curity of their Wives and Children and Eviden- ‘ ces ſeize upon York or Hull, or both, whereby ‘ the King will be diſappointed of a great Part of ‘ his Strength, which he depends upon there, and ‘ your Way made open: That the Lords, as I for- ‘ merly mention'd, will upon the firſt Certainty of ‘ your Entry join together, as is touch'd in their ‘ Letter.

‘ That ſome Troops of Horſe, the Number ‘ whereof is not yet certain, and a Regiment of ‘ Foot, beſides particular Perſons out of every Re- ‘ giment, will turn to you.

‘ That the Gentry will be willing to afford you ‘ Victuals in a plentiful manner, and the meaner ‘ Sort upon very eaſy Conditions.

‘ I am likewiſe to recommend unto you from ‘ your Friends in the South theſe enſuing ‘ Conſiderations, which they conceive will be ‘ of good Advantage to you for the perfect- ‘ ing your Deſign.

1. ‘ That upon your Entry you ſhould march ‘ with all poſſible Speed to London, where the ‘ Lords and City will be ready to receive and join ‘ with you.

2. ‘ That in the Way, eſpecially at firſt, you ‘ ſhou'd forbear to take any thing from any, whe- ‘ ther Prelate or Papiſt, without their Conſent and ‘ Payment for it; for theſe Reaſons, becauſe your ‘ Friends do make account to ſend you back when ‘ the Work is done, with a liberal Recompenſe ‘ for your Charges; and they conceive it will be ‘ more for your Honour to have leſs with Love ‘ and Juſtice, than more with Violence and Op- ‘ preſſion; as alſo to take away the Scandal A- ‘ broad and here at Home, by thoſe who yet ſtand ‘ well-affected to you. The firſt Impreſſions laſt ‘ long, and make a great Noiſe; therefore good, ‘ my Lord, let your firſt Approaches be fair and ‘ ſweet according to your Declaration.

3. ‘ That where you hear there are any conſi- derable Bodies of Men, that you wou'd ſend to ‘ them, and let them know your Unwillingneſs to ‘ fight with any in this Quarrel, coming in for our ‘ Good as well as your own, and ſend them your ‘ Declaration to that Purpoſe. But if any be ſo ‘ mad as to aſſault you, ſpare them not; and be ‘ aſſur'd it will not make it a national Quarrel, ‘ becauſe the Army is patch'd up of Strangers, Pa- ‘ piſts, and the SCUM of the Country, which if ‘ your Swords prevent not, will undoubtedly die ‘ in a Halter; ſo as in my poor Skill I cannot ſee ‘ any Danger, nor any Doubt of good Succeſs, ‘ but a happy Deliverance of the poor impriſon'd ‘ and fetter'd Goſpel in both Kingdoms, and a juſt ‘ Judgment upon the Authors of theſe deſperate ‘ Counſels. My Lord, I ſhall humby beg for my- ‘ ſelf, that the Bearer hereof may be return'd with ‘ all poſſible Speed and Secreſy, and an undoubt- ‘ ed Aſſurance of your Reſolutions, becauſe I am ‘ to tranſmit it into the South with all Speed. Thus ‘ preſuming of your Favour herein, I reſt your ‘ Lordſhip's Servant, MUM.

P. S. Let us hear the certain Day of your begin- ning to march.

This encouraging Letter from the Lord Savile to the Lord Lowdon, animated the Scots to march far

A.D.1640. far into England; moſt of the Subſtance of it is his own Invention, eſpecially about the Money and the King's Horſe at Carliſle. His Advice, probably then real, is good, but when it had had the Succeſs he deſir'd, the Scots and their Friends were to be ſacrific'd to his Ambition; and, as has been obſerv'd, he was ſo treacherous as to adviſe the King to proſecute the Lords on the Letter himſelf had forg'd. The Scots not haſtening their March as was expected, one of their Chiefs receiv'd this Letter:

Worthy Sir,

SUCH is our Affection to your Cauſe, and Care of your Affair, that nothing hath been omitted which might conduce to the Furtherance of your Deſign, nor the Diſcharge of our own Promiſes. But your often failing in Point of Entrance after ſolemn Engagements by Word and Writ, hath poſſeſs'd the moſt of us with a juſt Jealouſy that you are hatching your own Peace, which hath deaded the Hearts of all your Friends, diſabled the moſt active to do you any farther Service, and diſappointed yourſelves of near 10000 Pounds, which was provided and kept for you till you had twice fail'd, and that there was little or no Hope of your coming. The Lord hath given you Favour in the Eyes of the People, ſo as I know not whether they are more incens'd againſt our own Soldiers, or deſirous of yours. If you really intend to come, ſtrike while the Iron is hot; if you be uncertain what to reſolve, let us know it, that we may ſecure our Lives, tho' we hazard our Eſtates by retiring. Here is no Body of an Army to interrupt you, no Ordnance to diſmay you; no Money to pay our own; the City hath once more refus'd to lend, the Train'd-Bands to be preſs'd; the Country ſtorms at the billetting of Soldiers; Quarrels ariſe every Day about it. If you have a good Cauſe, why do you ſtand ſtill? If a bad, why have you come ſo far? Either die or do, and ſo you ſhall be Sons of Valour. P. S. If there be any Thing of Conſequence, you ſhall have ſpeedy Intelligence of it.

Your Friend,
J. H. R.

This Letter was dated the 9th, and they enter'd England the 21ſt of Auguſt. It is not known who ſent it, but it ſeem'd to quicken the Scots Motions, falling into the Hands of Lord *Wariſton. We muſt leave the Scots making Preparations for this March, and return to the Affairs of England, where we find

Edward Bagſhaw Eſq; Reader of the Middle-Temple, fallen into the Diſpleaſure of Archbiſhop Laud for reading on the Statute of 25 Edward III. and ſaying, An Act of Parliament wou'd be good without Aſſent of the Biſhops, and that no benefic'd Clerk was by the Law capable of temporal Juriſdiction. Thus the making Dr. Juxon Lord High-Treaſurer was againſt Law; and indeed it is amazing how Juxon cou'd be ſo impos'd upon by Laud, as to accept of ſuch a troubleſome temporal Office, when he had upon him ſo many Calls of the Holy Ghoſt to Spiritual Functions; for whatever my Judgment is of ſuch Calls, otherwiſe than eſtabliſh'd by Cuſtom and Law, theſe Men aſſert they are purely Divine, as is indeed the due Diſcharge of their Vocation; ſo weighty, that in the Language of the Fathers, it ſhou'd make Angels tremble. Doit faire trembler les Anges, ſaid a French Papiſt. But inſtead of trembling under the Burden of a Miniſter of the Goſpel, and a Governor of ſeven or eight hundred other Miniſters, Dr. Juxon claps the whole Load of the Treaſury upon his Shoulders; and inſtead of trembling, is in much Eaſe and Joy. The Archbiſhop procur'd an Order for ſilencing Mr. Bagſhaw; but the Gentlemen of the Temple were ſo far from thinking the worſe of him, that when he went out of Town ſome time after, he was accompany'd with forty or fifty Horſe of that honourable Society.

Lord Lowdon ſtaid not long in London after the Marquis of Hamilton got his Diſcharge, as is ſeen by Lord Savile's Letter. Echard thinks the Favour ſhewn Lowdon in not cutting off his Head after he was ſent to the Tower, was very impolitick. The Treaſon was for tranſcribing a Letter which was never ſent, addreſs'd AU ROY; a Stile only us'd from Subjects to their natural King, according to his wiſe Obſervation; whereas the Stile is always us'd by ev'ry one who has Occaſion to write to the King of France, whether Frenchman or Foreigner. His Obſervation is as wiſe which refers to Cardinal Richlieu's fomenting the Scottiſh Troubles to revenge the Duke of Buckingham's Expedition at Rhe, which had been ſufficiently reveng'd by the Infamy of it; whereas nothing is plainer than that Richlieu gave the King what Trouble he cou'd, in Reſentment of the Queen's ſupporting her Mother Mary de Medicis to the utmoſt of her Ability; and every good Office done that Princeſs, grated the very Soul of the implacable Cardinal, who perſecuted her to Death. The reverend Author proceeds in the ſame Degree of Wiſdom, The threatning Inſults from the North, caus'd the King to reſolve upon new Meaſures, the very ſame as he took laſt Year, to raiſe an Army, march them to the North, and return again to London, tho' not with ſo much ſaving to his Honour as the laſt Campaign: And as if the Oracle of Delphos was to be conſulted, the great Lord-Lieutenant of Ireland was ſent for over. It is wonderfully pleaſant; Great was the Expectation of all the Engliſh, what might be the Effect of his Arrival, and great was the Opinion which Men had generally conceiv'd of his Parts; which he explains well enough a Line or two after: ſome ſaid freely, He was ſent for only to compleat that bad Work which others of leſs Brains than he had begun. Larrey tells us, The Applauſe that was given him, came only from the Mouths of his Creatures; and that in Ireland he employ'd his Time in making ſecret Levies of Men and Money to aſſiſt the King againſt the Scots Presbyterians; that he oblig'd all the Scots who had Habitations or Eſtates in Ireland, to take an Oath quite contrary to the Covenant; and that he turn'd the Lord-Chancellor Loftus out of his Office, for not aſſiſting in raiſing Troops, &c. It was prov'd againſt Strafford, that he gave the King this dangerous and treaſonable Advice as ſoon as he came over, Sir, you have tried your People, and are denied by them; therefore you are clear before God and Man, if you make uſe of other Means for your Supply; you have an Army in Ireland. This is the Counſel of the Archdeacon's Oracle of Delphos; he might as well have call'd him the Coloſſus of Rhodes. The Scots were well acquainted with the Advice he had given his Majeſty to treat them as Rebels; upon which they join'd heartily in that Proſecution which ended in cutting off the Head of this Delphian Oracle, who by his Conduct in Ireland had ſo rais'd the Spirits of the Papiſts, that they ſoon after made Life of Cromw. 137.

Parliament.

To carry on this ſecond War with the Scots, a Parliament was call'd after a very diſorderly manner; according to Echard, Many Pulpits were employ'd by the Scots Faction to obtain their Ends, and no Pains ſpar'd in packing of Voices, which were often ſo violent, that theſe Meetings for Elections appear'd more like riotous Tumults. Falſe beyond Conception! What need all this Stir when the Nation had ſo long lain under Oppreſſion, and were generally averſe to the Miniſters, who had been the Occaſion of it? It therefore did not require much Pains to get ſuch a Repreſentative as wou'd inſiſt on the Redreſs of Grievances, which were continu'd notwithſtanding the Parliament was ſo ſoon to meet. The Court, ſays he, ſtill proceeded in the ſame unpopular Ways, Ship-Money was levy'd with the ſame Severity, and the ſame Rigor us'd in the Eccleſiaſtical Courts, without complying with the Humour of any Man; which happy Temper appear'd at the Opening of the Seſſion the 13th of April, when his Majeſty rode in State to Weſtminſter, to hear a Sermon preach'd by Wren Biſhop of Ely, one of the moſt obnoxious Prelates in the Kingdom. The Two Houſes being met, he made a ſhort Speech to them, and referr'd them to another obnoxious Perſon the Lord-Keeper Finch, who ſucceeded Coventry. This Keeper began his Oration with a Piece of Eloquence which the Archdeacon is extreamly taken with: "His Majeſty's kingly Reſo-"lutions are ſeated in the Ark of his ſacred Breaſt, "and it were too high a Preſumption for any Uz-"zah uncall'd to touch it. Therefore you are to "remember, that tho' the King ſometimes lays by "the Beams and Rays of Majeſty, yet he never "lays by Majeſty itſelf." He then laid before them the tranſcendent Happineſs of the Nation, which will be preſently ſet forth in the Houſe of Commons. He repreſented the Scots as ſo many REBELS, whom the King was reſolv'd to reduce, and demanded immediate Aid before they enter'd upon Grievances. They had the prettieſt dictating Way with them. When he had ended his Speech, the King re-aſſum'd his, to give them an Account of the Letter he had intercepted, directed to the French King, which the Lord-Keeper wou'd read to them. He told them he had ſecur'd one of the Parties concern'd in the Tower. The Lord-Keeper holding the Letter folded, read the Superſcription, Au Roy; and then raiſing his Voice very theatrically, ſaid, None but the French can write ſuch a Superſcription to the French King; and whoever writes ſo, acknowledges the King they addreſs to for their Sovereign. Here's Logick as well as Rhetorick! Does every Foreigner who addreſſes to the King of England thus AU ROY, TO THE KING, acknowledge him to be his Sovereign? Does not Monſieur Voltaire in his Epiſtle Dedicatory to the Henriade, ſay To the Queen? Yet as boyiſh as this Reaſoning is, 'tis gravely continu'd by Finch before the moſt illuſtrious Aſſembly in the World, Therefore theſe Words are ſufficient to convict the Scots of Felony, and hang them all. This Acting is not yet over. Then the Lord-Keeper read the Letter itſelf, and expatiated upon it, to prove the Treaſon of the Lords who ſubſcribed it; concluding with the Neceſſity the King lay under to prevent the Conſpirators, and conſequently how neceſſary it was for the Parliament to aſſiſt him with Money. The wiſe Miniſters did not once think the Artifice of the Letter ſtar'd both Houſes in the Face. That the News was ſtale to them, and the Majority of both Houſes were by no Means in any Diſpoſition to look on their Scots Neighbours as Rebels and Traytors. Larrey writes, All theſe Springs were play'd to no Purpoſe. The Commons were determin'd, and nothing cou'd make them alter their Reſolution to have Grievances precede Supply. I can't write this Incident no more than I cou'd have ſeen it without laughing, to ſee the Lord-Keeper gravely folding up the Letter, then turning AU ROY to the Lords and Commons; then the King ſpeaking to it; then the Keeper ſpeaking again to it; when all the while it was a Farce in the Opinion of that auguſt Aſſembly. *A.D.*1640.

Tyrannical Proceedings.

The Commons choſe Serjeant Glanville their Speaker, who has much Laud from the Archdeacon; but he omits that he had all along been a great Oppoſer of the Illegalities and Irregularities of this Adminiſtration, and was gain'd by the Court the ſame Way as had before been try'd upon Wentworth and Noy with Succeſs, and upon Elliot and Pym with none; but ſucceeded afterwards on the Lord Falkland, Sir John Colepepyr, the Lord Digby, Sir Ralph Hopton, Sir John Strangeways, Sir Robert Holburn, and eſpecially Mr. Edward Hyde. Whitlocke informs us, "Glanville had engag'd to be a "better Servant to the King than formerly; he "was very active to promote his Majeſty's De-"ſires, whereof he gave ſufficient Teſtimony, and "of the Change of his former Opinion." Secretary Windebank acquainted the Houſe with the Examination of the Lord Lowdon; more of it ſtill; ſaying, He own'd the Letter, but with Prevarication. We have ſeen the contrary, and that inſtead of denying the Letter, the Scots juſtify'd it as a national Act and recriminated. Acherley ſays, the Turn which the Scots gave to it, took off all Impreſſion, ſo it fell to the Ground, and was never more ſpoken of. The Happineſſes which Finch the Lord-Keeper had juſt been declaiming upon, and which the Lord Clarendon and Echard declaim upon eternally, ſhin'd out moſt glorioufly in a Heap of Petitions deliver'd to the Houſe of Commons by ſeveral Knights of the Shires, complaining of Ship-money, Projects, Monopolies, Star-Chamber, High-Commiſſion, Spiritual Courts, &c. Mr. Harbottle Grimſton, Speaker of the Houſe of Commons that call'd home the King, ſaid, The Dangers at home are greater than thoſe from abroad, and the Diſeaſes and Diſtempers in the Body politick are grown to the Height, that for a Cure Examples ought to be made. Sir Benjamin Rudyard ſpoke againſt the Diſcontinuance of Parliaments, for want of which the Commonwealth was in its gaſping Extremities. Mr. Pym, who, according to Mr. Echard, was a Man of publick Reputation and long Experience in Parliaments, made an elaborate Speech againſt Grievances, the long Intervals of Parliaments, Innovations in Religion, and Invaſions on Property. Mr. Grimſton, afterwards Maſter of the Rolls, inſiſted upon the irregular and prepoſterous engaging the Judges to deliver their Opinion for the Lawfulneſs of Ship-Money. Read what Warwick ſays of the Learning and Integrity of thoſe Judges on this Occaſion, and then make a Judgment of that ingenious Writer both as to Capacity and Sincerity. Mr. Peard called Ship-Money an Abomination, and therefore Clarendon and Echard call him a bold Lawyer of ſmall Note. One Sign of it was, that his Borough ſent him up to Weſtminſter again the

The Attorney-General anſwer'd all Arguments as faſt as he cou'd have the hearing of them, if you will believe the Archdeacon, eſpecially as to Ship-Money; and IF Peard had been reprimanded, it wou'd have been very ſeverely. We ſhall ſee how eaſy it was to anſwer Law and Reaſon, when this hated Tax is brought upon the Stage again. The Houſe enquir'd into the Proceedings againſt Sir John Elliot, Mr. Hollis, and the impriſon'd Members; nay, they were ſo preſumptuous, as to bring Sir John Finch their late Speaker into queſtion for leaving the Chair; and, ſays the reverend Hiſtorian, voted it a particular Breach of Privilege, tho' he did it by the King's ſpecial Command. If he had learn'd any thing of the Conſtitution by having turn'd over ſo much Hiſtory, he wou'd have known that Thought of his to have been the moſt abſurd that ever an Hiſtorian was guilty of. The King had no Commands to lay on the Speaker of the Houſe of Commons as their Speaker, and conſequently Finch's leaving the Chair contrary to the Command of the Houſe, whoſe Servant he was, muſt be a particular Breach of Privilege.

Finch queſtion'd.

Six or ſeven Days after the Lords and Commons were ſummon'd to attend the King at the Banquetting-Houſe, where he order'd the Lord-Keeper to acquaint them, that his Army intended againſt the Scots ſtood him in 100000 l. a Month; that he had expended his own Money as well as the Ship-Money for that End; that the Parliament in Ireland had given him 500000 l and after a Supply was granted, he wou'd give a gracious Ear to Grievances if they were juſt; a Word which in itſelf is affirmative, and as good and ſignificant as any in Language; but in this King's and his Miniſters Stile, it is a Negative, and ſignifies I will not do it unleſs I think fit; for who was to judge whether thoſe Grievances were juſt or not? the very Perſons Laud, Strafford, &c. who were the Occaſion of them. On the Report of the Keeper's Speech made next Day, Edmund Waller Eſq; one of the fineſt Wits of the Age, ſpoke boldly and elegantly, charging the Biſhops and Miniſters with a Deſign to ſet up a new Species of abſolute Monarchy; and concluding with a Motion that there might be an Order immediately made, That the firſt Thing the Houſe ſhou'd conſider of, ſhou'd be the reſtoring the Nation in general to their fundamental and vital Liberties, and then conſider of a Supply. The Court cou'd not bear to hear talk of Liberties inſtead of Supplies; and the King coming to the Houſe of Lords, deſir'd them to adviſe the Houſe of Commons to give Precedence to Supply; which was ſo irregular, that a Novice in the Conſtitution cou'd not but be ſurpriz'd at it. The Commons immediately declar'd, that by their undoubted fundamental Right, all Supplies ought to have their Riſe, Progreſs, and whole modelling in their Houſe; which Right had never been infring'd or ſo much as queſtion'd by the Lords. Echard tells us, that inſtead of complying, the Commons rais'd an unſeaſonable Diſpute, which ended in an Acknowledgment of their Privileges by the Houſe of Peers, who were ſenſible of the Error into which the King had drawn them. His Majeſty was ſtill impatient for the Money, and the Parliament cou'd not but ſuſpect that as ſoon as they had given it, they wou'd be diſmiſs'd as their Predeceſſors had been. To quicken the Supply, he took a Method which the Archdeacon ſays was believ'd wou'd not fail of Succeſs. The Wiſe Men who contriv'd this and the like Meſſages, might believe ſo, but no other Mortal who underſtood any thing of Affairs. Sir Henry Vane was order'd to ſhew the Neceſſity of a Supply. Had there been a Neceſſity for the War, a Supply wou'd have been neceſſary: But other Sort of wiſe Men argu'd thus; "If the Scots were "not Slaves, what they did for Recovery of their "Liberties was not illegal; and if what they ſo "did was no Wrong, then a War made upon "them with Engliſh Forces, was to ſubdue them, "and compel them to ſubmit as Slaves to what "was illegal, and as ſuch unjuſt, and cou'd end in "nothing but ſupporting that illegal, unlimited "Power which equally preſs'd England. Again; "Such a War is in Effect to impoſe a Law that "a Man ſhall not defend his Perſon againſt Wounds "and Impriſonment, nor his Property againſt De-"predations, or the Laws or Conſtitutions of his "Country againſt ſuch as wou'd illegally ſubvert "them, all which wou'd in any Man's own Caſe "appear monſtrous. Again; It was urg'd the "King had no more Right to uſe the Forces of "England to make War upon his Scots Subjects, "than he had to call French Armies to make War "upon the Engliſh People to enſlave them, by "ſupporting with thoſe Forces his Prerogative "Impoſition of Taxes, Ship-Money, Tonnage, "Poundage, &c. And upon the Premiſes, the "Concluſion was evident, that a War upon the "Scots to ſupport ſuch a Prerogative was unjuſt; "and if ſo, the Neceſſity of Supplies to raiſe an Ar-"my vaniſh'd." The other Meſſage brought them, was a Demand of twelve Subſidies at once. Echard tells us it was but 800000 l. and conſidering his Majeſty offer'd to forbear the levying of Ship-Money, which he had no Right to levy, he thinks it a very reaſonable and healing Propoſal. The learned Acherley writes, Now the Vizor was pull'd off, and the Myſtery reveal'd: It appear'd that the Neceſſity ſo much inſiſted upon, was a mere Fiction, removeable at Pleaſure; for here was a Price of twelve Subſidies ſet upon it, and for that Sum the King wou'd part with the Pretence, and the Nation ſhou'd never ſuffer again under Neceſſity. The Conſequence whereof was, that a Parliament of Judges cou'd give the King a preſent Neceſſity, which the Parliament of England muſt buy off at the Rate of twelve Subſidies. The ſame judicious Lawyer ſhews how this pretended Neceſſity ſtood with reſpect to the Scots; "The King needed no Force, for he "had all the Power to obviate the War in him-"ſelf, if he wou'd pleaſe to revoke his own Edicts, "and declare them illegal, and wou'd diſclaim the "pretended Prerogative by which they were made, "and make the Puniſhment of the Adviſers exem-"plary; it wou'd remove the Cauſe, and then the "War, which was the Effect, wou'd, for want "of Fuel, dye and be extinguiſh'd." This ſober Reaſoning cuts off a great Part of the fine Reflections in the Hiſtory of the Rebellion. It is own'd there, that the Grievances complain'd of were real, that Reſiſtance in caſe of tyrannical Oppreſſion was lawful; but when Complaint is made, it is aſperſing; it is ſeditious; when any Thing is done to put a Stop to them, it is Rebellion; when Money is wanted to ſupport Profuſion and Luxury, and enrich Favourites, it is Neceſſity; when the Power of imperious Prelates is in Exerciſe, it is the Church; and ſo in other Inſtances, equally vain and impertinent. The Offer to give up Ship-Money, was mightily cry'd up by Sir John Wray and other Members; but the unreaſonable Demand of twelve Subſidies, gave great Diſtaſte to the major Part of the Houſe. Sir Henry Vane was cenſur'd for demanding twelve when his Commiſſion was but for ſix; and it was ſaid he did it on purpoſe to raiſe Animoſities in the Houſe, with Intention to cauſe a Diviſion between the King and them; for he inform'd his Majeſty at the ſame time they wou'd give nothing. The Story of Mr. Hyde's endeavouring to ſoften Matters, Serjeant Glanville's wheedling Speech to forward the Supply, Mr. Waller's Diſcourſe with Sir Thomas Jermin, to perſuade him to diſown Vane's Demand as a Privy-Counſellor, the Sollicitor Herbert's ſeconding Sir Henry Vane, and Sir Henry and Herbert's cauſing the King to diſſolve the Parliament, is told as largely in the Hiſtory of the Rebellion, as

A.D.1640. are all Stories which the Author of it had a hand in. But the true Repreſentation of the Matter is as follows: Upon Sir Henry Vane's telling the King he muſt expect no Money from the Parliament to carry on the War againſt the Scots, the Miniſters were much perplex'd and uneaſy; but that which ripen'd their Reſolutions to diſſolve them, was an Information given the King, that the Commons intended to enquire into, and as my Author terms it, anathematize the Cauſes of the War againſt Ach. 40. Scotland, for which the Supplies were demanded. In this Enquiry his Majeſty's aſſum'd Power to impoſe the Taxes of Ship-Money, &c. wou'd doubtleſs have paſs'd under Examination, and therefore it was obvious, the Commons, to blaſt the Deſign, wou'd vote, That a War upon the Scots was unjuſt. The King for that Reaſon, early the next Morning, May the 5th, ſent for the Speaker to attend him, and took Care he ſhou'd go with his Majeſty to the Houſe of Peers, upon an Apprehenſion that if the Speaker had gone to the Houſe of Commons, that Houſe wou'd have enter'd on the Debate, and ſhut their Doors; and before they cou'd be fetch'd to the Upper-Houſe, wou'd paſs that Vote, beſides entring on ſome ungrateful Diſcourſes which the Miniſters were unwilling to hear. The King following cloſe after the Speaker, ſent immediately the Uſher of the Black-Rod to bring up the Commons to attend him in the Houſe of Lords, where he treated them with an abrupt haſty Diſſolution after a Sitting of twenty-two Days, without doing one publick Act. The learned Author adds, Tho' by this fourth Repetition of his Power, in which he took infinite Delight, all the Rights and Privileges imparted to the two Eſtates of Lords and Commons, were fruſtrated and render'd uſeleſs. The King had no ſooner diſſolv'd the Parliament than he repented of it, but with a Penitence which was as weak as the Offence: For to repent of a Thing without Attonement to the utmoſt of one's Power, is as uſeleſs in Politicks as in Divinity. It was whimſical enough to think of recalling the ſame Parliament by Proclamation; or that a Body of Gentlemen ſo ill us'd, wou'd have met again in better Humour, had it been practicable to recal them: But a mild Declaration to excuſe that haſty Diſſolution; a ſincere Pacification with the Scots; a ſtop put to illegal Taxes, and to the Tyranny of the Star-Chamber Court, High-Commiſſion Court, Spiritual Court, with an Intimation of another Parliament to redreſs Grievances, and puniſh Delinquents, wou'd have ſhewn in the beſt manner, that his Majeſty did ſincerely repent of this Raſhneſs, wou'd have reconcil'd him to his People, have open'd their Hearts, and their Purſes, and have made him a powerful and glorious King; inſtead of which, ſeveral leading Members of both Houſes were inſulted and impriſon'd. The Earl of Warwick and the Lord Brooks Studies, nay, their very Pockets, were ſearch'd for Papers, the Court having violent Suſpicions that thoſe Lords and others held Correſpondence with the Scots, as indeed they did, and had frequent ſecret Conferences with their Commiſſioners, under Pretext of hearing their Miniſters preach. Henry Bellaſis, Eſq; whom the Earl of Strafford had proſecuted for not pulling off his Hat to him; Sir John Hotham, and John Crew, Eſq; afterwards Lord Crew, were thrown into Priſon. Whitlocke informs us who it was that adviſ'd the King to diſſolve this Parliament, which might eaſily have been brought into what Temper the King pleas'd. The chief Blame and Odium of all was laid upon Archbiſhop Laud, and P. 32. thoſe Differences between the King and his People, which were late too much increas'd, and were hop'd might have been cemented by this Parliament, were aggravated; the Scotch Troubles, which many ſober Men expected this Parliament wou'd have appeas'd, were by the breach of it, fear'd to grow wider. By Archbiſhop Laud's Counſels alſo, the King was perſuaded to let the Convocation ſit after the Parliament was diſſolv'd, by a new Commiſſion; a Thing which was monſtrous in the Eyes of all thoſe who had ever look'd upon the Law: Can it be deny'd but that all the deſperate Counſels which gradually terminated in the Civil War, came from that prime Counſellor, the Archbiſhop of Canterbury, no more fit to be a Prime Miniſter in ſuch turbulent Times, than a Madman is to look after a ſick Perſon in a Delirium? Can it be deny'd but that the King's Obſtinacy in purſuing his Counſels at all Ventures, was the real Cauſe of his Misfortunes and Death? The ſitting of the Convocation after the Diſſolution, muſt be the Effect of that Prelate's Wiſdom and Moderation. The Clergy, who at that Time paid him blind Obedience, were in Terms ill enough with the Laity, and their irregular Seſſion in Synod, was a ſure Method to add to the Offence which they had before plentifully given, by preaching up the King's Will for Law, and perſecuting Men of Conſcience and Piety for oppoſing Sabbath-breaking, and ſuperſtitious Innovations: Yet ſit they will, and make Canons, and raiſe Money, in Defiance of all Laws and Cuſtoms to the contrary. Echard aſſures us, and after that he may aſſure any Thing, the Archbiſhop boggled at the Convocation's ſitting, the Parliament being diſſolv'd, and that the King was the Mover in it; for he ſpares not his Majeſty. when he hopes to clear the Archbiſhop. Whitlocke following Truth, and the Reaſon of the Thing aſſerts it was done chiefly by Laud's Counſel and Perſuaſion. The Reverend Hiſtorian gives us the Opinion of the Lord Keeper Finch, and ſome other Lawyers, who were deep in Ship-Money, that the Convocation might legally ſit; as if after the twelve Judges, ſome of 'em, if not all, againſt Conſcience and Knowledge, had ſolemnly given their Opinion, that the King might raiſe Money without Conſent of Parliament, the Judgment of the Court-Lawyers had the leaſt Weight in it. Echard proceeds: The Convocation went on and finiſh'd their ſeventeen Canons with as little Oppoſition as cou'd be imagin'd: He wou'd not tell you Dr. Brownrig, Dr. Hacket, Dr. Holdſworth, Mr. Warmiſter, excellent Divines, and two of them afterwards Fathers and Biſhops of our Proteſtant Church, and thirty-ſix Miniſters of that Synod, earneſtly proteſted againſt the very ſitting of it. And here we muſt not omit ſo fair an Opportunity to do Homage to the Merit of thoſe pious and learned Doctors of our National Church, who at this Time preſerv'd its Purity, amidſt Laud's Innovations and Superſtitions, who bore their Teſtimony againſt his Severity, and were zealous for a thorough Reformation: For whereever we mention Archbiſhop Laud, and ſuch Eccleſiaſticks as the Majority of his Convocation conſiſted of, we do never intend the Church of England, as it was reform'd in King Edward the VIth's Reign, and as it is now in his preſent Majeſty King GEORGE's; but Laud's Church, as it was corrupted in the Reign we are writing.

In one of the Canons, the Convocation oblig'd the Clergy, and their Dependants, to take a ſort of Anti-Covenanting Oath; the Senſe of which was, that Archbiſhop Laud's Church contain'd all Things neceſſary to Salvation; and that the Swearer wou'd never give his Conſent to alter its Government by Archbiſhops, Biſhops, Deans, Archdeacons, &c. Some of theſe Canons were for aſſerting the Prerogative Royal; for the better keeping the King's Inauguration Day; for Rites and Ceremonies; for preaching up Conformity; for ſetting the Communion-Table, now turn'd into an Altar, to the Eaſt, and for railing of it in; for Excommunication; for Abſolution; for Commutation; for Marriage-Licenſes; the latter Ready-Money Articles: And Archdeacon Echard affirms all theſe Canons were for the Honour and Advantage of the Church and State. It is not eaſy to gueſs why Dr. Goodman, Biſhop of Glouceſter, who was afterwards known to be a Papiſt, ſhould be the only Member of the Convocation who refus'd to ſubſcribe the Canons. The Archbiſhop, who was then with the Biſhops and Clergy in Henry the VIIths Chappel at Weſtminſter Abbey, preſently cry'd out, My Lord of Glouceſter, I admoniſh you to Subſcribe; he delighted wonderfully in all acts of Superiority: And again, My Lord of Glouceſter, I admoniſh, &c. And a third Time, as they do at Auctions, My Lord of Glouceſter, I admoniſh you, &c. The Biſhop of Glouceſter as often pleaded Conſcience, and the furious Archbiſhop was for ſuſpending him immediately: But moderate Biſhop Davenant thought it more prudent to conſult Lawyers upon the Power of a Synod in that Caſe. However the Archbiſhop, who cou'd not bear the leaſt Oppoſition to his Power or Will, haſten'd thence to the King, and as uſual, got him to command a Warrant to be iſſu'd for committing the Biſhop of Glouceſter to Priſon. This Convocation tax'd the Clergy Four Shillings in the Pound for Six Years, towards his War againſt the Scots Presbyterians. And it was but fair, that as he did every Thing for them, ſo they ſhou'd do ſomething for him. Whitlock tells us, this raiſing of Money added more Fuel to the Flames already burning, and was the Subject of great Debate and Cenſure. There is Witchery or Infatuation in their Doings. All the Actions of theſe Men were ſo daring, ſo deſperate, and tended ſo directly to Deſtruction, that the Danger, like Cimmerian Darkneſs, might have been felt, if they had no Eyes to ſee it. A.D.1639.

His Majeſty was very active in the Proſecution of the Scots War. Before we proceed further in the Second BISHOPS WAR, we muſt remember that the Earl of Strafford had held a Parliament in Ireland, where he got Supplies for an Army of 8000 Horſe and Foot, rais'd and maintain'd by ſeveral Subſidies of 40000 Pounds each; ſo intolerable a Burthen, that in about a Years Time, the King gave way to the Parliament in Ireland to abate them to 12000 Pounds each. Orleans the Jeſuit ſays, the Earl of Strafford did the Roman Catholicks the Honour to account them better affected to the King than Proteſtants; of whom, two Years after, they butcher'd 200000 Men, Women and Children, in cold Blood. It is of this Iriſh Popiſh Army that Strafford ſpoke in the Debate about raiſing Money at the Junto Table, which he wou'd have brought into England for that Purpoſe. He caus'd a Proclamation to be iſſu'd in Ireland, denouncing the Scots Rebels and Traytors; and being call'd home to England, when he deliver'd the Sword at Parting to Mr. Wandesford, Maſter of the Rolls, his Deputy, and the Council, he utter'd theſe Words, If ever I return to this honourable Sword, I will not leave of the Scots in Ireland Root or Branch. Neither did he ſpare any Pains in the Junto to preſs on the War vigorouſly againſt Scotland, and after the Diſſolution of the laſt Parliament to break all Counſels tending to the calling another, for which the Reverend Hiſtorian ſtiles him the Delphian Oracle. One may ſee what Thoughts the People had of the near Relation between Archbiſhop Laud and Popery, by their attacking a Popiſh Agent, Count Roſetti, then at London, the 11th of May, at the ſame Time that they beſet Lambeth Houſe, and demoliſh'd ſome Windows. The Lord Wicquefort, in his admirable Treatiſe of the Ambaſſador and his Functions, lets us into the Secret of Roſetti's Negotiations in England, for which he was afterwards made a Cardinal: " He was not contented,

A.D.1640. "cise of their Religion for the Roman Catholicks, "but attempted also to change the predominant "Religion in the Person of the King. He who "writ the History of those Times upon very good "Memoirs, reports, that the Archbishop of Canterbury himself was much inclin'd thereto, and "resolv'd to follow Rosetti to Rome, if Cardinal "Barberino wou'd have insur'd him a Pension of "eight and forty thousand Livres. The People "of London coming to understand Rosetti's Intrigues, attack'd him in his House, from whence "he sav'd himself at the Queen Mother's, Mary de "Medicis, who was then in England. The Parliament caus'd him to be sought for, this was the "next Parliament, and oblig'd him to leave England, and retire to Flanders. He was no publick Minister, since he had no Character from "the Pope, so that he was at most but the Agent "of a Cardinal, for which Reason he cou'd not "enjoy the Protection of the Law of Nations. "But neither the Parliament nor the Londoners violated that Law in the Person of a Man, who "having no Character, nor being acknowledg'd as "a publick Minister, disturb'd the Tranquillity of "the State by endeavouring to introduce a new "Religion contrary to the Laws of the Kingdom." Larrey tells us King Charles protected this Romish Agent as much as if he had been Ambassador Extraordinary and Plenipotentiary. He sent his Guards to disperse the Rabble, and committed some of them to Prison; but their Fellows broke open the Prison-Doors and releas'd them.

Tho' the City of London was disgusted for the Loss of their Plantation, Londonderry in Ireland, which was taken from them by an unjust Sentence of the Star-Chamber; and tho' many Citizens had been imprison'd for refusing to pay the illegal Impositions, yet others of them were so infatuated by the Laudean Clergy, that they parted with their Money for so good a Cause as the Extirpation of Presbyterians; by which, with the Money the Convocation had given, the large Contributions of the Papists, the Subscriptions of the Courtiers, and others who were drawn in to subscribe, no less than 300000*l.* was scrap'd together, and his Majesty rais'd an Army of above 20000 Men in Defence of Prelacy, or rather of certain Prelates, Laud, Neile, Wren, &c. He made the Earl of Northumberland General, the Earl of Strafford Lieutenant-General, this Vein of Wisdom runs thro' the whole Mine of their Politicks, the Lord Conway General of the Horse. I do not object against the Promotion of these Staff-Officers, tho' the Archdeacon does, and wou'd have had the Command given to the Earls of Holland and Essex; for there being no likelihood of fighting, I think 'tis no great matter to whom the Battoons are given. Nothing, says Whitlock, cou'd alter the Opinion and Humour of divers of the Officers and private Soldiers of the Army, who in their March to the Rendezvouz spared not to declare their Judgments against this WAR, and that they would not fight to maintain the Pride and Power of the Bishops. This their Resolution seem'd not to be feign'd by the ill Success afterwards.

Army against the Bishops War.

Birth of Duke of Glocester.

Some Weeks before the King began his March Northward, the Queen was brought to-bed on the 8th of July of another Son, Henry Duke of Glocester, who of all the King and Queen's Children liv'd most in the Love of the People from his Birth to his untimely Death 20 Years after.

The Army marches.

The Royal Army began their March in the Beginning of August, and his Majesty follow'd them the 20th. On the 22d, a Proclamation was publish'd, declaring all the Scots that shou'd invade England, REBELS and Traytors. A Prayer was also publish'd in all Churches against the Rebels of Scotland. I have not in any History met with the like Rashness and Obstinacy as in this Northern Expedition. The King and his Ministers knew that almost every Heart in the Kingdom bled for the Perils it was in from Popery and Slavery, under the Names of the Church and Prerogative. They cou'd not but know that the Scots wou'd sooner have run into the Frith, than have march'd into England, if they had not been encourag'd from thence. They were sensible that the Army which the King was leading against them, were almost as willing to fight with one another as with the Scots. And yet nothing cou'd serve the Turn of Archbishop Laud and the Earl of Strafford but a War with the Scots Rebels, whom the Generality of the English Nation stil'd their Brethren of Scotland. The Scots in their Declaration charg'd these two evil Counsellors by Name, as the Authors of their Grievances, and the WAR which was rais'd to hinder the Redress of them. They declar'd to the English, That their Coming was not in Enmity, but to petition the King to call a Parliament, and bring Laud and Strafford to Punishment. Our wise Historian adds, That the English might see whom they chiefly aim'd at, a Book was publish'd by the Name of The Canterburian's Self-conviction. As if they had not before sufficiently shewn it, by naming him in their Declaration as the great Incendiary. He proceeds: In which the Author by a strange Inversion wou'd prove out of the Works of the Archbishop himself, that there was a peculiar Design on Foot for introducing Popery. A very strange thing truly! What were his Popish Alterations, his introducing Altars, Transubstantiation, Sacrifice of the Mass, Prayers to Saints, and other Popish Rites, written with his own Hand, and taken out of the Roman Missal and Pontifical, to be inserted in the Scotch Service-Book? Hidden Works, p. 156 to 164.

Two Days after the King left London the Scots enter'd England, commanded by General Lesley, the Earl of Montross, and other Scots Noblemen. The Earl of Montross led the Van, for his Understanding and Conscience had not yet been illuminated by any Court Reasons. When he arriv'd at the River Tweed, he alighted off his Horse, and forded the River a-foot. The Scots Army advanc'd to Newcastle before any Enemy appear'd. But as they approach'd the Tyne, they were fac'd by the Royal Army, a Body of which consisting of 3000 Foot and 1500 Horse was advantageously posted at Newburne under the Command of the Lord Conway. The Scots on the 28th of August, as their Historian tells us, resolving to put it to the Issue of a Battel, pass'd the River at Newburne in the Face of a strong Body of the English Army, beat them fairly by plain fighting from their Post, and kill'd 300 of their Men; which Action so frighted the King and his whole Army, that they wou'd not strike a Stroke more, but shamefully retreated to York, leaving Newcastle and Durham in Possession of the Scots. Whitlock owns there were 800 English kill'd and taken; among the latter were Digby, Wilmot, and Oneale, chief Commanders. But the Earl of Clarendon affirms there were eleven or twelve only kill'd and taken, his Lordship being never willing to let the Presbyterians have the better of it in any Dispute, whether Argument or Action, wherein his Zeal is more laudable than his Sincerity. Ludlow's Observation is very just: The English, contrary to their wonted Custom, retir'd in Disorder, not without Shame and some Loss. Of such Force and Consequence is a Belief and full Persuasion of the Justice of an Undertaking, tho' manag'd by an Enemy in other Respects not considerable. In the mean while the King's Garison at Berwick made an Incursion into Scotland, intending to surprize the Scots Magazine at Duns; but the Earl of Haddington, who was left with a Party to guard it, oblig'd them to retire. That Lord with his two Brothers having his Quarters at Douglas Castle was kill'd by the firing of Powder in a Vault, either thro' the Neglect or Treache-

*A.D.*1640. Treachery of a Page. Whitlock adds, there were about 20 more Knights and Gentlemen kill'd at the ſame time by the Stones which flew from the Vault. Echard, to increaſe the Judgment upon theſe Presbyterians, affirms there were 60 Gentlemen more ſuddenly blown up, and in a moment bury'd, ſo that they were never ſeen more; which tragical Event being reported at Court, the Royaliſts were not ſo moderate in their Cenſures as the King himſelf, who only ſaid, Tho' he has been very ungrateful to me, yet I am ſorry he had not ſome time to repent. Of what? Of profaning the Sabbath, taking away Mens Money and Goods by Violence, of worſhipping Images, of Oppreſſion and Superſtition. What is the Earl of Haddington to repent of? Swearing, Curſing, Wantonneſs, Riot, or any of the Vices of King James's Court. Or is he to repent of the Reform'd Religion, Liberty and Property, and of taking Arms to defend them?

Tho' there is very little Buſineſs done Civil or Military, the two Armies remaining very quiet, the Scots expecting the Effects of Lord Saville's pretended Invitation, and the Engliſh being diſcourag'd as well by the Cauſe as the Diſgrace at Newburne; yet the Archdeacon will have the Earl of Strafford to be the great Spring which moves this very little Machine. He arriv'd at Durham labouring under the Dregs of Sickneſs, and inflam'd and exaſperated at the late Diſhonour. My Lord Conway was highly blam'd by him, and the Soldiers having been rude to the Churches, he retir'd to the Skirts of Yorkſhire. Which in common Language is, he had heard of the Rout at Newburne, that the Scots were coming to Durham, and he got into Yorkſhire as faſt as he cou'd, carrying with him the great Spring that mov'd the military and civil Machine.

Scots in England. The Scots lik'd their new Quarters at Newcaſtle and Durham extremely well. They had good Fires, Store of Proviſions, and good Lodging; for which the County of Northumberland and Biſhoprick of Durham were ceſs'd 850 l. a Day. From Newcaſtle they ſent a Petition to the King, "in the Name of the Lords of the laſt Parliament, and others his Majeſty's loyal Subjects of "Scotland, complaining of their Grievances in "general; for Relief whereof they were con"ſtrain'd to come without Prejudice to the Peo"ple of England, till they were by Arms oppos'd "Paſſage at Newburne; and now preſent themſelves to his Majeſty's Goodneſs for Satisfaction "of their full Demands, and Repair of their Loſſes and Wrongs with the Advice of the Parliament to be conven'd". The King by the Earl of Lanerick his Secretary return'd Anſwer, that he expected their particular Demands, and commanded them to advance no farther. The old Air again: They were likely to obey his Command, when they wou'd not obey his Army. Whitlock, who was too wiſe to have mention'd ſuch a Command had there really been any ſuch given, tells us, he anſwer'd, he had ſummon'd the Peers of England to meet at York, where their Demands ſhou'd be taken into Conſideration. Three Days after the Scots ſent their particular Demands. 1. The publiſhing their late Acts of Parliament. 2. The repairing Edinburgh Caſtle and Forts of Scotland for their Defence. 3. The Scots to be no where preſs'd with Oaths contrary to the Covenant. 4. Incendiaries to be puniſh'd. 5. Ships and Goods to be reſtor'd, and Damages made good. 6. Wrongs, Loſſes and Charges repair'd. 7. Proclamations as Traytors to be recall'd. 8. Garriſons to be remov'd from the Borders. 9. The Parliament of England to meet as ſoon as poſſible. The Court Politicians muſt not be very politick, if they did not ſee plainly that the Scots inſiſting on the convening a Parliament in England was the Effect of ſome Agreement with their Engliſh Friends; and indeed the latter ſhew'd ſomething like it by a Petition which was deliver'd to the King about the ſame time, complaining, 1. "Of the waſting of the Revenue and "illegal Taxes. 2. Innovations in Religion. 3. In- Reybold. "creaſe of Popery. 4. The Deſign to bring in "Iriſh Forces. 5. Proſecutions about Ship-Mo"ney. 6. Monopolies. 7. The great Grief of "the Subjects by long Intermiſſions of Parlia"ment, and the late and former Diſſolutions. To "remedy which, they pray that a Parliament may "be ſummon'd, and the War compos'd without "Blood." This Petition was ſign'd by the Earls of Bedford, Eſſex, Mulgrave, Hertford, Warwick, Bolingbroke, Briſtol, the Lords Say and Sele, Howard, Mandeville, Brooke, Paget. The King's Anſwer was, he had ſummon'd a Meeting of the Peers at York the 24th of September, where they with the reſt might offer any thing. Two of theſe Petitioners, the Earls of Eſſex and Hertford, being about to take their Journey to York, waited on her Majeſty, and took occaſion to repreſent to her the ſad Condition to which the King and Kingdom were reduc'd, and that they ſaw no poſſible Means other than a Parliament whereby to repair the State. On their Expoſtulations they prevail'd with her to write to the King, and move him to ſummon a Parliament. They carry'd this Letter with them to York, and preſenting it to his Majeſty privately, it is ſuppos'd to have had more Influence upon him than the Advice of the Peers who met by his Summons. The Citizens of London ſent him a Petition much to the ſame Effect as the Lords Petition before-mention'd, and it had much the ſame Anſwer.

Queen writes to the King for a Parliament.

The Scots in the mean time made their Quarters good, and were juſtly complain'd of for overdoing it, contrary to the wiſe Counſel in Lord Saville's Letter. They ſeiz'd four great Ships loaden with Corn, and levy'd the Aſſeſsment on Pain of plundering. The War, ſays Whitlock, being begun with the Scots, it put many Men to think on a Poſture of Defence for themſelves, and to a Proviſion of Arms. The Diſcourſes of the Scotiſh War were very various. Thoſe who favour'd the Popiſh and Prelatical Ways did ſufficiently inveigh againſt the Covenanters, but generally the reſt of the People favour'd and approv'd their Proceedings, &c. Echard learnt of the Lord Clarendon to repreſent the Scots as Enemies to England; whereas in truth they were only Enemies to Laud, Strafford, and the Inſtruments of their Tyranny; and whatever the Court and Prieſthood ſaid to the contrary, the Generality of the Kingdom were Well-wiſhers to them and their Cauſe.

Scots favour'd by the Engliſh.

The Earl of Clarendon wonders that the Courtiers ſhou'd pretend Neceſſity for levying Ship-Money without Conſent of Parliament when there was no War; and now when their Enemy had invaded them, and the Neceſſity was apparent, they ſhou'd proceed in the dilatory way of raiſing Money by Parliament. This Argument has no more Weight in it than moſt of the reſt in the Hiſtory of the Rebellion. See what a learned Lawyer ſays upon it, "This Argument of the noble Hiſtorian had "been very reaſonable, if the Premiſes on which "'tis built had been probable. For if the Scots "had as Enemies invaded England, and had come "to deſtroy and enſlave this Nation, the People "wou'd have chas'd them home as Invaders. But "the REVERSE was the Caſe. I have frequently obſerv'd, that the Hiſtory of the Rebellion and the Archdeacon's Hiſtory are the REVERSE of the Caſe. "The Scots came as Friends to ſave "and reſcue England, as well as Scotland, from "under the bitter Preſſures and Sufferings which "grieved both, by the means only of a free Par"liament; and therefore they knew that England "wou'd by its Parliament do the Buſineſs of the "Scots, and of thoſe who had correſponded with "them for that Purpoſe; wherefore 'tis probable, Ach. 411.

A.D.1640 " that if the King had declar'd he wou'd have no " Parliament till the Scots were retir'd, a general " REVOLT had enſu'd." This is to write and think ſoberly. But let the Reader judge what ſober thinking and writing there are in the Hiſtory of the Rebellion, and its excellent Copy. If the King had march'd directly againſt the Scots, after ſome exemplary Juſtice and Diſgrace on the chief Officers, to raiſe more Diſcontent among the Soldiers, he wou'd ſpeedily have diſpoſſeſs'd them of their new Conqueſts, and forc'd them to run back diſtracted into their own Country. Can any thing be more puerile? They wou'd not only have run away, they wou'd alſo have run mad. The Truth is, thoſe evil Counſellors, who had been the Authors of all the Evils complain'd of, and cou'd expect nothing but condign Puniſhment from the Parliament, were in the right to chuſe rather to fall by the Hands of the Scots, than by the Hands of the Hangman. Echard informs us, " Strafford was " the only Man whoſe Advice was of any Credit " with the King, and thought there was but one " Way, and that not proper to be heard in Coun- " cil, which was to drive the Scots out of the " Kingdom by the Engliſh Army." And then comes the only heroick Action which we read of this Hero: He ſent Major Smith with a Party of Horſe, who defeated two or three Troops of Scots Horſe in the Biſhoprick, and made it appear that the Kingdom might be freed from the reſt, if it were vigorouſly purſu'd. The Treaty was then a-foot at Rippon, and General Leſley complain'd he had forborn any ſuch Attempt out of reſpect to it. Major Smith was a Papiſt, and glad enough to fall on the Scots, when, as they thought, their Hands were ty'd by the Treaty; however the King cou'd not decently approve of this Breach of it, and therefore was prevail'd with, ſays the Archdeacon, to reſtrain his General from giving any more ſuch Orders. Theſe Men have the pleaſanteſt Way of writing that can be imagin'd. One wou'd think the Earl of Strafford and Major Smith wou'd have driven the Scots Army over the Grampian Mountains, if the King wou'd but have ſaid the Word; whereas it is the quite contrary in true Hiſtories: " The King and Mem. Ch. of Scot. 191. " his Laudæan Army being retreated after the A- " ction of Newburn, it is impoſſible to expreſs the " Conſternation they were in. The Scots Army " being advanced to Durham, were now entire " Maſters of England: If they had pleas'd to ad- " vance, nothing cou'd have ſtood before them. " They were entirely poſſeſs'd of all the Counties " of Northumberland, Cumberland, and Durham, " and begun to extend themſelves towards the " Weſt; and as they receiv'd daily Supplies of " Men from Scotland, they wou'd in ſix Days more " have been poſſeſs'd of Weſtmorland and Lanca- " ſhire, there being no Forces to oppoſe them but " at York, and theſe under the terrible Apprehen- " ſion of being attack'd by our whole Army, " which God and a juſt Quarrel being on the Scots " Side, they were in no Condition to oppoſe." This Author underſtands the State of England to be then divided and broken, and the much greater Part of the People to be ready to receive the Scots with open Arms; or he wou'd talk wildly in ſaying they were Maſters of England.

We have been told of the King's hearkening to the Earl of Strafford more than to any other Counſellor; and of the Earl's Counſel to drive the Scots out of England Sword in hand; we have hinted that his Courage was probably animated by his Hatred and Fear of that Nation: For, as Larrey writes, " He had been ſix Years preparing to re- Vol. II. " duce Scotland under the arbitrary Power of the P. 53. " King and the Archbiſhop; at leaſt his Enemies " had that Opinion of him; and theſe were a great " Part of England, and all Scotland entire. He had " rais'd the Jealouſy of ſome, the Fear of others, and " the Hatred of all except Dr. Laud." At the ſame Time they accus'd him of being the Incendiary, &c. A.D.1640.

On the 24th of September the Peers aſſembled at York, and his Majeſty made a Speech to them, in which he ask'd their Advice how he might chaſtiſe the Scots; the high Tone ſtill, how he ſhou'd anſwer the Petition of the REBELS; and which was the chief Thing of all, how he might maintain the Army till the Parliament, which he had ſummon'd to meet the 3d of November, cou'd aſſemble. The Duke of Buckingham had the Credit of calling one Parliament, the Earl of Strafford of calling another; and now his Majeſty tells them the Queen had adviſ'd him to call this. Tho' ſuch Politicks are not deep, yet they are well-deſign'd to take off the Odium of the People from the Perſon that is intended by it. The Lord Lowdon attended at York to ſupport the Petition of the Scots with his Arguments and Intereſt, and perhaps alſo to confer with the Lords whoſe Names were to the forg'd Letter, and who were all there. The Earl of Traquair ſaid, the Scots petition'd for Things which ſubverted the King's Prerogative and Dignity, and were detrimental to his Profit. Whitlock tells us that " after ſeveral Meetings and Debates, a " Meſſenger was ſent from the King and Lords to " the Scots Army, to give Notice to them that on " Tueſday next ſixteen of the Engliſh Lords ſhou'd " meet as many Scotch Lords at York to treat of " the Differences." The Scots refus'd to treat at York ſo long as the Earl of Strafford commanded there, as a Place where their Commiſſioners wou'd not be ſafe, Strafford having threaten'd to deſtroy them; and they having high Matters of Complaint againſt him; which ſhew'd plainly enough that Wentworth had every Thing to fear from the Reſentment of that injur'd Nation: Yet he knew ſo well the Obſtinacy of his Maſter in protecting his Minions, that he did not fly for it, which he might eaſily have done and have eſcap'd. Commiſſioners for the Treaty were appointed on both Sides, and the Town of Rippon to be the Place, the Day the firſt of October. The Engliſh Commiſſioners were, the Earl of Hertford, Earl of Bedford, Earl of Pembroke, Earl of Salisbury, Earl of Eſſex, Earl of Holland, Earl of Briſtol, Earl of Berkſhire, Lord Viſcount Mandeville, Lord Dunſmore, Lord Wharton, Lord Paget, Lord Brook, Lord Saville, Lord Powlet, Lord Howard of Eſcrick. The Scots Commiſſioners were, Charles Earl of Dumferlin, John Lord Lowdon, Sir Patrick Hepburn, Sir William Douglaſs, Mr. Smith Bailiff of Edinburgh, Mr. Wedderburn, Mr. Henderſon and Mr. Johnſton, Miniſters. To theſe were added afterwards John Earl of Rothes, Hugh Kennedy Burgeſs of Aird, William Drummond of Riccarton. Peers meet at York. Treaty of Rippon.

The reverend Hiſtorian intimates, that the Scots P. 53. Commiſſioners were of inferior Quality to the Engliſh; and Larrey gives the Scots ſome other Advantage in the room of it: They were Perſons of greater Capacity and Eloquence. They knew how to ſpeak with that Energy, that they made themſelves Maſters of the Heart; and when they had done that, they ſoon became Maſters of the Mind. During the Treaty a great Complaint was made to the Engliſh Commiſſioners, that Meldrum, General Leſley's Secretary, had ſaid that the Scots were invited into England by the great Engliſh Lords. We have ſhewn what Sort of an Invitation it was; but the Scots Noblemen had all the Reaſon in the world to think it genuine. Meldrum however found he had babbled to much, and deny'd the Words which two Witneſſes offer'd to ſwear he ſaid. But his Denial was taken for Satisfaction, and the Matter huſh'd up. Almoſt all the Lords Commiſſioners on the Engliſh Side were either thoſe whoſe Names were to the forg'd Letter, or thoſe who had otherwiſe encourag'd the Scots to undertake this Expedition; and thoſe of them whoſe Names were to the Letter coming to no Eclairciſement with the Lord Lowdon upon the Subject of it, nor

A.D.1640. taking the leaſt Notice of it; but on the contrary arguing very much for ending this great Affair by Treaty, not by Arms, which was contrary to what was written in that Letter; and the Earl of Rothes and the Lord Lowdon taking an Opportunity to put them in mind of it, and the Diſagreement between their Writing and their Diſcourſe, the Engliſh Lords were ſurpriz'd to hear them talk of Writing; and expreſſing their Surprize to the Scots, the latter told them of the Letter they had received from them, which the Engliſh aſſur'd them they had never ſign'd; and the Lord Lowdon afterwards producing it, the Lords whoſe Names and Hands were counterfeited, diſcover'd the Impoſture, not by the Diſſimilitude of Hand-writing, for every one of thoſe Lords, as we have obſerv'd, acknowledg'd they cou'd not ſwear that they had not written thoſe Names, tho' they cou'd ſwear they never ſign'd ſuch a Letter, to the Contents of which they own'd they had agreed in Conference; and ſince the Conſequence of the Scots Entrance into England was like to prove ſo advantageous to both Nations, they wou'd not then enquire into the Forgery, which was own'd afterwards by the Lord Saville, who glory'd in it as a publick Service to both, at the ſame Time that he diſcover'd the whole Correſpondence between the Engliſh and Scottiſh Lords to the King, inform'd him of this very Letter as genuine, gave him a Copy of it, and, as is before hinted, adviſ'd his Majeſty to proſecute the pretended inviting Lords and Gentlemen for High-Treaſon; which was one of the main Inſtigations that put the King on that fatal Step of entring the Parliament-Houſe with an arm'd Force, and demanding the five Members, who as well as the Lords were accus'd of holding Intelligence with the Scots, and were not accus'd wrongfully. The Lord Wariſton ſome time after, at the Requeſt of the Lords whoſe Names was to the forg'd Letter, cut them out all, and gave them each to the Lord to whom it belong'd. Thus they are now wanting to the original Letter, but ſome Words of it that were forc'd to be cut out with the Names, were firſt carefully preſerv'd.

The Earl of Strafford did what he cou'd to have the Treaty at Rippon broken off; but how he wou'd have carry'd on the War, does not any where appear, nor can one conceive what ſhou'd inſpire him with ſuch Counſel but Deſpair. The Whit. Engliſh Commiſſioners were the firſt who propos'd a Ceſſation of Arms, to which the Scots reply'd, As they wou'd obey the King's Command not to advance, ſo they cou'd not return till they had effected their Buſineſs. At length the Commiſſioners on both Sides agreed to that Ceſſation, to the Contribution of 850l. a-day, the River Tees to be the Bounds of both Armies, private Inſolencies to be no Breach of Treaty; and the reſt of their Demands to be debated at London when the Parliament ſate, which was now to be in two or three Weeks. The Earl of Pembroke was ſent to London to borrow 200000 Pounds of the City, and the Citizens were ſo well pleas'd with this Accommodation, that they readily lent it, to be repaid out of the firſt Money given by Parliament. The Earl of Rothes and two or three more were added to the Scots Commiſſioners, who were to reſide at London, where, ſays Mr. Echard, they were feaſted, preſented, and even idoliz'd by all Sorts of People, who were ſenſible that the approaching Parliament was owing to Whit. 35. their Demand of it. " Many wonder'd, and ſome " inveigh'd againſt this Treaty, wiſhing the King " wou'd have put it rather to the Iſſue of a Battel, " than to have given ſuch Terms to his Subjects in " Rebellion; and of this Judgment was Strafford " and the Epiſcopal Party. But the other Party " cry'd up this Treaty as juſt, honourable, and pi- " ous, to prevent Effuſion of Blood, and to ſettle " Peace. The King ſaw plainly that both divers " Officers of the Army, and even the private Sol- " diers generally, which was a remarkable Inclina- A.D.1640. " tion, had no mind to fight with the Scots." Acherley goes farther, It was found that the Army and Country were more incens'd againſt the Lord Strafford than againſt the Scots, therefore the Lord Saville concluded Strafford cou'd not laſt long. Upon this he heartily deſerted his Party, and diſcover'd to the King the grand Invitation, as he repreſented it, producing a Copy of the Engagement; it ſhou'd be the Letter; but this Copy being written in Saville's own Hand, cou'd be no Evidence. The King ſeem'd greatly oblig'd, and privately committed to the Lord Strafford the CARE of improving the Intelligence in order to impeach the INVITERS. His Majeſty for this Service promis'd to make Saville Preſident of the North in caſe Strafford was remov'd; and he did afterwards make him Earl of Suſſex, tho' had it not been for his Quality, the Forgery he was guilty of, wou'd have deſerv'd another ſort of Advancement.

It was about this Time that the Earl of Montroſs, being grown weary of the Covenanters, or they weary of him, wrote privately to the King to offer his Service. Whitlocke ſays, Hamilton found Means to have this Letter ſtolen out of the King's Pocket, a Copy of which was ſent to the covenanting Lords, who made the proper Uſe of it. Thus we ſee Saville makes his Court by a double Treachery, by deceiving firſt the Scots, and then the King; and Montroſs makes his by Perjury, by renouncing the Covenant he had moſt ſolemnly ſworn. It cannot be ſaid the latter proceeded from Conviction of the Juſtice of the Prelatical Cauſe; for the Spirit of the Laudæan Prelates are ſtill the ſame, and the Government has not taken one Meaſure to ſhew it will be better for the future. We have now a very doleful Account of the Conſequence of removing the Treaty to London; The Scots Commiſſioners went to Meeting-Houſes, and the Presbyterian Miniſters flock'd from all Quarters of the Kingdom unto the City, as if they were to convert an unſanctify'd Heathen Nation. The Commiſſioners Lodgings were viſited as Repoſitories of Divine Truths, and they were look'd upon as Angels of Light. Tho' this taſteleſs inſipid Raillery is too good to be the Author's own, and is ſtolen from Heylin, Warwick, or ſome ſuch witty Hiſtorian, yet it has too much Buffoonry in it to become the Gravity of Hiſtory. When one has to do with Folly and Knavery, Simplicity and Impudence, 'tis impoſſible to avoid being merry or angry; and I confeſs I have ſometimes preferr'd Mirth to Indignation, which I doubt will incur Cenſure, tho' one wou'd think the Reader ſhou'd be as willing to be kept in good Humour as the Writer. But I hope I ſhall be allow'd to be as merry with Knavery and Folly, as theſe Hiſtorians are with Angels of Light, Divine Truths, the Converſion of Heathens and Men of unſanctify'd Lives. For theſe are the Jeſts with which they divert themſelves and thoſe Readers who are capable of being diverted with Dulneſs and Grimace. Then he tells us what theſe Angels of Light ſaid, Epiſcopacy was run down as tyrannical, the Rules of the Church as Superſtition, and bowing at the Name of Jeſus, had a Book written againſt it, with no leſs a Title than Jeſus-Worſhip confuted. 'Tis a very common Thing with theſe Gentlemen when they are wittily diſpos'd, to make fooliſh Titles for Books, and father them on thoſe they wou'd blacken, but they always over-do it; and the Folly is ſo extravagant, that it appears preſently to be their own, We wou'd have done with Archbiſhop Laud if Mr. Echard wou'd let us, but he is ſo often flouriſhing with him, that we are tempted to follow his Example: He was the moſt vigorous Supporter of the Proteſtant Religion, and the Papiſts were in a Plot againſt both the King and him; upon which it will not be expected we ſhou'd make any Remarks.

*A.D.*1640. All wiſe and ſober Men in England thought a Parliament was the only Remedy for the Evils the People groan'd under, but the ſame reverend Author affirms, That the meeting of the Parliament was the Occaſion of all the Calamities which made the Times dark and diſmal; that they were choſen by the Management of Mr. Pym and five or ſix other Gentlemen; that Mr. Hampden went once a Year to Scotland to confirm the Brethren there; and that Mr. Pym rode up and down in England to promote the good Cauſe; that the Conſpirators met at the Houſes of the Lord Say in Oxfordſhire, Mr. Knightley in Northamptonſhire,, and other Gentlemens Houſes, where they form'd a Scheme, the Foundation of which was, that all Empire is founded in Property. All which, and a great deal more, relating as much to the Hiſtory of the Moon as to that of England, is to be put among other Dreams of that Hiſtorian and his admirable Originals. Our learned Lawyer opens the Scene otherwiſe; "And now the memorable Parliament, "whoſe Acts and Proceedings in reſtoring the "Nation to its Rights and Liberties, and hereditary Privileges, that was the only Scheme thoſe "worthy Patriots form'd, will appear ſurprizing "as long as the Monuments of Hiſtory remain." He does not mean the Earl of Clarendon's or Mr. Echard's Monuments: "For this Parliament did in "ſome Sort reſemble the Proceedings of that Pa-"liament which one hundred Years before had "by diſſolving the Monaſteries, reſtor'd to the "Nation its antient Freedom, Riches, and Pow-"er." The next good Thing the reverend Hiſtorian tells us, is how this Parliament was choſen, and what Character the Members of it had. By which it is hoped we may be excus'd taking Notice of any other Characters of his, tho' ſlaviſh Copies of the Earl of Clarendon's, whoſe Pictures are all as much Originals as any Pictures can be when the Perſons never ſate for them. The Party exclaim'd againſt the Nomination of any belonging to his Majeſty's Service. A very hard Caſe indeed, that thoſe who were to be puniſh'd for their High-Crimes and Miſdemeanours, were not nominated for Members of that Parliament whoſe chief Buſineſs was to puniſh them: They gave Votes for Men of the new Religion. The Lord Wicquefort, to whom they have no Name nor Character to oppoſe, has told us, that Roſetti's and Laud's was the new Religion which they were then about to introduce: But the Archdeacon means the Reform'd Religion. Notorious Oppoſers of the King or the Clergy were elected; he means arbitrary Power and the High-Commiſſion-Court. Thus divers Citizens and Lawyers were choſen Members for thoſe Corporations that never ſo much as heard of them. He probably means Mr. Rolle a Merchant of London, who was choſen for Kellington in Cornwall, where his Family was in the firſt Diſtinction; and ſhou'd have meant Mr. Edward Hyde of the Middle-Temple, who was choſen for Saltaſh in the ſame County, where he had not a Foot of Land nor a Penny Property. Theſe and many other uncommon Practices were us'd to defeat the King's Friends, who for twelve Years had been induſtriouſly employ'd in deſtroying thoſe Rights and Liberties which the Parliament was to vindicate, recover, and re-eſtabliſh. It is common with the Earl of Clarendon and Mr. Echard, to charge thoſe whom they write againſt, with the very Crimes and Offences which thoſe they write for were only guilty of. We have ſeen what they ſay of thoſe great and excellent Men Mr. Pym and Mr. Hampden's riding about at this Time; and the real Truth is, what we are told by others, the Courtiers got the King and Queen's Letters to Counties, and Earls, Lords, and Gentlemen to ride up and down to all Parts of the Kingdom to make Parties for them, but to no Purpoſe. Mr. Echard again; "The Puritans for Number "cou'd not make above a third Part of the Houſe "of Commons." If I had not had the Liſt before me, which proves this to be an egregious Falſity, what Whitlocke writes wou'd be more than ſufficient to do it, and confirm what is above cited. "The Court labour'd to bring in their Friends; "but thoſe who were moſt favour'd at Court, had "leaſt Reſpect in the Country; and it was not a "little ſtrange to ſee what a Spirit of Oppoſition "to Court-Proceedings was in the Hearts and "Actions of moſt People; ſo that very few of "that Party had the Favour to be choſen Mem-"bers of Parliament." Mr. Archdeacon aſſures us they were above two Thirds. 'Tis great Pity ſo large and ſo florid a Hiſtory as that of Clarendon, ſhou'd be of no more Uſe to an Hiſtorian, who can ſcarce look upon it with Safety. The Miſrepreſentation and Gloſſes are ſometimes ſo handſomely ſet out, that they are apt to miſlead Readers, as Travellers are miſled by wand'ring Lights and glittering Vapours. The Author of the Hiſtory of the Rebellion complains there were not many Lawyers fit to be Speakers; tho' we find Serjeant Glanville, Serjeant Creſwel, Serjeant Fountain, Serjeant Maynard, Serjeant Wild afterwards Lord Chief Baron, John Vaughan Eſq; afterward Lord Chief-Juſtice of England, Bulſtrode Whitlocke Eſq; afterwards Lord-Commiſſioner of the Great-Seal, Sir Robert Holburn, John Selden Eſq; John Glyn Eſq; Edmund Prideaux Eſq; Oliver St. John Eſq, Edward Bagſhaw Eſq; John White Eſq; Sir Thomas Widdrington afterwards Speaker of the Houſe of Commons, Francis Rouſe Eſq; afterwards Speaker of the Houſe of Commons, and ſeveral others, Men of the greateſt Eminence in the Law: But the Way of Lord Clarendon is to render thoſe whom he oppoſes Objects of Contempt, and then by the Compariſon he heightens the Characters of thoſe whom he extols. The Gentlemen who are not in his good Graces, continu'd their Artifices after the Houſe met, but moſt at the Committee of Elections, to turn out Laud's and Strafford's Friends, and bring in more ſanctify'd Members: Their Wit is never to be exhauſted. It overflows again, and ſo it will do as often as true Religion comes in their Way.

Long Parliament.

The Parliament which diſſolv'd the Monaſteries, having met on the 3d of November an hundred Years before, the Archbiſhop was adviſ'd to put off the meeting of this Parliament to another Day leſt it ſhou'd be ominous; and after the Example of thoſe who were ſo wicked as to unfrock the Friars, this Aſſembly ſhou'd unſurplice the Vicars and Curates. I wonder it was not done, for a very little Thing turns their Heads; but the Archbiſhop was too well aſſur'd of his Majeſty's Zeal to fear any Omen: And beſides it does not appear in his Diary, that among ſo many Dreams he dream'd once againſt the third of November; ſo the Lords and Commons then met, and the King made a Speech to them, which the reverend Hiſtorian does not approve of, becauſe it had not that Spirit in it which was in his former Speeches; by which we ſee how much this meek Divine was enamour'd with that imperious Manner ſo diſagreeable to the Condition of Freemen. Mr. Acherley ſpeaks of it reaſonably, His Majeſty, as if he had been the only Stranger to the general Senſe of the Nation, arraign'd the Scots as REBELS, and with Warmth repreſented to the Lords and Commons, that their primary and principal Conſideration ought to be to raiſe Money and Force to chaſe theſe REBELS out of England. I am really in the greateſt Aſtoniſhment, when I conſider that at a Juncture when there were as many wiſe and able Men in the Nation as ever were call'd to Council, ſuch Heads as were about the King cou'd be cull'd out to have the Adminiſtration: There is not only an uncommon Deficiency of Underſtanding, but of Modeſty: For theſe Counſellors knew that the Generality of the People

*A.D.*1640. ple were ſo far from looking on the Scots as Traytors, that they thought them their Deliverers, and lov'd them as their Brethren, and ſo ſtil'd them in their moſt ſolemn Diſcourſes; yet did they ſuffer the King to call them Rebels, and to demand them to drive them away before their Deliverance was accompliſh'd. If the Courtiers knew any Thing, they cou'd not but know this Parliament had never met if the Scots had never enter'd England; and the Parliament knew as well that they ſhou'd be ſent home again as ſoon as the Scots left the Kingdom; yet nothing leſs wou'd content the Rage of Laud and his Accomplices, than the Term REBELS, ſo madly they drove to Deſtruction; which is obſerv'd by Mr. Acherley and other grave Writers. " This Speech alarm'd the Lords and
P. 413. " Commons, who had given Encouragement to " the Scots; for they very well underſtood that that " Invaſion was the very Cauſe of their being now " aſſembled, and the Continuance of the Scots " Army in England, was the only Means to ſecure " and continue them ſitting, that they might with- " out abrupt Diſſolution, have Time to redreſs " their Grievances, and puniſh the State Malefa- " ctors. I think Mr. Acherley gives them their " right Name, and that they deſerve it much more " than thoſe who have their Puniſhment at Tyburn. " They were ſenſible enough that if they ſhou'd " chaſe out the Scots, they ſhou'd themſelves ſoon " after be chas'd out of Doors, and ſent home to " grieve and ſuffer as they had done many Years; " and therefore did the People mourn at the King's " calling the Scots REBELS: Yet his Majeſty " diſdaining to mitigate or recede, went two or " three Days after to the Houſe of Peers, and in " a Speech to them, avow'd the calling the Scots " REBELS, and repeated and preſs'd his for- " mer Commands to chaſe them as ſuch out of " England, tho' this Speech was a direct Breach of " the Treaty of Rippon, now adjourn'd to London." The Lord-Keeper Finch's Harangue after the King's Speech, is the groſſeſt Piece of Flattery which ever Monarch ſtood the hearing of in Preſence of a whole Nation. Mr. Echard avers, He gave a full and ſatisfactory Account of the Scots Invaſion, with all the threatening Dangers that attended ſo formidable an Appearance. 'Tis evident enough that theſe impartial Hiſtorians do not know what they are about. The People of England in general had not the leaſt Apprehenſion of Danger from the Encampment of the Scots in Northumberland; nor was that Army formidable to any one Engliſhman but to Finch himſelf, Laud, Strafford, and the other Malefactors ſpoken of by Mr. Acherley.

Malefactors.

The Commons choſe William Lenthal Eſq; a Bencher and Reader of Lincoln's-Inn, to be their Speaker; the King had intended Sir Thomas Gardiner Recorder of London for that Poſt, but he cou'd get no Place to chuſe him a Member of Parliament. The Lord Clarendon intimates that he ſtood for London and loſt it. I can hardly think he did ſtand, for there was not the leaſt likelihood that a Court Lawyer, who had been a Favourer of Tonnage and Poundage, &c. ſhou'd be choſen at the ſame Time that Mr. Samuel Vaſſal was elected for London, who had been cruelly perſecuted and plunder'd for refuſing to pay that Tax till the King had any Right to demand it, which he had not till it was given him by Parliament.

In two Days time the Houſe of Commons ſettled their Committees of all Kinds, and ſpent the following two or three Days in receiving Petitions from all the Counties of England, and from particular Perſons who had been oppreſs'd at the Council-Board, in the Star-Chamber, High-Commiſſion Court, or otherwiſe. Arthur Capel Eſq; preſented the Petition for Hertfordſhire, Sir John Packington that for Worceſterſhire, Sir John Colepepyr that for Kent, Sir Philip Muſgrave that for Weſtmorland; that for Wilts was preſented by Sir Francis Seymour.

whom I mention on Account of their deſerting this Cauſe afterwards, as it had been deſerted before by Saville, Wentworth, and moſt of theſe did it for the ſame Reaſon as Capel, Colepepyr, Seymour, tho' Mr. Capel was forc'd to give Money too into the Bargain. Turner, one of the Farmers of the Cuſtoms, having for ſome ſecret Service obtain'd the Nomination of a Baron, he diſpos'd of it to Mr. Capel for 10000 Pounds, for which he was created Lord Capel of Hadham; but when the Reyhold. Money came to be paid, the King took it himſelf, and gave it to the Queen-Mother Mary de Medicis, to pay for her Tranſportation when the Parliament began to murmur at her Stay in England. The Lord Fairfax preſented the Yorkſhire Petition, Sir John Wray that of Lincolnſhire, Sir Thomas Barrington that for Eſſex, Sir Edmund Montfort that for Norfolk, William Pierrepoint Eſq; that for Shropſhire, Sir Hugh Cholmley, Sir Anthony Irby, and divers other Knights and Burgeſſes did the like for other Shires and Boroughs. But thoſe Gentlemen were conſtant to their Principles, and almoſt all of them aſſerted to the laſt the Rights and Liberties of the People. Sir John Clotworthy a Member of Parliament in Ireland, was choſen for this in England, and in a long Speech ſet forth the Grievances which the Iriſh Proteſtants complain'd of under the Adminiſtration of the Earl of Strafford, who carry'd Tyranny with him wherever he went; for we are not in the leaſt to heed what is ſaid of his mild Government in Clarendon and Echard. Sir John Temple Maſter of the Rolls in Ireland, a wiſe and virtuous Man, complains of the ſharp Humours rais'd by Wentworth's rigid Government, and of the Exorbitancies, ſo bitterly decry'd in Parliament, at the Council-Table there when he was Deputy; accordingly ſeveral Petitions were now deliver'd in againſt him preparatory to his Puniſhment.

Strafford's Tyranny.

On the 14th of November Petitions were preſented in behalf of Dr. Leighton, William Prynne Eſq; Dr. Baſtwick, Mr. Burton, and Mr. Lilburne; and the Houſe order'd Mr. Prynne, Dr. Baſtwick, and Mr. Burton, to be ſent for from their Goals in Guernſey and Jerſey. They conceiv'd ſo great Horror at the Barbarities Dr. Leighton had ſuffer'd by Laud's Procurement, that as has been obſerv'd, their Clerk was bid to ſtop before the Petition was read thro'; that Chriſtian and Proteſtant Aſſembly cou'd not bear the Sentence repeated which Archbiſhop Laud pronounced. The Complaints and Petitions touching Grievances, were ſo numerous, that the whole Houſe was divided and ſubdivided into above forty Committees, to hear and examine them; but the main were reducible to theſe four general Heads.

1. " Committees concerning Religion, Innovati- " ons in the Church, and Grievances by Eccleſi- " aſtical Courts.

2. " Committees concerning Publick Affairs in " general, and particularly concerning Ireland and " Scotland.

3. " Other Committees were relating to Ship- " Money, Judges, and Courts of Juſtice.

4. " Committees concerning Popery, the Popiſh " Hierarchy, the Pope's Nuncio, &c.

Theſe Committees were purſuant to the Speeches and Motions of Mr. Pym, Sir Benjamin Rudyard, Mr. Bagſhaw, Sir John Holland, all on the 7th of November. Sir Benjamin Rudyard enlarg'd upon Laud's ſuperſtitious Innovations, Mr. Pym upon the illegal and violent Ways of extorting Money from the People, on the Breach of parliamentary Privileges, the abrupt Diſſolutions and Interruption of Parliaments, the Star-Chamber, High-Commiſſion Court, and the ambitious and corrupt Clergy preaching divine Authority and abſolute Power in Kings. He inſtanc'd in a Knight of a Shire, who was proſecuted five Years in a Spiritual Court, for putting on his Hat in Sermon-Time. Do ſuch Things want Aggravation?

That there are a ſort of Prieſthood who ſtill wou'd ſet theſe infamous Courts at work to vex oppreſs and ruin their honeſt conſciencious Neighbours, one may conclude by a late Inſtance of a certain Curate, who having taken Offence againſt a Member of a Corporation for his Loyalty to his late Majeſty, lodg'd a Proſecution againſt him in one of thoſe vile Courts, in the Name of the Church-Wardens of the Pariſh, who knew nothing of the Matter. The Offender's Crime was laying down an aking Head on his Arm, in Time of a very dull Sermon. But what was ſtill worſe than the Malice of this Proſecution, he made the two Church-wardens afterwards ſwear to the Fact, and that they put in the Information to which their Names had been put; one of them, an ignorant Fellow, did it very readily, and has yet no Senſe of his Sin, but the other has a deep Impreſſion of it in an honeſt Mind, the Peace of which is like to be diſturb'd by it as long as he lives.

Spiritual Courts.

This Digreſſion cannot be unſeaſonable on a Subject which was ſo well handled in this Parliament; and it is in order to have it remember'd, if ever it ſhou'd be handled there again.

Sir John Holland.

Sir John Holland ſpoke for removing the Scottiſh Army with a ſoft and gentle Hand of Mediation and Reconciliation. The only way to reconcile them to the Government, was to reſtore their Religion, and Rights; and if they wou'd not have remov'd then, they wou'd ſoon have been chas'd away, as his Majeſty ſo earneſtly deſir'd: But there was no fear of that.

Lord Digby.

The Lord Digby, who had not yet made a Bargain with the Court, ſtrenuouſly vindicated thoſe Liberties for which he traffick'd with them afterwards. He ſaid warmly and eloquently, "It is "true, Mr. Speaker, the County of Dorſet has not "digeſted its Complaints into the formal way of "Petition, which others I ſee have done, but have "entruſted them to my Partners and my Delivery "of them by word of Mouth. There was given "in to us in the County-Court, the Day of "our Election, a ſhort Memorial of the Heads of "them, which we read in the Hearing of the "Freeholders preſent, who all unanimouſly with "one Voice, ſignify'd upon each Particular, that "it was their Deſire we ſhould repreſent them to "the Parliament, which with your Leave I ſhall "do; and theſe are, 1. The great and intolerable Burthen of Ship-Money: 2. The many Abuſes in preſſing of Soldiers, and raiſing Monies: 3. The multitude of Monopolies: 4. The new Canons and Oath: 5. The Oath requir'd to be taken by Church Officers, &c. And to ſhew that the pious Orthodox Clergy were not much better us'd by Laud, than thoſe he call'd Schiſmatical, the Lord Digby told the Parliament, he had a Note deliver'd him by the Clergy of that Dioceſe, complaining of the Impoſition of a new Oath, which they conceive to be illegal, and of a pretended Benevolence, but in Effect a Subſidy to be paid by them, under Penalty of Suſpenſion, Excommunication, and Deprivation: He ſaid farther, The Oath is a Covenant againſt the King, for Biſhops and the Hierarchy, and ſo much the worſe than the Scottiſh Covenant, as they admit not of the Supremacy in Eccleſiaſtical Affairs, and we are ſworn to it. I cannot omit a handſome Turn of his upon the Lord Keeper's Rhetorical Harangue, "It hath been a Metaphor frequent in Parliament, "and if my Memory fail me not, was made uſe "of in the Lord Keeper's Speech, That what

Sir John Colepepyr. Mr. Harbottle Grimſton.

Sir Edward Deering ſpoke much againſt the Archbiſhop of Canterbury, concluding thus, I hope before the Year run round, his Grace will either have more Grace, or no Grace at all; for our manifold Griefs do fill a mighty and vaſt Circumference; yet ſo, that from every Part our Lines of Sorrow do lead to him, and point to him the Center, from whence our Miſeries in this Church, and many of them in the Common-Wealth do flow.

A Committee was appointed to draw up the Remonſtrance which the Lord Digby had mov'd, himſelf was Chairman; Sir John Strangeway, Sir John Colepepyr, Mr. Capel, Sir Francis Seymour, were of this Committee, as well as Mr. Selden, Mr. St. John, Sir Robert Harley, Sir John Clotworthy, &c. Thus we ſee that at the beginning of this Parliament, the moſt zealous Royaliſts were as loud againſt Grievances, as the moſt zealous Parliamentarians; and it is ſtrange beyond Conception, that their Judgment ſhould be convinc'd by a Civil War, in which they engag'd as ſoon as they left their firſt Party, to vindicate the Authors of thoſe very Grievances. Sir William Widdrington, Knight of the Shire for Northumberland, ſpeaking of the Scots, call'd them invading Rebels: The Houſe taking Diſtaſte at it, Captain Charles Price mov'd, that they wou'd give the Loſers Leave to ſpeak, for Sir William's whole Eſtate was under the Scots Power; and the Knight, to explain himſelf, ſaying, he knew the Scots to be the King's Subjects, and wou'd no more call them Rebels, the Houſe was ſatisfy'd.

Sir John Wray.

Another wiſe Act of his Majeſty's Counſellors, was the making one of them, the Lord Cottington, Governor of the Tower, juſt when the Ears of the Parliament were dinn'd with Complaints of the Encouragement given to Papiſts: If that Lord was not then a profeſs'd Papiſt himſelf, he was a profeſs'd favourer of Popery. But King Charles's Court was ever full of the worſt ſort of Occaſional Conformiſts, ſuch as went to Church not ſo much for Places, as to make her a Sacrifice to Rome, as Weſton, Windebank, Cornway, Digby, Cottington, &c. Cottington preſently added 400 Men to the Gariſon in the Tower, which giving Umbrage to the Parliament as well as City, his Majeſty took off

*A.D.*1640. the Gariſon, and diſplac'd the Governor. The Houſe of Commons expell'd all their Members who had been concern'd in Monopolies, and other unlawful Projects for raiſing Money, for which Echard reproaches them, as having no Precedent for ſuch Expulſions: We are aſſur'd, his own Words, "they had no Power to exclude any Members "from their Places, upon the account of falſe "Elections, or any other Pretence whatſoever. Who cou'd aſſure him this, which is ſo contrary to all Journals of Parliament before the preſent? It were to be wiſh'd he had not been ſo often miſled by the like Information and Authority. Sir William Beecher, one of the Clerks of the Council, who had been very buſy in ſearching the Studies and Pockets of the Earl of Warwick, Lord Brook, and other Lords and Commoners, was ſummon'd before the Houſe of Peers, and by them committed to the Fleet, though, ſays Echard, he had a Warrant from Secretary Windebank, who is about to fly the Kingdom for that and other illegal Practices.

Strafford impeach'd. Upon the 12th of November, a ſudden Motion was made by Mr. Pym, for Leave to acquaint the Houſe with ſomething of the greateſt Importance; wherefore he deſir'd the Doors may be lock'd up; which being done, he told them ſeveral Perſons had given Information, which gave Ground for the accuſing Thomas Earl of Strafford of High-Treaſon. The Houſe appointed a Committee, the Lord Digby, Sir John Clotworthy, Sir Walter Earl, Mr. Pym, Mr. Hampden, Mr. Stroud, Mr. St. John, to conſider the Information, who reported that they found juſt Cauſe for it. While they were examining this Matter, Sir John Brampſtone, Lord Chief-Juſtice, and Judge Forſter, brought a Meſſage from the Lords concerning the Scots Treaty; which being underſtood to be done with Deſign to ſtop the other Buſineſs, the Commons anſwer'd, that the Affair of the Treaty muſt be deferr'd, while the weighty and important Buſineſs then in Agitation, was under Conſideration. The Earl of Strafford was but juſt arriv'd from the Army when the Information againſt him was brought into the Houſe. Some thought it ſtrange that he ventur'd to come to Parliament, knowing that the Scots were reſolv'd to accuſe him as an Incendiary, and that the moſt leading Members of both Houſes were ready to join with them. But we are told the King was poſitive for his coming, being in want of ſo able a Head, which the Earl cou'd not long keep upon his Shoulders. He had prepar'd Matters for an Impeachment againſt thoſe Lords and Gentlemen who had encourag'd the Scots to march into England; but Mr. Pym was before-hand with him, and not many Hours after he arriv'd in Town, carry'd up to the Houſe of Lords an Accuſation of High-Treaſon againſt Thomas Earl of Strafford, and deſir'd in the Name of the Commons of England, that he be immediately put in ſafe Cuſtody; which, according to the Archdeacon, the Lords agreed to with Clamour, and committed him to the Cuſtody of Mr. Maxwell, Uſher of the Black-Rod. He tells us further, that the Commons reſolv'd to make Sir George Ratcliff, his Friend and Confident, a Party in the Treaſon, to diſable him to be a Witneſs for the Earl. He alſo accuſes them of a breach of Privilege, in ſending for Sir George out of Ireland, where he was a Member of Parliament; but he does not tell us he was impeach'd there of High-Treaſon, which Audley Mervin, Eſq; ſaid, in his Speech to the Houſe of Lords there, tranſcended all former Treaſons ſo much, as that the reſt ſeem'd to be but petty Larcenies, in reſpect of Ratcliff's, the Lord Strafford's Friend and Confident. Mr. Echard adds, upon the Earl's being ſent to the Tower, The Parliament hunted and purſu'd him with all the Marks of an inſatiable Deſire of his Blood; which is in Truth of Sentiment and Expreſſion, they proſecuted him ſtrenuouſly, with a reſolute Deſign to have Juſtice. *A.D.*1640. Armies.

The Houſe of Lords having had a Conference with the Houſe of Commons about the Treaty of Rippon, the Commiſſioners for that Treaty now adjourn'd to London, were approv'd of by both Houſes. Money being wanted to pay the King's Army, and relieve the Northern Counties, 100000 Pounds was voted to be borrow'd on the Security of ſome Members, who offer'd it; of which Mr. Harriſon, a young Gentleman, a Member of the Houſe, Son to Sir John Harriſon of the Cuſtom-Houſe, voluntarily offer'd to advance 50000 Pounds upon that Security; which 50000 Pounds was ſent to the Scots Army, who lay very heavy on Northumberland, and the Biſhoprick. The Archdeacon copying after Biſhop Guthry, his Originals are incomparable, calls it a Preſent, and adds, 'twas to be altogether without Prejudice to the 850 Pounds a Day formerly appointed them; whereas the Counties of Cumberland, Northumberland, and Durham, which paid that Contribution, were voted to be exempt from their Proportion of the 100000 Pounds when the Tax was levy'd.

Kilvert. Kilvert the Informer, who proſecuted the Biſhop of Lincoln at the Inſtigation of Laud, was queſtion'd in Parliament, as the main Manager of the wicked Wine Project, and a Bill was brought into the Houſe, to make that vile Wretch a remarkable Example to all Projectors and Monopoliſts.

Biſhop Williams. The Biſhop of Lincoln was releas'd out of the Tower, at the Requeſt of the Houſe of Lords, and being reſtor'd to his Seat there, had not been many Hours in it, according to Echard, before he found out the dangerous Deſigns of the Country Party, and abandon'd them: He might have told us, that the Houſe of Commons having ſent to him, as Dean of Weſtminſter, that the Communion-Table in Weſtminſter Abbey, where the Members were wont to receive the Holy Sacrament, might be plac'd in the middle of the Church, he reply'd, He wou'd do it, and wou'd do the like for any Pariſhioner in his Dioceſe.

James and Haywood. About this Time one James, a Papiſt, Son of Sir Henry James of Feverſham, made a bold Attempt on Mr. Haywood, a Juſtice of Peace in Weſtminſter, who had carefully prepar'd a Liſt of Recuſants to be preſented to the Committee: James was ſo provok'd at this Proteſtant Juſtice's Zeal, that meeting him in Weſtminſter-Hall, he publickly ſtabb'd him: The Wound was thought Mortal at firſt, and the imagin'd Murther caus'd more Clamour againſt Papiſts, who were grown ſo inſolent, that one of them aſſaulted a Magiſtrate in the ſupreme Court of Juſtice. The King was ſo ſenſible of the dangerous Conſequence of ſuch Inſolence, that he ſent a Meſſage to the Houſe of Commons to enquire into ſo foul and horrible a Fact. The Citizens of London preſented a Petition againſt Recuſants, in which they took Notice of James's Aſſault upon Haywood, and offer'd to guard the Parliament. Religion, ſays our modeſt Hiſtorian, began now to be more and more the Outcry of the Houſe of Commons: They bellow'd when they ſpoke againſt Papiſts and Popery, againſt Laud's Superſtition and Tyranny. He then gives us the Beginning and End of Sir Edward Deering's Speech on that Subject; to which I will add ſomething between his two Paragraphs; "With the "Papiſts there is a ſevere Inquiſition, and with us "there is a bitter High-Commiſſion: Both theſe are "Judges in their own Caſes; yet herein heir Inquiſitors are better than our High-Commiſſioners; "they do not puniſh for Delinquents ſuch as profeſs the eſtabliſh'd Religion; but with us, how "many ſcores of poor diſtreſſed Miniſters have in "a few Years been ſuſpended, degraded, depriv'd, excommunicated, not guilty of the Breach of any "of our eſtabliſh'd Laws?" He then mentions the Sir Edw. Deering.

*A.D.*1640. audacious libelling Pamphlets, written by Heylin, Cosins, Sparrow, Pocklington, Dow, Swan, Reeves, Yates, Hausted, Studly, Browne, Shelford, and many more; I name no Bishops, but I add, &c. the Parliament order'd a Committee to find out the Numbers of oppress'd Ministers under the Tyranny of the Bishops for these ten Years last past.

Tyranny of the Bishops.

Wicked Judges.

A Debate arose concerning the Judges, for refusing Bail to Mr. Selden, and his Fellow-Prisoners, upon their Writs of Habeas Corpus. A Motion was made, that they might have Reparation out of the Estates of the Judges; of whom Judge Croke was excus'd, as differing in Opinion from the rest; and Judge Whitlocke was clear'd by the Defence his Son, Bulstrode Whitlocke, Esq; and Mr. Hampden made for him: When Ship-Money comes into Debate, we shall hear more of these, Sir Philip Warwick's, learned and upright Judges.

The Lord Falkland, speaking of that illegal Tax, inveigh'd against them, Who as Wolves worry'd those Sheep, whom as Dogs they shou'd have defended. He upbraided them with giving the King bad Counsel, telling him, he might do what he pleas'd by Policy: He mark'd out the Lord Keeper Finch, as the principal Adviser and Abettor in this Matter. Among all the false Representations against the Parliament of England, I think there is none more notorious than where Echard affirms, That the Commons voted Ship-Money to be against the Laws of the Realm, the Right of Property, the Liberty of the Subject, contrary to former Resolutions of Parliament, and to the Petition of Right, without Examination of the Reasons of the Judges; which had been more fully examin'd than such wretched Reasons deserv'd, as we see in the same Speech of the Lord Falkland's. "These Judges, Mr. Speaker, "have deliver'd an Opinion and Judgment in an "extrajudicial Manner; that is, such as came not "within their Cognisance, they being Judges, and "neither Philosophers nor Politicians; in which, "when that which they wou'd have so evident "and absolute taketh Place, the Law of the Land "ceases, and that of general Reason and Equity, "by which particular Laws at first were fram'd, "returns to his Throne and Government. They "have contradicted apparent Evidences, suppo-"sing mighty and evident Dangers in the most "serene, quiet, and halcion Days that could pos-"sibly be imagin'd, a few contemptible Py-"rates being our most formidable Enemies; they "contradict the Writ it self, by supposing that "supposed Danger to be so sudden, that it would "not stay for a Parliament: It seem'd generally "strange, that they saw not the Law, which all "Men else saw but themselves." Pray remember, Mr. Echard, copying after the most ingenious Warwick, told us, Nothing could have led them into that Opinion but their Books. Lord Falkland again; "The first of all the Reasons for this Judg-"ment was such, that there needed not any from "the adverse Party to help them to convert those "few who before had not the least Suspicion of "the Legality of that most illegal Tax; there be-"ing fewer that approv'd of the Judgment than "there were that judg'd it legal, for I am confi-"dent they did not that themselves." The Lord Falkland speaks of the Indignation which the Opinion of the Judges against their Books and their Consciences rais'd in Peoples Minds; yet Echard vilifies the Parliament for questioning them about it; and yet it is expected I should treat him with Decency, who has so unworthily and scandalously treated the whole Nation in their Representatives. We must not forget, that in this Speech Lord Falkland charg'd Heylin with representing the People of England as Slaves; and Mr. Philips charges him for abusing the Bishop of Lincoln; and I cou'd charge him with a Book full of insolent Sophistry and Falshood, if the Digression wou'd not disgrace the History: He abus'd Bishop Williams to please Archbishop Laud, and he abus'd the whole English Nation to please those who unhappily had then the Government of it.

Heylin a Libeller.

*A.D.*1640.

About the latter end of November, William Prynne, Esq; Dr. Bastwick, and Mr. Burton the Minister, return'd from their several remote Prisons by order of Parliament, to whom they severally presented their Petitions: Mr. Prynne and Mr. Burton landed first at Southampton from Guernsey and Jersey, and Dr. Bastwick afterwards at Dover from Scilly; all three continued their Journey by Land; and all three, as they travelled the Country, were receiv'd with the Acclamations of the People. Larrey writes, "It was a continual Procession all along the Road, and People beholding "their Scars with Veneration, stil'd them Martyrs, "and their Judges Hangmen, too tender a Name "for them:" All Places where they pass'd were strew'd with Flowers, and Joy eccho'd from every Part for their Deliverance; a hundred Coaches accompany'd the Coaches they rode in, and they made their Entry into London in a triumphant Manner, the Acclamation being as hearty as it was loud and general. If it was heard at Lambeth, it must be as doleful as a Knell; and now must the Archbishop be in the bitterness of Terror and of Woe, while those whom he had so barbarously prosecuted and mutilated, were in Exultation with an innumerable Multitude of Friends through the whole City; which for this Reason, and a steady Adherence to the reform'd Religion and Liberty, is by Echard call'd, the Sink of all the ill Humours in the Kingdom. If I shou'd call the Earl of Clarendon's History, and his own, the Sink of all the Tyranny and Superstition of the Reign I write of, how wou'd it be taken? This joyful Multitude did not fail to express their Resentment against Laud and his Brother Persecutors in very intelligible Terms, such as doubtless made their Hearts ake, though Mr. Echard, with his wonted Wit, rallies the Rabble for being angry with those Prelates for persecuting such godly Men. These Sufferers a few Days afterwards had some Compensation for their Sufferings, as also had Dr. Leighton, and Mr. Lilburne, in Defiance, says Echard, with equal Modesty and Judgment, of that Court of Justice that had censur'd them, the abominable Star-Chamber. In all the Resolutions to which the Parliament came in reference to these much injur'd Gentlemen, they voted their Prosecutions and Sentences to be illegal, and that their Judges shou'd make them Reparation, naming Archbishop Laud, Bishop Juxon Lord High-Treasurer, the Lord Keeper Coventry, the Lord Newburgh, Sir Thomas Jermyn, Duke of Lenox, Lord Cottington, Marques of Hamilton, Earl of Arundel, Secretary Windebank, who are now coming to a Reckoning for their Cruelties and Extortions in that execrable Court. The House order'd a Charge to be drawn up against Heylyn, for promoting the Suit there against Mr. Prynne. The Earl of Rothes, the Lord Lowdon, and the other Scotch Commissioners, remain'd at London about the Affairs of that Nation and their Army. The Archdeacon informs us, they heard their Chaplains preach in St. Antholin's Church, which was crowded every Day with Auditors, out of Zeal, Fashion, or Curiosity. The Earl of Clarendon supports him in this Drollery, by saying their Sermons were flat and insipid: Qualities which will better admit of Sentiments of Piety and Devotion, than the Flattery and Fustian Rage and Nonsense of Sibthorp, Pocklington, and the Preachers mention'd by Sir Edward Deering. The Reverend Historian goes on, "The Interest and "Influence of the Scots Commissioners increas'd "the Boldness and Hatred of the inferior Sort a-"gainst the establish'd Church; another false Representation, for neither the higher nor lower Order of People hated the Protestant Church of England, as establish'd in King Edward the VIth's Reign, and Scots Commissioners.

A.D.1640. and as underſtood by Biſhop Moreton, Biſhop Davenant, Biſhop Hall, Biſhop Brownrig, Archbiſhop Uſher, and other pious and learned Fathers of our Church: But they did hate heartily the prophane and ſuperſtitious Innovations eſtabliſh'd by Laud; and to remove them, Alderman Pennington, one of the Members for the City of London, preſented a Petition to the Houſe of Commons the 11th of December, ſign'd by 15000 Hands, which Mr. Archdeacon calls the Refuſe of the People, as if they had been all ſuch Wretches as ran about after Sacheverel, the condemn'd Doctor, in our Days, and pull'd down Houſes to ſhew their Zeal for the Church. He tells a Story upon it, which appears prima facie, to be falſe, tho' probably, his Invention was not fruitful enough to produce it: "The Petitioners "uſually prepar'd a Petition very modeſt and du- "tiful for the Form, and not very unreaſonable "in the Subſtance, which they carefully commu- "nicated at ſome publick Meetings to get it re- "ceiv'd with Approbation. The Subſcriptions of "a few Hands fill'd the Paper itſelf, which con- "tain'd the Petition, and therefore more Sheets "were annex'd for the Reception of the Number "which was to countenance the Undertaking. "When many Hands were procur'd, the Petition "itſelf was cut off, and a new one anſwerable to "the Deſign on foot annex'd to the Liſt of Names. "Of this ſort was Pennington's Petition which ſtruck "at Epiſcopacy." I am not afraid of repeating the moſt malignant Parcels of their Hiſtories, which are ſo many Felo de ſe's, and murder themſelves. This is ſilly to a degree; for what Need of ſo much Art to procure 15000 Hands, when the nine in ten of the Inhabitants of London were then in the Puritan Intereſt? And Mr. Echard had juſt call'd it not only the Sink of its own Ill-Humours, but the Sink of all the Ill-Humours in the Nation. Alderman Pennington's Petition being read in the Houſe, it was reſolv'd upon the Queſtion, That there ſhall be a Day certain ſet for the debating of it; that the Roll of Names brought in with this Petition, ſhall be ſeal'd with Mr. Speaker's Seal till the Houſe ſhall farther order it. But there happen'd a Debate three or four Days after, which of Courſe introduc'd the Subſtance of this Petition, and that was about the extravagant Proceedings of the Biſhops and Convocation. The Canons, new Oath, the Benevolence, the irregular and tyrannical Government of Laud and other Prelates, was explain'd and exclaim'd againſt, as well as the Canons and Convocation Acts. Sir Edward Deering in his Speech, call'd this Laudæan Synod, A Monſter to our Law, a Cerberus to our Religion; they have charg'd their Canons at us to the full, and never fearing that ever they wou'd recoil back into a Parliament, they have ramm'd a prodigious ungodly Oath into them. Mr. Fiennes the Lord Say's Son, ſaid, I conceive theſe Canons do contain ſundry Matters, which are not only contrary to the Laws of the Land, but alſo deſtructive of the very principal and fundamental Laws of the Kingdom. He then enumerated the various Articles which were of ſuch ill Tendency. Sir Benjamin Rudyard ſpoke thus, "A Man may eaſi- "ly ſee to what tend all theſe Innovations and Al- "terations in Doctrine and Diſcipline, and with- "out a Perſpective, diſcover afar off the Toilſom- "neſs of theſe ſpiritual Engineers to undermine the "old and true Foundations of Religion, and to "eſtabliſh their tottering Hierarchy in the room "thereof." The Lord Digby, uncorrupted as yet, call'd it a new Synod patch'd out of an old Convocation. At laſt it was reſolv'd, nemine contradicente, That the Clergy of England conven'd in Convocation, have no Power to make any Conſtitution, Canons, or Act whatſoever, in Matters of Doctrine, Diſcipline, or otherwiſe, to bind the Clergy or Laity of the Land, without Conſent of Parliament; that the Canons paſs'd by the late Synod, contain Matters contrary to the fundamental Laws and Statutes of the Kingdom, to the Rights of Parliament, and Liberty of the Subjects, and Matters tending to Sedition, and of dangerous Conſequence. Reſolv'd, nemine Contradicente, "That the Benevolence grant- "ed by the Convocation is contrary to the Laws, "and ought not to bind the Clergy." All which Reſolutions Mr. Archdeacon declares, on his undoubted Authority, to be entirely wrong; and that the Convocation knowing their Buſineſs better than the Parliament, only exerted their antient Rights. A Committee was order'd to conſider and examine who were the Promoters of the new Canons, and who the principal Actors; and to conſider how far in particular the Archbiſhop of Canterbury hath been an Actor in the great Deſign of the Subverſion of the Laws of the Realm and of the Religion, and to prepare and draw up a Charge againſt him: Which Committee was compos'd of the following Gentlemen, who were to meet in the Star-Chamber, where moſt of the Tragedies he was now to be accountable for, had been acted.

Sir John Strangeways, Sir Robert Howard, Sir Francis Seymour, Sir Oliver Luke, Sir Henry Anderſon, Sir Guy Palmes, Sir Miles Fleetwood, Sir Robert Harley, Sir Gilbert Gerrard, Sir William Litton, Sir Walter Earl, Sir Edward Hungerford, Sir Thomas Widdrington, Sir Hugh Chomley, Sir John Hotham, Sir Edward Deering, Sir Thomas Barrington, Mr. Strangeways, Mr. Hollis, Mr. Pym, Mr. Bagſhaw, Mr. Glyn, Mr. Grimſton, Mr. Hampden, Mr. Fiennes, Mr. Young, Mr. Goodwin, Mr. Peard, Mr. Coke, Mr. White, Mr. Rigby, Mr. Palmer, Mr. Weſton, Mr. Maynard, Mr. Whiſtler, Mr. Feltham, Mr. St. John, Mr. Rogers, Mr. Whitlocke.

They were moſt of them as great Men as any of that or any other Age, and moſt of them not prejudic'd againſt Epiſcopacy; I do not mean Archbiſhop Laud's but Archbiſhop Uſher's. The Scots Commiſſioners deliver'd a long Charge in Writing againſt the former, wherein he is charg'd with all the Innovations and Alterations made in the Church and State of Scotland, and that conſequently he is the Author of the preſent Troubles, which is what I was endeavouring to prove before I read this Paper. The Lord Paget read it in the Houſe of Lords, and it was then ſent to the Houſe of Commons, who after the reading of it, voted him guilty of High-Treaſon the 18th of December, and Mr. Hollis was ſent to the Lords to impeach him, and deſire he might be ſequeſtred from the Houſe, and committed to ſafe Cuſtody, which was ſo order'd, and the Archbiſhop call'd to the Bar as a Delinquent, where he deſir'd Leave to fetch ſome Papers from Lambeth for his Defence, and it was granted, provided Mr. Maxwell Uſher of the Black-Rod attended him, and had him ſtill in Cuſtody. Their Lordſhips order'd that no Member of their Houſe ſhou'd viſit him. The next Day Mr. Hampden was ſent to the Houſe of Peers, to let them know that the Commons had Informations of a high Nature againſt Matthew Wren Lord Biſhop of Ely, for ſetting up Idolatry and Superſtition, and being himſelf an Idolater; that the Commons heard he was running away, and therefore they deſir'd he might be ſecur'd; upon which he was oblig'd to give 10000 Pounds Bail for his forth coming. Notwithſtanding the long Bill of Articles againſt Laud, which the Lord Paget read in the Houſe, Mr. Echard aſſerts there was nothing in Form particularly produc'd againſt him till ten Weeks after; whereas the very formal and ample Charge againſt him was read by the Lord Paget in the Houſe of Lords before it was reported in the Commons Houſe. He adds, the great Mens Hatred againſt him, was for his puniſhing Sir Robert Howard and the Lady Purbeck with Penance for their Amours. What a Trifle is this to his endeavouring to deſtroy the Reform'd Religion, and the Rights and Liberties of the People of England? The Lords order'd Sir Robert Howard 500*l.* Damages Princeſs Anne's Death. About this time dy'd the Princeſs Anne, his Majeſty's third Daughter, four Years old, very much lamented on Account of the Hopes ſhe gave by the Pregnancy of her Parts.

Windebank flies. Secretary Windebank Archbiſhop Laud's old Friend, having releas'd ſeveral Popiſh Prieſts, and countermanded Writs for ſeizing the Lands and Goods of Recuſants convict, and order'd Magiſtrates to forbear proſecuting them, was ſummon'd to anſwer for thoſe and ſeveral other Offences before the Houſe of Commons, of which he was a Member, tho' an unworthy one; but inſtead of appearing, his Guilt gave Speed to his Flight, and he got into France to be out of their reach.

Ld-Keeper Finch flies. The next Miniſter who ran away from Puniſhment, was Finch the Lord Keeper, who before he fled, deſir'd to be heard by the Houſe of Commons, hoping they wou'd not be able to withſtand his Eloquence. It was granted, and a Chair ſet for him near the Bar. He came into the Houſe the 12th of December, carrying the Purſe himſelf; and when the Speaker told him his Lordſhip might ſit, he made a low Obeyſance, and laying down the Seal and his Hat in the Chair, lean'd on the Back of it, in which Poſture he made a long rhetorical Speech, which very little extenuated his Crime. He began thus, "I give you Thanks for "granting me Admittance to your Preſence; I "came not to preſerve myſelf and Fortunes, but "to preſerve your good Opinion of me; for I "profeſs I had rather beg my Bread from Door "to Door with Date Obolum Beliſario with your "Favour, than be ever ſo high and honour'd with "your Diſpleaſure." His Concluſion was, If I may not live to ſerve you, I deſire I may die in your good Opinion. This Speech was deliver'd ſo gracefully, and was in itſelf ſo moving, that the Minds of many Members of the Houſe of Commons received Impreſſions by it: But Echard is too credulous and too poſitive in ſaying, "The Lord Cla- "rendon makes it viſible, that this great Man was "ſtill ſo much in Favour of the Houſe, that they "wou'd gladly have preſerv'd him in his Place;" there being not the leaſt Viſibility of any ſuch Diſpoſition in them; and it is partially and unjuſtly ſaid only to repreſent the Parliament as unjuſt and partial. Mr. Rigby preſently anſwer'd the Lord Keeper thus, Had not this Syren ſo ſweet a Tongue, ſurely he cou'd never have effected ſo much Miſchief to this Kingdom. You know, Sir, Optimorum Putrefactio peſſima, *the beſt Things putrify'd become the worſt, and as it is in the natural ſo in the Body politick. Judges. On the 20th of December the famous Mr. Waller was ſent to the Lords with a Meſſage from the Commons, that they had receiv'd divers Informations of Crimes of a very high Nature againſt Sir John Bramſtone Lord-Juſtice of the King's-Bench, Sir Humphry Davenport, Juſtice Berkley, and Juſtice Crawley, and deſir'd they might put in Bail to abide the Cenſure of Parliament. The Judges ſubmitted themſelves to the Pleaſure of the Houſe of Peers, who order'd them to give Security for their Appearance. *A.D.*1640.

Dr. Coſins afterwards Biſhop of Durham, was ſent for as a Delinquent, and voted guilty of Superſtitious Innovations tending to Idolatry, of ſpeaking ſcandalous and malicious Words againſt his Majeſty's Supremacy, and the Religion eſtabliſh'd. This lets us into a Secret which Clarendon, Echard, and all that ſort of Writers have endeavour'd to keep from us, which is, that the Parliament of England do not look upon Laud, Neile, Wren, Harſnet, Montague, Manwaring, Pierce, Skinner, &c. Prelates, nor upon Sibthorp, Pocklington, Coſins, and ſuch inferior Clergy, to be of the eſtabliſh'd Church, which however they have always in their Mouths; but of an idolatrous ſuperſtitious Church which they were about eſtabliſhing. Notwithſtanding this Vote, the reverend Hiſtorian informs us Coſins was a ſtrict Churchman, very loyal; and when he fled to France, converted there many Papiſts to the Proteſtant Religion. Dr. Coſins his Superſtition.

Dr. Chaffin a Weſt-Country Parſon, was alſo ſent for as a Delinquent, for a Sermon preach'd by him in the Cathedral-Church of Salisbury; as was alſo one Jones Parſon of Owfield in Devonſhire, for ſcandalous Words againſt the Parliament in a Sermon preach'd at Tiverton. Chaffin was reprimanded by the Speaker, and order'd to make a Recantation in the Cathedral at Sarum. Dr. Caffin. Jones.

Sir John Lamb was brought upon his Knees for levying Money to ſet up Organs. But there wou'd be no end of it, if one ſhou'd pretend to particularize the Inſtances of every Prieſt who turn'd the Artillery of the Pulpit againſt the Religion, Rights, and Liberties of their Country, for which Reaſon the Author or Authors of the Hiſtory of the Rebellion, labour ſo much to charge the Puritans with beating the Eccleſiaſtical Drum. Sir John Lamb.

One of the laſt Things that were done this Year in Parliament, was the bringing Archdeacon Pierce Son to the Biſhop of Bath and Wells, upon his Knees at the Bar of the Houſe of Commons, for ſaying to one Mr. Coleman, who ſeem'd to be concern'd at the Diſſolution of the laſt Parliament, A Pox of God take them all. You ſee what the Archdeacons of the Laudæan Stamp were: They were puritanical factious Fellows; the King will never be quiet till ſome of their Heads are off; he may have two Millions of Money of a Spaniſh Don if he will. He was excellently well taught both as to Piety and Politicks by his Father Biſhop Pierce, who, as we have related, never diſtinguiſh'd himſelf ſo much by any thing, as by his Zeal for Revels and Sabbath-breaking. The ſwearing Archdeacon was order'd into Cuſtody of the Serjeant at Arms; and I think if he had had his due, another Keeper wou'd have had him in keeping, the Words being prov'd by three Witneſſes. Archdeacon Pierce. Ruſhw. 134.

In the beginning of the next Year, a Petition from Kent, and ſome time after another from Glouceſter, were preſented to the Houſe concerning the Evils ſuffer'd by Reaſon of the Government of Biſhops; both which were referr'd to the Committee for Pennington's Petition: And on the 14th of January Mr. Edward Hyde afterwards Earl of Clarendon, had the Thanks of the Houſe of Commons for his great Service in vindicating the Liberty and Property of the Subject with reſpect to the Buſineſs of Ship-Money, and the Impeachment of the Lord-Keeper Finch for High-Treaſon, in which there are ſome Things remarkable, for that this ſame Mr. Hyde does in Clarendon's Hiſtory declare, Many believ'd the real Neceſſity of Ship-Money, and thought the Burden reaſonable; it did not ſeem of apparent ill Conſequence, that the regal Power ſhou'd ſupply the Impotency of the Law. And tho' this Mr. Hyde was order'd to aſſiſt the Lord Falkland *A.D.*1641. P. 69.

A.D.1641. when he carry'd up the Articles of Impeachment againſt Finch; wherein the Parliament ſay, by the Lord Falkland, "Here are many and mighty "Crimes, Crimes of Supererrogation. So that High-Treaſon is but a Part of his Charge, purſuing him fervently in every ſeveral Condition; a ſilent Speaker, an unjuſt Judge, an unconſcionable Keeper, his Life appears a perpetual Warfare, with Mines, Battery, Battel and Stratagem, againſt our fundamental Laws; yet the Parliament, according to the Lord Clarendon, wou'd fain have kept him in Keeper.

On the 21ſt of January the Parliament proceeded againſt Monopoliſts, and finding ſome of their own Members among them, they were expell'd; as Sir Nicholas Criſp Baron for Winchelſea a Cinque-Port, William Sandys Eſq; Burgeſs for Eveſham in Worceſterſhire, Sir John Jacob Baron for Rye a Cinque Port, Thomas Webb Eſq; Burgeſs for —— Edmund Windham Eſq; Burgeſs for Bridgwater in Somerſetſhire, a ſmall Dealer, his Monopoly being the marking of Butter-Firkins; he was afterwards Governor, for the King, of the Town he repreſented, and was expell'd there too by Sir Thomas Fairfax and Oliver Cromwell. Monopoliſts.

There being no ſtemming of the Tide for Redreſs of Grievances, and no breaking up of the Parliament while the Scots Army was in England, the Court was adviſ'd to ſwim with the Stream, and for once to try the Effect of popular Counſels, which, ſays Echard, was an infirm Piece of Policy; ſo politick is he himſelf, as to think the Love of the People a weakening of the Prince: There was no ſurer Way to make him belov'd, than to employ thoſe whom the People lov'd. The Earl of Bedford, the Earl of Eſſex, the Earl of Warwick, and the Lord Say, were ſworn of the Privy-Council; and according to the reverend Hiſtorian, they ſoon ſhew'd how unfit they were to have Seats at that Board, by telling the King, They ought not to give him any Advice which was diſagreeable to the Senſe of the Parliament his great Council. How weak were theſe new Counſellors? The Hiſtorian with his uſual Simplicity reflects upon them again for counſelling the King to be only adviſ'd by the Two Houſes. If the King had any Intereſt ſeparate from that of the People, which I verily believe that Author thinks he might have, he is in the right to upbraid thoſe Lords of the Privy-Council for giving him ſuch Advice: But if the King's Intereſt and his People's are inſeparable, as common Senſe teaches one, then the Advice of his Parliament cou'd be the only ſure Foundation for his Majeſty to build upon. The Earl of Bedford was to be Lord-Treaſurer; in order to which, Dr. Juxon had already begg'd Leave of the King to reſign his White-Staff, which indeed had encroach'd too much upon the Paſtoral one. He reſolv'd, ſays the Archdeacon, to withdraw from the impending Storm, with no leſs Honour than Security. He cou'd not keep it any longer. His Biſhoprick was in Danger, and much more his Treaſurerſhip. How ridiculous is this Air which is maintain'd thro' the Hiſtory. Juxon was one of the principal Actors in the Convocation, in the Star-Chamber, and High-Commiſſion Courts. As great as his Security was, he was fin'd 10000 l. by the Parliament for acting in that Synod; he was order'd to make Reparation to Mr. Burton the Miniſter for the barbarous Sentence he paſs'd upon him in the Star-Chamber, and to Mr. Prynne for his cruel unheard of Puniſhment, and to others who had ſuffer'd the like bloody Sentences: Yet, if you can believe Mr. Echard for once, he was in no Danger of loſing his Poſt of Lord-High-Treaſurer of England, but voluntarily petition'd to part with it, that he might apply himſelf to his Epiſcopal Function, ſo conſiſtent with the pecuniary Employments he had been ſo long in poſſeſſion of. The Archdeacon again; "The Lord "Say was to be made Maſter of the Wards in the "room of the Lord Cottington, who was promi- A.D.1641. "ſed to be indemnify'd for the future." He has the Lord Clarendon's Word for it. But was Mr. Hyde ſo much in Mr. Pym's Confidence, that he reveal'd all his Secrets to him? Pym on the ſame Account was to be Chancellor of the Exchequer. Cottington was ſo far from being indemnify'd, that he was order'd to make Satisfaction to Mr. Prynne and the other Sufferers, for the Sentences he paſs'd againſt them in the Star-Chamber. Popular Counſels.

Tho' there is not the leaſt Appearance of Wit in all the Archdeacons Folio Hiſtories, but when the Terms godly, ſeeking God, Purity or Reformation lye in his Way, yet he nibbles at it here, where he ſays, Mr. Pym's overflowing Zeal might have been diverted by a Place; which was not very likely, when Mr. St. John, who was made Sollicitor-General, whoſe Zeal overflow'd as much as Mr. Pym's, gave an exemplary Inſtance, that when a Perſon is truly animated with a publick Spirit, he grows above all Temptation, and ſacrifices all other Intereſts to that of the Publick. The Earl of Eſſex was made Lord-Chamberlain; but his Zeal continu'd to overflow, when the Service of his Country requir'd it. This Conſtancy to the Common-Weal, the reverend Hiſtorian terms a long and rooted Malignity to the Government. And it is obſervable in his and the Earl of Clarendon's Hiſtories, that they do their Buſineſs by Words, without having any Regard to the Fact or to the Argument. There's more ſecret Hiſtory ſtill to come; "Bedford and Pym promis'd to obtain a li- "beral Proviſion and Settlement for the King's "Revenues;" inſinuating that if the Earl of Bedford had been made Lord-Treaſurer, and Mr. Pym Chancellor of the Exchequer, they wou'd have ſacrific'd the Rights and Liberties of the People to the King's Will and Pleaſure, which is what he means by Government. For if by Government he underſtood a ſteady Adherence to the Conſtitution, the limited Prerogative of the Crown, and the antient Privileges of Parliament, he wou'd have known that there had been no ſuch Government in this Reign; and that what he calls a rooted Malignity to it, was a ſtrenuous aſſerting of the Liberty of Engliſhmen both in Spirituals and Temporals.

A Bill being brought into the Houſe by Edmund Prideaux Eſq; for Triennial Parliaments, the Lord Digby ſpoke to it forcibly and eloquently the 19th of January, I will be bold to ſay, Mr. Speaker, that an Accumulation of all the publick Grievances ſince Magna Charta, one upon another, unto that Hour in which the Petition of Right paſs'd into an Act of Parliament, wou'd not amount to ſo oppreſſive, I am ſure not ſo deſtructive a Height of Magnitude to the Rights and Properties of the Subject, as one Branch of our enſlaving ſince the Petition of Right. His Lordſhip ſays no more nor no leſs, than that one Act of Miſgovernment ſince Laud and Wentworth were at the Head of it, was more oppreſſive and deſtructive, than all the illegal Acts in the Adminiſtration for four hundred Years paſt, under the Gavaſtons, the Spencers, the Empſons, the Dudleys, the Wolſeys, the Cars, the Villiers, &c. And yet there muſt be no Tyranny ſpoken of in this Reign. This Triennial Bill going forward, and Petitions being daily preſented to the Houſe of Commons againſt the Hierarchy and Diſſolutions of Parliaments, the King ſent for both Houſes to the Banquetting-Houſe the 25th of January, where making a Speech to them, he put them in mind of the two Armies, and the Charge of maintaining them. As to Biſhops, he ſaid, he wou'd not ſay but they may have overſtretch'd their Power and encroach'd upon the Temporal. If they will reform the Abuſe he is with them, but he will not conſent to take away their Vote in Parliament. This was truly healing, as the Archdeacon terms it, and 'tis great Pity that the Fervour of ſome leading Men had not cool'd a little, Triennial Parliaments. Engliſhmen enſlav'd. King's healing Speech.

a little. Here was a happy Opportunity to have thrown out all Superſtition, and to have broken the ſpiritual Courts to Pieces, to have hinder'd Innovation and Perſecution for ever; and I know not what any good Engliſhman and good Proteſtant ought to hope for more as to Spirituals. Here we muſt own that the Zeal of thoſe leading Members overflow'd; but what human Counſels are at all Times free from Error?

Goodman the Prieſt.

The King had repriev'd one Goodman a Prieſt, who had been condemn'd at the Old-Baily, of which the Commons having receiv'd Information; they ſent Sir John Colepepyr to the Lords, to deſire a Conference, which being agreed to, Mr. Hyde and other Members were appointed to manage it; Mr. Hyde returning from the Conference, brought a Meſſage from the King, "That Goodman had not "perverted the King's Subjects, that he was mer- "ciful like Queen Elizabeth and King James, that "he was willing Goodman ſhou'd be impriſon'd or "baniſh'd, and did not intend by this particular "Mercy to leſſen the Force of the Law." It is worth remarking, that ſince the new Privy-Counſellors had Seats at the Board, the Stile of the Speeches and Meſſages are ſoft and obliging; whereas while Laud had Influence there, and after the new Counſellors were no more adviſ'd with, the Stile is ſtudy'd to diſpleaſe, and ſometimes to exaſperate. The two Houſes agreed upon a Remonſtrance concerning the Reprieve of Goodman, and the Favour ſhewn to the Papiſts, which was deliver'd by the Lord-Keeper to the King. In this Remonſtrance it is ſaid, the Favour ſhewn to Papiſts, and particularly to Goodman, had ſo offended the Citizens of London, that they abſolutely deny'd to lend Money for the publick Occaſions till they were ſatisfy'd in thoſe Points. His Majeſty moſt graciouſly comply'd with the humble Requeſt of his Two Houſes of Parliament, and left Goodman to the Law; and the Prieſt ſhew'd himſelf worthy of national Mercy as well as national Juſtice, by petitioning the King to be executed rather than be the Cauſe of a Miſunderſtanding between his Majeſty and the Parliament.

Earl of Strafford's Tryal.

All this while Preparations were making for the Tryal of the Earl of Strafford, which Echard repreſents as a Conſpiracy of the Parliament to deſtroy him. They proceeded by private Steps, as theſe Steps in Parliament, Order'd, "That his Ma- "jeſty be mov'd that the Committee for prepa- "ring the Charge againſt the Lord-Lieutenant of "Ireland, may have the Lord Mount Norris's Pa- "pers. Again,

Order'd, "That the Committee have Power to "ſend for Records, Parties, and Witneſſes, or any "other thing which they ſhall think may conduce "to the perfecting of that Charge.

It is obſervable that before the Articles againſt him were perfected, the Houſe of Commons debated the Matter of Attainders, and a Committee was appointed to ſearch after Records of former Attainders, the Commons having then in their Proſpect Proceedings againſt the Earl of Strafford. How private this Step was. We ſee here that the Deſign to attaint him, was form'd even before he was try'd, tho' the Attainder is repreſented as a ſudden Change of Proceſs, upon their apprehending that the Tryal might not ſerve their End. I cou'd give many other Inſtances of ſuch private Steps taken openly in the Houſe of Commons, if theſe were not ſufficient to ſhew how unreaſonable it is to expect Sincerity or Impartiality from that Hiſtorian.

The Bill for Triennial Parliaments having paſs'd the Houſe of Commons, was ſent to the Houſe of Peers by the Lord Digby, a Nobleman of fine Qualities, which were all blaſted at once by his Apoſtacy, and giving up that excellent Reaſon of which he was Maſter, to his two ungovernable Paſſions Revenge and Ambition. The King paſs'd that Bill the 15th of February, and made another healing Speech, for with the Triennial Bill there paſs'd another for granting his Majeſty four entire Subſidies. A.D. 1641.

On the 26th of February Mr. Pym carry'd up to the Lords the Articles againſt Archbiſhop Laud, an Abridgment of which is as follow.

Articles againſt Laud.

1. "That he had traiterouſly endeavour'd to ſub- "vert the fundamental Laws and Government of "the Kingdom, to introduce arbitrary and tyran- "nical Power; and to that End had wickedly and "traiterouſly adviſ'd his Majeſty that he might raiſe "Money at his own Will and Pleaſure without "Conſent of Parliament, which he affirm'd was "warrantable by the Law of God.

2. "That for the better Accompliſhment of his "traiterous Deſigns, he had procur'd Sermons to "be preach'd, printed, and publiſh'd againſt the "Authority of Parliament and the Laws of the "Land.

3. "He hath by Letters, Meſſages, Threats and "Promiſes to the Judges, perverted the Courſe of "Juſtice, whereby ſeveral of his Majeſty's Subjects "have been depriv'd of their lawful Rights, and "ſubjected to his tyrannical Will, to their Ruin "and Deſtruction.

4. "He hath traiterouſly and corruptly ſold Ju- "ſtice in the High-Commiſſion Court, hath taken "unlawful Gifts and Bribes, and endeavour'd to "corrupt other Courts of Juſtice, by adviſing the "King to ſell Places of Judicature contrary to "Law.

5. "He hath traiterouſly caus'd a Book of Ca- "nons to be compos'd and publiſh'd contrary to "the King's Prerogative, to the fundamental Laws "and Statutes, to the Right of Parliament, to the "Property and Liberty of the Subject, tending "to Sedition and to the Eſtabliſhment of a vaſt, "unlawful, preſumptuous Power in himſelf and "his Succeſſors. To which is added a wicked "and ungodly Oath to be taken by all Clergy- "men and ſome Laymen.

6. "That he hath traiterouſly aſſum'd a Papal "tyrannical Power in Eccleſiaſtical and Temporal "Matters, and deny'd the Eccleſiaſtical Juriſdicti- "on to be deriv'd from the Crown, which he has "exercis'd to the Deſtruction of divers of the "King's liege People.

7. "That he hath traiterouſly endeavour'd to "alter and ſubvert God's true Religion by Law "eſtabliſh'd, and inſtead thereof to ſet up Popiſh "Superſtition and Idolatry; hath maintain'd di- "vers Popiſh Doctrines and Opinions, enjoin'd "Popiſh ſuperſtitious Ceremonies, without any War- "rant by Law, hath cruelly perſecuted thoſe who "have oppos'd the ſame by corporal Puniſh- "ments and Impriſonments, and unjuſtly vexed "others who refus'd to conform thereunto, by "Suſpenſion, Deprivation, Degradation contrary "to Law.

8. "That to advance his traiterous Purpoſes, "he intruded on the Places of divers great Offi- "cers, and upon the Right of other his Majeſty's "Subjects, and preferr'd to great Promotions in "the Church ſuch as have been Popiſhly affected, "or otherwiſe unſound and corrupt in Doctrine "and Manners.

9. "For the ſame traiterous and wicked Intent, "he hath employ'd ſuch Men to be his domeſtick "Chaplains, whom he knew to be notoriouſly "diſaffected to the Reform'd Religion, and to "them hath committed the licenſing of Books, "by which means divers falſe and ſuperſtitious "Books have been publiſh'd.

10. "He hath traiterouſly and wickedly endea- "vour'd to reconcile the Church of England with "the Church of Rome, and for effecting it hath "conſorted and confederated with Popiſh Prieſts "and

A.D.1641. " and Jeſuits, hath kept ſecret Intelligence with " the Pope of Rome, and permitted a Popiſh Hie- " rarchy to be eſtabliſh'd in this Kingdom.

11. " That he in his own Perſon, and other " Officers by his Command, have caus'd divers " learned, pious, and orthodox Miniſters to be ſi- " lenc'd, ſuſpended, depriv'd, degraded, excom- " municated, without juſt Cauſe; hath hinder'd " the preaching of God's Word, caus'd divers of " his Majeſty's loyal Subjects to forſake the King- " dom; and increas'd and cheriſh'd Ignorance and " Prophaneneſs among the People, that he might " effect his own wicked and traiterous Deſign of " corrupting the true Religion here eſtabliſh'd.

12. " He hath traiterouſly endeavour'd to cauſe " Diviſion and Diſcord between the Church of " England and other Reform'd Churches, and to " that End hath ſuppreſs'd the Dutch and French " Churches in this Kingdom.

13. " That he hath maliciouſly and traiterouſly " plotted and endeavour'd to ſtir up War and En- " mity between his Majeſty's two Kingdoms of " England and Scotland; and to that Purpoſe hath " labour'd to introduce into the Kingdom of Scot- " land, divers Innovations in Religion and Govern- " ment, tending all to Popery and Superſtition, to " the great Diſcontent of that Nation; and for " their refuſing to ſubmit to ſuch Innovations, he " did traiterouſly adviſe his Majeſty to reduce them " by Force of Arms: And when a Pacification " was made, he ſo incens'd his Majeſty againſt his " ſaid Subjects of Scotland, that he did thereupon, " by the Advice of the Archbiſhop, enter into an " offenſive War againſt them.

14. " That to preſerve himſelf from being que- " ſtion'd for theſe and other his traiterous Cour- " ſes, he hath labour'd to ſubvert the antient Courſe " of parliamentary Proceedings, and falſly and ma- " liciouſly incens'd his Majeſty againſt Parliaments.

The Hiſtory has ſhewn moſt of theſe Articles to be true, and they were fully clear'd up and proved at his Tryal. Mr. Pym expatiated upon every P. 3. Article in a Speech, which for Stile and Sentiment has a true Roman Spirit. I do not know a better in our Language; and as I refer the Reader to it at large in Ruſhworth, P. 199. I doubt not but the Pleaſure he will take in reading it, will more than pay for the Time it takes up. Whoever will compare it with the moſt eloquent of the Lord Clarendon's, will find the ſame Difference between them, as there is between Subſtance and Shew, Beauty and Affectation. The Archbiſhop continu'd the Uſe of the Epiſcopal Power while he was in Priſon, of which the Houſe having Information, a Motion was made to reſtrain it; but both Friends and Enemies agreeing it was better to bring him to a Tryal, that Motion dropp'd. What can one think or ſay of Hiſtorians, ſuch as Clarendon and Echard, who ſhall ſolemnly declare that this great Criminal had the Meekneſs of a Dove, the Virtue of a Philoſopher, the Piety of a Saint, the Conſtancy of a Martyr, the Charity of a primitive Chriſtian, and the Perfection of an Angel? There is not half of what might to be ſaid againſt Laud, if I wou'd make uſe of Mr. Pym's moſt powerful and eloquent Oration and Argument, and the additional Articles which were exhibited againſt him afterwards, of which ſomething muſt be ſaid in the Sequel. While thoſe high and capital Crimes are freſh in the Reader's Memory, it will be very proper to ſhew the moſt beautiful Picture of him painted by the Earl of Clarendon; the Features in the Parliament's Picture are all Deformity, in the Earl's all Beauty; and we may by that make a ſafe and ſure Judgment of the reſt of his Characters: He apply'd all the Remedies he cou'd to the Miſchiefs which daily broke in to the Prejudice of Religion; his Virtues were very exemplary; he believ'd Innocence of Heart, and Integrity of Manners, to be a ſtrong Guard, enough to ſecure any Man in his Voyage thro' the World; he wanted Power to go thorough with the Reformation of the Church; he thought he ſhou'd have much to anſwer for, if he did not apply Remedies to the Diſeaſes of the Church; he propos'd no End in all his Actions but what was juſt; and ſure no Man had ever a Heart more entire to his Country than he; he thought Art and Induſtry wou'd make the Integrity of his pious Deſigns ſuſpected, and therefore he never let them appear but in their own natural Beauty; he more advanc'd the Proteſtant Religion than it had been from the Reformation; he preach'd in Scotland with all the Marks of Approbation and Applauſe; and it is thought if the King had introduc'd the Liturgy while Biſhop Laud was there, it wou'd have been ſubmitted to without Oppoſition. The Truſt his Majeſty put in him, was infinitely to the Benefit and Honour of the Church; his Intentions were moſt ſincere and worthy; no Man had ever ſo good a Conſcience as he; he had no Support, but the Splendor of his pious Life, and his unpoliſh'd Integrity; ſingular were his Graces, and immenſe his Virtue; all Men were convinc'd of his Integrity, and abſolv'd him from any Crime againſt Law; few ever attain'd to his Learning, Piety, and Virtue; and to crown all, the Earl or his Author ſays, I had always a great Affection and Reverence for him. I need not obſerve, that the Falſity in this Character is ſtudy'd. What little has been ſhewn of Laud's unparallel'd Qualities in this Hiſtory, will ſhew that it is impoſſible for the Earl's Deſcription of them to have any Truth in it. If Pride and Cruelty can be conſiſtent with Piety and Charity, Reformation with Superſtition, and Meekneſs with Tyranny, I have injur'd the Archbiſhop and the Earl, and am at the Reader's Mercy.

Vol. I. p. 91.

This Digreſſion was neceſſary to juſtify my having ſaid ſo much of Archbiſhop Laud in the Courſe of this Hiſtory: But he was ſuch a Buſy-body in Temporals as well as Spirituals, that there was no avoiding it.

Upon the reading of the before-mention'd Articles againſt him, the Lords order'd he ſhou'd be remov'd from Mr. Maxwell's, in whoſe Cuſtody he had been ten Weeks, and ſent to the Tower March the firſt. And that he and the Earl of Straf- ford ſhou'd not come together. Thus he continu'd a Priſoner without putting in his Anſwer, or petitioning for Tryal, for near two Years Space; then the Commons exhibited additional Articles againſt him, and proceeded to his Tryal.

On the 5th of March the Star-Chamber Court was brought upon the Stage, and the Lord Ando- ver ſpoke thus of it in the Houſe of Peers; " By " the Statute of 3 Hen. 7. the Chancellor, Trea- " ſurer, Privy-Seal, two Judges, one Biſhop and a " Lord of Council, were authoriz'd to cite Peo- " ple to appear for Miſdemeanors, which was the " Infancy of the Star-Chamber. Cardinal Wolſey " rais'd it to Man's Eſtate, from whence being " now unlimited, it is grown a Monſter.

Ld Andover againſt Star-Chamber.

On the 2d of March the Houſe of Commons voted, That for Biſhops or any other Clergymen whatſoever, to have Employments as Privy-Counſellors at the Council-Table, or as private Officers, is an Hindrance to the Diſcharge of their ſpiritual Function, and a Prejudice to the Common-Wealth. One wou'd have hop'd that Dr. Laud one of the Lords of the Treaſury, and Dr. Juxon Lord High-Treaſurer, might have underſtood this Matter as well as the Commons, but it was not ſo. Thoſe two Biſhops did not think their ſitting at the Treaſury and the Council-Table, was any Hindrance at all to their Function, or Prejudice to the Common-wealth, but of great Benefit to themſelves.

Votes againſt Biſhops in temporal Offices.

About this Time the Dutch Ambaſſador made an Overture of Marriage between William, the young Prince of Orange, and the King's eldeſt Daughter, the Princeſs Mary, to which his Majeſty was well inclin'd, but as his Condition then ſtood, he thought fit to acquaint the Parliament with it.

We

*A.D.*1641. We ſtill obſerve the good Effects of the King's new Council; he made a Speech to the Houſe of Lords, in which he acquainted them, that he thought the Alliance with the Prince of Orange, and the United Provinces, would be of much Advantage to his Kingdom. Then he gave his Reaſons for it, and the Propoſition was generally embrac'd by all People, and ſoon took Effect.

Plots. The Reverend Hiſtorian is merry with the Rumours of Plots, an inviſible Army of 15000 in Lancaſhire, 8000 in Ireland, which was viſibly rais'd by the Earl of St. Alford now coming to Tryal. The Earl of Worceſter was nam'd as another General of a Popiſh Army, which prov'd true enough a Year or two after. Whitlocke ſays nothing came of theſe Rumours, and they are therefore hardly worth ſpeaking of.

Judge Berkley. Sir Robert Berkley, one of the Ship Money Judges, who had buſy'd himſelf much in that wicked Work, was impeach'd of High Treaſon at the Bar of the Houſe of Lords, by Sir John Colepepyr, in the Name of the Commons of England: Upon which Maxwell, Uſher of the Black Rod, was commanded by the Peers to take him into Cuſtody; Maxwell came to the King's-Bench as the Judges were ſitting, and took Judge Berkley off the Bench, and carry'd him away to Priſon; which ſtruck great Terror in the reſt of his Brethren, then ſitting in Weſtminſter Hall.

Queen. The Queen being inform'd that the Parliament took Offence at her ſetting Agents to work, Sir Kenelm Digby, Mr. Walter Montague, and others, to get Contributions from the Papiſts to carry on the War againſt the Scots, and at the great Reſort of Papiſts to her Chapel, ſent a Meſſage by the Comptroller of the Houſhold, wherein ſhe took to her ſelf the "Honour of having perſuaded the "King to call this Parliament: She promis'd to "ſend away the Pope's Nuncio, and not to exceed "what was convenient for the Exerciſe of her "Religion at her Chapel; as to the Money col-"lected among the Papiſts, ſhe did it out of meer "Affection to the King: If any Thing be illegal, "ſhe was ignorant of the Law; and being deſi-"rous to employ her whole Power to unite the "King and his People, ſhe deſires the Parliament "to look forwards, and paſs by ſuch Errors and "Miſtakes of her Servants, as may have been for-"merly committed." This Meſſage for ſome Time put a ſtop to the Clamour of thoſe who thought her Majeſty's Zeal for her Religion was too active and dangerous.

Epiſcopacy. There were great Debates for two Days together in the Houſe of Commons concerning Epiſcopal Government, ſome were for Reformation of Biſhops, others to have them quite taken away. It was agreed by moſt, ſays Ruſhworth, to take from them their Lordly Prelacy, to tie them up from meddling with temporal Affairs, and ſo reſtrain their Juriſdictions. The Lord Digby, who according to Mr. Echard, ſpoke ſeverely againſt the Petitions for aboliſhing the Order, fell in with thoſe who were of the laſt Opinion; there is no Man within theſe Walls more ſenſible of the heavy Grievances of Church Government than my ſelf, nor whoſe Affections are keener to the clipping of thoſe Wings of the Prelates, to which the Archdeacon is for tacking more Pinions, whereby they have mounted to ſuch Inſolencies, nor whoſe Zeal is more ardent to the ſearing them, ſo as they may never ſpring again. We may learn by this to what Inſolence the Wings of Laud had mounted, when it provok'd the Champion of Prelacy to reflect on him with ſo much Severity. The Lord Digby was every whit as good a Churchman as the Earl of Clarendon, and yet how differently do theſe two Lords think on the ſame Subject. It is probable that the Intrigues of the Court had gain'd the Lord Digby about this Time: That was the Card they had now to play; and very buſy they are with Mr. Capel, Sir John Colepepyr, Sir Ralph Hopton, Sir John Strangeways, Sir Francis Seymour, Lord Falkland, and others, who deſerted the Country Intereſt, and became, ſome of 'em at leaſt, as errant Courtiers as Villiers or Wentworth; convinc'd by the ſame ſolid Arguments which had prevail'd upon Wentworth, Noy, &c. Mr. Fiennes juſtify'd the London Petition, which had been back'd by ſeveral Petitions from Counties, Cities and Boroughs, and fully anſwer'd the Charge againſt it, that it was contemptible and irrational. This Speech is long, but well worth reading. Sir Benjamin Rudyard was for puniſhing Laud, Wren, and the preſent Biſhops, and for reducing and preſerving the Calling for better Men. The Earl of Clarendon and Mr. Echard affirm again and again, there never were better Men. Lord Falkland, the Hero of the Hiſtory of the Rebellion, ſaid ſome of the Biſhops have ſo induſtriouſly labour'd to deduce themſelves from Rome, that they have given great Suſpicion that in Gratitude they deſire to return thither. In that and what follows, his Lordſhip lays his Finger upon Laud: Some have evidently labour'd to bring in an Engliſh, though not a Roman Popery; I mean not only the Outſide and Dreſs of it, but equally abſolute, a blind Dependance of the People upon the Clergy, and of the Clergy upon themſelves. And ſpeaking of their Court Sermons for Arbitrary Power, he proceeds, This alone were Occaſion enough for us to accuſe them as the Betrayers, though not the Deſtroyers of our Rights and Liberties; they whoſe Anceſtors in the darkeſt Times, excommunicated the Breakers of Magna Charta, did now by themſelves and their Adherents, both write, preach, plot and act againſt it, by encouraging Dr. Beale, by preferring Manwaring, by promoting Monopolies and Ship-Money, and blaſting all that oppos'd them as Puritans. See now what the true or pretended Lord Clarendon ſays, as directly oppoſite to this as Artick and Antartick, and then make a Judgment of the Truth of his Lordſhip's Hiſtory; If the Sermons of thoſe Times preach'd at Court were collected together, and publiſh'd, the World would receive the beſt Bulk of Orthodox Divinity, convincing Reaſon, and admirable Devotion, that hath been communicated in any Age ſince the Apoſtles Time. This ſurely is to ſay the Thing which is not, in a very extraordinary Manner. Beſides the London Petition, there was a Remonſtrance againſt the Biſhops, ſign'd by 700 Miniſters, which the Lord Falkland mov'd to have committed, as being more for reforming than aboliſhing: And it is a Thing to be lamented, that there were not Members enough of his Lordſhips Judgment and Temper to have made a Majority. Mr. Bagſhaw, afterwards corrupted by the Court, ſaid, He was for retaining Alderman Pennington's Petition, and for a thorough Reformation of all Abuſes and Grievances of Epiſcopacy mention'd in the Miniſters Remonſtrance, and not for altering Church Government to Presbytery. Mr. Pleydell ſpoke heartily for Epiſcopacy, Mr. Grimſtone told the Houſe, he wonder'd not at all at the Multitude of Petitioners, conſidering the Sufferings of the People under the Tyranny of the Biſhops. He did not think it ſtrange they ſhou'd cry out in their Petitions, Crucify, crucify, or that they wou'd have them up by the Roots: This is the worthy Gentleman of whom Echard ſays, He continu'd with the Parliament, but did not concur with them. The Senſe of the Houſe at that Time was for the Reduction of Epiſcopacy, and not the Deſtruction; and we may well lament, that the Behaviour of the Biſhops afterwards ſhou'd provoke the Parliament to proceed further againſt them than they now did; for the Vote was only to take away their Votes in Parliament and Star-Chamber, &c. as is before hinted.

Triennial Bill. After a great deal of Pains taken by the Committee for the Triennial Bill, they perfected it, and it paſs'd the Houſe of Commons, who ſent it to the Houſe of Lords, where it had a quick Paſſage;

A.D.1641. ſage; and as we read in Whitlocke, the King was with ſome Difficulty perſuaded to give it the Royal Aſſent, at which Time he told both Houſes, that it was a Mark of the Confidence he had in them, and in their future Proceedings, the Favour being greater than any King of England before him had ever granted to the People. I cannot underſtand this. Was it a Favour to have a Parliament once in three Years, when by the ancient Laws and Cuſtoms, there was to be a Parliament once a Year? Was it a Favour to have an Act for ſuch Aſſemblies to meet for redreſſing of Grievances, which the King by his Coronation Oath was ſworn to redreſs of himſelf? Where's the Favour of doing what one is by Law and Conſcience oblig'd to do? The Parliament thank'd his Majeſty for paſſing this Act, and gave Orders for Bonfires and Rejoycing in the City, that their Friends might partake of the Pleaſure they took in it. The Subſidy Bill paſs'd at the ſame Time; and it is obſerv'd, that moſt of the gracious Acts in this Reign were accompany'd with ſome Money Bill, and rather ſold than granted.

Dr. Packlington's Crime;

About the ſame Time, one of the Clergy included in the Lord Clarendon's Panegyricks, Dr. Packlington, was accus'd as a great Introducer of Superſtitions, Innovations and Idolatry; and particularly for writing a Book, intituled, Sunday no Sabbath, ſuch was the Religion of the Laudæan Doctors: The Lords ſummon'd Packlington to appear at their Bar, where the Lord Keeper Littleton pronounced this Sentence againſt him, "That he "ſhould never come within the Verge of his "Majeſty's Court, be depriv'd of all his Eccleſia- "ſtical Livings and Preferments, be for ever diſ- "abled to hold any Place, and his Book to be "burnt by the Hands of the Common Hangman." He was Benefic'd in Bedfordſhire, and for this rare Doctrine was made the King's Chaplain. Mr. Harvey, one of the Gentlemen of the County of Bedford, and his Pariſhioner, brought the Accuſation againſt him.

And Cenſure.

An Act againſt Superſtition.

The Houſe of Commons order'd a Bill to be brought in, to aboliſh Superſtition and Idolatry; a numerous Committee was appointed, among whom, beſides Sir Robert Harley, Sir Edward Deering, Mr. Rous, Mr. White, &c. we find the Lord Falkland, Sir John Colepepyr, Sir Edmund Verney, Sir Nevil Pool, Sir William Bowyer, Sir Thomas Hutchinſon, Sir Thomas Smith, Sir Richard Buller, Sir Roger North, Sir Guy Palmes, Lord Ruthyn, Sir Chriſtopher Wray, Sir Richard Lewſon, Sir Robert Pye, &c. ſo univerſal was the Averſion of the People of all Ranks to Laud's Idolatry and Superſtition, for none of their Hiſtorians pretend the Votes and Acts are not pointed directly againſt the Archbiſhop.

Lord Seymour.

The firſt of the Patriots who was call'd off from the Purſuit of Grievances, was Sir Francis Seymour, created Baron Trowbridge, and he will be ſoon follow'd by George Lord Digby. In the mean Time, the Houſe of Lords order'd the Records about Ship-Money, which were in the Exchequer Court, to be vacated. The Committee for the Charge againſt the Earl of Strafford, continu'd ſitting all this while at their appointed Times, Mr. Whitlocke Chairman; and when they agreed upon the Articles, they were reported to the Houſe of Commons, who order'd Mr. Pym to carry them to the Houſe of Lords, and their Lordſhips ſent for the Earl to hear them read, containing 200 Sheets of Paper. The Lord Strafford deſir'd three Months to make his Anſwer, but the Peers allow'd him twenty-five Days only, which expir'd the 24th of February; all which Time Sir Richard Lane, and others of his Counſel, were employ'd Night and Day in drawing it up with great Labour. The Anſwer conſiſted of 100 Sheets of Paper. Nothing can be more unfair, if not untrue, than what Echard ſays of this Proſecution, The Commons employ'd a Month about it, without performing any material Buſineſs. The Triennial Act is ſo far from being a material Buſineſs with him, that he gives us a wretched Pun upon it, taken out of a Woman's Letter, who probably cou'd not ſpell better, and ſaid, they had paſt the Tyrannical Parliament, inſtead of the Triennial; and adds he, She was a Prophet as much as himſelf is a Wit. This too was no materal Buſineſs, An Act for the Relief of his Majeſty's Army, and the Northern Parts, being a Grant of four entire Subſidies: There was much more material Buſineſs perform'd, while the Committee were preparing the Articles againſt the Earl of Strafford, as may be ſeen in Ruſhworth. A.D.1641.

The City by Alderman Pennington, offer'd to lend 100000 Pounds on the Security of the four Subſidies, and the Houſe declar'd the ſame to be an acceptable Service. Thus we find Pennington had Influence over other Citizens beſides the Rabble. Londoners.

The Tryal of the Earl of Strafford approaching, the Peers preſs'd hard to have it in their Houſe, but the Commons inſiſted upon it, that they might come as a Houſe, being the Impeachers of the Earl; and after ſome Debate, the Lords agreed that the Tryal ſhould be in Weſtminſter-Hall, to which his Majeſty aſſented On the 22d of March, the Lord Strafford's Tryal commenc'd, perhaps with as much Solemnity as ever was ſeen on the like Occaſion at Athens or Rome. The Lords were in their Robes on ſeveral Seats in Weſtminſter-Hall. The Earl of Arundel, Lord High-Steward, in a Chair of State. The Earl of Lindſey, Lord High-Conſtable, had the ordering of the Place: The Commons, as a Committee of the whole Houſe, ſate uncover'd on Scaffolds, with many Hundreds of Gentlemen: Behind the Peers was a Chair and Cloth of State for the King and Prince: On a Scaffold below the State, ſate the Ladies of Quality, who, if we may believe Echard, took Notes, and wrote down all they could preſerve of the Earl's charming Eloquence. At the lower End, on the Right Hand, even with the Lords, was a Place with Partitions for the Committee of Managers, and a Door backwards to a Withdrawing-Room, where they might conſult, as Occaſion offer'd On the other Side was a Place for the Earl of Strafford, with a Seat and Room for the Lieutenant of the Tower to be next to him, and Places for the Earl's Secretaries and Council to be near him. Whitlocke informs us, the Biſhops were excluded by the Canons of the Church to be aſſiſtant in Caſes of Blood and Death, and therefore they abſented themſelves from this Tryal: And Ruſhworth adds, They gave no Proxies, which indeed none of the Lords were allow'd to do in this Caſe. Echard, who ſhews us that if he had been a Biſhop, Blood ſhou'd not have kept him from his Seat, complains that the excluding Canon was old; as if a Law could be the worſe for being old, when the Reaſon of it was ſtill the ſame. The Lord Clarendon and the Reverend Hiſtorian affirm, that the Biſhop of Lincoln betray'd the Fundamental Right of his Order, to the Ruin of the Earl; directly contrary to what Biſhop Hacket, in the Life of that Prelate, aſſerts that the Lord of Lincoln made a learned Speech to prove the Original and preſent Right of Biſhops to ſit in Judgment in Caſes of Blood. This wou'd be very ſurprizing, if it was meant of Timothy, Titus, and the Apoſtolical Biſhops. Ambroſe Philips, in Biſhop Williams's Life, tells us, he pleaded ſtrongly in Behalf of the Earl, who was a moſt incomparable Perſon; the Parliament turbulent, mutinous and clamorous, thirſting after his Blood ſo much, that they reſolv'd to have him murder'd, if the King had not paſs'd the Bill of Attainder. One may perceive by this fine Stroke of Hiſtory, that it was written in a College. Strafford's Tryal. Ruſhw.

Strafford's Tryal.

I ſhall not enlarge upon the Particulars of the

A.D. 1641. Earl's Tryal, referring the Reader to Ruſhworth. The Managers of the Tryal were the moſt eminent Members of Parliament, Mr. Pym, Mr. Glyn, Mr. Maynard, Mr. Whitlocke, Mr. St. John, Mr. Palmer, Lord Digby, Sir Walter Earl, Mr. Hampden, &c. with whom the Earl, according to Mr. Archdeacon, ſoon ſhew'd he had Ability enough to wreſtle. That is, he had as much Reaſon and Senſe as Mr. Pym and Mr. Hampden, as much Law as Glyn, Maynard, St. John, Whitlocke, Palmer. He cannot help overdoing it, when he ſpeaks of Archbiſhop Laud or his Friends. Mr. Pym with his uſual Eloquence and Spirit open'd the Charge, which conſiſted of twenty-eight Articles, containing in Subſtance; Articles againſt Strafford.

That he had ſaid at York, when he was Preſident of the North, The King's little Finger ſhould be heavier than the Loins of the Law, prov'd by Sir David Fowlis: That he ſaid, Ireland was a conquer'd Nation, and the King might do with them what he pleas'd, prov'd by the Earl of Corke, who prov'd alſo his ſaying, he would have neither Law nor Lawyers, and any of his Acts ſhould be as binding as an Act of Parliament: That he procur'd a Sentence of Death againſt the Lord Mountnorris, Vice-Treaſurer of Ireland, Principal Secretary of State, and Keeper of the Signet, without any Warrant or Authority of the Law: That without any legal Proceeding, he took away the Lands and Tenements of Thomas Lord Dillon: That he impriſon'd ſeveral of his Majeſty's Subjects in an Arbitrary Manner: That he procur'd the Cuſtoms to be Farm'd to his own Uſe: That he rais'd Money by Soldiers, prov'd by Serjeant Saville: That he ſhut up the Ports by Proclamation, to prevent bringing Complaints againſt him, prov'd by the Earl of Deſmond: That he had levy'd Money in the County of York by Force, to maintain the Militia. The Earl in his Anſwer to this ſaid, the great Council of the North join'd with him in it: But that Council diſclaim'd the doing it, and affirm'd the ſame to be unjuſtly charg'd upon them. He was alſo accus'd of contriving an Oath in Ireland to ſupport Arbitrary Power: That he incited the King to the Scots War, and proclaim'd the Scots Rebels, and ſaid he wou'd deſtroy them Root and Branch: That upon the Citizens refuſing the Loan, he ſaid, it wou'd never be well till they were laid by the Heels, and ſome of the Aldermen hang'd, prov'd by Alderman Garraway, &c. The main Part of the Earl's Defence lay in his having the King's Commiſſion, and acting only in Conjunction with other Counſellors. He ſaid Sir David Fowlis was his Enemy; that it was hard to loſe his Honour and Life for haſty Words: He inſiſted upon it, that the Lord Mountnorris deſerv'd to die, but he got him a Pardon, and make the worſt of the Sentence, it was but Felony: And the impriſoning Perſons for diſobeying his Orders, was but a Miſdemeanor. True it is, his Anſwer was well drawn, and evaded the Charge as much as the Dexterity of the moſt dextrous Lawyers cou'd pretend to do: But through all the Branches of his Miniſtry he behav'd imperiouſly and tyrannically, as well in the Court of the North, as in Ireland, which however did not amount to Treaſon, and no Accumulation cou'd make it ſo, if there had not been ſomething behind, which was in the higheſt Degree treaſonable. In the Courſe of his Tryal, a ſeal'd Paper was produc'd, which being open'd and read, appear'd to be ſent from the Parliament of Ireland, whoſe Approbation he had juſt ſpoken of. The Contents were, that they had voted the Earl of Strafford guilty of High-Treaſon. The Earl was ſtartled at it, coming in ſo ſeaſonably to diſcredit what he had been ſaying of his great Services in the Parliaments there, and cry'd out, There is a Conſpiracy againſt me to take away my Life: upon which, if we have Faith in Mr. Echard, the grave and wiſe Mr. Pym gave a great Shout, and the Managers requir'd Juſtice from the Lords againſt the Earl, who ſtanding impeach'd of High-Treaſon, accus'd the Parliaments of two Kingdoms of a Conſpiracy againſt him. At this the Lord Strafford fell down upon his Knees, and humbly crav'd Pardon, Proteſting he did not intend the Parliament, but only ſome particular Perſons. As to his Oppreſſion in Ireland, Echard calls it Activity, a Word he always makes uſe of, when any of his Heroes or Heroines are about doing what they ſhould not do. When the Queen rais'd Money among the Papiſts, he approves of her Activity; When Laud's Zeal was at work in the Star-Chamber, and High-Commiſſion Courts, he adores his Activity. I have not inſerted that part of the Charge againſt him concerning the Lord Loftus, Lord Chancellor of Ireland, whom he degraded and impriſon'd for not obeying his Orders, becauſe it is not in Ruſhworth. The Earl of Clarendon might inſert it, for that as Mr. Archdeacon words it, the Crime proceeded from a noble Root, to oblige the Lord Chancellor to make a Settlement upon his Son, whoſe Lady, ſays the ſame Reverend Author, was ſo much in the Lord Strafford's good Graces, as to render his Juſtice the more ſuſpected: He aſſures us, the Earl made all Things appear not only leſs than Treaſon, but no very great Miſdemeanors; though when all the Crimes were heap'd together, it was the Opinion of the moſt learned Lawyers, that they amounted to Acccumulative Treaſon without the twenty-third Article, which without much Learning in the Law, will appear to be as much Treaſon againſt the Conſtitution of England, as ever Traytor was guilty of. Larrey writes, whatever the Earl could ſay in his Defence, either in Perſon, or by his Council, though both he and they ſpoke very forcibly, he could not prevail over the Prejudice of the People. The Evidence to the twenty-third Article not being ſo full as was neceſſary, Sir Henry Vane, Junior, committed a Breach of Truſt to ſtrengthen it. His Father, Secretary Vane, being out of Town, ſent a Letter to his Son, Sir Henry Vane, the younger, with the Key of his Cabinet for ſome Papers there; among which, the Son lighted upon certain Notes taken by the Father at a Meeting of the Junto on the 5th of May, 1640, the very Day the laſt Parliament was diſſolv'd. Theſe Notes being of great Concernment to the Publick, and declaring ſo much againſt the Earl of Strafford, he held himſelf bound in Duty and Conſcience to diſcover them; accordingly he ſhew'd them to Mr. Pym, the chief Manager, who urg'd him, and prevail'd with him, that they might be made uſe of in Evidence againſt the Earl, as being moſt material, and of great Conſequence, in Relation to that Article. I take all this to be Theatrical, and doubt not the Notes were taken to do Strafford a good Turn one Time or other, and the Key was ſent on purpoſe to have this Paper found among others. Be that as it will, Mr. Pym produced thoſe Notes in the Houſe of Commons, and the ſame Day in the Conference with the Lords. When the Earl was brought next to his Tryal, the Contents were openly read, thus headed, No danger of a War with Scotland, if Offenſive, not Defenſive: Then follow'd the Queſtions and Anſwers upon it.

King Charles. How can we undertake an Offenſive War, if we have no more Money?

King Charles.

Lord Lieut. Ireland. Borrow of the City 100000 Pounds; go on vigorouſly to levy Ship-Money, your Majeſty having try'd the Affections of your People; you are abſolv'd and looſe from all Rule of Government, and to do what Power will admit. Infinite Treaſon! If what follows was not more Treaſonable; Your Majeſty having try'd all ways, and being refus'd, ſhall be acquitted before God and Man. And you have an Army in Ireland, that you may employ to reduce this Kingdom to Obedience, for I am confident the Scots cannot hold out five Monhts. Needed there any more Articles? Prove this upon him, Lord Lieutenant of Ireland.

*A.D.*1641. and had he as many Heads as he had Hairs, he wou'd have forfeited them all.

Archbiſhop of Canterbury. You have try'd all Ways, and have always been deny'd, it is now lawful to take it by Force. What Love he had for his Country, as we have ſeen in Clarendon?

Lord Cottington. Leagues abroad there may be made for the Defence of the Kingdom. Here are Counſellors! What Leagues cou'd be made with any Proteſtant State for the Defence of Tyranny and Superſtition? Leagues with France or Spain cou'd be of no Service to the Religion, Rights, and Liberties of a Proteſtant free People. Cottington again; The lower Houſe are weary of the Church, all Ways ſhall be juſt to raiſe Money by in this inevitable Neceſſity. Obſerve the Cant! All Ways are to be us'd, being lawful.

The Archbiſhop is afraid the Scots Presbyterians wou'd not be deſtroy'd ſoon enough, and therefore he adviſ'd,

All are lawful for an offenſive, not a defenſive War.

Lord Lieut. Ireland. The Town is full of Lords, put the Commiſſion of Array on foot, and if any of them ſtir, we will make them ſmart.

This traiterous Counſel needs no Aggravation nor Remark. I know very well great Endeavours have been us'd to invalidate this Evidence, on account of the Enmity between Vane and Wentworth, tho' that rather confirms than deſtroys it: For one cannot doubt but that Vane finding what a Diſpoſition Wentworth had to erect a Tyranny on the Ruins of the Conſtitution, might be the more vigilant to catch what he ſaid to that Purpoſe, and take Notes of it, which might be produc'd againſt him upon Occaſion. As to the Intelligence between the Father and the Son, I do not regard it; the Notes are forth coming, and it is no Matter how we came by them. As to the Evidence of their being genuine, they bear all the viſible Marks of it from their Date, the Day of the Diſſolution of the Parliament, from the Situation of Affairs, and the Characters of the Perſons introduc'd. Theſe Notes made a ſtronger Impreſſion on the Lords and the Auditory, than whatever had been ſaid before; and the Earl being requir'd by the Lord High-Steward to proceed, if he had any Thing farther to ſay, the noble Priſoner made a moſt moving Speech, which he deliver'd with inimitable Grace, and at a proper Pauſe, ſhew'd his weeping Children who ſtood by him, to the Lords, ſaying, My Lords, I wou'd not have troubled you ſo long, were it not for the Intereſt of theſe dear Pledges, which a Saint in Heaven has left me. At this he for a ſhort Space melted into Tears; and here notwithſtanding I ſhou'd have given my Vote with Mr. Pym, I cou'd not have forborn to have kept him Company.

The fatal Notes before-mention'd being left with the Committee of Managers, they were ſtolen, and every one of the Managers clear'd themſelves of the Guilt by a ſolemn Proteſtation of Innocence. The Lord Digby proteſted it with more Earneſtneſs and deeper Imprecations than any of the reſt; yet afterwards at the Battel of Naſeby, a Copy of theſe Notes was found in the King's Cabinet under Digby's Hand, by which the Conveyor of the Paper to the King was fully diſcover'd. And thus he began his Converſion to the Court, for which he is applauded by the Archdeacon, with Treachery and Perjury. It is evident by the Charge againſt the Earl of Strafford, that the Lord Clarendon does not wrong him, where he ſays, He indulged his own Appetite and Paſſion in his Government of Ireland, was of too high and ſevere a Deportment. A Man ought not to loſe his Head for being proud, but if he adds Oppreſſion and Cruelty to his Pride, and Treaſon to both, I do not ſee how a Divine, ſuch a one as the Archdeacon is, cou'd ſay ſeriouſly, That never ſo white a Soul return'd to its Maker.

The Affair being likely to be ſpun out to a great Length by the Oppoſition it met with in the Houſe of Lords, the Commons reſolv'd to return to their Bill of Attainder, which was brought in by Sir Arthur Haſlerrig. Echard's Reaſon for it is wonderful; finding a great Defection in their Party, about four to one, 204 to 59, as by the laſt Diviſion. The Lords going on in their own Way, heard the Earl's Council Lane, Gardiner, and Lightfoot; but the Commons wou'd not reply, becauſe of their Bill to attaint him, which was read the twenty-third of April, when the Lord Digby firſt appear'd as grand an Apoſtate as formerly he had charg'd Strafford to have been. He did not deny Sir Henry Vane's Notes to be genuine, he only call'd them diſjointed Fragments, without Reſult or Concluſion, a Remark very unworthy that Lord's admirable Talent. Such Counſels as thoſe are not wont to be taken in Form, or be preſerv'd in Regiſters; and it was as much as Vane cou'd do to minute the moſt important Heads of ſuch dangerous Diſcourſes. Neither is his Argument much ſtronger, tho' mightily inſiſted upon in the Injuſtice of a Law made a Poſteriori, as if in all Governments there was not an abſolute unlimited Power to act with or without Law for the Preſervation of the State. This Power in France and Fez is in the King, in England it is in the King, Lords, and Commons, and there is no Danger of its ever being exerted unreaſonably or unneceſſarily. The Lord Digby was oblig'd to explain ſome Parts of his Speech; and being now to ſhew the Court that he wou'd ſtick at nothing to pleaſe them, he did it ſo inſolently, that the Country Party diſown'd him, and order'd his Speech, which he printed, to be burnt by the Hangman; ſo the Court found it neceſſary to remove him to the Houſe of Lords, which began to feſter the Sore, which was before in a fair way of healing.

*A.D.*1641.

We have now both in the Lord Clarendon's Hiſtory, and its Copy the Archdeacon's, an Account of a Conference between the Author, Mr. Hyde, and the Earls of Bedford and Eſſex, which has not one probable Caſt in it, but a very improbable one at the End of it, where we are told the Earl of Eſſex ſhou'd ſay, with reſpect to the King's being urg'd to paſs the Bill of Attainder againſt his Conſcience, The King in Conſcience is oblig'd to conform himſelf and his Opinion to the Opinion and Conſcience of his Parliament. This was an unknown Doctrine maintain'd by their Divines. Where does that appear? Where was it preach'd? Who was the Preacher? The Doctrine then preached, was doubtleſs that the Earl by his traiterous Counſel given the King, had incurr'd the Puniſhment due to Traytors; and on a Suppoſition that Vane's Notes were true, no Traytor cou'd have ſaid more to have brought Deſtruction on his Country. 'Tis the worſt Sort of Enthuſiaſm, to put Conſcience in Oppoſition to Fact. The King did not deny that there was any ſuch Advice at all given by Strafford, tho' he objected to the Notes. Warwick, one of the ſorrieſt Advocates the Cauſe ever had, ſays the Notes ought not to have been taken Notice of, becauſe the Paper was blotted, which every one knows Minutes taken in haſte are wont to be. He has the vulgar Objection to the Conſtruction of the Earl's Words, this Kingdom, did not mean England, but that Kingdom Scotland. The Way of conſtruing doubtful Expreſſions is by the Context: Borrow Money of London, raiſe the Money vigorouſly all over England: If they won't pay, you are acquitted before God and Man, and have an Army in Ireland to make them do it, which is the natural Senſe; but put to reduce Scotland in the Place of it, and it is Nonſenſe.

I never find theſe Men pretend to Conſcience in the Breach of Laws and Privileges, and the Invaſion of the Rights, Properties, and Liberties of

A.D.1641. of the Subject, and cannot think this was the Queſtion. The King had all along aſſur'd his ill Miniſters, that he wou'd protect them: They had all along flatter'd him with an unlimited Prerogative, and if he gave this Man up to Juſtice, who after that wou'd dare to be the Miniſter of his arbitrary abſolute Power? How cou'd he anſwer it to a Number of Delinquents to whom he had given the like Aſſurances. Here it ſticks, and a better Face cou'd not be put upon it than Conſcience.

London Petition. A Petition from London is juſt mention'd by the reverend Hiſtorian, as an Artifice to give the Bill of Attainder a freſh Puſh. Thus does he inſult the Legiſlature, and treats the Petitioners as ſo many Villains, tho' never did Petition deſerve more Reſpect, being ſign'd by 20000 Perſons of good Quality and Rank, whom he inſolently taxes with a Deſign to murder the Earl of Strafford by haſtening his Execution. Among many other deplorable Complaints, the Petitioners repreſent the Loſs of Trade from the unſettled Condition of the Kingdom, the ſtopping Money in the Mint, the vaſt Sums of Money unduly taken by his Majeſty's Officers, the ſtrong and ſecret Oppoſition to the Puniſhment of Incendiaries, the diſtracted State of the Church, Papiſts ſtill armed, the Laws againſt them not executed, ſome of the moſt active of them ſtill at Court, Prieſts and Jeſuits not yet baniſh'd, the Iriſh Popiſh Army not yet disbanded, Courts of Juſtice not yet reform'd. Oh the ſelicitous Times! And the Earl of Strafford, who as now appears, hath counſelled the plundering of the City, not yet brought to Juſtice, which they humbly pray may be executed upon him, &c. The Commons ſent the Lord Ruſſel to the Lords, to deſire a Conference on the Subſtance of this Petition. Mr. Glyn and Mr. Hill were order'd to manage the Conference, with Inſtructions to deſire the Lords to expedite the Bill of Attainder, and to petition with them for diſbanding the Iriſh Army, and removing Papiſts from Court.

Rushw.

Mr. St. John's Argument. Mr. Sollicitor General St. John, was alſo order'd to maintain the Point of Law concerning the Attainder; and for obeying the Command of the Houſe, Echard, with his accuſtom'd Modeſty, calls him that implacable Man, and turns one of the beſt Law Arguments which ever was made by Lawyer, into his own wretched Buffoonry, We give Laws to Hares, we knock Wolves on the Head. Mr. St. John prov'd the Treaſon to be within the Statute of 25 Edw. 3. He took notice of what the Earl of Strafford had ſaid in his laſt Speech about the Lords being more skilful in the Art of killing than their Anceſtors. This Appeal of his from yourſelves to your Anceſtors, we admit of, ſaid Mr. Sollicitor, your Lordſhips will be pleas'd to hear what Judgment they have already given in the Caſe. He then quotes many Precedents of Attainders in Parliament for Treaſon not within the before-mentioned Statute, and talks with good Law and good Senſe: Though your Lordſhips Anceſtors were willing to make the Statute of 25 Edw. 3. the Rule of the inferior Courts, yet they left the Attainders, Parliament Precedents, to themſelves untouch'd, wherein the Legiſlative Power had been exercis'd. There's nothing in them whence it can be gather'd, but that they intended to leave them as free for the future. There is more Law in that Argument of Mr. St. John's, than in all Mr. Hyde's Arguments which have yet appear'd in Print. Yet the Archdeacon, who is as ignorant even as myſelf in theſe Matters, takes upon him to condemn Mr. St. John's Argument both as to Law and Eloquence, of both which indeed he is equally a Judge. He calls it fallacious and barbarous; he might as well have call'd it ſchiſmatical and barbarous, there being no more Barbarity in it, than in all Pleadings which are powerful enough to bring Criminals to Puniſhment. Clarendon, Warwick, Echard, and all of them, cry up Mr. Lane's Anſwer to St. John's Argument, that by Statute 1 Hen. 4. nothing was to be adjudg'd Treaſon but what was ordain'd by the Statute 25 Edw. 3. and I did not think they had all impos'd on us, Lane and all his Panegyriſts, till I read what the learned Lawyer Acherley ſays, The Commons were well furniſh'd with Matter to have reply'd to this Argument, if they had ſo pleas'd; and then he knocks all Lane's Argument on the Head by Authorities and Reaſons. See Brit. Conſt. p. 429. & ſeq. A.D.1641.

Mr Hyde's Meſſage. In the mean time Mr. Hyde, who was not yet plung'd over Head and Ears in Court-Waters, was ſent to the Lords with a Meſſage, That the Commons had receiv'd Information which hath moved in them ſome Fear that the Earl of Strafford may have a Deſign to make his Eſcape, they therefore deſire that his Guards may be ſtrengthen'd. To which the Lords conſented. His Majeſty gave the two Houſes Audience the 28th of April, and told them concerning Papiſts reſiding at Court, he wou'd give no juſt Cauſe of Scandal. It is obſervable that this King in his Speeches has generally ſome Epithet to a Word which keeps the Interpretation in himſelf ſtill. If he had ſaid he wou'd give no Cauſe of Scandal, it wou'd have been ſome ſort of Anſwer, but with that good Epithet juſt, it is no Anſwer at all, or rather a Denial; for his Majeſty thought thoſe Papiſts his beſt Friends. He lov'd them, and they lov'd him, and cou'd any body therefore be juſtly ſcandaliz'd at their living well together? As to the Iriſh Army, he found many Difficulties in disbanding it, but he wiſh'd all Armies might be disbanded. King's Speech. Strafford.

The Bill of Attainder going forward, the King came to the Houſe of Peers three Days after, and ſending for the Commons, ſpoke in Favour of the Earl, denying not the Notes themſelves, but the Subſtance of the Notes, and declar'd he cou'd not in Conſcience condemn him of Treaſon; but he was clear as to Miſdemeanor, and thought him not worthy of any Place for the future; no not that of a Conſtable. 'Tis a very pitiful Caſe to ſee Echard and Warwick's Delphian Oracle reduc'd by King Charles himſelf to the Capacity of a Tything-Man. The Earl, as Heylin owns, took that Expreſſion worſe than Death, and wiſh'd it had been ſpar'd, in a Letter he wrote to the King. Strafford and his Friends did not thank the King for interfering, and believ'd his Earneſtneſs to ſave him haſten'd his Deſtruction. The Commons were a little diſpleaſed at the King's interfering in the paſſing of a Bill before it came regularly to him, and it was generally look'd upon as a new Breach of their Privileges. 'Tis pretended the Lord Say gave the King this traiterous Counſel; but rather, I believe, to accuſe that Lord of Treachery, than the King of Weakneſs. What Echard ſays here of the Houſe of Commons being in a Confederacy with the Watermen, Porters, Shoemakers and Taylors of London, to deſtroy the Earl of Strafford and the Church, is too incredible and too impudent to bear Remark. A Doctor of Divinity, and his Band-Dogs, are his chief Actors in this Confederacy. Thus he ſtiles the Citizens of London, who came to Weſtminſter waiting with Impatience to hear the Bill of Attainder was paſs'd. Theſe Citizens preſented an humble Petition to the Lords, complaining of a Conſpiracy for the Earl's Eſcape, in order to which the Garriſon of the Tower was to be reinforc'd with 100 Soldiers under Captain Billingſley. This was certain, Sir William Balfour Governor of the Tower, declar'd to the ſix Lords who were ſent to examine him, that he had receiv'd Orders to admit Billingſley and his Reinforcement; that the Earl of Strafford offer'd him 20000 l. and to marry his Daughter to his Son; that it ſhou'd be done under Pretence of removing him to ſome other Priſon, and the Earl wou'd take his Opportunity to eſcape; that he ſhou'd have the King's Warrant to indemnify him; for in thoſe Days that Warrant was thought an Indemnification for the Breach of all the Laws in our Law-Books and Statutes. His Contrivance to eſcape.

A.D.1641. Statutes. Captain Billingſley confeſs'd upon Oath, that he was employ'd to get an hundred ſtout Fellows for a ſecret Service by Sir John Suckling one of the Army Conſpirators. But Echard invalidates Sir William Balfour's Evidence becauſe he was a Scotſman, for which that brave Nation is much indebted to him. Sir William refus'd to admit Billingſley and his Soldiers, or any other but the Hamlet Men.

It is common with the Hiſtory Writers, ſuch as Heylin, Sanderſon, Echard, &c. to ſay as Warwick does, that the Parliament declin'd the Proſecution by Tryal, and brought in the Bill of Attainder becauſe they had not Proof; and Sir Henry Vane's ſwearing to his Notes, ſignify'd no more than if one of themſelves had ſworn to them; and this their Great Vulgar and their Small run away with; whereas the Lords voted the Earl guilty of High-Treaſon, not upon the Notes, of which ſo much has been ſaid, but upon the fifteenth Article, for levying Money in Ireland by Force; and upon the nineteenth Article, for impoſing an Oath upon the Subjects: Which Vote wou'd have condemn'd the Earl without the Bill of Attainder; but it was manifeſt the Commons were reſolv'd to make the King a Party in it; and tho' the common Way of Proceſs wou'd have convicted him capitally, as appears by the Lords Vote, yet then the King wou'd have been paſſive only in his Puniſhment, and they reſolv'd he ſhou'd be active in Terror to all future Evil Counſellors; which his Majeſty perceiving, it no doubt contributed ſomething to the Tenderneſs of his Conſcience.

When we have read Whitlocke's Account of the Vote of the Peers upon two other Articles of High-Treaſon, how flat do all the Arguments in the Hiſtory of the Rebellion againſt the Notes appear, which are not once mention'd in the Vote of High-Treaſon?

Whitl. 43. But the merrieſt Part of that Hiſtorian's Falſification is this, The Bill paſs'd the Houſe of Commons with only fifty-nine negative Voices, when there was near two hundred in the Houſe; whereas there were above two hundred affirmative Voices only; and ſuch is the Way of Tale throughout all that Hiſtory.

Ruſhw. 204 Yeas, 59 Noes.

Prince of Orange, Princeſs Mary.

On the 2d of May the Marriage between the young Prince of Orange and the Lady Mary then twelve Years old, was ſolemniz'd at Whitehall. His Highneſs had been in England ſcarce a Fortnight, and never was Joy more juſt nor more general than on this happy Occaſion, to which we do in ſome Meaſure owe the real Felicities of all the glorious Reigns ſince the Revolution.

Mr. Pym about the Army Plot.

The next Day Mr. Pym acquainted the Houſe that there were divers Informations of deſperate Deſigns both at home and abroad, of Endeavours to diſaffect the Army, and bring them up againſt the Parliament; that ſeveral Perſons about the Queen are deeply engag'd in theſe Plots, and there was Cauſe to fear an Intent upon Portſmouth, &c. Then Sir John Wray ſpoke, If we intend to perfect the Work, let us take the right Way, let us become holy Pilgrims (not Popiſh) and endeavour to be loyal Covenanters with God and the King, firſt binding ourſelves by a parliamentary and national Oath (not a Straffordian nor a Prelatical one) to preſerve our Religion entire and pure, without the leaſt Compound of Superſtition or Idolatry, &c. This doing we ſhall be a bleſſed Nation: But if we ſhall let go our Chriſtian Hold, and loſe our Parliament-Proof, and old Engliſh well-temper'd Mettle, let us take Care that our Buckler break not, our Parliaments melt not, and our Golden Candleſtick be not remov'd; which never let me live to ſee, nor England to feel the Want of. After the Reader has this ſhort, hearty, truly Engliſh Speech in his Memory, let him turn to the long Sentences, the Sophiſtry, and Affectation in the Lord Clarendon's florid Diſcourſes, and ſee how they will reliſh on his Palate. How piquant and pleaſing is the blunt Honeſty of this Lincolnſhire Knight? How flat and fulſome the eternal Flattery and Prevarication in the Hiſtory of the Rebellion? The Houſe taking that honeſt Speech into Conſideration, RESOLV'D, That a Proteſtation ſhou'd be taken by all the Members, To defend the Reform'd Religion expreſs'd in the Doctrine of the Church of England, againſt all Popery and Popiſh Innovations; they mean Laud's: The whole Body, Lords and Commons, and even Biſhops, mean his Innovations ſo much cry'd up by Clarendon and Echard. To defend his Majeſty's royal Perſon, Honour, and Eſtate, the Power and Privileges of Parliaments, the lawful Rights and Liberties of the Subjects; to oppoſe and bring to condign Puniſhment all ſuch as ſhall by Force, Practice, Counſels, Plots, Conſpiracies, or otherwiſe do any Thing contrary to this Proteſtation. How excellent is the Archdeacon's Obſervation, that the Clauſe to defend the true reform'd Proteſtant Religion, was intended againſt making Alterations in the Hierarchy; and more excellent ſtill is his other Obſervation, that the Plot which occaſion'd the Proteſtation was imperfect; ſo in his Way of thinking was the Gunpowder-Treaſon, for that the Parliament was not blown up, nor was this over-aw'd by the Army. He introduces more Gunpowder into his Farce, and with wretched Raillery inſults the Houſe of Commons upon the Fright the Report of it puts them into: His Actors in it are Sir Walter Earl, Mr. Middleton, Mr. Moyle, and Sir John Wray, whoſe Motion for the Proteſtation he never will forgive, tho' he was Knight of his own Shire. What he obſerves about a Church, is as falſe as it is fooliſh. The Lord Clarendon informs us, the Parliament was ſo careful not to have it underſtood in Echard's Senſe, that they made this Explanation of it: By theſe Words was and is meant only the publick Doctrine profeſs'd in the ſaid Church, ſo far as it is oppoſite to Popery and Popiſh Innovations; and that the ſaid Words are not to be extended to the maintaining of any Form of Worſhip, Diſcipline, or Government, nor of any Rites and Ceremonies of the ſaid Church of England. This Proteſtation was carry'd up to the Lords the 3d of May by Mr. Denzil Hollis and Mr. Maynard; the latter read it, and the former made a learned elegant Speech upon it: The Parliament find Jeſuits and Prieſts conſpiring with ill Miniſters of State, Laud's old Friend Windebank, Cottington, &c. to deſtroy our Religion. They find ill Miniſters conjoin'd together to ſubvert our Laws and Liberties; Wentworth, and too many more to be nam'd. They find Juſtice obſtructed, Property invaded, and this very Parliament which hath ſate ſo long, hath all this while but beaten the Air, and ſtriven againſt the Stream; for I may truly ſay, Wind and Tide have ſtill been againſt us. The ſame ill Counſels which firſt rais'd the Storm which almoſt ſhipwreck'd the Commonwealth do ſtill continue, they blow ſtrong like the Eaſt Wind that brought the Locuſts over the Land, &c. This Proteſtation was taken by the Commons immediately, no Member being ſuffer'd to go out of the Houſe till he took it, which the others did as they came in. Thus in two Days time 'twas taken by 71 temporal Lords, 17 Biſhops, 428 Commoners, 9 Judges, and afterwards generally. Heylin, whoſe Example is excellently well follow'd by Mr. Archdeacon, poſitively aſſerts that the Lord Digby and his Unkle refus'd the Proteſtation, which is a poſitive Falſity. The Lord Digby and his Unkle took it one juſt after the other, and there was but one Man, Mr. Herbert, between the two Digbys, and Mr. Pym and Sir Benjamin Rudyard, who were two of the firſt Takers. The Earl of Southampton and the Lord Roberts two Noblemen who afterwards fell in heartily with the Engliſh Intereſt, wou'd not take it, as being too nearly related to the Scots Covenant. But the Earl of Lindſey, Earl of Northampton, Earl of Carnarvon, and ſeveral others, who ſacrific'd their Lives for the King, did take it.

Mr. Hollis's Speech upon it.

Sir John Wray for the Proteſtation.

*A.D.*1641. The Citizens of London continuing impatient at the Delays the Bill of Attainder met with, drew up a Liſt of all the Members of the Houſe of Commons who were againſt that Bill while it was paſſing that Houſe, and affix'd it to the Wall of Sir William Brouncker's Houſe in Palace-Yard, to mark thoſe Gentlemen as Perſons ſet apart to feel the Weight of the People's Reſentments. They wrote upon it Betrayers of the Country, and Straffordians, the Title downwards, as if they wou'd hang them up by the Heels. Their Names were, Lord Digby, Lord Compton, Lord Buckhurſt, Sir Robert Hatton, Sir Edward Alford, Sir Nicholas Slanning, Sir Thomas Danby, Sir George Wentworth, Sir Peter Wentworth, Sir Frederick Cornwallis, Sir William Carnaby, Sir Richard Win, Sir Gervaſe Clifton, Sir William Widdrington, Sir William Pennyman, Sir Patrick Curwen, Sir Richard Lee, Sir Thomas Fanſhaw, Sir John Strangeways, Sir Henry Slingsby, Sir William Portman, Mr. Selden, Mr. Gervaſe Hollis, Mr. Sidney Godolphin, Mr. Cooke, Mr. Coventry, Mr. Benjamin Weſton, Mr. Alford, Mr. Lloyd, Mr. Herbert, Captain Digby, Mr. Taylor, Mr. Griffith, Mr. Scawen, Mr. Bridgman, Serjeant Hyde, Mr. Fettiplace, Dr. Turner, Captain Charles Price, Dr. Parry, Mr. Arundel, Mr. Newport, Mr. Holborn, Mr. Noel, Mr. Kirton, Mr. Pollard, Mr. Price, Mr Trevanion, Mr. Jane, Mr. Edgcomb, Mr. Chichely, Mr. Mallory, Mr. Porter, Mr. White, Mr. Warwick, fifty-ſix in all. Mr. Warwick the Memoir Writer, diſtinguiſhes himſelf by a Place in this Liſt, and by nothing elſe that I have yet met with concerning him. Of the three other negative Voices, Mr. Edward Hyde may be ſuppos'd to be one, by his declaiming ſo much againſt the Parliaments bloody Doings in this Bill of Attainder. This Liſt ſo affrighted ſome of the Lords as well as Commons, that they left their Houſe, as the Earl of Holland, Earl of Hertford, Earl of Briſtol, Duke of Lenox; and the Lord Saville, who had been Strafford's profeſs'd Enemy, ſtuck cloſe to him.

Straffordians.

Earl of Bedford's Death.

The Death of the Earl of Bedford, which happen'd at this Time, is ſaid by the Lord Clarendon to have forwarded the Earl of Strafford's, which is what the Criticks call ſubtilizing in Hiſtory, or making Judgment by Gueſſes, where there is no Foundation for it in Fact. If the Earl of Bedford promis'd to ſave his Life, no doubt he had thought of ſome Way of doing it; but the Doubt is whether he made ſuch a Promiſe, it being inconſiſtent with that Lord's known Sincerity and Zeal for the Commonwealth. The Hiſtorian owns he had been the Earl of Strafford's mortal Oppoſer; and it is not very likely that the Aſſurance of the Treaſurer's Staff, which Dr. Juxon thought it high time to reſign, ſhou'd have ſuch Influence on ſo noble a Peer, as to make him all at once become the Earl of Strafford's Protector. Such unnatural Changes may happen with your Wentworth's, your Noy's, Saville's, Digby's, &c. but not with Gentlemen of ſolid Principles and Virtue.

The Judges, as bad as they had been, being now to give their Advice to the Lords about the Bill of Attainder, thought the Treaſons ſo plainly prov'd before their Lordſhips, according to their own Votes, That the Earl of Strafford doth deſerve to undergo the Pains and Forfeitures of High-Treaſon; upon which the Bill paſs'd the Houſe of Peers the 8th of May; and Judge Heath was ſent to the Commons with the Meſſage, that their Lordſhips had paſs'd it without any Alteration. It now ſtopp'd with the King, who, by Advice of the Lords, conſulted Dr. Uſher Archbiſhop of Armagh, Dr. Moreton Biſhop of Durham, Dr. Potter Biſhop of Carliſle, great Divines and Caſuiſts; alſo Dr. Williams Biſhop of Lincoln, and the late Lord High-Treaſurer, Dr. Juxon Biſhop of London, of whom Sanderſon, his very good Friend, ſays after one who heard the King ſpeak it, He acted cunningly, and ſaid nothing at all. But Echard, his very good Friend alſo, vouches for him that he acted heroically, and told the King, He ought to do nothing againſt his Conſcience upon any Conſideration in the World. The Archbiſhop of Armagh, in a Writing of his on this Subject, informs us, The Biſhop of London ſpake nothing at all, and the Biſhop of Lincoln not only ſpoke, but deliver'd the King a Paper, containing a Promiſe of Pardon which the King had given the Earl under his Hand, and cou'd not be prevail'd with to paſs the Bill till that Paper was reſtor'd. Sanderſon aſſures us the Biſhop of Lincoln, in Concert with Sir William Balfour Governor of the Tower, found Means to get it from the Earl under Pretence of doing him Service; and it was with a View of Pardon upon ſight of that Promiſe, that he wrote the Letter to the King ſo much talk'd of by his Adorers, wherein he gave his Conſent to his Majeſty's paſſing the Bill. We read in Sanderſon, if any of the Biſhops depended on the Judgment of the others, it was the Biſhop of London, who at the laſt Meeting, when all the other Biſhops gave their Opinion in the Affirmative with Archbiſhop Uſher, and that upon the whole Matter Treaſon might be juſtly charg'd upon Strafford, ſpake not a Syllable. Echard writes, He gain'd a Reputation by what he ſaid, that ought to render him immortal in Hiſtory; and as a Proof of it, he has put him into his own, where he is ſure of as much Immortality as the Merit of ſaying nothing amounts to. Mr. Philips intimates that Sanderſon has wrong'd Biſhop Williams in the Matter of the Paper, which I cannot entirely fall in with, becauſe Archbiſhop Uſher, in the above-mention'd Writing, owns he put a Paper into the King's Hand, wherein what was contain'd his Brethren knew not; but I do entirely agree with him in what he ſays of Sanderſon; He relates Things falſe as often as true, and it is pity his Hiſtory fell into Mr. Echard's Way. The Form of conſulting Caſuiſts being over, his Majeſty ſign'd a Commiſſion in Council on Sunday the 9th, to the Earl of Arundel and two other Lords, the Lord Privy-Seal, and the Lord-Chamberlain, to paſs the Bill of Attainder, and the Bill for Continuance of the preſent Parliament.

*A.D.*1641.

Sanderſon 414.

Sanderſon. K. Charles paſſes the Attainder, and for Continuance of the Parliament.

There is a general Error in the Hiſtories not only of diſaffected Authors, but of others; and it is thence become a general but a falſe Opinion, that the Commons were ſo fearful of the ill Conſequences of this Bill of Attainder, that there was a Clauſe in it, that it ſhou'd never be drawn into Precedent. Heylin is the firſt in this Folly and Falſhood; A Clauſe was added that it ſhou'd not be drawn into Example for Time to come. Warwick out-does him, and indeed every one elſe in ſuch ſort of Nonſenſe, they ſtigmatiz'd their own Bill with a Proviſo, this Judgment ſhou'd not for the future be drawn any more into Example. 'Twas impoſſible for Echard not to copy this weak Paſſage, with which he cou'd not but be enamour'd, becauſe he fancy'd it reflected on the Juſtice of the Lords and Commons of England: There was a ſpecial Proviſo that this Act ſhou'd not be a Precedent. Of which ſpecial Proviſo there is not one Word in the Bill. Ruſhworth ſpeaking of the true Proviſo in the Bill, which relates only to Judges and Juſtices in inferior Courts, ſays, This Proviſo hath occaſion'd the common Diſcourſe and Opinion, that this Judgment againſt the Earl was enacted never to be drawn into Precedent in Parliament, whereas it expreſly reſpects only Judges in inferior Courts. Dr. Welwood has the ſame Obſervation, I cannot help taking notice of a ſilly Miſtake which has gain'd ſome Credit in the World, as if the Bill of Attainder was of ſo extraordinary a Nature, and ſo much out of all the known Methods of Juſtice, that the Legiſlators themſelves were oblig'd to inſert a Clauſe into the Body of it, that it ſhou'd never be drawn into Precedent; whereas that Clauſe doth expreſly relate to Judges in inferior Courts. I am ſenſible that Decency and Delicacy of Hiſtory admit

The Proviſo confuted.

A.D.1641. admit not of ſuch unhandſome Epithets, as fooliſh, ſilly, and the like, nor ſuch rude ones, as villainous, infamous, &c. But it is our Misfortune that we have hardly any Perſons to deal with on one ſide of the Queſtion, but what are the Subſtantives of theſe Adjectives, and one cannot help talking in proper Phraſe; which Dr. Welwood had the Experience of as well as my ſelf.

The King ſent the Secretary of State, Sir Dudley Carlton, to acquaint the Lord Strafford with what was done, and the Motives to it; He receiv'd the Meſſage of Death with great Sweetneſs, to uſe Echard's own Words, becauſe they are Antipodes to the Truth. Sanderſon relates it thus, "The "Earl amaz'd, ſeriouſly ask'd the Secretary, Whe- "ther his Majeſty had paſs'd the Bill? As not be- "lieving, without ſome Aſtoniſhment, that the "King wou'd have done it; and being aſſur'd that "it was paſt, he aroſe from his Chair, and ſtand- "ing up, lift up his Eyes to Heaven, clap'd his "Hand upon his Heart, and cry'd, Put not your "Truſt in Princes, nor in the Sons of Men, for in "them there is no Salvation." I mention this Hiſtorian, becauſe he is in the ſame Degree of Credit for good ſtanch Principles, with the Author of the Hiſtory of the Rebellion. Whitlocke ſpeaks of Sir Dudley Carleton's Meſſage in the like manner; and the Earl of Strafford's Behaviour did doubtleſs occaſion great Remorſe in his Majeſty, who ſent a Letter by the Prince of Wales to the Lords, wherein he deſir'd them to confer with the Commons to ſpare the Earls Life; which had no Effect, and the King was much blamed by Heylin and his Brethren, for ſtooping ſo low to the Houſe of Peers, as to Subſcribe his Letter your Friend: Miſſives bearing always Sovereigns Names a-top, and without any Adjunct.

King writes to the Lords in Behalf of the Earl.

After the Archdeacon has told us the Earl of Strafford underſtood Divinity better than any Layman, he tells us, he might have ſav'd his Life if he wou'd have perſuaded the King to take away Epiſcopacy; but he bravely rejected the Offer made by his Brother-in-Law, Mr. Denzil Hollis. Mr. Hollis was juſtly eſteem'd one of the wiſeſt Men of thoſe Times, and there never were Times in which there were wiſer; and unleſs he had been authoriz'd by the two Houſes of Parliament to make that Propoſition, nothing could be more raſh and extravagant, which the Earl muſt know too well to truſt to. When the Earl was going to Execution, the 12th of May, he made a low Bow to the Archbiſhop of Canterbury, who was at a Window, and beg'd his Bleſſing, which the Archdeacon informs us the Archbiſhop gave him, and fell into a Swoon; As if his Soul wou'd have forc'd its way to have join'd the Earl's in its Paſſage to Eternity; he plays with Eternity as Flies do with the Flame. Is it nothing to appear before the tremendous Bar of Judgment, with the Guilt of Idolatry, Superſtition, Profanation of the Sabbath, Perſecution, Cruelty, Tyranny, Blood, and the huge Maſs of Crimes prov'd upon theſe two Criminals? The Earl bow'd again, and pray'd God to protect the Archbiſhop's Innocence: We have ſeen, and ſhall ſtill ſee, what that Innocence was which he prays to God with his dying Breath to protect: After which he march'd to a Scaffold, like a General to a Triumph; Mr. Echard's Similies are extreamly Natural. Nothing in the World is ſo like a Triumph, as to have one's Head cut off. He had triumph'd over the Laws, Rights, Properties and Liberties of the People ſo much, that his Majeſty was pleas'd to ſay, he was not fit to be a Conſtable. His Behaviour on the Scaffold, was like that of a Man who had long expected to die upon one, and was prepar'd for it: 'Twas brave and decent; yet when he was Beheaded there was ſo great Acclamation, that Echard informs us, his Enemies too rode back in Triumph, waving their Hats, and crying, His Head is off, his Head is off.

Strafford Executed.

The Reflections the Reverend Hiſtorian makes on the Act for the Continuance of the Parliament, have the uſual Solidity; It was a new Conſtitution, though they had not one Privilege more granted them by it, except the ſingle one of Sitting. A.D.1641. Act for continuing the Parliament.

The Earl of Leiceſter was now made Lord Lieutenant of Ireland: He was Heir to Sir Philip Sidney, his Unkle, as well as to Sir Henry Sidney, his Grandfather, who had with great Honour, and much Integrity, long continued Chief Governor of Ireland in the Reign of Queen Elizabeth. The Earl of Hertford was made Marquis, and the Prince's Governor, &c. we hear of him no more among the Country Party. The Earl of Eſſex was made Lord Chamberlain; the Lord Keeper, the Lord Privy-Seal, Lord Chief Juſtice of the Common-Pleas, Lord Newburgh, and Sir Henry Vane, Secretary of State, were appointed Commiſſioners of the Treaſury. Earl of Leiceſter.

The Houſe of Commons being in Debate about Deans and Chapters, Dr. Hacket, afterwards Biſhop of Litchfield and Coventry, was admitted to ſpeak in their Behalf, and did it with more Applauſe than Succeſs. Then was deliver'd a Petition from the Univerſity of Oxon, and the moſt remarkable Thing in it, is the Date of it, Dat. Anno Dom. Milleſimo Sex Cent. Quod primo è domo Convocationis in celebri conventu Doctorum, & Magiſtrorum omnibus & ſingulis Aſſentientibus; but they forgot the Month, and Day of the Month. They aſſure the Parliament, that in ſome Weſtern Churches, as well as Eaſtern, there has been a continual Succeſſion of Biſhops down from the very Apoſtles to this preſent Time, the like whereof cannot be affirm'd of any other Form of Government; upon which Conſideration, they earneſtly deſire the ancient Apoſtolical Order may be protected from Ruin and Diminution: You find them all in the ſame Tone. Thus Titus and Becket, Timothy and Wolſey, were the very ſame ſort of Biſhops, or the Function muſt have receiv'd very great Alterations during ſo long a Succeſſion, and conſequently either be or not be the ancient Apoſtolical ones. If Becket's Epiſcopacy was the ſame as Titus's, 'twas Apoſtolical and Ancient, whether the Chain was broken or not; if it was not the ſame, the Succeſſion is of no Signification; it being the Function, and not the Perſon, that was in Debate. And not the Function, as it was Primitive and Pure, but as it had ſuffer'd various Changes and Augmentations, during the Courſe of fifteen Centuries. There had been no Difference about the Name and Function, if that wou'd have ſerv'd the Univerſities Turn: However, when any Profeſſor of Hiſtory ſhall prove that there has been a continu'd unbroken Succeſſion of Biſhops in any two Weſtern Churches, I know what they pretend about the Pope, Erit mihi Magnus Apollo. The Subſtance of the Cambridge Petition is as modeſt as the Date, Datæ frequenti Conventu Noſtro Cantab. tertio Idus Aprilis; they pray that honourable Court, the Houſe of Commons, to reform Innovations and Abuſes that have crept in by ſome Mens Miſcarriages; and that Foundations eſtabliſh'd for the Advancement of Learning, might be preſerv'd; all which was juſt and reaſonable. A Complaint was brought into Parliament againſt Dr. Stern, Maſter of Jeſus College in that Univerſity, for encouraging Superſtition, and maintaining Arbitrary Power; but we ſhall find him, and Dr. Coſens, Head of Peter-Houſe, lately charg'd with the ſame Crime in the beſt Epiſcopal Sees in England, before we have done with this Hiſtory, to encourage others to follow their Example. Deans and Chapters. Oxford Petition. Cambridge Petition.

The Tyranny of the Earl of Strafford, as Preſident of the Council of the North, was ſet forth at large by Mr. Edward Hyde, in a Speech at a Conference between both Houſes of Parliament, about a Fortnight before the Earl was beheaded; wherein he ſaid, This Court, by the Spirit and Ambition of the Miniſters truſted there, hath ſo prodigiouſly Council of the North. Mr. Edw. Hyde's Speech againſt it.

A.D.1641. giouſly broken down the Banks of the firſt Channels in which it ran, that it hath almoſt overwhelm'd that Country under the Sea of Arbitrary Power, and involv'd the People in a Labyrinth of Diſtemper, Oppreſſion and Poverty. To overwhelm with a Sea, and involve in a Labyrinth at one and the ſame Time, is extreamly regular in Metaphor; and this is the Eloquence which is ſo much boaſted of in the Hiſtory of the Rebellion. Is it not ſtrange that the Earl of Clarendon's great Skill in Divinity ſhou'd not have taught him better; and that ſo white a Soul ſhould be guilty of oppreſſing and beggaring the People, and of drowning them in a Sea of Arbitrary Power? Mr. Hyde ſpeaks further of the Tyranny of that Court, of which Strafford was Lord Preſident, or chief Tyrant; and the Iſſue was, that this favourite Court of his was demoliſh'd with Ignominy, about the ſame Time that the Preſident was executed.

Farmers of the Cuſtoms. The Farmers of the Cuſtoms, Sir Paul Pindar, Sir Abraham Dawes, Sir John Wolſtenholme, Sir John Jacob, being queſtion'd for levying Tonnage and Poundage, without Conſent of Parliament, offer'd and paid 150000 Pounds Compoſition; which ſhews they muſt have unmercifully peculated, or they cou'd have made no ſuch Payment: Some think that their Crime deſerv'd Corporal Puniſhment much more than Mr. Prynne's Book againſt Vagabonds and Strumpets.

Mr. Taylor Member. Mr. Taylor, Member of Parliament for Windſor, was brought upon his Knees in the Houſe of Commons, for ſaying they had committed Murder with the Sword of Juſtice, and he would not for a World have ſo much Blood lying on his Conſcience, as did on theirs for the Sentence. The Words were prov'd againſt him by the Mayor of Windſor, ſo he was expell'd the Houſe the 27th of May, and voted incapable of ever being choſen a Member of Parliament, order'd to be carry'd down to Windſor to recant theſe Words, and then to be committed to the Tower during Pleaſure.

Army Plot. The Plot between ſome Courtiers, the Jeſuit Orleans ſays the King himſelf, and ſome Officers of the Army to over-awe the Parliament, is call'd a pretended one by Mr. Archdeacon, and a real one by both the Houſe of Lords and Houſe of Commons. 'Tis fairly related in Whitlocke, and we may by this Event be confirm'd in our Judgment of the Archdeaon's and the Lord Clarendon's Sincerity. Echard will have it, that there was no Plot at all; and the Earl of Clarendon, who cannot deny but that there was ſome Plotting, aſſures us, 'twas becauſe the Parliament did ſometimes give the Scots the Money which was intended for the Engliſh. That ſometimes was once, upon the preſſing Inſtances of the Scots for a preſent Supply; 10000 Pounds was order'd them out of 50000 Pounds which had been deſign'd for the Engliſh Army. The Reverend Hiſtorian affirms, they took 10000 out of 15000 Pounds. Commiſſary Wilmot, a Member of the Houſe, reſenting that the Scots Requeſt was comply'd with, ſaid, If ſuch Papers from the Scots cou'd procure Money, he doubted not but the Officers of the Engliſh Army cou'd ſoon do the like. It was perceiv'd ſome of the King's Servants had very weakly as well as raſhly, been tampering with the Army to march directly to London: what Buſineſs they were to do there, is not hard to be conjectur'd. The two chief Plotters in this Politick Plot were two Poets, Sir John Suckling, and Sir William Davenant; and the chief Officers were Commiſſary Wilmot, Colonel Goring, Mr. Jermyn, Captain Leg, Mr. Pollard, Colonel Aſhburnham, Sir John Coniers, Oneal, Brother to the Iriſh Rebel, and Mr. Piercy, whom Orleans ſtiles Piercy Earl of Northumberland, for the Credit of the Plot. The Archdeacon admires that French Jeſuit as an Hiſtorian. To pacify the Army, the Speaker was order'd to write a Letter to Sir Jacob Aſhley, who commanded it in the Abſence of the other Generals, wherein they were promis'd Money, Cloaths, and what elſe they demanded. This Letter was ſent by Mr. Ruſhworth, who writes of this Plot quite contrary to Mr. Archdeacon, and had a good Effect upon the Soldiers, who were not ſo ready to draw their Swords againſt the Parliament, as the Conſpirators wou'd have had them. Colonel Goring being examin'd concerning this Conſpiracy, gave Information that Sir John Suckling made the firſt Overture to him about marching the Army to London; that he afterwards met Mr. Piercy, Colonel Aſhburnham, Sir John Berkley, Mr. Pollard, Mr. Jermyn, and Oneal the Iriſhman, who all took a ſolemn Oath of Secrecy, not to reveal the Subject of their treaſonable Conferences. That 'twas propos'd to ſend a Declaration to the Parliament before the Army began their March, which was firſt mov'd by Jermin, and oppos'd by Goring, Wilmot, Aſhburnham, and Pollard. That both the King and the Queen knew of the Conſpiracy, which his Majeſty call'd the ſetting the Army in a good Poſture. The Officers agreed upon a Petition to the King and Parliament for Money, not to Disband before the Scots; to preſerve Biſhops, to ſettle the King's Revenue; which if not comply'd with, they were to perform Wonders. His Majeſty ſaw this Petition, and to ſhew his Approbation of it, ſign'd it C. R. with a Direction to the Bearer, who carry'd it down to the Army, that none ſhou'd ſee it as yet but Sir Jacob Aſhley. In this Petition they made the Army offer to wait upon his Majeſty, hoping to appear as conſiderable in his Defence, as what Number ſoever ſhould appear to the contrary: Several Officers ſign'd it in the Army, but upon the Diſcovery of the Treaſon the Traytors fled, and a Proclamation was publiſh'd the 8th of May, commanding Henry Piercy, Eſq; Henry Jermin, Eſq; Sir John Suckling, William Davenant, and Captain Billingſley, whom we find very ready for any Miſchief, to ſurrender themſelves. Davenant was taken as he was making his Eſcape, Piercy and Jermyn got into France. The King ſent a Warrant to Colonel Goring, Governor of Portſmouth, to provide a Ship with all Speed, to carry Piercy to Diep or Calais. The Parliament voted, That there was a Deſign not only to poyſon the Affections of the Army towards the Parliament, by making them believe they were neglected, and the Scots preferr'd to them; but to bring up that Army to London to awe and force both Houſes, &c. This Echard terms averring confidently there was a Plot, though the Lord Digby had invalidated Goring's Evidence, for which he was publickly expell'd the Houſe of Commons, ſays he very ingeniouſly; as if it was poſſible to expel a Man privately, when there were three or four Hundred in Company. The Lord Digby was the ſame Day call'd up by Writ to the Houſe of Peers, notwithſtanding the Parliament petition'd his Majeſty not to confer any Honour or Employment upon him; but the perverſe Meaſures, and obſtinate way of purſuing them, are reviving, and doubtleſs are owing much to the Malignity and Vehemence of Digby's Temper, who is now the favourite Counſellor to both King and Queen, and their Matters are like to thrive accordingly. Modeſt Mr. Echard proceeds; After the Parliament had play'd this Plot, Mr. Pym privately got Piercy to write a certain Letter to his Brother, the Earl of Northumberland, which ſhou'd blow up all his Companions, yet there was a very little Show of Proof of a real Deſign, tho' the Letter agreed with Goring's Evidence. What can one make of ſuch Anecdotes? Who told him Mr. Pym did it privately? He can have Acquaintance with none whom Mr. Pym wou'd be acquainted with, or have ſo much Confidence in, as to impart ſuch a Secret to them. In this certain Letter there was the following great Show of a real Deſign. The 10000 Pounds to the Scots, was the Cauſe of many Diſcourſes of Diſlike

A.D.1641. like amongſt us of the Army, and came to this Purpoſe, that we were diſoblig'd by the Parliament, and not by the King: This being ſaid often to one another, we did reſolve, Wilmot, Aſhburnham, Pollard, Oneal, and my ſelf, to tell his Majeſty of it, and repreſent it as a great Service done him, when his Affairs were in ſo ill a Condition. After this we agreed upon the Petition for Biſhops, and I ſpoke to the King, who I found had been ſpoken with before, in a way more ſharp and high, not having Limit either of Honour or Law. The Petition of the Soldiers was ſoon quaſh'd, ſays the Reverend Hiſtorian, but he owns the King had ſign'd it, and there cou'd not be a greater Breach of Parliamentary Privilege, than to excite an arm'd Power to oppoſe the Senſe of the Nation, declar'd by their Repreſentatives concerning Biſhops. The King own'd he had ſet his Name to it, but had no Intention to do what was therein intended: I will here repeat after the Lord Clarendon, what his Majeſty is made to ſay in his Declaration from York, the next Year, I cannot without Indignation ſuffer my ſelf to be reproach'd, to have intended the leaſt Force or Threatning to my Parliament, as to be privy to the bringing up of the Army, would imply. He was privy to the Conſultations which were held to that Purpoſe. He approv'd of them in the moſt ſolemn Manner, by ſetting his Hand to the Paper which the Conſpirators drew up. Goring and Piercy prov'd this, and his Majeſty acknowledg'd in the ſame Declaration he had written C. R. upon it; yet how unconſcionably do the evil Counſellors deal by their Maſter in making him call God to Witneſs, He had never any ſuch Thought, nor knew of any ſuch Reſolution. The Parliament in their Anſwer argu'd, That his Majeſty's Admiſſion of reading and ſigning the Petition, and yet inſiſting that he did not think of, or intend any Force towards the Parliament, was Proteſtatio contra Factum, a Proteſtation againſt the Fact; and therefore in Regard of the Conſpiracy, was as injurious to the Conſtitution, as the Fact was evident and undeniable: The Parliament never ceas'd to paſs it as a Reproach upon the King throughout the whole Controverſy. A little Shame, without much Conſcience, was ſufficient to have hindred thoſe evil Counſellors from putting a Denial and a Confeſſion of the ſame Thing into the ſame Declaration. General Ludlow, who knew theſe Things as well as Chancellor Hyde, is poſitive; "There was a treacherous De- P. 15.

Clar. 545, 555, 587.

Madam de Motteville, who tells us ſhe had her Memoirs from Queen Henrietta Maria, affirms, that Goring and Wilmot engag'd the Army in the King's Service, and to carry over thoſe Troops to him, that were entirely devoted to his Service. Goring deſir'd the Queen to ſpeak to the King about it, which ſhe did, but Goring afterwards diſcovering the Plot, 'twas all ſpoilt. Motteville adds, the Queen did all ſhe could to ſave Strafford: Not a Day paſs'd over her Head, but ſhe cloſetted the moſt violent of the Faction, whom ſhe ſent for privately by the Back-Stairs into an Apartment near her own, which belong'd to a Lady that was in the Country, where with a Flambeaux in her Hand, without truſting any body with the Secret, ſhe went all alone to meet them in the Night, and offer'd them every Thing ſhe cou'd think of, but all was in vain. A rare Miniſter muſt this Strafford be, who had ſo far gain'd the Affection of a Popiſh bigotted Queen, as to tempt her to lay by her Royalty to ſerve him.

The Queen, her Mother, had been here about three Years, and given ſo much Encouragement to Roſetti, the Pope's Agent, that the Parliament took Notice of it: The Multitude alſo threatned her Houſe while the Agent was ſhelter'd there. The King, who had other Occaſions enough for Ship-Money, allow'd her near 40000 Pounds a Year, when France wou'd not allow her a Livre. However, the Archdeacon is very well pleas'd with the Company of this illuſtrious Lady, but the Houſe of Commons pray'd the Lords humbly to beſeech the King that ſhe might depart the Kingdom. There ſeem'd to be a ſtrange Infatuation in the Conduct of this Court, who ſuffer'd that Lady to ſtay till the People bad her be gone. The Reaſons they gave for it were, Ill Inſtruments about her: The flowing of Prieſts and Papiſts to her Houſe: The Uſe and Practice of the Idolatry of the Maſs. To quicken her Journey, the Parliament not only order'd 10000 Pounds for it, but gave Intimation that it ſhou'd be follow'd by more, when ſhe was out of England. I have touch'd on this Queen's Reſidence here elſewhere, and the 10000 Pounds ſhe had of Mr. Capell's Money for his being made a Lord. Cardinal Richlieu's Hatred to this Princeſs, purſu'd her implacably whereever ſhe went: He envy'd her the Air ſhe breath'd, and the Food ſhe eat; and her Royal Entertainment in England, made him an Enemy to the Court that entertain'd her. He was not ignorant of the King and Queen's good Intentions to aſſiſt her againſt him, when it was in their Power, and he let no Opportunity ſlip of giving them Trouble. King Charles, in his Letter to the Queen of the 13th of March, 164⅝, writes, If this Rebellion had not begun to oppreſs me when it did, a late great Queen had ended more glorious than ſhe did not many Months after at Cologne, where ſhe had hardly any Thing to ſubſiſt her but what was given her by the Parliament.

A.D. 1641. Queen Mother.

On the 13th of May the King came to the Houſe of Lords, and gave the Royal Aſſent to the Act for the Remainder of the ſix Subſidies, for which Commiſſioners both Lords and Commons had been appointed in the Bill; and the Earl of Briſtol being one of them, the Parliament were ſo ſenſible of his deſerting their Cauſe, and of his approving the Treachery of his Son, the Lord Digby, that they order'd his Name to be ſtruck out, and put the Earl of Stamford in its Place. When there are ſo many Affairs tranſacting at once, it is impoſſible to obſerve the Order of Time exactly, and not break the Thread of the Hiſtory. Subſidies.

There was all this while a Bill moving in the Houſe of Commons, for taking away Biſhops Votes in Parliament. The Reaſons in the Archdeacon's Account of it are mutilated, and miſrepreſented. He aſſerts that the main Reaſon was to get rid of the Scots, who declar'd they wou'd not ſtir till that Bill paſs'd: The Lords ſcrupling to paſs the Bill as the Commons had drawn it, there was a Conference between the two Houſes; and the Commons Reaſons were, 1. Becauſe it is a great Hindrance to their Miniſterial Function. 2. Becauſe they do vow and undertake at their Ordination, when they enter into holy Orders, that they will give themſelves wholly to that Vocation. 3. Becauſe Councils and Canons in ſeveral Ages do forbid them to meddle with ſecular Affairs. 4. Becauſe the twenty-four Biſhops have Dependance on the two Archbiſhops, and take their Oath of Canonical Obedience unto them. 5. Becauſe they are but for their Lives, and therefore are not fit to have Legiſlative Power over the Honours, Inheritances, Perſons and Liberties of others. 6. Becauſe of Biſhops Dependancy and Expectancy of Tranſlation to Places of greater Profit. 7. Becauſe ſeveral Biſhops have of late much encroach'd upon the Conſciences and Liberties of the Subjects, and they and their Succeſſors will be much encou- Biſhops. Commons Reaſons againſt them.

A.D.1641. encourag'd ſtill to encroach. After the Biſhops then in being, came Sheldon, Morley, Coſins, Stern, Henchman, Gunning, Hyde, Ward, Sparrow, Mew, Blandford, Glemham, Parker, Lake, Ken, &c. 8. Becauſe the whole Number of them are intereſted to maintain the Juriſdiction of the Biſhops, which hath been found ſo grievous to the three Kingdoms, that Scotland hath utterly aboliſh'd it. 9. Becauſe Biſhops being Lords of Parliament, it ſettles too great a Diſtance between them and the reſt of their Brethren in the Miniſtry, which occaſions Pride in them, Diſcontent in others, and Diſquiet in the Church: And as to their having had Votes a long Time, the Anſwer is, If it be inconvenient, Times and Uſages are not to be conſider'd with Law-Makers; ſome Abbots voted as anciently in Parliament as Biſhops. Dr. Williams, now made Archbiſhop of York, attempted to anſwer theſe Reaſons in a Pamphlet, intituled, The Abſtract: To which preſently came forth a Reply. And it were to be wiſh'd Mr. Archdeacon had anſwer'd them in his Hiſtory, inſtead of telling us the Lords declaim'd againſt the Houſe of Commons for meddling with an Affair that concern'd themſelves; and made uſe of this moſt convincing Argument, If they bring up this Bill one Day to take away the BISHOPS, they may bring another the next Day to take away the DUKES; becauſe the Dukes and the Biſhops have the ſame holy Vocation: And all the Reaſons given by the Parliament make againſt the Dukes, as much as againſt the Biſhops. This is ſome of the ſtrongeſt Arguments in their Hiſtories. Sir Simon d'Ewes, the famous Antiquary, inform'd the Houſe, that in the ancient Manuſcript Copy of the Greek Bible, in St. James's Library, the Epiſtles run thus, The firſt to Timothy, written from Laodicea; to Titus, written from Nicopolis; whence he inferr'd, that the ſtiling of Timothy to be the firſt Biſhop of Epheſus, and Titus the firſt Biſhop of Crete, were the ſpurious Additions of ſome Eaſtern Biſhops or Monks, at leaſt 500 Years after Chriſt. Mr. Edward Hyde was Chairman of the Bill concerning Biſhops, and according to his own impartial Hiſtory, he behav'd ſo dexterouſly, that he puzzled all their Enemies. The Reverend Hiſtorian vouches for the Truth of it; but there is not the leaſt Appearance of it in Whitlock, or Ruſhworth, or indeed in Fact or Probability. Whitlocke writes, there were not many very eager for the Biſhops: Deans and Chapters, were brought into the Bill afterwards, and Mr. Thomas made an elegant Speech againſt that Inſtitution; as did alſo Mr. Pury, Citizen for Glouceſter, in which he ſaid, Seeing therefore the ſaid Deans and Chapters are but Truſtees, and the Profits of the Lands ſo ill employ'd by them, contrary to the Truſt in them repos'd, I am clearly of Opinion, that by a Legiſlative Power in Parliament, it is fit to take them away, and to put them into the Hands of Feoffees, to be diſpos'd of to ſuch pious Uſes as they were firſt intended for. The next Speech upon this Bill was Sir Edward Deering's, and the whole Story of it in Echard is an incredible Piece of Secret Hiſtory, with ſome other Infirmities. The Addition he offer'd to the Bill, was the very ſame Propoſition which Mr. Pury had made for putting Church Lands into the Hands of Commiſſioners. Sir Edward Deering, among many other Things, ſaid, I am for aboliſhing our preſent Epiſcopacy, both Dioceſes and Dioceſans, as they now are: But I am withal at the ſame Time for Reſtoration of the pure primitive Epiſcopal Preſidency. Cut off the uſurp'd Adjuncts of our preſent Epiſcopacy, reduce the ancient Epiſcopacy, ſuch as it was in puris Spiritualibus. And becauſe he does not allow the Prelacy of Laud to be pure primitive Epiſcopacy, which the Archdeacon poſitively avers, therefore is Sir Edward a Madman and an Ideot. Indeed Archbiſhop Uſher was not of his Opinion, as to the Laudean Hierarchy, Whitlocke informs us, "that he offer'd an Expedient for Con- A.D.1641.
"junction in Point of Diſcipline, that Epiſcopal
"and Presbyterial Government might not be at a "far Diſtance, but reducing Epiſcopacy to the "Form of Synodical Government in the ancient
"Church." So that according to the moſt Reverend Father, Archbiſhop Uſher, Laud's Church was not the ancient Church, which is what I have all along been contending for, and no more. Ever ſince I was capable of knowing what was the Meaning of the Words Biſhops and Presbyters, the Church of England has been bleſs'd with ſo many holy, wiſe, and learned Fathers, that all the Arguments made uſe of in theſe Times againſt Biſhops, have no manner of Relation to them. If our Church had always been ſo bleſs'd, the ſacred Function wou'd have always met with the Reveſence that is due to it: But the Laudean Prelates ſetting their Hearts entirely on the Things of this World, on Power, Wealth and Dignity, gave general Offence to all ſincere Chriſtians, and the holy Order it ſelf was affected by the Pride and Weakneſs of the Men.

Tonnage and Poundage.

The Act for Tonnage and Poundage has been ſufficiently ſpoken of already; and there is hardly a Man of common Senſe in the Kingdom, who does not know that any Revenue which the Crown holds by the Gift of the People, cannot be legally levy'd, till it is given; Yet now the Parliament paſt an Act for levying it, the Reverend Hiſtorian is very angry, that in the Preamble of that Act, the King is made to grant what no King ever deny'd, that the Crown had no Right to take a Gift before it was given. By which, ſays this judicious Writer, He was ſtript of all he had left. This Act was to be in Force two Months only, while a new Book of Rates was making; and then another Act was to be paſs'd for levying it, during the Life of the King, as uſual, if no ill Meaſures interven'd to obſtruct it.

Star-Chamber, High-Commiſſion aboliſh'd.

When thoſe two monſtrous Courts, the Star-Chamber and High-Commiſſion was aboliſh'd by Parliament, the excellent Hiſtorian laſt mention'd, laments the Loſs of them, as the Bulwarks of the Peoples Liberties, Spiritual and Temporal. He ſays in ſo many Words, the Star-Chamber was a Bulwark for the Liberties of the Subject, that it was haſtily deſtroy'd, and after an unprecedented Manner, an Act of Parliament. We have ſhewn in the preceding Pages, what a rare Defence this was of the Peoples Rights and Liberties; and it is farther explain'd by a Speech of the Lord Andover in the Houſe of Peers before-mention'd, The very Words of the Statute for it ſhew, that it was a needleſs Inſtitution; they who are to judge, can proceed with no Delinquent otherwiſe, than as if he were convicted of the ſame Crime by due Proceſs of Law: And do your Lordſhips hold this a rational Court, that ſends us to the Law, and calls us to the Law, and calls us back from it again? ſuch a Confuſion as cou'd not but be pleaſing to ſo clear a Head as that of the Hiſtorian. It is unneceſſary to add more of the Lord Andover's Arguments, when the plain Fact prov'd the Court to have deſerv'd eternal Infamy for its Tyranny and Cruelty. The High-Commiſſion Court never had a Word ſaid for it, by Men of Capacity and Conſcience. Mr. Archdeacon begins this Matter with a flagrant piece of Sophiſtry; He ſays, Queen Elizabeth eſtabliſh'd it againſt Popery and Schiſm, but he ſinks there being no temporal Penalties in the Statute. Dr. Fuller informs us, It was againſt Magna Charta, no Man being to be condemn'd to the loſs of Liberty or Property, but by the lawful Judgment of his Peers. This Court tender'd an Oath to ſuch as they ſuſpected, obliging the Party to diſcover what might be Penal to himſelf, which was conceiv'd to be unjuſt; and ſo deteſtably unjuſt, that it is aſtoniſhing to ſee Miniſters of the Goſpel concerning themſelves in ſuch wicked Work; and moſt of the Judges were of that

A.D.1641. that Function in the higheſt Order. I need not repeat more of Dr. Fuller's Arguments againſt this Commiſſion, nor any of the pretended Anſwers, except the chief of them, which is in Echard: That theſe Judges puniſh'd Fornication and Profaneneſs; whereas the quite contrary is ſo very true, that they puniſh'd thoſe who wou'd not be profane, if Sabbath-breaking may be reckon'd Profanation: He declaims again, theſe two Courts might have been of excellent Uſe to the Church and the State: So excellent the Uſe of them, that the Grievances occaſion'd by them were ſome of thoſe that contributed principally to the Deſtruction of both. Before the King paſs'd theſe two Acts, he gave the Royal Aſſent to the Poll-Tax; A Gift, ſays the Speaker, of ſo vaſt Extent, that Time cannot parallel it by any Example; however, his Majeſty wou'd not paſs the two other Bills at the ſame Time; they being all three offer'd together; which gave ſo great Diſguſt to the Parliament, that the King came four Days after and paſs'd them; but this ungenerous manner of doing Things, took off much of the Merit of it.

Father Philips and Roſetti.

The Inſolence of the Popiſh Prieſts was grown to ſuch a Height, that one of them, Father Philips, belonging to the Queen, having been found guilty of holding treaſonable Correſpondence with his Brethren abroad for advancing the Popiſh Cauſe, the Houſe of Commons ſent for him, and he told the Meſſenger, The Queen had order'd him not to go till he had ſpoken with the King, and he wou'd obey her Commands before thoſe of the Parliament; upon which they ſent a Warrant to apprehend him as a Delinquent, and another to ſeize Count Roſetti. The latter made his Eſcape, but Philips at laſt appear'd at the Bar of the Houſe, and after Examination was impeach'd, For the damnable Doctrine which he and other Jeſuits hath taught, which hath been the Cauſe of the Civil Wars like to befall theſe Kingdoms, if God in his Mercy does not prevent, according to the third Article of the Impeachment. His Majeſty in the Cloſe of his Speech on paſſing the two laſt Bills, ſaid, I have one Word more to ſpeak unto you; it is concerning my Nephew the Prince Elector Palatine, who having deſir'd me and the King of Denmark, to give Conſent to a Writing concerning the Diet at Ratisbon with the Emperor, I cou'd not but ſend my Ambaſſador to aſſiſt him, though I am afraid I ſhall not have ſo good an Anſwer as I expect; which my Nephew foreſeeing, hath deſired me for the better Countenance of the ſame, to make a Manifeſto in my Name, about which I deſire your Advice; and the Houſe gave it very chearfully, and voted to give his Majeſty the neceſſary Aſſiſtance if the Manifeſto did not ſucceed, in which the Houſe of Lords alſo concur'd; another Proof how much all good Engliſhmen and good Proteſtants had at Heart the Intereſts of the Palatine Houſe. The Speeches as well as the Prayers for them came from the Puritans; we find them never mention'd by the Laudæans, unleſs with Marks of Hatred or Neglect. Mr. Hollis in his Speech to the Lords, ſaid, The Houſe of Commons look on thoſe diſtreſs'd Princes with an Eye of Tenderneſs, wiſhing that every Drop of that Princely Blood, may ever be illuſtrated with Honour and Happineſs. Laud, on the contrary, ſtruck them out of the Prayers of the Church.

With what Pleaſure muſt every good Engliſhman obſerve, that the Hearts of their Anceſtors were bound up in Intereſts of the Queen of Bohemia and her Poſterity; and with what Indignation read that there was at any Time a Set of Men ſo wicked as to refuſe them their Prayers?

Judges impeach'd.

The Judges had hitherto lain under parliamentary Cenſures only, but now ſix of them, Brampſton, Berkley, Crawley, Davenport, Trevor, and Weſton, were impeach'd at the Lord's Bar: Berkley by William Pierpoint Eſq; ſecond Son to the Earl of Kingſton, Crawley by Mr. Waller, Davenport by Mr. Hyde. Mr. Hollis made a Speech in Praiſe of Sir Randal Crew, who was remov'd from the Chief-Juſticeſhip of the King's-Bench, for refuſing to join in the odious and illegal Impoſition of Ship-Money.

Images.

There being ſtill many Remains of Romiſh Idolatry in Churches and publick Places, the Houſe of Commons order'd, all ſcandalous Pictures, Croſſes, and Figures to be remov'd; to pleaſe the Preſbyterians, ſays Echard, very unfairly; becauſe a very great Majority of the Reform'd Church of England were as much pleas'd with it as the Preſbyterians. Sir Robert Harley Anceſtor to another Presbyterian of that Name in our Time, was appointed for this Work, Whitlocke tells us he perform'd it zealouſly; and his Succeſſor and Nameſake ſided afterwards with thoſe who were for ſetting them up again.

Sir Robert Harley.

King's Journey to Scotland.

The Pacification with the Scots, which had continu'd all this while in Treaty, being now in great Forwardneſs, and Money given for disbanding the two Armies, the King nam'd the Earl of Holland General of the Engliſh, and he went to the Army to do that Service. Then his Majeſty ſent a Meſſage to the Parliament to notify his intended Journey to Scotland in fourteen Days from the 28th of July, which was not well lik'd; and in the Interim they receiv'd Information from the Earl of Holland, that he found the Army had been tamper'd with, from what Sir Jacob Aſhley own'd to him. The Parliament, as they had Reaſon, ſuſpecting this Journey, was the more jealous of the King's frequent preſſing to have the Scots Army disbanded before he began it, and his own Army paid. The Houſe took the former into Conſideration, till Mr. Strode roſe up and ſaid, Mr. Speaker, We ought not in ſuch Haſte to part with the Scotch Army, leſt the Sons of Zerviah in their Abſence be too hard for us; upon which it was reſolv'd, not to disband the one without the other.

Queen's Journey to the Spaw.

The Commons being inform'd that the Queen intended to go to the Spaw for Recovery of her Health, much impair'd by ſome Diſcontents of Mind, and falſe Rumours ſpread againſt her; they had a Conference with the Lords about it, and Reaſons were then agreed upon to be preſented to his Majeſty for Stay of the Queen's Journey; in which they offer'd to do any thing which cou'd be reaſonably deſir'd for the Eaſe of her Majeſty's Mind; and the Queen putting off her Journey, they gave her Majeſty Thanks for it in very reſpectful Terms.

Put off.

Biſhop Wren impeach'd.

The Impeachment againſt Wren Biſhop of Ely, was carry'd up to the Lords by Sir Thomas Widdrington. The Preamble of which ſhews us the true Spirit of the Laudæan Prelates and Clergy, the Source of the Miſchiefs of theſe perilous Times: "The ſaid Matthew Wren being popiſhly and ſu-
" perſtitiouſly affected, did at his firſt coming to " be Biſhop of Norwich, endeavour by ſundry
" Ways and Means to ſuppreſs the powerful and " painful preaching of the Word of God, did in" troduce divers Orders and Injunctions tending
" to Superſtition and Idolatry, did diſturb and diſ-
" quiet

*A.D.*1641. " quiet the orderly and ſettled State of the Mini-
" ſters, People, and Churches of that Dioceſe, to " the great Prejudice of his Majeſty, the great
" Grief, Diſquiet, and Hazard of the Eſtates,
" Conſciences, and Lives of many of his Maje-
" ſty's loyal Subjects there, to the manifeſt bring" ing in and increaſing of Prophaneneſs, Ignorance,
" and Diſobedience." Then follow particular Inſtances of his tyrannical idolatrous Practices; he puniſh'd one Mr. Daniel Whayman for coming within the Rail of a Communion-Table; he excommunicated Mr. John Shyming, Mr. Samuel Dunckon, Mr. Edmund Day, Mr. John Frowar, and others, for not kneeling at the Sacrament; he ſuſpended Mr. William Leigh, Mr. Richard Proud, Mr. Matthew Brownrigg, Mr. Mott, and ſeveral others, for not reading the wicked Book of Sports on the Lord's-Day. Mr. Powell, Mr. Richard Raymund, Mr. Jeremy Burroughs, he forbad preaching Preparation-Sermons; he excommunicated and ſuſpended Mr. John Carter, Mr. Robert Peck, Mr. Thomas Scot, Mr. William Green, Mr. Greenhill, Mr. Nicholas Beard, Mr. Robert Weſt, Mr. Thomas Allen, and above fifty more Divines for the like Pretences: He drove Mr. Edmund Calamy and Mr. Broom out of his Dioceſe. In a word, he ruin'd the Manufacturers and Manufactures at Norwich and other trading Towns, by forcing the Miniſters to quit their Habitations, and their Flocks ſoon follow'd them.

King's Journey to Scotland.

The Houſe of Commons deſir'd a Conference with the Lords about the King's Journey to Scotland, and it was reſolv'd to petition his Majeſty to appoint a Cuſtos Regni in his Abſence, with Power to paſs Bills; but, ſays Echard, if he had left any ſuch Power, it had been illegal; which is ſo contrary to Fact, that the granting Power by Commiſſion to Lords to paſs Bills, was of no longer Date than the Attainder of the Earl of Strafford; and the King did now actually ſign a Commiſſion for paſſing Bills in his Abſence; the Commiſſioners being the Lord-Keeper Littleton, the Earl of Manchester, the Earl of Lindſey, the Marquis of Hertford, the Earl of Bath, the Earl of Dorſet, and the Earl of Eſſex, who was alſo made General of all the Forces on this Side Trent, with Power to raiſe Soldiers. His Lordſhip was about the ſame Time ſworn Lord-Chamberlain, and Sir Peter Walſh Comptroller of the Houſhold, in the room of Sir Thomas Jermyn.

Earl of Eſſex made General by the King.

Acts paſt.

The Act of Pacification with the Scots, being ready for the royal Aſſent, the King came to the Houſe, and paſs'd it the 10th of Auguſt, as alſo the Act about Knighthood, that for regulating the Clerks of the Markets, that againſt monopolizing Salt Petre and Gunpowder, againſt the Oppreſſions in the Stannery Court, and an Act declaring Ship-Money unlawful. Then his Majeſty made a ſhort Speech, deſiring the Care of the Parliament in his Abſence to preſerve the Kingdom's Peace, and took his leave of them. He began his Journey two or three Hours after, having in his Coach with him the Elector Palatine, the Duke of Richmond, and the Marquis of Hamilton. The two Houſes appointed Commiſſioners to attend the King in Scotland, William Earl of Bedford, Edward Lord Howard, Nathaniel Fiennes Eſq; Sir William Armyne, Sir Philip Stapleton, and John Hampden Eſq; The Parliament ſent a Draught of their Commiſſion to the King to ſign; it impower'd them to treat with Scots Commiſſioners according to the Inſtructions they receiv'd from the Two Houſes with the King's Conſent, but his Majeſty wou'd not ſign it; and indeed he look'd on thoſe Commiſſioners as no better than Spies upon his Actions; which the Parliament thought convenient, conſidering he took that Journey contrary to their Advice, and therefore they were jealous that it might be contrary to their Intereſt. The King's Earneſtneſs to go to Scotland, where thoſe whom he look'd upon as his Enemies, and whom he lately had proclaim'd Rebels were Maſters, was really very unaccountable, unleſs he was upon a hot Scent of the Intelligence between the Heads of the Puritan Party and the Scots, which is very probable. Wentworth had got Intimation of it in general while he was at the Army, and thought he had learn'd Matter enough againſt Mr. Pym and ſome others to form an Impeachment, which the King and he were very intent upon; but Pym was before-hand with him, as has been related. His Majeſty cou'd not forgive Mr. Pym the Proſecution of Strafford, which had oblig'd him to conſent to the Death of a Man contrary to his Promiſe; the reverend Hiſtorian wou'd have ſaid contrary to his Conſcience, as every thing ought to be that is contrary to one's Word and Honour. We have Reaſon to believe that the King was in Hopes of being fully inform'd of that Intelligence by ſome falſe Brethren among the Scots, ſuch as Montroſs, and Lord Saville, doubtleſs gave him the neceſſary Informations of Perſons and Things for that Purpoſe. The Effect of it was, that at his Return he had Articles of High-Treaſon ready againſt the Lord Kimbolton and five Members of the Houſe of Commons, and was reſolv'd to have them proſecuted to Death, as will be ſeen hereafter. Thus there ſeem'd to be a Fatality in this Scottiſh Journey, as well as in almoſt all the ill Steps taken by this ill-adviſ'd and unhappy Prince. *A.D.*1641.

Act of Pacification with the Scots.

We have ſaid little of the Act of Pacification with the Scots, becauſe we intended to ſpeak of it by itſelf, that the Thread of the Treaty might not be broken. On the 23d of November the King granted a Commiſſion to the Lords already mention'd, to treat and conclude a Pacification with the Scots Commiſſioners, to whom the Committees of that Kingdom had given the like Power by their Commiſſion, dated the 31ſt of October, and 4th of November, and ſign'd Rothes, Montroſs, Caſſelis, Lothian, Lindeſay, Balmerino, Naper, Burghly, Eſ. Couper, Thomas Hop, William Riccarton, Home, W. Caprinton, J. Gartgrith, Dundas, Edward Edgar, Richard Maxwell, James Scot, Southerfield, William Hamilton, Maſter W. Moir, Ja. Sword, Hew Kennedy, Rutherford.

The firſt Article of the Treaty was, that the Acts of the Scots Parliament which the High-Commiſſioner had not paſs'd, ſhou'd be confirmed, leaving out ſome Words in the Preamble and Concluſion which reflected on his Majeſty's Authority, and related not to the Subſtance of the Acts.

2. The Caſtle of Edinburgh, and other Strengths of the Kingdom, to be furniſh'd for the Defence of the ſame.

3. The Scots in Scotland not to be cenſur'd for ſubſcribing the Covenant, nor preſs'd with Oaths and Subſcriptions contrary to it.

4. The Authors and Cauſers of the late Troubles to be cenſur'd and ſentenc'd by Parliament.

5. All Ships and Goods to be reſtor'd, and Damages made good on both Sides.

6. The great Expence of the Scots to be paid, and their Loſſes ſatisfy'd,

For which the Parliament gave 300000 Pounds, and appointed the following Commiſſioners to receive it and pay them: Earl of Bedford, Earl of Eſſex, Earl of Warwick, Earl of Holland, Earl of Stamford, Lord Wharton, Lord Mandeville, Lord Brook, Mr. Capell, Mr. Martin, Sir Thomas Barrington, Sir Arthur Ingram, Sir Gilbert Gerrard, Sir Robert Pye, Mr. Henry Bellaſis, Sir Walter Erle, Sir William Litton, Sir Henry Mildmay, Sir Thomas Cheek, Sir John Strangeways, Mr. Arthur Goodwin, Mr. Hampden, Alderman Soam, Alderman Pennington. Theſe Commiſſioners for paying the Scots were nam'd about the beginning of February, ſo that Mr. Capell and Sir John Strangeways had till then kept their Integrity, and call'd the Scots their Brethren

A.D.1641. Brethren, as they were term'd in this Act; the Benefit of which was not to extend to John Earl of Traquair, Sir Robert Spotſwood, Sir John Hay, and Maſter Walter Balcanquel, cited and purſu'd as Incendiaries. The Scots were to have Liberty to ſue for Reparation of Loſſes.

The conſtant and friendly Conjunction of the two Kingdom to be firmly obſerv'd and continu'd to all Poſterity; England nor Ireland not to make War on Scotland without the Conſent of the Parliament of England, and ſo vice verſa; all who do ſo to be deem'd Traytors. Commiſſioners of both Kingdoms to be appointed in the Interim between the ſitting of Parliaments to keep the Peace now happily concluded; both Armies to be disbanded when the Act is paſt; the Garriſons of Berwick and Carliſle to be remov'd, &c. The ratifying Clauſe comes laſt, His Majeſty for himſelf and Succeſſors doth promiſe in Verbo Principis, never to come in the contrary of this Statute and Sanction, &c. Like as the Parliaments of both Kingdoms give full Aſſurance to the Obſervance of the whole Articles inviolably, hinc inde, in all Times to come. Theſe Articles and the ratifying Act, were by the King's Command printed at Oxford, upon Advice that the Scots were raiſing an Army to aſſiſt their Brethren in England two Years after, purſuant to this Treaty. What good Effect the printing of it then cou'd produce for the King, is not to be comprehended, it only putting the Scots in mind of doing what by this Treaty they were oblig'd to do againſt all who took Arms againſt the Parliament. But I obſerve King Charles very often printed and publiſh'd Papers with Intent they ſhou'd make for him when they made againſt him.

Parliament. Mr. Echard tells us that the Members of Parliament after the King went for Scotland, grew weary of ſitting, or being afraid of Infection, for this Reign was much viſited with the Plague, left the Town, and there remain'd but twenty Lords and an hundred Commoners, which is falſe as to the Number of Commoners, who taking Advantage of thin Houſes, laid the Liturgy aſide, which was then much reverenc'd throughout the Kingdom, juſt as much as his Hiſtories are at preſent. The much greater Part of the Nation were Puritans, who groan'd under it, and deſir'd to have it aboliſh'd, which is evident from the general Clamour for aboliſhing Epiſcopacy. This pack'd Aſſembly, according to him, voted the taking away the Rails and removing the Communion-Table to the Middle of the Church. What follows proves ſtill farther how he abounded with good Judgment and good Manners: The Lords for the major Part being ſenſibly offended that the Commons ſhou'd preſume to diſturb the Peace of the Church by ſuch unprecedented Inſolence. This Falſity is ſo barefac'd, that the Houſe of Commons complain'd that this major Part of the Houſe of Lords were but eleven to nine. A Majority 'tis true, but one of the eleven had made it none; yet as ſmall as it is, he has not Modeſty enough to reſtrain him from calling the Repreſentative of the People of England INSOLENT, a worſe Name than I durſt venture to give him, if there is not Falſhood with the Inſolence. We have the true Hiſtory in Larrey; "The Parliament who had now ſtruck all the great Strokes "they deſign'd, were apprehenſive of nothing du-"ring the King's Abſence, and thought of giving "themſelves ſome Reſpite after their long and "painful Seſſion; and moſt of the Peers and Com-"mons were glad to return to their Counties to "receive there the Applauſe of the People for the "vigorous Oppoſition they had made to Epiſco-"pacy and arbitrary Power." So very wide from the Truth is what the Author of the HISTORY OF THE REBELLION pretends, and what Echard has ſlaviſhly and blindly follow'd, that thoſe Members who remain'd ſitting were the only vigorous Oppoſers of Epiſcopacy; for thoſe who went into the Country, did it to receive the Applauſe of the People for that vigorous Oppoſition againſt Epiſcopacy; and there was not one Oppoſer of Biſhops who much reverenc'd the Liturgy. The Fact is really the very Reverſe of their Hiſtories: It was the Abſence of a good Number of Lords, which gave the Friends to the Common-Prayer Book an Opportunity of continuing it by a Majority of eleven to nine; the Commons ſaying in their Declaration publiſh'd with the Conſent of the Lords upon it, "The laſt Order of "the Houſe of Lords was made with the Conſent "only of eleven Lords, and that nine other Lords "who were preſent did diſſent from it; ſo that it "may be well hop'd when both Houſes ſhall meet "again, the good Propoſitions and Preparations "in the Houſe of Commons for preventing the "Grievances, and reforming the Diſorders and "Abuſes in Matters of Religion may be brought "to Perfection." The Lords who diſſented were the Lord-Keeper Littleton, Earl of Mancheſter Lord Privy-Seal, Earl of Bedford, Earl of Warwick, Earl of Clare, Lord Mandeville, Lord Newport, Lord Wharton, Lord Hunſdon, who declar'd, They held it fit to have the Conſent of the Houſe of Commons in thoſe Things which ſo nearly concerns the quiet and Government of the Church. The Lords in the very Order for continuing the Service, direct that no Parſons, Vicars, or Curates, preſume to introduce any Rites and Ceremonies which may give Offence. Such were all the Innovations introduc'd by Laud and his Followers, the Rails, the Cringings, the Bowings, which the Commons had voted againſt, and for which Mr. Archdeacon calls the Parliament INSOLENT.

Two Armies. There was a Debate about disbanding the Armies, whether the Engliſh or Scottiſh Armies ſhou'd be firſt disbanded; at laſt it was agreed that it ſhou'd be done at one and the ſame Time, which did not need much debating. Accordingly it was done the 6th of Auguſt, the Scots having receiv'd their firſt Payments, upon which they were to begin their March. After this the Parliament adjourn'd to the 20th of October, having appointed a Committee of fifty to ſit during the Receſs with ample Powers, but not with ſo much Power as their Principals the Parliament itſelf had, which the reverend Hiſtorian avers as poſitively as if it had been true. All the Power they had, was, 1. To meet when they thought fit. 2. To receive and anſwer Letters from their Committee in Scotland. 3. To take Care of the disbanding of the Army, and of paying them. 4. To recall the Scots Committee if they ſee Cauſe. 5. To prepare Matters againſt Delinquents; and three or four other Particulars of leſs Conſequence. The Committee of the Houſe of Commons, were Sir John Colepepyr, Sir John Franklyn, Lord Falkland, Mr. Lawrence Whitaker, Sir Thomas Bowyer, Mr. Wheeler, Sir William Drake, Sir Richard Cave, Sir Gilbert Gerrard, Sir Simon D'Ewes, Sir Robert Pye, Sir Edward Hales, Sir Thomas Dacres, Sir William Litton, Sir Henry Mildmay, Sir Thomas Barrington, Sir John Clotworthy, Sir Peter Wentworth, Sir Gilbert Pickering, Sir Samuel Luke, Sir Henry Vane, Serjeant Wilde, Mr. Pym, Mr. Bridgman, Mr. Goodwin, Mr. Wingate, Alderman Soame, Alderman Pennington, Captain Venn, Mr. Vaſſal, Captain Rainsborough, Mr. Bence, Mr. Holland, Mr. Winwood, Mr. Scawen, Mr. J. Goodwin, Mr. Morley, Mr. Martin, Mr. A. Goodwin, Mr. White, Mr. Glyn, Mr. Bedingfield, Mr. Blakeſton, Mr. Waller, Mr. Sollicitor St. John, Mr. Strode, Mr. Spurſtow. The grand Committee of Commons.

Of Lords. The Houſe of Lords alſo appointed a Committee during the Receſs, who were Lord-Keeper Littleton, Earl of Mancheſter Lord Privy-Seal, Earl of Eſſex Lord-Chamberlain, Earl of Warwick, Earl of Clare, Earl of Denbigh, Earl of Cleveland, whoſe Powers were limited to the three or four firſt Articles of thoſe of the Committee of Commons.

Thankſgiving. About the time of the King's Journey to Scotland, there was a Day of Thankſgiving for the Pa-

A.D.1641. cification with the Scots, appointed by Parliament. Biſhop Williams had prepar'd a Form of Prayer to be us'd at St. Margaret's Weſtminſter, where the Houſe of Commons us'd to go on ſuch Occaſions; but to avoid that Form, they went to Lincoln's-Inn Chapel. A.D.1641.

The Archdeacon gives a Summary of the King's great Conceſſions in paſſing ſeveral Bills before he went to Scotland. He and his fellow Writers always repreſent the redreſſing of Grievances as a Conceſſion from the Crown; as if the ſovereign Power was given to do Hurt, and it was the King's ſuper-abounding Goodneſs only when it did Good. He affirms his Majeſty had now done all his Subjects cou'd deſire for their Security and Welfare: Therefore from this Period of Time, ſays he, impartial Poſterity may beſt judge which Side was moſt blameable in the ſucceeding Tranſactions. The very next Tranſaction of the King's, was his breaking into the Houſe of Commons with an arm'd Power, and invading their Rights in ſuch an enormous Manner, that it caus'd a general Uproar and Mutiny in the City of London: And why may not impartial Poſterity begin their Judgment from that the very next Period, which Side was moſt blameable?

The King's Deſign by his Journey.

I have hinted already that the Journey to Scotland, a Kingdom hated by the King, cou'd not be undertaken ſo haſtily out of a Deſire to ſee the People. The Engliſh Parliament oppos'd it for ſeveral Reaſons urg'd to the Lords by Mr. Hollis; and his Majeſty's being deaf to thoſe Reaſons, muſt proceed from ſome ſecret Deſign, which Mr. Acherley hit on, with this Miſtake only, that he calls the Intelligence an Invitation, whereas the latter was an Impoſture, and the Engliſh Puritans went no farther than Encouragement. "All Things
F. 441. "being now quieted, ſays the learned Lawyer, the "King in Execution of Part of the Deſign, re- "ſolv'd in July 1641, to make a Tour into Scot- "land to ſettle, as was given out, Affairs in that "Kingdom, but in Reality to accompliſh ſome "Undertakings that were not publickly own'd; "which Reſolution alarm'd the leading Inviters "at Weſtminſter, who cou'd not imagine what "ſhou'd be the Meaning of that Journey by the "King, who had ſo lately within nine Months "arraign'd and pronounc'd the Scots to be noto- "rious Rebels, and had with Vehemence preſs'd "the chaſing them as ſuch out of England. The "Inviters therefore ſuſpecting the Deſign, ſpar'd "no Endeavours, nor Inſinuations, nor even par- "liamentary Addreſſes, but in vain, to prevent "the Journey. However, they procur'd a Com- "mittee of Parliament to be ſent to take Care that "Lord Wariſton ſhou'd keep ſtable, and never part "with the Original Invitation. Mr. Acherly means "the Letters before inſerted. The King and his "Miniſters being at Edinburgh, diſcover'd that "many who were now the leading Men in both "Houſes of the Engliſh Parliament, ſollicited the "Scots to invade England, and found ample Evi- "dence to prove the Facts. The King cou'd "prevail no farther with Wariſtoun than to make "ſome faint Promiſes to bring the original En- "gagement into England." The Lord Wariſtoun knew by this Time the whole Secret of the Letters, and was ſo deep in the Correſpondence with thoſe leading Men, that he cou'd not have brought them on the Stage without bringing himſelf: For notwithſtanding the Act of Oblivion, the Court wou'd have found Means to have made away with him under Colour of Juſtice, as they did afterwards. The Names of the ſeven Lords to the forg'd Letter were, as I have hinted already, cut out, and each Name deliver'd to the Lord to whom it belong'd: But Saville pretended to the King that their Names were genuine, and wou'd have excited him to try them upon it for High-Treaſon, if that counterfeit Original had been produc'd. Acherley proceeds; A.D.1641. "Thoſe Meaſures were for a long time kept in "Obſcurity, and the obſtinate Proſecution of the "Invitation, may be accounted the very true tho' "hidden Spring and Ground of all the Wars and "Troubles that enſu'd, He ſays elſewhere, The "Queen, whoſe Power with the King was abſo- "lute, incens'd him at his own Conceſſions;" and the Cabinet-Council reſolv'd, as Father Orleans confeſſes, That ſince his Majeſty cou'd not be beloved, he ſhou'd put himſelf into a Condition to be fear'd. A Prince in ſuch Circumſtances is in the worſt Condition in the World, and has no great Reaſon to deſire to live in it longer. The Queen and theſe evil Cabinet-Counſellors, inceſſantly ſollicited the King to proſecute thoſe Members of both Houſes who had correſponded with the Scots to draw them into England; and as ſoon as he return'd from Scotland, they put him upon that irrecoverable Step the violent Entry into the Houſe of Commons. The Scots were not only forgiven the Invaſion they made upon England, but the Invaders were rewarded with Poſts and Honours: Of Courſe there remain'd no Guilt in that Invaſion, thoſe that acted having been more criminal than thoſe that counſell'd; common Policy therefore would have pardon'd the leſs criminal as well as the greater, and not have puſh'd his Majeſty's Reſentments againſt them ſo far, as in the Purſuit of them, according to Acherley, to cover the three Nations with Calamities dreadful and amazing. And now let impartial Poſterity judge again on whoſe Side the Blame lies.

While his Majeſty was at Edinburgh careſſing Reybold. the Scots, he ſifted them to ſee whether he cou'd not prevail with them to invade England on his Account, and aſſiſt him to ſubject the Parliament to his Will. He offer'd them the three Northern Counties as a Reward for that Service; he cajol'd them in the higheſt Degree; but all his good Words and fair Promiſes ſucceeded not, the Scots being ſenſible that after the Engliſh had loſt their Liberty, they ſhou'd not be long in Poſſeſſion of theirs.

The King had not been many Weeks in Scotland, before News came to London of a Conſpiracy at Edinburgh to murder the Marquis of Hamilton and the Earl of Argyle. Lord Clarendon Vol. I.298. confeſſes it was a true Plot, but Echard ſays of it as he ſaid of Goring's Conſpiracy, it was only a pretended one. The Truth is, Montroſs himſelf offer'd to get thoſe two Lords aſſaſſinated; and as Acherley adds, no doubt Wariſton was to have kept them Company. This every one concluded Montroſs dar'd not do, if he had not known that the Mind of the Government labour'd with Revenge. This Rumour ſufficiently alarm'd the Inviters at Weſtminſter, who had good Reaſon to take the Alarm, if they believ'd that bloody Propoſal to cut the Throats of thoſe two great Lords cou'd be received, and the Propoſer come off with Impunity. Mr. Pym Chairman of the Grand Committee during the Receſs, having Information of it, wrote to the Lord-Mayor to place convenient Guards in ſeveral Parts of the City, and propos'd to the Committee that a ſtrong Guard might be kept in the Cities of London and Weſtminſter; which was agreed to by the Committees of both Houſes, and Letters written to their Committees in Scotland to inform his Majeſty of it. The Train'd-Bands of Weſtminſter attended in Arms in the Palace-Yard, and the Lord-General the Earl of Eſſex appointed an hundred of them to do Duty by Day and by Night; tho', ſays Echard, the Plot was only a Matter of Ridicule. It muſt not be in his Hiſtory, where when the Author renders himſelf ridiculous, his Matter is extreamly melancholy. If the Sham had not taken, Mr. Pym and his Committee wou'd have been called to an Account by the Parliament for what they had done againſt the Common-Prayer-Book, the Communion-Table, and the Rails about it, the bowing to the Altar, &c. Plot in Scotland.

A.D.1641. Epiſcopacy aboliſh'd in Scotland.

In Scotland King Charles paſs'd an Act which condemn'd Biſhops as contrary to the Word of God. He alſo gave away the Church-Lands to ſome of the Covenanters. He dignify'd with new Titles the Marquiſs of Hamilton, who was made a Duke, the Earl of Argyle a Marquis, General Leſley Earl of Leven, Lord Lowdon Earl of Lowdon, &c. for which General Leſley cry'd out, according to the ſame ſincere Hiſtorian, May my Hands rot off if ever I act more againſt ſo gude a King; which being ſo agreeable to the Manners of the Scots Presbyterians, cannot but gain due Credit with the Reader. The Scots Parliament proſecuted the Earl of Traquair, the Biſhop of Roſs, and the Earl of Montroſs, for dangerous Practices againſt the Kirk, and gave the King to underſtand that their Lives were ſpar'd purely in Conſideration of the Conceſſions he had made them.

Iriſh Maſſacre.

While the King was at Edinburgh, he receiv'd News of the damnable Rebellion and Maſſacre in Ireland, where the Papiſts roſe upon the Proteſtants on the 23d of October, a Day dedicated to St. Ignatius Loyala, Patron of the Sanguinary Order of Jeſuits: Never was ſuch a dreadful Butchery ſeen or heard of, either as to the Number of thoſe who were Butcher'd, or the Variety of Cruelties inflicted: But though the Execution of this Barbarity is prodigious, yet it is leſs ſurprizing than the miraculous Manner by which Dublin, the Capital City of the Kingdom, was ſav'd; and which afterwards gave the Engliſh an Opportunity to repair this great Loſs, and to chaſtiſe the diabolical Murderers, and re-eſtabliſh their Dominion and Religion. Echard calls this infernal Maſſacre a Concuſſion only; and tells us from an Author, whom he calls ingenuous, and who indeed ſeems to be as ingenuous as himſelf, that thoſe who cut off the Earl of Strafford's Head, were the true Cauſe of the Inſurrection of the Iriſh; the Stupidity and Inſolence of which are equally inconceivable: For if they have any Meaning at all, it muſt be, that if the Earl of Strafford had been alive, he wou'd by his good Government, have kept the Iriſh Quiet: As falſe a Suggeſtion as one can meet with in any Hiſtory but his own. For in Truth there was then a Committee of both Houſes of the Iriſh Parliament ſent over on purpoſe to repreſent the heavy Preſſures the Kingdom of Ireland had for ſome Time ſuffer'd, under the Government of the Earl of Strafford; though the Archdeacon avers with a ſurprizing Confidence, that the taking off Strafford's Head did not a little contribute to the Tragedy. An Italian Papiſt, Gregorio Leti, ſpeaking of this Maſſacre, ſays, as in the French Tranſlation of Cromwell's Life, On n'a jamais bien ſcu, Si le Comte de Strafford, avoit eu part ala Reſolution des Irlandois, mais il y en eut tontes les apparences; "It is not very well known whether the Earl of "Strafford was concern'd with the Iriſh in this "Conſpiracy, but it is very likely that he was." I have as little Faith in Leti, as I have in Echard, but the former, in my Opinion, is more credible then the latter; who relates the Cauſes the Iriſh pretended for their Rebellion, which Cauſes are all groundleſs; but he muſt ſay ſomething to extenuate their Crime; he ſays, they were ſeldom treated as freeborn Subjects. Sir John Temple, a Privy-Counſellor in Ireland, aſſures us, The Lords Juſtices did gently unbend themſelves into a happy and juſt Compliance with the reaſonable Deſires of the People. Echard again, They were provok'd by a Saying of one of the Leaders of the Houſe of Commons, that they ſhould be converted with the Sword. Sir John Temple, Their religious Rites and Ceremonies were freely enjoy'd without any manner of Diſturbance. And to load the Presbyterians with the Guilt of ſo much Proteſtant innocent Blood, the Reverend Author inſinuates, the Earl of Argyle, and the Scots Covenanters, were privy to the Conſpiracy, which was general, and had been concerted with ſo much Secrecy, that it was not diſcover'd till the very Time that the Conſpirators were going to put it in Execution. The Diſcovery was made by one Owen O-Conelly, a Servant to Sir John Clotworthy, a Native Iriſhman, yet a Proteſtant. Mac Mahon, a Grandſon of that obſtinate Rebel the Earl of Tyrone, was one of the chief Conſpirators, and it was he who reveal'd the Conſpiracy to Owen O-Conelly, over a Bottle of Wine, at a Tavern in Dublin, the Night before the Caſtle of Dublin was to have been ſeiz'd, the Lords Juſtices murder'd, and the Maſſacre to have commenc'd in the Capital City, where a great Number of the Conſpirators were already arriv'd, to enter upon the intended Tragedy the next Day. Owen O-Conelly ſeemed to approve of the helliſh Deſign, and drank Mac Mahon to a Pitch, to find out the bottom of it, in doing which, he got fudled himſelf; and when he came to give Information of it to Sir William Parſons, one of the Lords Juſtices, he did it with the Diſtraction that accompanies Drunkenneſs, which gave him the leſs Credit with the Lord Juſtice Parſons, who however diſmiſs'd him, with Orders to return to Mac Mahon, and get as much more out of him as he cou'd. The Lord Juſtice immediately took Care for the Safety of the Caſtle, where were Arms for eight or ten Thouſand Men, which was the chief Booty the Conſpirators aim'd at. He alſo order'd the Lord-Mayor of Dublin to double the City Watch, and to ſeize all Strangers, expecting the Return of Owen O-Conelly, who was ſeiz'd by the Watch, and was carrying to Priſon, but reſcu'd by one of the Lord Parſons's Servants, who accidentally came by. Parſons was gone to Sir John Borlace's Houſe, the other Lord Juſtice, where they were attended by Sir Thomas Rotheram, and Sir Robert Meredith, two of the Privy-Council, who took Owen O-Conelly's Examination, containing in Subſtance, that the Lord Macgwire, Colonel Mac Mahon, and a great Number of Papiſts, were then in Dublin, reſolving to take the Caſtle, poſſeſs themſelves of the Magazine there, then to fire the City, and murder all the Proteſtants: That the Iriſh were to riſe at the ſame Time in other Parts of the Knigdom, which nothing cou'd prevent: Mac Mahon ſuſpecting that Owen O-Conelly wou'd make a Diſcovery, reſolv'd to keep him till the Blow was ſtruck, and he was forc'd to leap over a Wall to make his Eſcape. On ſo many Accidents depended the Fate of Ireland; for had Dublin Caſtle and City been taken, it wou'd have been impoſſible to have recover'd that Kingdom without an immenſe Expence of Blood and Treaſure, more than the People of Great Britain could at that Time ſpare. Other Lords of the Council attending the Lords Juſtices, they ſate up all Night in Conſultation. They caus'd Mac Mahon to be ſeiz'd in his Lodgings, as was the Lord Macgwire ſoon after: Hugh Birne, Roger Moore, Colonel Plunket, Captain Fox, and other chief Conſpirators, made their Eſcape; and the next Morning the Lords Juſtices publiſh'd a Proclamation concerning the Diſcovery of the Conſpiracy, and requiring the People to betake themſelves to their Defence. The ſame Night the Lord Blaney arriv'd with the News of the Surprizal of his Houſe, his Wife and Children, by the Rebels of the County of Monaghan. Next Day Sir Arthur Tyringham ſent Advice of the taking of the Newry, which was follow'd with a terrible Account of Burnings, Spoilings, Murders of Men, Women, and Children, in the Province of Ulſter, where the Iriſh firſt roſe. Perſons were continually arriving with freſh Information of Slaughters, Rapes, Robberies, the Detail of which wou'd be too long and too ſhocking. I ſhall content my ſelf with a few Particulars; cutting of Throats, and ſtabbing, were the mildeſt Treatment the Proteſtants met with; ſome had their Eyes pluck'd out, and were

*A.D.*1641. ſeveral Days dying in the moſt exquiſite Torments; ſome were drown'd, ſome burnt, the Murderers forcing the poor harmleſs Creatures to fetch the Straw that was to burn them: ſome periſh'd by Cold, others by Hunger, others by Thirſt, and ſome were bury'd alive; Mothers were hang'd on the Gallows, and their Children about their Necks: There was no Regard to Women great with Child, nor to Children at the Breaſt: And by an Exceſs even of Popiſh Cruelty, at which Nature ſhrinks, one of theſe miſerable Wretches being deliver'd while ſhe was under the Hands of the Tormentor, the Rebels flung the Child to be eaten by a Dog and a Hog, which they brought thither to ſatiate their helliſh Appetite of Blood, and feed their Eyes with the grateful Sight of ſeeing the Newborn Infant thus devour'd. Nay theſe infernal Monſters carry'd their Inhumanity yet further, and oblig'd Fathers and Mothers to murder their own Children, Children their Parents, Husbands their Wives, and Wives their Husbands: Matrons and Maidens were firſt deflour'd, and then butcher'd. When their deviliſh Luſt and Cruelty were thus glutted, they left the naked Carcaſſes in the moſt obſcene Poſtures with the dead Men they had ſlaughter'd, to make Sport, which the Devil himſelf muſt abhor: Theſe were the fine Subjects, with whom a Ceſſation of Arms was made by Command of the King two or three Years after, and ſome of them ſent to England, to act as far as they cou'd the like Tragedies there. In this Maſſacre, which reach'd from one end of Ireland to the other, two hundred Thouſand Proteſtants periſh'd. Echard, who ſpeaks with ſingular Tenderneſs of theſe barbarous Butchers, reduces the Number to 50000; but thoſe who diminiſh the Number moſt, make it amount to 154000.

Letter to Mr. F. Dr. of the Sorbone.

Iriſh Regiſter.

Two Days after the Diſcovery, the Lords Juſtices diſpatch'd Owen O-Conelly, the Diſcoverer, with a Letter to the Earl of Leiceſter, Lord Lieutenant of Ireland, who in Perſon communicated it to the Houſe of Commons, accompany'd with thirteen Lords of the Privy-Council. It is impoſſible to expreſs the Grief, Terror and Indignation, with which both Lords and Commons receiv'd this dreadful News. The firſt and moſt natural Reflection was, that the continu'd Favour to Papiſts during all this Reign, had embolden'd them to take Arms in this dreadful Manner, to eſtabliſh their idolatrous Religion by the Deſtruction of the Proteſtants.

When the Earl of Leiceſter had read the Lords Juſtices Letter, and Owen O-Conelly's Examination, his Lordſhip, and the Lords of the Council withdrew, and the Houſe took the Information they had receiv'd into Debate: Inſtead of imputing this bloody Maſſacre to the Death of the Earl of Strafford, to the Scots Invaſion, or the Earl of Argyle's Contrivances, as the ingenious Echard does with equal Judgment and Probity, let us ſee what the Parliament thought of it. " As ſoon as the Earl " of Leiceſter withdrew, ſays Larrey, the Mem- " bers began to explain themſelves, and ſpake of " the Iriſh Maſſacre as a Conſpiracy of the Pa- " piſts, not only of that Kingdom, but of Eng- " land, excited by the Pope's Nuntio, ſupported " by the Archbiſhop of Canterbury, and the Earl " of Strafford, during the Life of the one, and " the Liberty of the other, and by their Party " ſince the Earl's Death, and the Archbiſhop's " Impriſonment. They added, that all theſe Ene- " mies of the Proteſtant Religion were ſupported " and encourag'd by the Queen, who openly pro- " tected them, and indirectly by the King, who " had too much Complaiſance for the Queen on " that Point, which was but too apparent in my " Lord Strafford's Government of Ireland, during " which Time it could not be doubted the Plot " was concerted: The modeſt Mr. Echard aſſures us, if he had been alive, there had been no Plot at all. " Their Suſpicions went farther, and they *A.D.*1641. " were apprehenſive the Conſpiracy was form'd " againſt the three Kingdoms, and that from Ire- " land they deſign'd to have proceeded to Scot- " land and to England. It was to that End, ſaid " they, the Earl of Strafford's Levies were deſign'd, " as alſo the Proviſions and Ammunition that were " found in the Caſtle of Dublin: So fairly does this Foreigner repreſent it, and ſo wildly does it ſtand in the Hiſtory of the Rebellion, and the Archdeacon's Hiſtory.

What he ſays of the Queen's protecting the Iriſh Papiſts, is confirm'd by Biſhop Burnet. The Earl of Eſſex told the Biſhop, that he had diſcover'd when he was Lord Lieutenant of Ireland, that the " Queen hearken'd to the Propoſitions made by P. 41. " the Iriſh, to take the Government of Ireland in- " to their Hands, which they thought they cou'd " eaſily perform, and then they ſaid, they wou'd " aſſiſt the King to ſubdue the hot Spirits at Weſt- " minſter; with this the Plot of the Inſurrection " began, and all the Iriſh believ'd the Queen en- " courag'd it; but in the firſt Deſign there was no " thought of a Maſſacre; that came in Head as " they were laying the Methods of executing it: " The Prieſts were the chief Men that ſet on the " Iriſh to all the Blood and Cruelty.

As to the King's being indirectly concern'd in V. Crom. the Iriſh Rebellion, it is not only ſaid by Larrey, but by Gregorio Leti, as thus tranſlated out of the Italian, Il eſt certain que le Roy fut coupable indi- P. 269. rectement dans cette occaſion car ſi il n'eut pas donne aux Catholiques un pouvoir ſi ample de s'aſſembler a Kilken, comme ils firent, ce Maſſacre ne ſeroit pas ar- rive, &c. " 'Tis certain the King was indirectly P. 267. " guilty on this Occaſion; for if he had not given " the Catholicks full Power to aſſemble at Kil- " kenny, as they did, the Maſſacre had never hap- " pen'd." He turns it thus, that the Papiſts in Ireland being alarm'd at the Zeal and Proceedings of the Parliament of England, ſent eight Deputies to the King, for Liberty to meet and conſult how to defend themſelves, in caſe the Engliſh Parliament, whom they call'd audacious and inſolent, ſhou'd give them Diſturbance. The King not penetrating into their Deſign, authoriz'd them to meet at Kilkenny, where they conſulted how to eſtabliſh their Religion, and to throw off the Engliſh Yoke. In this Aſſembly, one Peeton, an Iriſh Lawyer, made a Speech, wherein he inſinuated, That the P. 268. Sicilians had no way to deliver themſelves from the French Servitude, but by maſſacring them, as they did in the famous Sicilian Veſpers; and if they wou'd deliver themſelves from the Engliſh who were in Ireland, it muſt be the ſame Way: Upon which Leti, Ib. they enter'd into a Combination, and mutual Engagement by Oath, and as the Italian Papiſt ſays, were guilty of one of the moſt horrible Maſſacres that was ever heard of among Chriſtians. War- wick aſſures us, the Parliament was not diſpleas'd P. 200. when they heard of the Iriſh Rebellion: General Ludlow, The News of this Rebellion was not diſ- P. 17. pleaſing to the King, as I have heard from Perſons of undoubted Credit, though it was attended with the Maſſacre of many thouſand Proteſtants.

I don't think the King gave the Iriſh a formal Commiſſion to fall upon his Proteſtant Subjects in Ireland; but as much as I have ſaid of it, I do believe; and that the Queen's protecting, and his indulging them, gave them that Spirit, of which they made this damnable Uſe. Certain it is, the Iriſh gave out they had his Commiſſion. Having before me Manuſcript Memoirs of the Life of the Lord Broghil, written from his Lordſhip's own Information by his Chaplain, Mr. Thomas Morris, Vicar of Harpford in Devon, I ſhall tranſcribe what relates to this Rebellion.

" His Lordſhip arriv'd in Ireland the very Day " the Rebellion broke out; but it was not known " then in Munſter that the Iriſh were in Arms. He " landed

Vol. II. P. 113.

A.D.1641 " landed ſafely with his Lady, and came to Lyſ-
" more, his Father the Earl of Corke's chief Seat.
" Two or three Days after, the Earl of Corke and
" the Lord Broghil, went to dine with the Earl of " Barrymore at Caſtle-Lyons, where when they " came, they met with the Lord Muskerry, and " other Iriſh Papiſts, with whom they were very " free and familiar; but it happen'd that while they " were at Dinner, a Gentleman brought Letters
" to the Earl of Corke, and a Meſſage, the Hor" ror of which appear'd in his Looks, containing " part of the Story of the Iriſh Maſſacre, as is " before related; adding, that the Iriſh were Ma-
" ſters of almoſt all Leinſter, inſomuch that he was
" forc'd to take the moſt private ways to come to " him, which had made him ſo long on his Jour" ney. In the Packet of Letters was the Lords
" Juſtices Proclamation, which having read, the " Earl of Corke call'd the Lord Muskerry to him,
" and told him what he had heard and read; Muſ-
" kerry laugh'd at it, and ſaid, 'twas only ſome
" few Malecontents in the North who were riſen,
" and he cou'd not believe the Iriſh wou'd gene" rally riſe. The Lord Corke ſeeing the other make
" ſo light of it, acquainted all the Company with " the Information he had receiv'd, and call'd the " Gentleman who brought the News to confirm
" it: This Gentleman addreſſing himſelf to the " Lord Muskerry, ſaid, You are ſuſpected to know it
" well enough; Muskerry poſitively deny'd it, and
" laugh'd again: But the Engliſh Gentlemen made
" haſte home to ſtand on their Defence. The " Earl of Corke ſent immediately to Sir William
" St. Leger, Preſident of Munſter, to give him the " ſame Information he had receiv'd. Muskerry
" told every one he met that there was nothing
" in it, and a few Days after appear'd himſelf in " Arms at the Head of four or 5000 Iriſh Pa-
" piſts, who committed the like Acts of Cruelty
" and Rapine. The Earl of Corke ſummon'd in " all his Tenants, who with ſome Voluntiers form'd
" ſeveral Companies of Foot, and a Body of " Horſe, commanded by the Lord Broghil, his " Son, who join'd the Lord Preſident St. Leger,
" and march'd againſt the Rebel Muskerry, who " had then about 3000 Men with him marching
" towards Limerick. St. Leger's Troops were not " above 1500, and thoſe in no very good Plight.
" Muskerry halted to let him come up, and both " Parties drew up in Battalia. While the Lord
" Preſident St. Leger was preparing for a Battel, a " Trumpet arriv'd from Muskerry, with one Walſh
" an Iriſh Lawyer. The Lord Preſident, who had " then with him the Lord Kinelmealy, and the " Lord Broghil, ſent two or three of his Attendants
" to demand what Errand they came upon; Walſh
" ſaid, about Buſineſs of the greateſt Conſequence,
" and he deſir'd to ſpeak with the Preſident; which
" being permitted, Walſh and the Trumpet ad-
" vanc'd, and coming near enough to be heard
" by Sir William St. Leger, and the Officers who " ſtood at the Head of their Men, drawn up in
" Battalia; Walſh told the Lord Preſident he muſt
" ſpeak with him alone, ſome few Paces off from
" his Men; Sir William St. Leger, and the Gen" tlemen who were with him, ſeeing and know-
" ing Walſh, upbraided him with his Diſloyalty
" and Rebellion; and expreſſing great Wonder
" that a Perſon of his Parts and Education ſhould
" be guilty of ſo much Wickedneſs and Madneſs,
" as to join with the Rebels; Walſh reply'd, We " are no Rebels, as I will ſoon convince you, if I
" may ſpeak with the Lord Preſident in private.
" Sir William St. Leger, a very brave Gentleman,
" was preſently for ſpeaking with him privately;
" but the Lords who were with him demurr'd up-
" on it, not thinking it ſafe that their General
" ſhould be truſted alone with an Enemy; there" fore they told Walſh, they would not ſuffer any
" ſuch Conference with him, but if he wou'd
" ſpeak to the Lord Preſident, it ſhould be in their A.D.1641.
" Preſence; upon which Walſh threatned to be " gone, without delivering his Meſſage, which
" Sir William St. Leger wou'd by no Means ſuffer;
" and it was at laſt agreed, that Walſh ſhould have
" Liberty to talk privately with the Lord Preſi-
" dent, provided a Party was plac'd on either Side
" of them, while they were at their private Par-
" ley, to revenge any Violence Walſh ſhould offer
" to the Lord Preſident: Walſh riding up towards " him, was met by St. Leger, the Guards not being " within Hearing: Then ſaid Walſh in few Words,
" You muſt take Care what you do in fighting againſt
" us, for the Lord Muskerry has a Commiſſion
" from the King for what he does; and by virtue
" of that Commiſſion he has rais'd Men, to aſſiſt his
" Majeſty in all Extremities; and if I may have a
" free and ſafe Conduct, I will bring the Commiſſion
" to you under the Great Seal, and ſhew it you at
" your own Houſe to morrow Morning. The Lord
" Preſident was mightily ſurpriz'd at this Meſſage,
" and having aſſur'd Walſh he ſhould have ſafe
" Conduct, if he came the next Day with the " Commiſſion, Walſh departed; and Sir William
" St. Leger returning to his Company, told the " chief of them what Walſh had told him, at " which they were all aſtoniſh'd, and the Lord
" Broghill queſtion'd the Truth of the Iriſh Law-
" yer's Meſſage, ſaying, The King wou'd never
" grant out Commiſſions to thoſe whom in his Pro-
" clamation he calls Rebels. He therefore deſir'd
" the Lord Preſident diligently to peruſe the Com-
" miſſion, if Walſh brought any, which he doubt-
" ed; and that it was only a Trick of the Lord
" Muskerry's, to amuſe them while he paſs'd by:
" However, 'twas agreed to wait the Lawyer's
" Return, Sir William St. Leger's Houſe being " within a few Miles of the Place; ſo he encamp'd
" his Men, and Muskerry drew off his. The next " Morning Walſh and the Trumpet came again
" to the Lord Preſident's Quarters; they were im" mediately receiv'd, and conducted to his Lord-
" ſhip's Houſe, where the Lawyer, as before, de-
" ſir'd to be in private with him, and the Lords,
" as before, would not let him; but conſented
" that he ſhould be admitted into a Room with
" the Preſident, one Man ſtanding at the Door
" with a drawn Sword, and a Piſtol charg'd; which
" being done, Walſh produc'd a large Parchment,
" wherein there was a very formal Commiſſion
" drawn up for the Lord Muskerry to raiſe 4000
" Men, and the Broad Seal was affix'd to it:
" St. Leger having read it over, diſmis'd Walſh,
" and return'd to the Lords, telling them Muskerry
" has really a Commiſſion for what he does; I will
" diſband my Men, and ſtir no more in this Buſi-
" neſs, for I will die before I will be a Rebel:
" Upon which the Lords and Gentlemen who " were with him, withdrew to their ſeveral Homes;
" and St. Leger took it ſo much to Heart, that he " never held up his Head afterwards, but dy'd in
" a ſhort Time, and the Earl of Inchiquine was " made Lord Preſident of Munſter in his Room."

The Devonſhire Parſon who wrote this Account, was one whom a Reverend Divine recommended to me thus, I can depend upon his Veracity, having been well acquainted with him, and his good Character was indeed univerſal: I ſhall often make uſe of this Manuſcript, and it was therefore neceſſary to acquaint the Reader with its Authority. The Author informs us that the Lord Broghil believ'd the Commiſſion to be a Cheat, and found it out at laſt, but does not tell us how, and ſlurs it over in ſuch a Manner, as makes but a weak Impreſſion on our Mind after his Hiſtory, ſo circumſtantiated, had made ſo ſtrong a one.

Parliament. The Houſe of Commons in England, who had met the 20th of October, purſuant to their Adjournment, receiv'd the terrifying News of this Maſſacre a Week after it was begun to be perpetrated in

A.D. 1641 Ireland, and voted 50000 Pounds to be forthwith provided for the Service of that Kingdom. That Owen O-Conelly have 500 Pounds paid down, and 200 Pounds a Year Penſion, till Proviſion be made for an Inheritance of greater Value; and that the Lords be deſir'd to appoint a ſelect Committee of the Commons, and take Cognizance of the Affairs of Ireland. Three or four Days after, they RESOLV'D, that 200000 Pounds be forthwith ſupply'd for the Occaſions of Ireland; that a convenient Number of Ships be provided for guarding the Sea Coaſts of that Kingdom; that 6000 Foot, and 2000 Horſe, be rais'd for the preſent Expedition into Ireland; that the Magazines of Proviſions and Stores of War in that Kingdom be ſupply'd, and all other Methods taken for the ſpeedy Relief of the diſtreſs'd Proteſtants in that Kingdom. The Lords Juſtices, Sir William Parſons, and Sir John Borlace, were ſo ſenſible of the great Care and Sollicitude of the Parliament to aſſiſt them, that they return'd them Thanks by their Letter of the 27th of November; yet Echard charges them with Supineneſs and Negligence in the Iriſh Affairs; their whole Buſineſs being Deſigns againſt his Majeſty's Prerogative; whereas in Truth, his Majeſty's ſtretching that Prerogative ſo much as he did, immediately after his Return from Scotland, oblig'd the Parliament to conſider their own Safety in England, as well as that of their Brethren in Ireland. For no ſooner was the King come from Scotland, than he diſmiſs'd the Guard of Train'd-Bands, which had done Duty near the Parliament-Houſe, and order'd others in their Places, which the Houſe of Commons diſcharg'd, and their Petition for a Guard in which they could confide, was abſolutely deny'd. It was contriv'd that his Majeſty, when he return'd to London, ſhou'd be receiv'd with uncommon Magnificence, to ſhew how much he had the Affection of the City, and mortify the Parliament, who pretended to be poſſeſs'd of them: This was manag'd by the Queen, who gain'd the Lord-Mayor in the King's Abſence. On the 25th of November, the King and Queen ſet out from Theobalds with the Prince, Duke of York, Prince of Orange, Elector Palatine, Duke of Richmond, Duke of Hamilton, Maſter of the Horſe, Earl of Eſſex, Lord Chamberlain, and other Lords; at Stamford-Hill he was met by the Sheriffs of London and Middleſex, George Garret, and George Clarke, with 72 Men in Scarlet Cloaks. There was a Paſſage made from Kingſland to Moorfields, for this Royal Cavalcade: In the firſt Field, Mr. Richard Gourney, Lord-Mayor, had pitch'd a ſumptuous Tent, at the Entrance of which his Majeſty's Coach ſtopp'd, and the Nobility and Gentry who waited there to congratulate his Return, had the Honour to kiſs his and the Queen's Hand; there the Recorder, Mr. Thomas Gardiner, made a Speech, bleſſing himſelf and the Nation, in the hopeful Succeſſion of King Charles the Second, and King James the Second: He aſſur'd their Majeſties, that no King nor Queen was ever ſo well belov'd by the Londoners as they were; he then made a Preſent to them of their Hearts as a New-Year's-Gift, a Month before Chriſtmas; and pray'd his Majeſty to uphold the Authority of the Mayor, and the Reverence due to the Aldermen. The King made a long Speech in Anſwer to Mr. Recorder's, wherein he expreſſes his Comfort that all the Miſreports of him in his Abſence, had not the leaſt Power to do him any Prejudice in their Affections; and aſſures them he will protect the true Proteſtant Religion, as it was eſtabliſh'd by his Famous Predeceſſor, his Father; after which his Majeſty was pleas'd to Knight the Lord-Mayor and the Recorder with the City-Sword; and then the Court proceeded in a very ſolemn manner through the City to White-Hall; there was great Affectation of Love and Loyalty, of Favour and Affection on both Sides. The King was very well pleas'd with the Conduct of the Lord-Mayor and Citizens, and they were tranſported with the King's gracious Speech; but we ſhall in a few Days find that it was all Outſide, and the Joy no better founded than on the Show and Glitter of the Court: 'Twas obſerv'd that the King was continually pulling off his Hat, which was a rare Thing with both his Father and himſelf. A.D 1641.

King's Return from Scotland.

Recorder's Speech to him.

The only popular Thing which was attempted at that Time, was the promoting ſome Divines who were frequent Preachers, to Epiſcopal Sees, though they were not likely to be a Penny the richer for their Biſhopricks; as Dr. Thomas Winniffe to be Biſhop of Lincoln, vacant by the Promotion of Dr. Williams to the Archbiſhoprick of York, Dr. Henry King to the See of Chicheſter, Dr. Ralph Brownrig to that of Exeter, Dr. Thomas Weſtfield to that of Briſtol, and the Biſhoprick of Carliſle was given in Commendam to Archbiſhop Uſher. As grateful as theſe Divines were to the People, their Promotion at this Time was very ungrateful, not on Account of their Perſons, but their Function; and it was done with a Deſign to put a ſtop to the Bill for taking away Biſhops Votes in Parliament; which no body could think his Majeſty wou'd conſent to, when he had ſo lately added ſo many to their Number; but then he had almoſt as lately entirely aboliſh'd the very Order in the Kingdom in which he was born. Biſhops made.

His Majeſty in his firſt Speech to the Parliament, after his Return from Scotland, tells them he had left that Kingdom quiet and contented, but finds this diſtracted with Jealouſies and Alarms: He took Notice of the joyful Reception he had met with from the City of London, and recommends to them the State of Ireland: He told them alſo he did not repent of the kind Things he had done for them, and would be ready to do more upon Occaſion; which Speech was the more extraordinary, for that the Parliament had the Night before, December the firſt, preſented him with the grand Remonſtrance drawn up by them ſince their Meeting after the Receſs. They ſent the Remonſtrance by a Committee, who were Sir Ralph Hopton, who had not even yet deſerted the Country Party, Mr. Pym, Sir Simon d'Ewes, Sir Arthur Haſelrigg, Sir Arthur Ingram, Sir James Thynne, Sir Henry Bellaſis, Lord Grey, Sir Chriſtopher Wray, Lord Fairfax, Sir Richard Wynne. Sir John Corbet, Sir Edward Deering. The Report of the Delivery of it was made by Sir Ralph Hopton, who told the Houſe, the firſt Thing his Majeſty ſpoke to, was that Part where they charge him with having a malignant Party about him, who deſign'd to change Religion; upon which the King ſaid, The Devil take him, whoever he be, that deſigns to change Religion: And as to appropriating the Rebels Lands in Ireland towards the Expence of the War, he was pleas'd to ſay, we muſt not diſpoſe of the Bears Skin till the Bear be dead. The Remonſtrance was rough enough in the wording of it, but it was not the leſs true. It contain'd all the Miſtakes, Misfortunes, Illegalities and Defaults in Government, ſince the King's coming to the Crown, the Evil Counſels and Counſellors, &c. It did not paſs by a great Majority, and Mr. Palmer and Mr. Hyde two Lawyers proteſted againſt it after a moſt diſorderly and unprecedented Manner, for which Palmer was ſent to the Tower, and Hyde eſcap'd very narrowly. This Remonſtrance was the firſt Stroke of the Paper War, which gradually drew on the Civil. The other Remonſtrances and Petitions of Parliament are expreſs'd as forcibly, and the King's Anſwers to all of them are as evaſive as his Anſwer to this, which upbraided the Houſe with printing their Remonſtance contrary to his Deſire. He juſtify'd the Votes of Biſhops, as grounded on the fundamental Laws of the Kingdom; ſo were once the Lord Abbots and Lord Priors. The fundamental Laws are always urg'd on this Occaſion, as if they had never been Parliament. Grand Remonſtrance. Sir Ralph Hopton. Paper War.

A.D.1641. been broken on many other Occaſions in this Reign, and as if the Legiſlative Power had not now as much Right to take away thoſe Votes, as ever it had to eſtabliſh them. He deſir'd the Parliament to name the Evil Counſellors; and might they not have named the Lord Digby, and a much greater one who lay in his Royal Boſom? His Anſwer was follow'd by a Declaration, wherein among other Things it was ſaid, He had preferr'd no Perſons this Seſſion but what were in particular Eſtimation with the People. The Lord Digby, the Lord Falkland, and Sir John Colepepyr, are meant here. The Lord Falkland was made Secretary of State, Digby and Colepepyr reconcil'd and preferr'd. Sir Ralph Hopton, who deliver'd the Remonſtrance, made his Bargain ſoon after them. Theſe Gentlemen were juſtly in the Eſtimation of the People while they were in their Intereſts, from which when they apoſtatiz'd, the People no longer held them in Eſteem. It will not be expected that we would ſhew how fallacious many of theſe Papers are on both Sides, neither ſhall we inſert them entire. The Lord Clarendon does not loſe a Word of the King's Declarations, Meſſages, or Anſwers, tho' they are long to Exceſs. He doubtleſs was enamour'd with them for the Sake of the Drawer, who probably was himſelf, there being ſuch a Redundancy of Words, as Warwick obſerves of his Writings, and no where is he more redundant than in his Hiſtory and Characters. The Parliaments Petitions and Remonſtrances are written with more Spirit and more Regard to Truth, than his tedious Declamations.

An Act for preſſing. There being an abſolute Neceſſity to raiſe an Army for the Relief of Ireland, a Bill was brought into the Houſe for preſſing Soldiers; in the Preamble of which it was declar'd, That the King cou'd in no Caſe but upon an Invaſion from a foreign Power, preſs a free-born Subject; which as agreeable as it is to common Juſtice and common Senſe, was a Doctrine unknown to the Lords, according to Echard, who inclin'd to hear the Attorney-General argue the Caſe before them; but the Commons reſolv'd their Committee for Ireland ſhould not ſit till the Bill for raiſing Men was paſs'd; and the King coming to the Houſe, offer'd to paſs it with a Salvo Jure to his Prerogative; a Word which is ever in the Mouth of an ill King, and has hardly been once mention'd from the Throne ſince the Revolution: For their Majeſties King William, Queen Mary, Queen Anne, and King George, have made ſo good uſe of their Royal Prerogative, that the People have frequently rather thought it too little than too much: But in this and the former Reign it was never mention'd but to be abus'd. Both Lords and Commons join'd in a Petition to the King, to declare the Name of ſuch Perſon by whoſe Information he was induc'd to that Violation of their Privileges, by taking Notice of the Contents of a Bill before it came to him in due Courſe.

Sir Will. Balfour and Lunsford. In the mean time Sir William Balfour Lieutenant of the Tower, was remember'd for refuſing to take a Bribe and let the Earl of Strafford eſcape. The Houſe of Commons having Notice that there was a Deſign to remove him, order'd his Attendance, and examin'd him about it, who explaining the Cauſe of his Removal, they debated a Petition to the King for his Continuance; but before they came to a Reſolution, Sir William Balfour reſign'd the Keys of the Tower to his Majeſty, and Colonel Lunsford a Ruffian was put in his Place. We ſhall ſee how he was qualify'd for ſuch a Poſt by the Character which the Parliament gave him, A Man of a decay'd and deſperate Fortune, and ſo may be tempted to undertake any ill Deſign. He had been condemn'd in the Star-Chamber for an Attempt to murder Sir Thomas Pelham in his Coach as he was coming from Church. Echard takes no Notice of this Man's Infamy, but imputes the Care of the Commons for the Safety of the Tower to a ſeditious Clamour. The Lords wou'd not join with the Commons in a Petition to the King to turn out Lunsford, tho' the Citizens were afraid to bring their Bullion to the Mint, while ſo profligate a Perſon had the Command of it. Several great Lords, as the Earl of Northumberland, Earl of Bedford, Earl of Warwick, Earl of Eſſex, Earl of Suffolk, Earl of Carliſle, Earl of Holland, Earl of Clare, Earl of Stamford, Earl of Newport, Earl of Bolingbroke, Earl of Pembroke, and about a Dozen more Lords, were for agreeing with the Commons: But the Courtiers were as tender of the Prerogative as if no ill Uſe had been made of it. However the Commons order'd Sir Thomas Barrington and Mr. Martin to repair to the Earl of Newport Conſtable of the Tower, and deſire him to reſide there and take the Cuſtody and Guard of that Place, while Lunsford was continu'd Lieutenant to the extream Terror of the City. The Court was always complaining of the Fears and Jealouſies of the People, and yet always doing Things to make them more jealous and fearful. The Citizens were in continual Alarms till that Aſſaſſin Lunsford was remov'd from the Government of the Tower; even the very loyal Lord-Mayor Gourney repreſented to the King the great Danger of an Inſurrection, if Lunsford was not turn'd out immediately; which was done, and the Keys given to Sir John Byron. The Office of Conſtable was taken from the Earl of Newport as ſoon as it was known that the Parliament had ſo great Confidence in him. We often read in Clarendon and Echard, that there were falſe Rumours rais'd by the Artifices of Mr Pym, Mr. Hampden, and the greateſt Names in Parliament; but we now meet with one ſo extravagant, that it cou'd never gain the leaſt Belief with reaſonable Men, which is the Report of a Plot to ſeize the Queen and her Children while the King was in Scotland. His Majeſty was inform'd of it, and hearken'd to the Information, that the Earl of Eſſex, the Earl of Newport, the Lord Say, the Lord Mandeville, the Lord Wharton, the Lord Dungarvon, Mr. Nathaniel Fiennes, Sir John Clotworthy, and Mr. John Pym, had a Conſultation for that Purpoſe at Kenſington. The Earl of Newport hearing of this vile Rumour, waited upon the Queen with ſome other Lords, and with many Aſſeverations, aſſur'd her of the Falſity of it. Her Majeſty ſeem'd ſatisfy'd; but when the King return'd, the falſe Report was reviv'd, and his Majeſty demanded of the Earl of Newport whether he himſelf had not ſaid at the pretended Conſultation, If there's a Plot in Scotland, here are his Wife and Children. His Lordſhip deny'd there were any ſuch Words ſaid, the King reply'd, I am ſorry for your Memory. The Earl gave Information of it to the Houſe of Peers, who finding ſome Commoners concern'd in it, deſir'd a Conference concerning theſe ſcandalous Rumours, that thoſe who ſpread them might be puniſh'd. Both Houſes agreed upon a Petition to the King to that Effect; and his Majeſty anſwer'd, I do not believe the Report; I have ask'd Newport ſome Queſtions about the Buſineſs, but far from that Way of expreſſing a Belief of the Thing which Newport hath had the Boldneſs and Confidence to affirm, which I cou'd eaſily make appear, but I think it beneath me to conteſt with any particular Perſon. His Majeſty refus'd to tell who it was that inform'd him of the pretended Plot.

The Removal of Lunsford not being known, the Citizens who had petition'd againſt him, Common-Council Men, and Men of like Repute, attended at Weſtminſter, whither came alſo ſeveral Apprentices with a Petition againſt Papiſts and Popiſh Innovators, ſuch as Archbiſhops, Biſhops, and their Dependants; the Extirpation of which Government Root and Branch, had been humbly deſir'd by ſeveral Petitions from this City, and was now more vigorouſly inſiſted upon than ever. It was very natural for theſe Citizens to cry out, No Biſhops, it be[illegible]; what they came about. One Hyde an Officer in the Army under the Earl of Strafford, fell foul on theſe Citizens, ſaying, he wou'd cut the Throat of thoſe round-headed cropp'd-ear'd Dogs; whence the Term Roundhead was given to the Friends to the Parliament. Hyde ſtoutly drew his Sword upon the unarm'd People, and deſir'd ſome Gentlemen to ſecond him, which they refuſing, he was apprehended, brought before the Houſe of Commons and ſent to Priſon; he was afterwards caſhier'd. The ſame Day, December 27. Lunsford coming thro' Weſtminſter-Hall with thirty or forty ſuch Gentry as himſelf, met with the Londoners who brought the laſt mention'd Petition: Lunsford preſently drew his Sword, which began a Fray, and ſome were hurt. This was enough to give a juſt Alarm to the whole City, who had an Abhorrence for that Bravo, and many hundreds of the younger ſort came to aſſiſt their Fellows at Weſtminſter, which caus'd a great Uproar; and tho' Lunsford and his Crew ſhuffled away as faſt as they cou'd, yet the Storm being rais'd, 'twas ſome time before the troubled Waters cou'd ſubſide. Echard miſrepreſents this Matter in every Particular; he tells us that Lunsford's Followers were the King's Houſhold Officers, and the Citizens a contemptible Rabble, tho' only two of the Londoners who petition'd againſt that Bully, Mr. Randal Manwaring, and Mr. Maximilian Beard, cou'd have bought Lunsford and all his Houſhold Officers, if they had all been no richer than himſelf. An Hiſtorian of thoſe Times ſets it in a truer Light; The beſt affected Citizens, Men of the beſt Note and Quality of the whole City both for Piety and Ability, went with this Petition to the Parliament Houſe in moſt grave and ſubſtantial Equipage in fifty or ſixty Coaches, and were moſt graciouſly receiv'd by the Lords and Commons. No doubt there were Infantry as well as Cavalry, ſome afoot as well as in Coaches, as is unavoidable on theſe Occaſions. Echard, Some briſk Gentlemen of the Inns of Court did alſo offer their Service to guard his Majeſty, who in Truth was very well guarded by the Militia of Weſtminſter and Middleſex. General Ludlow, who was a Witneſs of this Tumult, writes thus, "The King finding that nothing leſs "wou'd ſatisfy the Parliament than a thorough "Correction of what was amiſs, and full Security "of their Rights for the future from any Violation, conſider'd how to put a Stop to their Proceedings, and to that End encourag'd a great "Number of looſe debauch'd Fellows about the "Town to repair to Whitehall, where a conſtant "Table was provided for them, Theſe are E-"chard's Houſhold Officers. Many Gentlemen of "the Inns of Court were tamper'd with to aſſiſt "him. Theſe are the Inns of Court Gentlemen who, "he ſays, offer'd their Service. Things were brought "to ſuch a paſs, that one of thoſe Courtiers ſaid "publickly in my Hearing, What ſhall we ſuffer "thoſe Fellows at Weſtminſter to domineer thus? "Let us go into the Country and bring up our Te-"nants to pull them out; which Words not being "able to bear, I queſtion'd him for them, and he "either out of Fear of Publick Juſtice, or of my "Reſentment, came to me the next Morning, "and ask'd Pardon, which by Reaſon of his Youth, "and want of Experience, I paſs'd by." The reverend Hiſtorian affirms that General Ludlow made this Story. This is all Invention. He'll ſay he nam'd not the General, but he names the Thing. Some of the Londoners being got into the Abby, Dr. Williams Archbiſhop of York ſhut the Doors upon them, and detain'd them; which others of them hearing, they flock'd thither, and endeavour'd to break down the Doors; but the Archbiſhop's Men flung Stones upon them from the Leads, his Grace not at all approving of the Petition againſt Archbiſhopricks. Several Citizens were hurt, and, ſays Ruſhworth, among the reſt Sir Richard Wiſeman one of the Archdeacon's Foot-Rabble, who dy'd ſoon after of the Hurt he receiv'd.

The next Day the Houſe of Commons fell into Debate concerning the Affairs of Ireland, and the Obſtructions which the Relief of it met with. One was the Want of a Proclamation under the Great-Seal, declaring the Iriſh Papiſts in Arms and their Adherents to be REBELS and TRAYTORS; which was very inconſiſtent with the Declaration publiſh'd in Ireland by Sir Phelim Oneal Head of thoſe Traytors and Rebels, wherein it is ſaid, Be it known to all our Friends and Countrymen, that the King's moſt excellent Majeſty, for many great and urgent Cauſes him thereunto moving, and repoſing Truſt and Confidenee in our Fidelity, hath ſignified to us by his Commiſſion under the Great Seal of Scotland bearing Date the Firſt of this Inſtant October; then follows the Commiſſion itſelf, to arreſt and ſeize the Goods, Eſtates, and Perſons of all the Engliſh Proteſtants. The Lords and Commons in their Addreſs to the King at Theobalds two Months after, ſaid, "That the Deſign of deſtroying the "Proteſtant Religion, was laid by thoſe who were "moſt in the King's Favour; that the Queen and "the Pope's Agents who reſided about her, were "the principal Chiefs; that the Troubles of Scot-"land proceeded from the ſame Source, and the "Iriſh Maſſacrers boaſted they had the King's Approbation, and that they had only taken up Arms "to reſtore his Authority which was depreſs'd by "the Puritans, according to an intercepted Letter "from one of the Chiefs to his Brother in Eng-"land; to which they added an Order ſign'd C. R. "that is, Charles Rex, to Captain Legg, to receive "on board his Ship ſuch of the Conſpirators as "ſhou'd demand it, and to tranſport them wherever "they deſir'd. Mr. Jephſon a Member of Parliament affirm'd it at a Conference between the "two Houſes, that Dillon, whilſt he reſided at "Court, wrote to two of the Leaders of the Rebels, Muskerry and Taaf, of the King's Approbation; that Reaſons of State oblig'd him to "diſſemble at preſent, but that he wou'd ſupport "them in a proper Seaſon." If the Traytor Oneal's Commiſſion is forg'd, and if Ludlow goes too far in ſaying the King was not diſpleas'd with the Maſſacre, moſt certain it is, the Parliament of England were ſo jealous of his Majeſty's Diſpoſition, that they wou'd not truſt him with the Management of the War; and it is as certain their Jealouſy was not unreaſonable, as appear'd by the Peace he made with thoſe Iriſh Rebels not long after, contrary to his poſitive Engagement with them, and ſent for a great Body of thoſe Cut-throats to act againſt them and their Friends.

One of the Reaſons for a Proclamation to declare the Iriſh REBELS, was becauſe they had given out as if they had ſome Authority for what they did. Sir John Colepepyr and others were appointed to draw up a Declaration concerning the Obſtructions of the Relief of Ireland; and on the Firſt of January a Proclamation was publiſh'd, declaring the Iriſh Papiſts who were in Arms, and their Adherents, REBELS and TRAYTORS; but the Secretary of State Sir Edward Nicholas, in his Warrant to the Printer ſaid, It is his Majeſty's Pleaſure that forty Copies only ſhou'd be printed, and thoſe not to be publiſh'd till his Majeſty's further Pleaſure was ſignify'd; upon which Mr. May obſerves, All Men extreamly wonder'd, comparing it with Biſhops ill advis'd.

About the beginning of the Year, the Biſhops took a Step which one wou'd think they were put upon by the Courtiers to facilitate their Ruin, which cou'd not have been ſo ſuddenly effected without it; and there wou'd be the better Pretence to drop them when they had brought the Deſtruction upon themſelves. They drew up a Proteſtation, and deliver'd it to the King, wherein they declar'd againſt all Laws, Orders, and Votes which have paſs'd or ſhall paſs, ſince they abſented themſelves from the Houſe of Lords. If this Indiſcretion had been the Effect of their great Application to the Divine Duties of their Function, which eſtrang'd them to the Wiſdom of this World, it wou'd rather have been laudable than blameable. But it cou'd not be thought that Wright Biſhop of Coventry and Litchfield, Goodman of Glouceſter, Pierce of Bath and Wells, Owen of St. Aſaph, Skinner of Oxon, Towers of Peterborough, Owen of Landaff, Wren of Ely, and Cooke of Hereford, cou'd have become Strangers to human Policy, by devoting themſelves entirely to the Cure of Souls and the Study of Diviniry. The three other Biſhops, Dr. Williams Archbiſhop of York, Dr. Moreton Biſhop of Durham, and Dr. Hall Biſhop of Norwich, were not in ill Terms with the Parliament on their own Account, but for the Company they kept. The former was skilful enough in Politicks, but as it often happens, he loſt himſelf in this Proteſtation. Biſhop Morton and Biſhop Hall were primitive apoſtolical Fathers of the Church, and deſerv'd to have been diſtinguiſh'd on this Occaſion, tho' they were drawn in by the others to proteſt with them. His Majeſty immediately ſent the Proteſtation to the Lord-Keeper to have it regiſter'd. What need was there of taking that Burden upon himſelf? It was no ſooner read in the Houſe of Peers, than their Lordſhips ſent a Meſſage to the Houſe of Commons by Sir John Banks and Judge Reeves, to deſire a preſent Conference; at which the Lord-Keeper Littleton deliver'd the Proteſtation, and ſpoke as follows, The Petition and Proteſtation of the twelve Biſhops contain Matters of high and dangerous Conſequence, and ſuch as my Lords are very ſenſible of, and ſuch as require a ſpeedy and ſudden Reſolution, it extending to the deep entrenching upon the fundamental Priviledges and Beings of Parliaments; therefore the Lords have thought fit, that this Matter concerning the whole Nation may be communicated to the Houſe of Commons, it being a Thing of ſo great and ſo general a Concernment. After this Communication, the Houſe RESOLV'D to accuſe theſe twelve Biſhops of High-Treaſon for endeavouring to ſubvert the fundamental Laws and Beings of Parliament; which was done at the Bar of the Houſe of Lords by Mr. Glyn, who was order'd alſo to thank the Lords for communicating the Biſhops Proteſtation to them with ſo much Affection and Speed, and for expreſſing their Senſe thereof, ſo great was the Harmony in this auguſt Senate on this Occaſion, which Mr. Archdeacon repreſents as the Effect of Artifice and Sedition. Immediately Warrants were iſſu'd out by the Houſe of Peers for their Seizure and Commitment, directed to the Uſher of the Black-Rod, who ſoon apprehended them all, and brought them to the Bar of that moſt honourable Houſe, by whom they were all ſent to the Tower, except the pious and reverend Dr. Moreton Biſhop of Durham, in Regard, ſays Ruſhworth, of his worthy Parts, and Dr. Wright Biſhop of Coventry and Litchfield, in regard of his Age and Indiſpoſition, who remain'd with the Black-Rod. The People rang the Bells, and made Bonefires, as if at laſt they had obtain'd their long-wiſh'd for Triumph over Epiſcopacy. Mr. Archdeacon pretends, that this very much leſſen'd the Reſpect and Veneration that had formerly been entertain'd for Parliaments. But the Diſciples of Laud had before ſo far loſt all Veneration and Reſpect for Parliaments, that there was nothing left to be leſſen'd. As for the reſt of the Nation, it no where appears that this Proceeding had the leaſt Effect on the People's Good-will to the Parliament. To this is added another Falſity, the abſent Members of both Houſes were three Parts in four; whereas the Numbers of the ſitting Members much exceeded that Proportion before the Receſs. Theſe Falſities are ſtill aggravated by a third, The King's Servants were of the beſt Fortunes and Reputations in their ſeveral Counties; that is, Mr. Hyde had a better Eſtate than Mr. Hollis, Mr. Warwick a better Eſtate than Mr. Hampden, and the Lord Cottington than the Earl of Bedford. This Compariſon wou'd run thro' both Houſes, and agrees exactly with Echard's three Parts in four abſent. For three or four Months after this, when many of the Members of the Houſe of Commons had deſerted the Service of their Country, there were in that Houſe three hundred Members, fifty more were employed by the Parliament in the Country, fifty had expreſs Leave to be abſent, and fifty-one had been expell'd for abſenting themſelves without Leave. And ſix Years after this, when the Members were ſecluded by the Army, you will find in Pag. 353 of this very Hiſtory, that the Houſe conſiſted of above four hundred Members; tho' the Earl of Clarendon, or whoever wrote the Hiſtory of the Rebellion, taught Echard ſo falſely to miſrepreſent their Number.

Lord Keeper's Speech concerning them.

Parl. Chron. 106.

Number of the Houſe of Commons.

A Meſſage to the City about Tumults.

The King ſent a Meſſage to the Lord Mayor, Aldermen, and Common-Council, which the Secretary of State Sir Edward Nicholas notify'd to the Recorder, and that it wou'd be brought by the Lord Newburgh Chancellor of the Dutchy of Lancaſter, who deliver'd them a Paper concerning the Tumults, in which his Majeſty told them it was out of Idleneſs that the Citizens came flocking to Weſtminſter. Indeed moſt of the Petitions at that Time complain'd of the great Decay of Trade occaſion'd by the Favour ſhewn to Papiſts, and the Tyranny of the Prelates, as is expreſs'd in very ſtrong Terms in the Petition of the Apprentices. I cannot find that the Lord-Mayor, Aldermen, and Common-Council, took any more Notice of the Lord Newburgh's Meſſage to prevent tumultuary Aſſemblies, and not believe the Reports of ill-affected Perſons, than to agree among themſelves to ſpread it abroad and make the Meſſage known, and that the Lord-Mayor ſhou'd iſſue out his Precepts for Watch and Ward.

Parliament addreſs for a Guard.

The Houſe of Commons order'd Mr. Hollis to carry a verbal Meſſage to the King, that a Guard might be aſſign'd them under the Command of the Earl of Eſſex Lord-Chamberlain. They complain'd that there had been ſeveral Attempts to bring Deſtruction upon their whole Body at once, and Threats and Menaces againſt particular Perſons; that there was a malignant Party bitterly envenom'd againſt them, daily gathering Strength and Confidence, and now come to ſuch a Height, as to have given Boldneſs to ſome to imbrue their Hands in the Blood of his Majeſty's Subjects in the Face and at the Doors of the Parliament. The Threats againſt particular Perſons, refers to a Plague-Plaiſter ſent Mr. Pym to infect and murder him. The reverend Author makes a Jeſt of it, tho' the murderous Deſign has certainly nothing ludicrous in it in the Conception of Perſons of Sobriety and Virtue. The Plaiſter is too filthy to be much ſpoken of; the Letter which contain'd it was ſent to Mr. Pym in the Parliament Houſe with theſe Cavalier Expreſſions, Mr. Pym, Do not think that a Guard of Men can protect you, if you perſiſt in your traiterous Courſes and Deſigns. I have ſent a Paper Meſſage to you, and if this do

A.D. 1642. not touch your Heart, a Dagger ſhall, ſo ſoon as I am recover'd of my Plague-Sore. Unheard-of Aſſaſin, to contrive this Murder with the Mark of Death upon him! In the mean Time you may be forborn, becauſe no better Man may be endanger'd for you. REPENT TRAYTOR. Theſe Menaces and the Rage of Lunsford and the Houſe Officers, produc'd this Addreſs: In anſwer to which the King blam'd them for their groundleſs Jealouſies, Diſtruſts, and Fears, and proteſted if he had Knowledge of any ſuch Deſign, he wou'd purſue the Authors to condign Puniſhment. He told them he wou'd appoint them ſuch a Guard as he wou'd be reſponſible for to God Almighty. The Commons in the mean time order'd Halberts to be provided and brought into their Houſe for their better Security, and they remain'd there a conſiderable Time afterwards; by which we may ſee they had good Information of what was contriving againſt them; and the Court might have ſeen that their Contrivances wou'd end in their Confuſion.

It ſhou'd have been mention'd, that during the Parliament's Adjournment in the Chriſtmas Holydays, a grand Committee was order'd to meet at Guildhall, and a leſs Committee at Weſtminſter, till the two Houſes met on the 3d of January; when the Lord-Keeper acquainted the Lords that his Majeſty had given Order to Sir Edward Herbert Attorney-General, to acquaint their Lordſhips with ſome Particulars from him; which Particulars were a Charge of High-Treaſon againſt the Lord Kimbolton, Denzil Hollis Eſq; John Hampden Eſq; Sir Arthur Haſelrigge, John Pym Eſq; William Strode Eſq; The Lord Kimbolton after the Charge was read, ſtood up and offer'd to obey whatever the Houſe ſhou'd order. The Lords ſent a Meſſage to the Houſe of Commons, that ſome of their Members were accus'd of High-Treaſon; and at the ſame time Information was brought that ſeveral Perſons were ſealing up the Trunks, Doors, and Papers belonging to the accus'd Members; upon which the Houſe order'd that their Serjeant ſhou'd have Power to break open the Doors and Seals upon the Trunks, &c. 'Twas alſo reſolv'd upon the Queſtion, that if any Perſon came to ſeize their Perſons, thoſe Members ſhou'd ſtand upon their Guard. While they were debating theſe Things, Serjeant Francis came from his Majeſty to arreſt the Five Members, but the Houſe wou'd not let them go, and order'd Sir John Colepepyr, the Lord Falkland, Sir John Hotham, and Sir Philip Stapleton, to attend his Majeſty, and acquaint him that the Matter concern'd the Privilege of Parliament, and therein the Privilege of all the Commons of England; that they wou'd take it into Conſideration, and return an Anſwer in all Humility and Duty, with as much Speed as the Greatneſs of the Buſineſs wou'd permit; and in the mean Time the ſaid Members ſhall be ready to anſwer any legal Charge made againſt them; accordingly the Speaker, by Command of the Houſe, enjoin'd the five Members to conſtant Attendance. Here was a Criſis! Had there been ſo much Wiſdom and Temper in the King's Counſels, as to have been ſatisfy'd with this prudent Meſſage of the Parliament, there had been no Civil War; for from his Conduct at this Time, 'twas eaſy to obſerve that there was no Probability of preventing it. The Lords made a like Order about the Doors and Trunks, and reſolv'd to join with the Commons in a Petition for a Guard. The latter commanded their Speaker to iſſue out Warrants for apprehending Sir William Fleming and Sir William Killegrew, who had preſum'd to ſeal up thoſe Trunks and Doors. They alſo order'd a Conference to be deſir'd with the Lords, to acquaint them that there is a ſcandalous Paper publiſh'd, containing Articles of High-Treaſon againſt the Lord Kimbolton, &c. And foraſmuch as it is againſt the Members of both Houſes, they deſire the Lords that Right may be done againſt the Publiſhers of the ſaid ſcandalous Paper and an Enquiry made who were the Authors and Publiſhers thereof, that they may be puniſh'd, and the Commonwealth be ſecur'd againſt ſuch dangerous Perſons. Thus it is plain that the Parliament reſolv'd to defend the accus'd Members againſt a Charge, which, ſays a learned Lawyer, was ſmil'd at as chimerical, and as having in Truth no Foundation, which he fully proves. And it is amazing, that when the Court ſaw the vigorous Oppoſition that was made to thoſe treaſonable Chimeras, they ſhou'd add Violence to Violence, and purſue their deſperate Meaſures to an open Rupture between the King and his Subjects: For the next Day, January the 4th, the Houſe of Commons was inform'd by one Captain Langriſh lately an Officer in France, that he came from among the Officers and Soldiers at Whitehall, and underſtanding by them that his Majeſty was coming with a Guard of military Men Commanders and Soldiers to the Houſe of Commons, he paſs'd by them with ſome Difficulty to get to the Houſe before them, to ſend in word how near they were. A certain Member, ſuppos'd to be Mr. Pym, had had private Intimations from the famous Counteſs of Carliſle Siſter to the Earl of Northumberland, that Endeavours wou'd be us'd that very Day to apprehend the five Members, the Counteſs of Carliſle happening to be in the Room when the Queen talk'd of it to the King, and urg'd him to it with an indecent Eagerneſs. She who underſtood French perfectly well, knowing the Deſign, went out of the Room immediately, and ſo down the Back-Stairs, that ſhe might not be obſerv'd, and going directly to her Brother Northumberland, told him all ſhe knew; of which he immediately inform'd Mr. Pym. The Houſe upon Captain Langriſh's Information, requir'd the five Members who were there attending according to Order, to depart forthwith, leſt Miſchief ſhou'd follow, if the Soldiers attempted to pull them out by Force, the Commons being reſolv'd in ſuch Caſe to defend them with their Halberts, which, ſays Welwood, might have endanger'd the King's Perſon. Four of the five Members left the Houſe, but Mr. Strode wou'd not ſtir; Sir Walter Earle his old Friend, ſtrove to puſh him out, the King being by this Time in the Court of Requeſts. At laſt a Member told him Mr. Hampden wanted to ſpeak with him below, and then Strode follow'd the reſt juſt as his Majeſty was entering with his Officers, Reformades, and Soldiers.

When he came to the Door, his Majeſty gave a loud Knock, and it was thrown open. He enter'd, and as he paſs'd towards the Chair, caſt his Eye on the right-hand where Mr. Pym us'd to ſit, but not ſeeing him, he went forward and ſaid, By your Leave, Mr. Speaker, I muſt borrow your Chair a little; which the Speaker quitting, the King ſtept up into it, and after he had ſtood there a while, caſt his Eye around upon the Members, but cou'd not ſee thoſe for whom he came. He then made a Speech, wherein he ſaid, He came to apprehend ſome that were by his Command accus'd of High-Treaſon; in which Caſe no Perſon hath Privilege, and as long as thoſe Perſons are here, he cou'd not expect this Houſe wou'd be in the right Way, and he muſt have them whereſoever he found them. He aſſur'd them he never intended any Force; which the Reformades and Soldiers were a plain Proof of. The Speaker ſtanding below by the Chair, his Majeſty ask'd him whether he ſaw any of thoſe Perſons in the Houſe. The Speaker falling on his Knee, reply'd, I have neither Eyes to ſee, nor Tongue to ſpeak, but as the Houſe pleaſes to direct me, whoſe Servant I am here; and humbly beg your Majeſty's Pardon, that I cannot give any other Anſwer than this to what your Majeſty is pleas'd to demand of me. How different is Mr. Speaker Lenthall's Behaviour from Mr. Speaker Finch's. The former while the King enters the Houſe.

A.D.1642. King was preſent in the Houſes profeſſes his Obedience to the Parliament; the latter when the King was at Whitehall, refus'd to obey them, having receiv'd his Majeſty's Command to the contrary. The King told the Speaker he thought he was in the right, and then left the Houſe, which was in the greateſt Diſorder, many Members crying out aloud, ſo as he might hear them, Privilege, Privilege, and immediately adjourn'd to the next Day. I have referr'd the Reader to Acherley for the Articles of Impeachment againſt the five Members, and his judicious Remarks upon them. It gives one Pity to ſee how the Earl of Clarendon, and Archdeacon Echard, labour to explain away an outragious Act againſt the Peoples Rights and Privileges, which is attended with ſo many aggravating Circumſtances. Mr. Archdeacon informs us, it was follow'd with a Proclamation, to prevent the Perſons accus'd from flying out of the Kingdom, and to forbid all Perſons to entertain them; which methinks ſhould not have been mention'd, ſince their Accuſers were preparing to fly the Kingdom, and that the Citizens of London not only entertain'd them, but offer'd to defend them at the Hazard of their Lives and Fortunes. The Houſe of Commons full of juſt Reſentment, which the Reverend Hiſtorian calls Rage, Voted the King's entring their Houſe to be done in a warlike Manner, and therefore they in great Fear, Trouble and Confuſion, adjourn'd for ſeven Days, 'till Tueſday the 11th of January, but appointed a Committee to ſit in the mean Time at Guild-Hall, which had been done before in this Seſſion. This Committee were, Lord Falkland, Sir John Colepepyr, Sir Robert Coke, Sir Ralph Hopton, Sir Thomas Walſingham, Sir John Hippeſley, Sir Philip Stapleton, Sir John Hotham, Sir Walter Erle, Sir John Wray, Sir Thomas Barrington, Sir Chriſtopher Wray, Sir Samuel Rolle, Sir Edward Hungerford, Sir William Litton, Sir Benjamin Rudyard, Sir Richard Cave, Mr. Whitlocke, Mr. Pierepoint, Mr. N. Fiennes, M. W. Long, Mr. Herbert Price, Mr. Wheeler, Mr. Glynne, Mr. Grimſton, Mr. Wylde.

Committee of Parliament in the City.

The ſame Day the King came to the City with his uſual Attendance; and the People, as he went along, cry'd out aloud, Privilege of Parliament, Privilege of Parliament; Mr. Walker, an Ironmonger and Pamphleteer, threw a Paper into his Coach, as the compleat Hiſtorian tells us, wherein was written, To your Tents, O Iſrael; for which he was committed, and afterwards proceeded againſt at the Seſſions. This Paper was a Sermon on that Text. His Majeſty was nobly entertain'd at Dinner by one of the Sheriffs, and after Dinner return'd to Whitehall, without interruption of Tumults. The Committee of the Houſe of Commons at Guildhall employ'd themſelves in drawing up a Declaration touching his Majeſty's late coming to their Houſe. They were upon it five Days, examining Perſons to prove the Words, Actions, and Geſtures of thoſe that follow'd the King, and ſtood ready at the Door of the Houſe of Commons.

Lord Mayor, &c. Petition.

In the mean Time the Lord-Mayor, Aldermen and Common-Council petition'd the King, "Complaining of the great Succeſs of the bloody Iriſh "Rebels, the want of Aid to ſuppreſs them, of "Deſigns to deſtroy the Proteſtant Religion, and "the Lives and Liberties of his Majeſty's Subjects, "by putting out Perſons of Truſt from being "Conſtable and Lieutenant of the Tower, of for-"tifying Whitehall with Men and Ammunition, "of wounding Citizens in their paſſing to Weſt-"minſter, of tampering with Inns of Court, of "the Miſunderſtanding between his Majeſty and "the Parliament, by Reaſon of Miſinformation, of "his going to the Houſe of Commons with a "great Multitude of armed Men beſides his or-"dinary Guards, in Breach of the Privileges of "Parliament; All which tends not only to the Overthrow of Trade, which we already feel in a deep Meaſure, but alſo threatens the utter Ruin of the Proteſtant Religion, and the Lives and Liberties of all his Majeſty's Subjects. Their Prayer was, that Ireland may be ſpeedily reliev'd by the Advice of Parliament; the Tower put into the Hands of Perſons of Truſt, ſuſpected and unknown Perſons to be remov'd from Whitehall; a known and approv'd Guard to be appointed for the Parliament; and that the Lord Kimbolton, and the Five Members, may not be reſtrain'd of Liberty, or proceeded againſt, other than according to Privilege of Parliament." To which Echard tells us the King return'd an Anſwer, uncommonly obliging and condeſcending, as in the following Inſtance, There has been nothing left undone on the King's Part, as to Ireland, and his Zeal for its Relief will appear, in a DECLARATION which will be ſpeedily publiſh'd; that his Majeſty wonders they ſhould entertain any Fears about the Tower, after he had remov'd a Servant of good Truſt and Reputation, Lunsford, and put in another, whoſe Ability and Reputation were unqueſtionable; that as to the fortifying Whitehall, his Majeſty did not doubt but they had themſelves obſerv'd how he was provok'd to it by ſeditious Language, utter'd under his own Windows; and if any Citizens were wounded, he is confidently aſſur'd they deſerv'd it: How wonderfully obliging! He diſown'd the Knowledge of Fireworks in the Hands of Papiſts, mention'd in the Petition, and alledg'd, that no Privilege cou'd extend to Treaſon or Breach of Peace, and that his Attendants, when he went to the Houſe, had only Swords.

A.D.1642.

The Committee remov'd from Guildhall to Grocers-Hall, to give the Common-Council Room to aſſemble in the former about this Petition, and appointed a Sub-Committee to draw up Heads for their ſafe coming to Weſtminſter, with the five Members in their Company, on the 11th of January. It was reſolv'd that the Sheriffs of London and Middleſex ſhou'd then raiſe the Poſſe Comitatus to guard the King and Parliament that Day. The Maſters of Ships and Mariners came to the Committee with a Petition ſign'd by 1000 Hands, offering their Service to guard them by Water to Weſtminſter, which was accepted of. After theſe came the Prentices with their Offer, but Serjeant Wylde gave them Thanks in the Name of the Committee, telling them there wou'd be no need of it, the Seamen being to attend them by Water, and the Train'd-Bands wou'd do the ſame by Land. The accus'd Members aſſiſted at the Committee who drew up the Declaration about the King's entring the Houſe, all Members that came being to have Votes. The Reader will obſerve, that of this Committee were Lord Falkland, Sir John Colepepyr, Sir Ralph Hopton, and ſome of the moſt eminent Members of that illuſtrious Aſſembly, who declare, "That his Majeſty came to the Houſe, "attended with a Multitude of arm'd Men in a "hoſtile Manner; that ſeveral Soldiers, Papiſts, "and others, about 500 in Number, came with "him, ſome of them with their Piſtols cock'd "near the Door, ſaid, I am a good Markſman, I "can hit right: Pox take the Houſe of Commons, "a Pox of God confound them, &c. true Cava-"lier Language. The publiſhing of this Declaration was much to the Parliament's Diſhonour, according to Echard; and then he contradicts himſelf, by ſaying, It was more detrimental to the King's Affairs: He adds, the Shops of the City were generally ſhut up, to inſinuate that the Citizens took this Declaration ſo ill, that they wou'd not Trade upon it. The Truth is, the Shops were ſhut while the Citizens attended the Committe and the accus'd Members, to the two Houſes of Parliament, which they did in a triumphant Manner: The Committee and the five Members took Boat at the Three Cranes, attended with thirty or forty Bar-

*A.D.*1642. Barges, with Guns and Streamers, and a great Number of Citizens in Boats; thus they row'd to Weſtminſter, with Sound of Variety of Muſical Inſtruments, interrupted only with the loud Acclamations of the People, while the Train'd-Bands march'd thither by Land, to ſecure the Paſſages that way. The whole was to be perform'd with ſo much real Pomp and Splendor, that the Court to avoid ſo magnificent, but to them ſo hateful a Sight, left the Town, and the King never ſaw it afterwards, 'till he was brought thither to his Tryal. Echard tells us, this Return of the Committee, and the five Members to their Seats in Parliament, was interpreted at Whitehall as the beginning of the War, and ſo interpreted no where elſe. The beginning of the War was before this, and well explain'd by the judicious Lawyer. It appear'd alſo, that if the five Members attempted to ſit again, the King, or his Men at Arms, would be at Hand to come and ſeize them; and that therefore without Guards, they, or the Houſe, wou'd never more ſit ſafely; and if ſo, the Inference is inconteſtable, that this STORM on the Houſe, was the FIRST STROKE that was given in the WAR. He proceeds, "The King not being able to ſee "the five Members ſo generally eſpous'd; for what "is ſaid in the Hiſtory of the Rebellion, and the "Archdeacon's Hiſtory, of a pack'd Mob, is all di- "rectly contrary to known Truth; and himſelf and "his Proſecution ſo diſappointed, did on the Day "before, Monday the 10th of January, retire "from Whitehall to Hampton-Court, after that to "Windſor, and from thence to York, and abſented "and would never after return to his Parliament."

Acts. King begins the War.

See what the Conjurer Lilly ſays on this Subject. "The King diſliked theſe too frequent Addreſſes "unto both Houſes in ſo unwarrantable a Manner, whereupon fearing the worſt, as himſelf "pretended, he had a Court of Guard before "Whitehall of the Train'd-Bands: He had alſo "many diſſolute Gentlemen that kept within "White-Hall, with their Swords by their Sides, "to be ready upon any ſudden Occaſion: Verily "Mens Fears now began to be great, and it was "by many perceiv'd, the King began to ſwell with "Anger againſt the Proceedings of Parliament, "and to intend a War againſt them. Some Speeches "dropp'd from him to that Purpoſe. Of his break- ing into the Houſe of Commons for the five Members, Lilly writes, "All this Time he had a Guard with "him, conſiſting of many Gentlemen with Halberts and Swords. This raſh Action of his coſt "him his Crown; for as he was the firſt of Kings "that ever, or ſo imprudently broke the Privileges, by his entring into the Houſe of Commons "aſſembled in Parliament; ſo by that unparallel'd Demand of his, he utterly loſt himſelf, and "left ſcarce any Poſſibility of Reconcilement: He "not willing to truſt them; nor they him, who had "ſo often fail'd them. It was my Fortune that "very Day to dine in Whitehall, and in that Room "where the Halberts newly brought from the "Tower were lodg'd, for the Uſe of ſuch as attended the King to the Houſe of Commons. "Sir Peter Wich, e're we had fully din'd, came into the Room I was in, and broke open the "Cheſts wherein the Arms were, which frighted "us all that were there: However, one of our "Company got out of Doors, and preſently inform'd ſome Members, that the King was preparing to come into the Houſe, elſe I believe "all, or ſome of theſe Members had been taken. Echard, the Author of the Hiſtory of the Rebellion, and all the Authors of that precious Kidney, do every where treat the City of London as a Neſt of Rebels, the Sink of Sedition and Schiſm; for the Zeal of the Citizens in Defence of Engliſh Liberty, and for promoting a thorough Reformation. They learnt this of Laud; and King Charles, in Purſuance of the ſame Leſſon treated them accordingly, which naturally diſpos'd them to make all Oppoſition to his arbitrary Government, and on all Occaſions to appear for the Parliament, the Bulwark of their Rights and Privileges. He highly provok'd them a little before the breaking out of the Scots Troubles, by countenancing one Sir ---- Philips, a beggarly Knight, as my Author calls him, from whom I take the following Account; "Philips exhibited his Bill againſt the Citi- "zens of London, for certain Miſdemeanours pre- "tended to be committed by ſome of their Offi- "cers in Ireland, about the Parts of London- "derry. True it is, the Citizens of London very "gallantly, about the coming in of King James, "ſent Colonies of their own in great Numbers, "and at their own extream great Charges, to ſet- "tle Plantations in the North of Ireland. They "had a large Patent from King James, and "many Privileges granted them for their ſo doing, "and Planting: Above 30 Years they had quietly "poſſeſs'd their own Lands there, had built ma- "ny beautiful Market-Towns, one or more City "or Cities, many Churches in the Territories aſ- "ſign'd them; but about the Year 1639, this Sir "------ Philips demanding ſome unreaſonable "Things of the Citizens, and being denied them, "he in Malice exhibits his Bill for Miſdemeanors "of their Officers againſt the Londoners in the "STAR-CHAMBER, and brought the Cauſe unto "a Hearing. The Court of Star-Chamber fin'd "the Londoners deeply, adjudg'd their Plantations "forfeited to the King, who as eagerly and gree- "dily ſwallow'd them for his own. This very "Act, in or near this Exigence of Time, ſo im- "bitter'd the Spirits of the Citizens, that though "they were ſingularly invited for Loan of Monies, "and had as great Plenty in their Poſſeſſions as "ever, yet they wou'd not contribute any Aſſi- "ſtance for Money againſt the Scots." Echard and Clarendon cannot find Words good enough for this Star-Chamber, and this King's Juſtice and Piety.

" Ireland be effectually proſecuted, &c." This Petition was preſented by Sir Thomas Wroth, Burgeſs for Bridgwater in Somerſetſhire, and the reſt of the Repreſentatives of that County, the Knight introducing it with a Speech, which began thus: Mr. Speaker, The High and Glorious Aſſembly of the three Eſtates in Parliament, hath a near Reſemblance to the Day of Judgment; for in Parliament we are call'd to Account for our Actions, both Good and Evil; here we hear the Voice of Ite and Venite: From this Venite, the Knights, Gentlemen, and Freeholders of the County of Somerſet, have been encourag'd to intruſt us humbly to preſent their Petition: He then excuſes its coming late, and not attended with a multitudinous Troop, on Account of the Diſtance of the Petitioners from London; but he ſaid, We have Hearts and Hands as zealous and ready to maintain the Contents of our Petition, as any of the preceding Counties. We ſee then, that theſe Addreſſes were the Vox Populi, and not the Effect of Artifice and Impoſture, as Mr. Archdeacon repreſents them; and that in Particular, the Knights, Gentlemen, and principal Inhabitants of this Rich and Spacious County, in the Behalf of many Thouſands, addreſs'd the Parliament to prepare for their Defence, though the Lord Clarendon affirms, they were there One and All for the King. Echard mentions this noble Knight in his noble Hiſtory, not at all to his Honour, as will be ſeen in the Sequel.

Arms, &c. ſent to Whitehall.

Before we proceed further, we muſt reflect a little on Mr. Archdeacon's Repreſentation of the King's low Condition at this Time. He had lately been ſupply'd with Arms out of the Tower. Ruſhworth informs us, that the very Day he enter'd the Houſe, there were privately brought to Whitehall 100 Arms, 200 Barrels of Powder, Match and Shot proportionable; which was a ſufficient Magazine for a King who intended to live in Peace with his Subjects. Echard means, he had not furniſh'd himſelf with warlike Stores for Sieges and Battels, which no body then thought of, if they did not think of it at Whitehall. His Words are, He had neither Arms, Money, nor Credit, therefore nothing but a Senſe of Honour, Loyalty or Gratitude, could have brought ſo many to join him in the enſuing War. After this vain and groundleſs Reflection, ſee what General Ludlow ſays, who, as an Hiſtorian, is as much ſuperior to him, as the Cauſe of Liberty is above that of Slavery. He is opening the Civil War as well as the Archdeacon; " I thought the Juſtice of the Cauſe I had engag'd " in to be ſo evident, that I could not imagine it " to be attended with much Difficulty: For tho' " I ſuppos'd that many of the Clergy, who had " been the principal Authors of the Miſeries, " together with ſome of the Courtiers, and ſuch " as abſolutely depended upon the King for their " Subſiſtance, as alſo ſome Foreigners would ad- " here to him; yet I could not think that many " of the People who had long been oppreſs'd with " heavy Burthens, and now with great Difficulty " obtain'd a Parliament compos'd of ſuch Perſons " as were willing to run Hazards to procure a laſt- " ing Settlement for the Nation, would have been " either ſuch Enemies to themſelves, or ſo un- " grateful to thoſe who had truſted them, as not " to ſtand by them to the utmoſt of their Power. " At leaſt, though ſome might not have ſo much " Reſolution and Courage, as to venture all with " them, yet that they would not be ſo treacherous " aud unworthy to ſtrengthen the Hands of the " Enemy againſt thoſe who had the Laws of God, " Nature and Reaſon, as well as thoſe of the Land, " on their Side." Every Word in Clarendon and Echard, is the Reverſe of this. General Ludlow then gives the Reaſon why the Lord Falkland, Sir John Colepepyr, Sir Ralph Hopton, the Lord Capel, Sir John Strangeways, and a good Number of worthy Gentlemen of the Houſe of Commons, and a great Nnmber of Country Gentlemen deſerted the Country Intereſt, and fought for the Court in the Civil War. A.D. 1642.

The Earl of Clarendon values his Cauſe very much on the Offer of ſome briſk Gentlemen, but nameleſs, of the Inns of Court, to be a Guard to the King. He did not know, or wou'd not tell us, that ſome other as briſk Gentlemen of the ſame Inns, offer'd to be a Guard to the Parliament; as Mr. Rich Fiennes, Son to the Lord Viſcount Say, Mr. Charles Fleetwood, whom the Earl calls a Trooper, Son to Sir Miles Fleetwood, Mr. Edmund Ludlow, Son to Sir Henry Ludlow, all of the Inns of Court, and many young Gentlemen more of thoſe Inns, who procur'd an experienc'd Officer to inſtruct them in the uſe of Arms, and prepare them for the Parliament's Service.

General Ludlow omits one ſtrong Reaſon why ſo many Gentlemen of Worth deſerted the Service of their Country, beſides the Digbies, the Hydes, and others, from whom no better cou'd be expected, and eſpous'd a Quarrel they had till then abhorr'd, Arbitrary Power, and Prieſtcraft; and that was the Jealouſy they had conceiv'd one of another. Mr. Pym, Mr. Hollis, Mr Hampden, and a few more leading Members, had apparently the Authority and Management in the Houſe of Commons, where the others were like to act under-Parts only; but if they betray'd their Party, and revolted to the King, they might be Chancellors and Secretaries, and Comptrollers, and Barons, and Earls, and what not. Poor Conſiderations! and ſuch as large and generous Minds deſpiſe, if not to be acquir'd without ſacrificing the Publick to private Intereſt.

Upon the King's abſenting himſelf from his Parliament, Mr. Acherley obſerves, The Houſe of Commons were ever after oblig'd to ſtand upon their own Defence, and to provide themſelves with Guards, to prevent the like Surprize. Thus do reaſonable Men argue on the Neceſſity the Lords and Commons found themſelves in, to prepare to defend their Seſſion againſt future Inſults, and to be arm'd if War was made upon them, for which they knew Preparations were making. " In this Poſture of Af" fairs, ſays the learned Lawyer laſt mention'd,
" the Miniſters held ſecret Counſels with the " Queen at Windſor, which were guided by her
" Popiſh Cabal; for the Nuntio and the Prieſts
" ſatisfy'd the Queen, and ſhe the King, as Father
" Orleans tells us, That the Treaſon of calling in the
" Scots, ſhould be proſecuted with War, and Force
" of Arms." The French Jeſuit, who conſulted our abdicated King in his Hiſtory, confeſſes that King Charles had reſolv'd upon an Offenſive War before the Parliament had taken any Step towards a defenſive one: For that End, it was concluded that the Queen, under the Umbrage of conducting her Daughter, the Princeſs Mary, lately marry'd to the Prince of Orange, to her Husband, ſhould take that Opportunity to tranſport her ſelf to Holland, and at the ſame Time to negotiate the Supplies of Men and Money: That the King ſhou'd retire to York,

A.D.1642. there to make his first Levies, and seize the Magazine at Hull, but proceed slowly, which occasion'd the many dilatory Messages, and evasive Answers the Parliament receiv'd from him. Here I think the French Jesuit has determin'd the Beginning of the War, and that the King had resolv'd to reduce the Parliament by Force of Arms, before ever they had come to any formal Resolution to defend themselves. The two Houses order'd Thanks to the City of London, for their friendly Behaviour towards the Committee, and the accus'd Members; as also to the Masters of Ships, and Mariners, for their Kindness. Colonel Skippon was appointed to attend with such a Guard of the Train'd-Bands as he thought sufficient, which was two Companies, every Day at Westminster: The King propos'd 200 of them under the Command of the Earl of Lindsey, but they excus'd it, and took Skippon for their Captain.

Buckinghamshire Petition.

The next Day, several Knights, Gentlemen, and Freeholders, to the Number of 5000, chiefly from Buckinghamshire, came to London, riding every one with a printed Protestation in his Hat, and presented a Petition to the House of Commons, complaining of the King's late Breach of the Privileges of Parliament, and offering to live and dye in their Defence; for which they receiv'd the Thanks of that House, and afterwards of the House of Lords, for the like Address to them. They then sent eight of the Petitioners to Windsor with a Petition to the King, in which they declare their Astonishment at a Charge of High-Treason against their Representative Mr. Hampden, which was to wound them thro' his Sides. They desir'd that the Privileges of Parliament might be secur'd, and Delinquents brought to Punishment. The King told them he had wav'd the Accusation of the five Members, and did not conceive that their Crimes cou'd in any Sort reflect upon those his Subjects. But the Parliament was not satisfy'd with waving the Accusation for the present only, since he said in his Message he wou'd still proceed against them. There is not a Step taken but there seems to be Fatality in it; they therefore resolv'd to begin first, and fell upon Sir Edward Herbert Attorney-General, whom they impeach'd of High-Crimes and Misdemeanors, for drawing up a false and scandalous Charge against the Lord Kimbolton and the five Members. Both Lords and Commons join'd in a Petition to the King, which was sent by the Earl of Newport and the Lord Seymour, to be inform'd of the Proof against those Members, and to know the Names of their Accusers. To which his Majesty reply'd, that he having found Cause wholly to desist from proceeding against the accus'd Members, he had commanded the Attorney-General to proceed no farther. However, the two Houses proceeded farther against the Attorney-General; and the Lords having consider'd the Impeachment of the Commons, voted, That he shou'd be incapable of being a Member, Assistant, or Reader in either House of Parliament, and of all Offices saving that of Attorney-General, and be committed Prisoner to the Fleet during their Pleasure.

Herbert Attorney-General.

Digby in Arms at Kingston.

Rushworth says, "Information was given to the "House that the Lord Digby with Colonel Lunsford and other disbanded Officers and Reformades, have with Troops of Horse appear'd in "an hostile Manner at Kingston in Surrey, where "the Magazine of Arms for that Part of the County lies; and a Committee being appointed to "examine into the Matter, they reported, That "there were about two hundred Men at Kingston, "most of them Officers; that the Town was full of "Horse; that they have Pistols, and carry themselves in a disorderly Manner to the Terror of the "People; that the Lord Digby was there on Horseback with Pistols; that Colonel Lunsford and two "others of that Name were there also; and that "there were two Cart-loads of Ammunition. The Action was so near London, that if there had not been two hundred arm'd Men at Kingston; if the Town had not been full of Horse; if Digby and those Ruffians the Lunsfords had not behav'd to the Terror of the People, this Report of the Committee of Parliament must have been a Jest, and such a Discredit to all their Reports, as wou'd have render'd them incredible and contemptible. The Earl of Clarendon, as usual, is the Reverse of all this too: He affirms the Lord Digby was not there on Horseback, that he came in a Coach with six Horses only to visit Colonel Lunsford. He is mightily improv'd in his Company as well as Politicks. Echard backs this righteous Evidence with a positive Number; the six Coach-Horses were all the Horses that appear'd there. We are like to have hopeful History from them in the Course of the Civil War, which they begin so cleverly. General Ludlow assures us, those that the King had formerly entertain'd at Whitehall, appear'd at Kingston in a military Posture with the Lord Digby and Colonel Lunsford at the Head of them. The two Houses having Notice thereof, desir'd the King to disperse the said Troops, and to return to the Parliament. Lunsford was taken and sent to the Tower, and the Lord Digby accus'd of High-Treason, but he avoided the Punishment by flying the Kingdom. The Parliament order'd the Train'd-Bands of Sussex and Hampshire to suppress those Forces, as Rushworth terms them, and prevent the carrying of Arms and Ammunition to Portsmouth; the Governor of which Fortress Colonel Goring, was requir'd not to deliver it up, nor receive any Forces into it without their Consent.

Portsmouth.

The Debate about securing Portsmouth, gave Occasion to another about Hull; and at the Conclusion of it, Sir Philip Stapleton was sent to the Lords to concur with the Commons in an Order, "That some of the Militia of Yorkshire near the "Town of Hull, shou'd be put into the said Town "under the Command of Sir John Hotham, for "securing the King's Magazine there; and that "he, or whoever he shou'd appoint under him, "shou'd not deliver it up without Consent of both "Houses, to which their Lordships agreed." The Care of the Parliament to secure that Magazine, was on certain Intelligence that the Earl of Newcastle was secretly withdrawn from London with the same Commission from the King, who had also given a like Commission to Colonel Legg to possess himself of Newcastle, before the two Houses came to any Resolution about Hull. The Earl of Newport Master of the Ordnance, and the Lieutenant of the Tower, were requir'd not to let any of the Stores there be remov'd, and Colonel Skippon was order'd to appoint a sufficient Guard both by Land and by Water about the Tower, to prevent the carrying off any Ordnance or Ammunition. A Parcel of great Saddles were discover'd at Kingston for the use of Echard's Coach and Six Horses. What Patience shou'd one be endow'd with to deal with such History! The House was inform'd by Mr. Bagshaw of Windsor, where the Court then was, that he saw divers Troops of Horse hovering about that Place, and that a Waggon loaden with Ammunition was arriv'd there, where were about four hundred Horse and forty Officers, to shew how far the Court were from making any military Preparations. Upon this an Order was made for ten Horsemen to patroll always, and give Intelligence if any Forces approach'd near the City, and for the like Service Boats and small Vessels were order'd to ply up and down in the Thames. A Committee was appointed the 14th of January, three Days after the King left London, to consider of some Heads for putting the Kingdom into a Posture of Defence; Sir Richard Cave, Sir Philip Stapleton, Sir Henry Vane, Sir John Colepepyr, Mr. Pierpoint, Mr. Hollis, Mr. St. John, Mr. Glyn.

He makes the like Sport with the Petitions the Houſe of Commons receiv'd from the ſeveral Counties and Cities which we have already mention'd. He repreſents them as Trick. The Counties of Eſſex, Hertford, Berks, Surrey, and moſt of the Counties and Cities of England, ſent up Petitions one after another to the ſame Purpoſe as that from the Lord-Mayor, Aldermen, and Common-Council of the City of London; who being deſir'd to lend 100000 Pounds for the Relief of Ireland, gave theſe Reaſons for the Obſtructions the Loan met with.

of the Knights, Gentlemen, and Freeholders of Hertfordſhire, "acknowledge the great Care of the Par-"liament for the Good of the Commonwealth in "procuring the Execution of exemplary Juſtice, in "putting down arbitrary Courts, Ship-Money, Mo-"nopolies, and other illegal Impoſitions." They add, That the malignant Party of Prelates and Papiſts, and their Adherents, have by their manifold wicked Practices and Deſigns, endeavour'd to hinder all thorough Reformation in Church and Commonwealth, and ſtifle all good Bills in their Birth. Of this Party moſt certainly was the Earl of Clarendon, which will not be deny'd; and how fairly he has repreſented thoſe good Engliſhmen who promoted that thorough Reformation, may eaſily be imagin'd as well as ſeen. The Men of Hertfordſhire pray that the Kingdom might be put into a Poſture of Defence, the Privileges of Parliament repair'd and thoroughly vindicated; that the Votes of the Popiſh Lords and Biſhops might be taken away, ſpeedy and ſtrong Relief ſent to Ireland, and Delinquents brought to further Puniſhment. Theſe Petitions were read in the Houſe of Lords by Mr. Pym, who explain'd them in an eloquent Speech, which wou'd be an Ornament to Hiſtory, but I have not Room for Speeches, Declarations, and Meſſages at length. The Earl of Clarendon does not loſe a Word of them; but, as his good Friend Warwick obſerves, he was a great Dealer in Words himſelf, and took much Delight in it. Mr. Pym ſpeaking of Evil Counſellors, of whom that Lord was always underſtood to be one, ſaid, "Their Influence hath "been the Cauſe of the Preparation for a War "with Scotland, of the procuring a Rebellion in "Ireland, of corrupting Religion, ſuppreſſing the "Liberty of this Kingdom, and of many fearful "and horrid Attempts, to the ſubverting the very "Being of Parliaments, which was the only hope-"ful Means of oppoſing and preventing all the "reſt; and this appears to be a moſt predominant "Evil of the Time, whereat we need not won-"der, when we conſider how Counſellors have "been preferr'd and prepar'd. I appeal to your "Lordſhips own Conſciences, whether the giving "and the countenancing of Evil Counſels, hath "not been almoſt the only Way to farther Ad-"vancement." This evil Counſel is in the Earl's Hiſtory, the Wiſdom, Virtue, and Sobriety of the Nation. Mr. Pym had the Thanks of the Houſe for his Speech; and the King hearing of it, ſent a Meſſage to them concerning a Paſſage, that ſince the Ports had been ſtopp'd againſt all Iriſh Papiſts by both Houſes, many Officers now in the Head of the REBELS had been ſuffer'd to paſs by his Majeſty's immediate Warrant, which he deſir'd might be prov'd; and the Commons in their Anſwer prov'd it, naming Colonel Butler a Papiſt, Unkle to the Marquis of Ormond, Sir George Hamilton another Papiſt, the Lord Nutterfield's Son, and ſeveral others. To which his Majeſty reply'd in general only, that thoſe Papiſts who had had Paſſes, were not in the Rebellion, and that he expected there may be Warineſs us'd before ſuch publick Aſperſions be laid upon him. In a Meſſage of the 20th of January, he adviſ'd them to digeſt into one Body all the Grievances of the Kingdom, and to ſend them to him, promiſing his favourable Aſſent to thoſe Means which ſhou'd be found moſt effectual for Redreſs, wherein he wou'd not only equal but exceed the moſt indulgent Princes. This is what Father Orleans call'd proceeding ſlowly, and it was by ſuch flattering Meſſages as theſe, that he gradually gain'd over great Numbers of Lords, Gentlemen, and others, who, without ſeeing one Grievance effectually redreſs'd, after they drew their Swords for him, continu'd fighting in hopes of ſo weakening the Parliament, that the King might have it in his Power to break or keep the Laws according to his Will and Pleaſure.

A.D. 1642.

On the 28th of January the Houſe of Commons ſent an Anſwer to this moſt healing Meſſage, That they return'd his Majeſty moſt humble Thanks for his gracious Meſſage, which they reſolv'd to take into ſpeedy and moſt ſerious Conſideration; and to enable them with Security to diſcharge their Duties, they petition'd, "That the Tower and other princi-"pal Forts of the Kingdom may be put into the "Hands of ſuch Perſons as his Parliament cou'd "confide in, without which, in all human Reaſon, "the great Diſtraction of the Nation muſt needs "overwhelm it with Miſery and Ruin. To which the King reply'd, "that he thought the Militia to "be lawfully ſubject to no Command but his own, "and therefore wou'd not let it out of his Hands." Father Orleans informs us, 'twas the Reſolution of the Queen's Junto to deny all Particulars. "That he "had preferr'd to the Lieutenancy of the Tower a "Perſon of known Honour, Fortune, and unque-"ſtionable Reputation, and that he wou'd prefer "none but ſuch to the Command of his Forts "and Caſtles, yet wou'd not intruſt the Power of "conferring thoſe Places and Dignities from him-"ſelf, being deriv'd to him from his Anceſtors by "the fundamental Laws of the Kingdom." This is all along the Cant of the Hiſtory of the Rebellion. The ſovereign Power when exercis'd according to Law, as it has been in all the glorious Reigns ſince the Revolution, and was never ſo exercis'd in any other Reign ſince Queen Elizabeth's, is doubtleſs one of the fundamental Laws of the Kingdom, and the beſt Security the Subjects have for their Rights, Liberties, and Properties; but in the Abuſe of it, and when exerted againſt the Laws, which is the well-known Caſe of this Government, it becomes tyrannical, and Tyranny is a Contradiction to the Fundamentals of Government. According to Law, the Laws of the Land, and the like, are every where in Clarendon's Hiſtory, as if Miniſters were to be as well protected in the Breach of them as in the Execution. The

*A.D.*1642. The King's Denial of this reaſonable Requeſt alarm'd the Houſe of Peers, who till then had not meddled much with this Matter, but now they join'd with the Houſe of Commons in a ſecond Petition the 2d of February, for putting the Tower, Forts, Caſtles, and the whole Militia of England into the Hands of ſuch Perſons as they ſhou'd recommend to him. Echard now corroborates the Evidence of the Jeſuit Orleans, and confeſſes the King dealt doubly with the two Houſes in his Anſwer, and ſaid what he never was poſitive to conſent to, Things not being yet ready. He promis'd to put ſuch Perſons into thoſe Places as both Houſes ſhould recommend to him, with a Proviſo, That he had no Exceptions againſt them; which were eaſy to be made againſt any Man who had made Exceptions againſt his Government.

Tower.

After a long Debate about the Lieutenancy of the Tower, the Houſe reſolv'd to move the King, that Sir John Biron be put out, and Sir John Coniers be put in, which was granted. The Archdeacon's Comment upon this, is another ſhining Inſtance of his exquiſite Judgment in the Choice of his Authors: It was a plain Proof that at this Time he had no Thoughts of a War; which is agreeable to what the old Earl of Briſtol ſaid, "That nothing ſo much "terrify'd his Conſcience from taking Arms a-"gainſt the King, or more confirm'd him in his "Duty of adhering to him, than the certain and "infallible Knowledge he had of the King's unfeign'd "Deſires and Endeavours to have prevented the "War; an Authority that will ſtand good againſt "a thouſand Opinions and Conjectures." This at firſt ſight is falſe, and yet with what Confidence he tells it. The Earl of Briſtol cou'd not know it, and therefore did not know it; for there is not one ſober Author but aſſerts the quite contrary. Whitlocke, the faireſt of all Writers, ſays, The Queen obtain'd Leave of the King, who alſo acquainted the Parliament, that his Daughter was to go to Holland to her Husband the Prince of Orange, and that her Mother deſir'd to go with her; accordingly the Queen went over with her Daughter into Holland, and carry'd with her all her own and the King's Jewels, not leaving behind the Jewels of the Crown; that with them, and the Aſſiſtance of the Prince of Orange, a ſufficient Party might be rais'd for the King. Another Author writes, "The Queen paſs'd into Holland un-"der Pretext of keeping her Daughter Company "to her Husband, but ſhe carry'd with her the "Crown Jewels of England, and pawn'd them "there, whereby ſhe bought Arms for that War "that enſu'd, and was it ſeems then deſign'd by "the King againſt the Parliament."

I have ſeen an Account of the Sums borrow'd in Holland to buy Arms and Ammunition for the War intended againſt the Parliament.

Here's above 100000 Pounds borrow'd to make Proviſions for War, and all with a ſincere Intention to keep the Peace. The Abſurdity of this Pretence is ridiculous, and it is further prov'd by the ſending Cockrain to Denmark to deſire Aſſiſtance of that King before the War commenc'd. The Subſtance of his Inſtructions was, "To in-"form the King's Unkle of a dangerous Combi-"nation of his Majeſty's Subjects againſt him, "and to demand his Aſſiſtance againſt them, who "intended to ſet up a Commonwealth and Preſ-"bytery, whereas Epiſcopacy is the chief Column "of the Crown: That his Majeſty has been forc'd "to forſake London, and ſend the Queen to Hol-"land: That the States of Holland have agreed to "give her Majeſty the Queen a Convoy of the "greateſt Part of their Fleet: That the Parlia-"ment deſign to aſſiſt the Dutch to take away his "Daniſh Majeſty's Cuſtoms of the Sound; and in "order to extirpate the Royal Blood of England, "they are endeavouring to baſtardize all the Royal "Family, by proving the King of England's Mo-"ther, Siſter to the King of Denmark, to be an "Adultereſs, and her Children illegitimate; and to "enable him to puniſh them, he deſires his Da-"niſh Majeſty to lend him 100000 Pounds on "Jewels, and to ſend him 6000 Muskets, 1500 "Horſe Arms, and 20 Pieces of Field Artillery "with ſome Horſemen only: That there is in Hol-"land a great Collar of Rubies, and another of "Rubies and Pearl, if he will lend more Money "upon them, &c.

The King in a printed Declaraton from Newark, March 9. 164½, tells the Parliament, Whatſoever you are advertiz'd from Paris, &c. of foreign Aids, we are confident no ſober honeſt Men in our Kingdom can believe that we are ſo deſperate or ſo ſenſeleſs to entertain ſuch Deſigns as wou'd not only bury this our Kingdom in certain Deſtruction and Ruin, but our Name and Poſterity in perpetual Scorn and Infamy. This Negotiation of Cockran's is not deny'd. You have the King's own Reflections on ſuch Negotiations; and after this, What can one ſay too coarſely of the Lord Clarendon's and Archdeacon Echard's Hiſtories, which are the Reverſe of it? Leti agrees with Orleans; and being both Papiſts, Mr. Archdeacon himſelf will not expect better Authority. The King ſtaid till he had ſent away the Queen to Holland, after which he declar'd he wou'd not do what the Parliament deſir'd, and qu'il ne leur avoit rien accorde que par contrainte, and that he had granted them nothing but what was forc'd from him. Ludlow, "Both King and Queen "deſign'd not only to withdraw, but alſo to make "what Preparations they cou'd for the raiſing an "Army againſt the Parliament; in order to which "the Queen carry'd with her the Jewels of the "Crown, and pawn'd them in Holland for Arms "and Money." The Genius, Learning, Knowledge, Quality, and Fortune of this Hiſtorian, is ſuperior to any Compariſon with the Author of the Hiſtory of the Rebellion; and there is nothing to be objected againſt his Authority, but that he was a Commonwealth's Man; which in the Earl of Clarendon and the Archdeacon's Senſe, is worſe than a Laplander or Canibal. Larrey repreſents the Matter thus; "According to the King's own "Hiſtorian the Lord Clarendon, the Appearance "of his deſigning a War was ſtrong againſt him, "from his Deſign to ſeize on Portſmouth and Hull. "The Parliament knew very well that it was re-"ſolv'd on to ſend the Queen to Portſmouth, the "Governor of which Town was in her Intereſts, "and the King himſelf was to ſeize on Hull. " certainly known, was the Occaſion of its not " ſucceeding; and the Queen being afraid of a " Proſecution, avoided it by going out of the " Kingdom; and avoided too the Indignity of a " Flight, by the Pretence of going with her Daugh- " ter into Holland." Letters were intercepted from the Lord Digby to the Queen and Secretary Nicholas, dated at Middleburgh in Zealand, adviſing the King to betake himſelf to ſome Place of Strength, where he and others might ſafely reſort to him, and he doubted not but that he ſhou'd do him acceptable Service. The Son knew the King was about entering upon the War, but the Father the Earl of Briſtol, knew certainly and infallibly that it was his unfeign'd Deſires to prevent it. We will not believe Digby's offer of acceptable Service, was of the ſame Kind as his Offer concerning the Five Members, whom he wou'd have murder'd if they wou'd not have yielded to him. Echard indeed ſays only, He offer'd to fetch them alive or dead. Theſe Letters were intercepted a few Days before the Departure of the Queen. The Parliament ſent to the King to deſire he wou'd not correſpond with Digby nor any other whom his great Council had proclaim'd Traytors.

The Houſe of Commons were buſy in Debates touching the ordering the Militia of the ſeveral Counties; in which ſome declar'd their Opinions, that the Power of the Militia was ſolely in the King, and ought to be left to him; and that the Parliament never did or ought to medale with the ſame. Others were of Opinion that the King had not this Power in him, but that it was ſolely in the Parliament; and that if the King refus'd to order the ſame according to the Advice of the Parliament, that then by Law they might do it without him; which was moved to be now done by the Parliament, the King having deny'd all their Petitions for ſettling the Militia as they deſir'd; the Motion being ſeconded and well ſupported, the Houſe of Commons paſs'd an Ordnance the 2d of March, to which the Lords conſented, for ordering of the Militia of the Kingdom of England and the Dominion of Wales. By which they appointed Lieutenants for the ſeveral Counties and Towns as follows;

LONDON.

Sir John Gayer, Sir Jacob Garret, Thomas Atkin Eſq; Sir John Wollaſton, John Warner Eſq; John Towſe Eſq; Serjeant-Major General Skippon, Randall Manwaring Eſq; Mr. William Gibbs, Mr. John Fowke, Mr. James Bence, Mr. Francis Peck, Mr. Samuel Warren, Mr. James Ruſſel, Mr. Nathaniel Wright, Mr. William Barkley, Mr. Alexander Normanſton, Mr. Stephen Eſtwick, Mr. Owen Roe.

This Ordnance, with a Petition to paſs it, was ſent to the King by the Earls of Carliſle and Monmouth, who gave for Anſwer, that the Queen being upon her Departure for Holland, he muſt reſpite a particular Reply till he return'd from accompanying her to Dover; which both Houſes took as a ſort of Denial, and petition'd him for a ſpeedy Anſwer, which he return'd the 28th of February by the Earl of Portland, Sir Thomas Heal, and Sir William Saville, who brought him the Petition, containing in Subſtance, That the Ordnance was a Breach of his hereditary Right. He had before ſent for the Earl of Eſſex Lord-Chamberlain, and the Earl of Holland Groom of the Stole, to attend him, but they excus'd themſelves with the Neceſſity of performing their Duties in Parliament, for which they were both immediately turn'd out of their Places as they expected. His Majeſty alſo ſent for his two Sons from Hampton-Court, and the Parliament cou'd not but take it as an Indication of his intending an open Rupture. Their laſt Petition about the Militia Ordnance, intimated, That if he refus'd to paſs that Bill, they ſhou'd be conſtrain'd to ſettle that neceſſary Buſineſs without him. Had he really had an unfeign'd Deſire, and did ſeriouſly endeavour to have prevented the War, inſtead of caviling evaſive Anſwers, he wou'd have paſs'd this Ordnance which was but temporary; and the Lords who were appointed Lieutenants were Perſons whom he might as well have confided in as the Parliament, as appear'd by their future Conduct.

The Houſe of Commons appointed a Committee to draw up a Declaration of the Cauſes of their Fears and Jealouſies, which was deliver'd to the King at Newmarket March the 9th, by the Earls of Pembroke and Holland. In the mean time they receiv'd Advice of Negotiations with foreign Princes to aſſiſt the King againſt them; and both Houſes commanded the Earl of Northumberland Lord High-Admiral, to fit out ſome Men of War for

*A.D.*1642. the Defence of the Kingdom, Beacons were now made, Sea-Marks ſet up, and Expreſſes diſpatch'd to the Lieutenants of the ſeveral Counties to have an Eye on the Enemies of the Conſtitution. The Declaration laſt mention'd was read to the King by the Earl of Holland. The firſt Article was, His attempting to incenſe the late northern Army againſt the Parliament. 2. Jermyn's Treaſons and Tranſportation by his Majeſty's Warrant. When that was read, the King cry'd, 'Tis falſe. The Petition deliver'd to Captain Legg with the King's own Hand, and ſign'd C. R. That's a Lye, ſaid his Majeſty; ſo unfeign'd was he in his Endeavours to prevent a War. When he was inform'd it related not to the Date, but to the Execution of the Warrant, he ſaid, It might have been better expreſs'd then. 3. The Buſineſs of the Lord Kimbolton and the Five Members. 4. The ſuſpicious Deſigns of a Guard about his Perſon. 5. The underhand promoting of the Iriſh Rebellion. 6. The ordering Sir John Pennington to land the Lord Digby in Zealand, from thence to alienate the King from his Parliament, and to procure for him foreign Aſſiſtance; which appears the more credible by his Removal with the Prince, and the many Advertiſements from Rome, Venice, Paris, and other Parts, of Aid to be given to the King, in reference to ſome Deſign againſt Religion and the Parliament. 7. They deſire his Majeſty to put away his wicked Counſellors, and to put his Truſt in his two Houſes; which if he wou'd do, they wou'd ſacrifice their Lives and Fortunes for the Honour and Greatneſs of his Majeſty and his Royal Poſterity. When the Declaration was read, the King ſaid, I cou'd not have believ'd the Parliament wou'd have ſent me ſuch a one, if I had not ſeen it brought by ſuch Perſons of Honour. I am ſorry for the Parliament, but glad I have it, for I doubt not to ſatisfy my People by it, tho' I am confident the greater Part is ſo already; and that the Parliament hath had worſe Informations than I have had Counſels: What is it I have deny'd them? The Earl of Pembroke reply'd, the Militia, and endeavour'd to perſuade the King to return to Whitehall, which was the ſureſt Way to have prevented a War. His Majeſty anſwer'd, I wiſh you had given me Cauſe, but I am ſure this Declaration is not the Way to it, and in all Ariſtotle's Rhetorick there is no ſuch Argument of Perſuaſion. The Earl of Pembroke told him the Parliament humbly beſought him to come near them. His Majeſty reply'd in the Terms of the Declaration, Words are not ſufficient. The Earl of Pembroke then mov'd him to expreſs what he wou'd have. The King ſaid, I wou'd whip a Boy in Weſtminſter-School that cou'd not tell by my Anſwer. His Lordſhip then propos'd to ſettle the Militia as in the Ordnance for a Time: The King cry'd, By God not for an Hour. How unfeignedly did he deſire to prevent a War! His Majeſty added, You have ask'd that of me in this, which was never ask'd of any King, and with which I will not truſt my Wife and Children. As to the Buſineſs of Ireland, he ſaid, It will never be done in the Way you are in: Four hundred will never do the Work. Echard affirms there were not many above one hundred in the Houſe. If I were truſted with it, I wou'd pawn my Head to end it; and tho' I am a Beggar myſelf, yet by God I can find Money for that Work. This Swearing before a Company of Puritans was extreamly decent and diſcreet, as is the whole Dialogue, if one had room to animadvert upon it.

King's Diſcourſe with the Earl of Pembroke.

Sir Ralph Hopton deſerts.

Parl. Chron.

Sir Edw. Deering.

In the Debate of this Declaration, Sir Ralph Hopton deſerted his old Friends, and ſpoke againſt it with ſo much Violence that he was committed to the Tower; which rough Treatment was ſuch a Conviction to his Underſtanding and Conſcience, that he abandon'd the Country Intereſt as long as he liv'd. Sir Edward Deering growing cool in the Debate about Biſhops, wherein he had been at firſt ſo hot, and afterwards inſtigating the Kentiſh-Men to petition againſt the Militia Bill, was expell'd the Houſe and committed to the Tower. Echard ſays it was for publiſhing a Book of the Speeches he had made in Parliament; whereas it was rather for a Speech he printed which he had never made, and for which his Book was burnt by the Hands of the common Hangman. Echard miſrepreſents alſo the Puniſhment of Edward Sanderford a Laudæan Taylor, which according to him was much more cruel than what was inflicted on Dr. Leighton, Mr. Lilburne, &c. for only calling the Earls of Eſſex and Warwick TRAYTORS, and wiſhing King Pym, and Sir John Hotham hang'd; whereas it was for calling the Lords and Commons aſſembled in Parliament Traytors; for which he was, 1ſt, Fin'd 100 Marks, Dr. Leighton was fin'd 10000 Pounds; 2d, To ſtand in the Pillory, Dr. Leighton to be twice pillory'd, and to have both his Ears cut off; 3d, To be whipp'd at the Cart's-Tail, Dr. Leighton to be twice whipp'd, to have his Noſe ſlit, and his Face ſtigmatiz'd; yet the reverend Hiſtorian reflects upon it with his wonted Sincerity, that the Taylor's Sentence was more ſevere than had been ever pronounced in the Star-Chamber, where Dr. Leighton was ſentenced. He takes no Notice of the Offence of one Browning an Eſſex Parſon, who Sir Simon d'Ewes ſaid, was a notable Altar-Adorer, in ſaying, There were forty more Members of the Houſe of Commons, beſides the five accus'd Members, who were TRAYTORS; and that the King's entring the Houſe was a juſt Act. There wou'd be no End of it, if we ſhou'd mention all ſuch Offences of ſuch Parſons as Browning, who were in a perpetual Rage againſt the Parliament for aſſerting the Rights and Liberties of the People, and reforming the Abuſes in Church and State. Dr. Calamy tells us that Multitudes of Petitions came from all Quarters againſt their Miniſters, charging them with Inſufficiency, Falſe Doctrine, Illegal Innovations, or Scandal. John White Eſq; of the Temple, Chairman of the Committee of Reformation, publiſh'd a Century of ſcandalous Miniſters, which was afterwards follow'd with a ſecond Century; both were fill'd with moſt abominable Particularities, the concealing which had been a much greater Service to Religion than their Publication, which was but making Sport for Atheiſts, Papiſts, and Profane. Now ſee Mr. Archdeacon's Sincerity, They took Care to place ſuch Preachers and Lecturers in the moſt populous Places, as were well known to abhor the Church of England; many of whom were impos'd upon the Pariſhes by the Houſe of Commons; all canonical Clergymen were induſtriouſly diſcountenanced, impriſon'd, or forc'd to a tedious Attendance upon the Houſe under the unhappy Name of Scandalous Miniſters, tho' they were ſo ſcandalous as to make their very Lives a Jeſt to Atheiſts and Papiſts. What ado does he make with his Canonical Clergymen! He has almoſt provok'd me to name one in our Time, who liv'd ſo ſcandalouſly even in Goal where he was a Priſoner for Debt, that his fellow Priſoners petition'd to be rid of him. But I am ſenſible People's ill Nature is apt to throw on Generals what is meant of Particulars, ſo I ſhall ſay no more of it.

Bad Clergy

The King, in his Abſence, granted a Commiſſion for paſſing two Bills. The firſt, To take away the Votes of Biſhops in Parliament, and all temporal Juriſdictions and Offices, as to be Privy-Counſellors, Juſtices of the Peace, &c. from them, and all others in Holy Orders: The ſecond was, for preſſing of Soldiers for the Service of Ireland. The Archdeacon ſpeaks of the firſt Bill, as if all Nature had ſuffer'd Shipwreck, and the whole State was involv'd in the temporal Intereſts of the Clergy. How much better does a Layman, the Lord Wiquefort, underſtand his own Function than himſelf. " There are ſome Clergymen, who look " upon their meddling with temporal Affairs, to " be againſt God's Command, and contrary to " the Bill againſt Biſhops Votes paſt.

A.D. 1642. "the Precepts of Chriſtianity. God would not allow the Levites to have any Share with the other Tribes, that their Aſſiduity and conſtant Attendance on the Service of the Altar, might not be interrupted by the Care they were oblig'd to take to till their Lands, and preſerve their Eſtates. It is for this Reaſon he alſo ſays, He will be their Portion and their Inheritance: Our Lord Jeſus Chriſt ſays alſo, His Kingdom is not of this World: That thoſe who follow him, muſt renounce all Things, and caſt off all Sollicitude for temporal Things, that they may with leſs Incumbrance travel in the Path they are to follow, during the whole Courſe of their Lives. There is no ſerving of two Maſters, nor dividing the Heart, which has been once given, and entirely devoted to God. At Venice the Clergy have no Share in the Management of State Affairs, &c." I do not wonder the Archdeacon's Head had no Room for ſuch Reflections; but it is matter of Wonderment that Biſhops, ſuch as Laud and Juxon, ſhould, inſtead of renouncing all worldly Concerns, take upon them the Management of the Exciſe and Treaſury. The King, ſays our Reverend Author, diveſted himſelf of the Regal Authority, by paſſing the Bill to take away Biſhops Votes, by which Foundations were ſhaken; they had before been as much ſhaken, when twenty-ſeven Abbots and Priors were turn'd out of the Houſe of Peers. It wounded his Majeſty's Conſcience, which receiv'd no Wound at all when he utterly aboliſh'd Epiſcopacy in Scotland about Six Months before. Were there ever ſuch Arguers? And how do the paultry Intereſts of this miſerable World, miſlead the Judgment and Conſciences of thoſe who ſhou'd teach us to wean our ſelves from it? He will not tell us what an inſolent French Jeſuit ſaid of the King's ſigning the Commiſſion to paſs this Bill at Canterbury, when he was accompanying the Queen to Dover, where ſhe embark'd for Holland, God deſign'd to humble the Engliſh Biſhops, in the Original Seat of their Epiſcopacy, which they had corrupted by their Schiſm, and ſo many ſeveral Errors. This Hiſtorical Dunce has the Impudence thus to abuſe the pureſt Church in the World, I mean the Reform'd Church of England; and this is the Hiſtorian Mr. Echard formally recommends in the Title Page of the Tranſlation, as if the Work was a whit the better for't. A whimſical Fellow, one Griffith, inform'd the Houſe of a Plot to carry off the Prince into France; for which we are told Mr. Hampden took him up in his Arms, and ſaid, my Soul rejoyces to ſee that God hath put it into your Heart to take the right Way: A manner of Expreſſion which agrees exactly with the Character of one of the fineſt Gentlemen in England, as Mr. Hampden was accounted; though not according to the modern Idea of a fine Gentleman.

Endeavours were us'd in London, to obſtruct the executing the Parliament's Ordnance concerning the Militia; and the malignant Party got a Petition ſign'd by three or four Hundred Hands againſt it. The chief Agents in it were Mr. Gardiner, and Mr. Binion, the latter a buſy pragmatical Silkman, who were both committed to the Tower; and a Counter Petition was preſented by the Citizens, deſiring Juſtice againſt theſe ſeditious Perſons, who had obſtructed the Ordnance; accordingly the Parliament order'd the firſt Petition to be burnt by the common Hangman; but when Binion got out of the Tower, he was Knighted, as a Reward for the 3000 Pounds which the Parliament had laid upon him for Sedition and Inſolence: A ſevere Fine, conſidering he was not much better than a Bankrupt, though he made a great Buſtle.

Ireland. The two Houſes taking into Conſideration the Relief of Ireland, Voted, that two Millions and half of Acres of the forfeited Eſtates ſhould be granted to Adventurers, who wou'd lend Money for that Service. For each Adventure of 200 Pounds, 1000 Acres in Ulſter; 300 Pounds, 1000 Acres in Connaught; 450 Pounds, 1000 Acres in Munſter; and 600 Pounds, 1000 Acres in Leinſter; to which his Majeſty conſented; and by this Act, no Peace was to be made with the Iriſh, contrary to the Contents thereof. A.D. 1642.

The Pope and Secretary Nicholas.

Secretary Nicholas ſent a merry Letter to the Houſe of Commons, which he had lately receiv'd from a Perſon of Quality at Venice, giving him to underſtand, that the Pope was much incens'd at the Proceedings of the Parliament againſt Romiſh Prieſts and Recuſants; and if they ſo proceeded, his Holineſs wou'd cauſe an Army to be rais'd and ſent into Ireland; and that the Pope took it ill that the Parliament will not diſcharge the Seven Prieſts whom his Majeſty had repriev'd. Though this Secretary Nicholas makes but a very ordinary Figure in Hiſtory, and ſuch a ridiculus Buſineſs might have been expected from his Capacity, yet it is ſtrange that all the Counſellors about the King ſhould not have Wiſdom enough to hinder the ſending ſuch a Letter to the Parliament; for which thoſe who ſent it wou'd certainly be either laugh'd to Scorn, or puniſh'd for countenancing Correſpondence with the Pope. The Houſe preſently voted an Addreſs to the King, that the ſeven Prieſts might be hang'd, and the Capuchin Fryars at Somerſet-Houſe be immediately ſeiz'd, and brought before them.

Meſſage from Huntington.

From Huntington the King ſent a Meſſage to both Houſes, dated the 15th of March, that he intended to make his Reſidence at his City of York, and thought it neceſſary to publiſh, that he expected and requir'd Obedience from all his loving Subjects, to the Laws eſtabliſh'd: By which was always underſtood in this Reign, a Power to raiſe Money without Conſent of Parliament, to impriſon and preſs Men at Pleaſure, a Submiſſion to the Oppreſſion and Superſtition of the Laudean Hierarchy, and the like. Again, and That they preſume not, upon any Pretence or Ordnance, to which his Majeſty is no Party, concerning the Militia, or any other Thing, to do or execute what is not warrantable by theſe Laws, his Majeſty being reſolv'd to keep the Laws himſelf, as has has been plentifully evidenc'd to us in the whole Courſe of this Hiſtory, and to require Obedience to them from all his Subjects. Upon the Receipt of this Meſſage, the two Houſes came to theſe Reſolutions, 1. "To inſiſt on their former Votes concerning the Militia. 2. That the "King's Abſence is not only an Obſtruction, but "may be a Deſtruction to the Affairs of Ireland. "3. That when the Lords and Commons, which "is the ſupreme Court of Judicature in the King-"dom, ſhall declare what the Law of the Land is, "to have this not only queſtion'd, but contradict-"ed, and a Command that it ſhou'd not be obey'd, "is a high Breach of the Privilege of Parliament. "4. That a Committee be appointed to enquire "where this Meſſage was fram'd. 5. That thoſe "who adviſ'd his Majeſty to this Meſſage, are "Enemies to the Peace of the Kingdom, and "juſtly ſuſpected to be favourers of the Rebellion "in Ireland. 6. That thoſe who adviſ'd his Ma-"jeſty to abſent himſelf from the Parliament, are "Enemies to the Peace of the Kingdom. RE-"SOLV'D, Nem. Cont. That the Ordnance about "the Militia, is not any way againſt the Oath of "Allegiance; that the Commiſſion granted under "the Great Seal, to the Lieutenants of the ſeveral "Counties, are illegal and void; and whoever "ſhall exerciſe any Power over the Militia, by "Colour of ſuch Commiſſion, ſhall be accounted "a Diſturber of the Peace of the Kingdom; that "in Caſe of extream Danger, and of his Majeſty's "Refuſal, the Ordnance agreed on by both Hou-"ſes doth oblige the People, and ought to be "obey'd by the fundamental Laws of this King-"dom." To theſe Votes agreed the Lord Keeper

Anſwer.

*A.D.*1642. of the Great Seal, whoſe Conſcience went ſtill with his Knowledge; but in a few Days he left both them and the Parliament, and made his Eſcape to York. The very learned and judicious Whitlocke ſays, "The Houſe of Commons receiv'd "great Encouragement and Confirmation in theſe "Votes, from the Opinions of ſeveral of their "Members, Pym, Hampden, Hollis, Stapleton; "and of Lawyers, Sir John Corbet, Lord L'Iſle, and "ſeveral others, chiefly from the confident Opini- "on of the Lord Keeper Littleton concurring "with them.

The King publiſh'd a Declaration in Anſwer to that which was read to him at Newmarket; which as has been obſerv'd, conſiſted of a poſitive Denial of the Matters laid to his Charge; and the Parliament juſtify'd their Declaration, in a Petition which was preſented to him at York, March the 26th, wherein they ſay, "We have lately receiv'd "Information from the Deputy-Governor of the "Merchant Adventurers at Rotterdam, that an un- "known Perſon appertaining to the Lord Digby, "did lately ſollicit one James Kenelly, a Mariner, "to go to Elſinore, and take Charge of a Ship in "a Fleet of the King of Denmark's, there pre- "par'd, which he ſhou'd conduct to Hull, in "which Fleet he ſaid likewiſe, a great Army was "to be tranſported; and although we are not apt to "give Credit to Informations of this Nature, yet "we cannot alrogether think it fit to be neglected, "but that it may juſtly add ſomewhat to the "Weight of our Fears and Jealouſies, conſidering "with what Circumſtances it is accompany'd, "the Lord Digby's preceding Expreſſions in his "Letter to her Majeſty, and Sir Lewis Dives, and "your Majeſty's ſucceeding Courſe of withdraw- "ing your ſelf Northward from your Parliament, "in a Manner very ſuitable and correſpondent to "that Evil Counſel, &c." This is ſober Reaſoning, and carries Conviction with it. Digby adviſ'd the King to poſſeſs himſelf of ſome Place of Security; and what Place would be more ſecure than Hull? Father Orleans confeſſes it was agreed the King ſhould retire into the North, and there P. 55. make his firſt Levies. Echard, though he is let into very few Secrets, declares it was Time now for the King to remove to York; which agrees with what General Ludlow ſays. The Declarations on both ſides proving ineffectual, and the King's Deſigns, both at Home and Abroad, being grown ripe, he expreſs'd his Diſſatisfaction more openly, and withdrew to York. The Reverend Hiſtorian tells us, his Indignation was rais'd; and Larrey, It is certain he had a Deſign upon Hull, and it is then as certain he had a Deſign to make War upon his Proteſtant Subjects.

On the 8th of April, the King ſent another Meſſage to the Parliament, wherein he declar'd his Intention to go with all Speed to Ireland, to raiſe 2000 Foot, and 200 Horſe, and arm them from the Magazine of Hull, which was to prepare the way for his ſeizing the whole. Mr. Acherley aſſures us, This very much alarm'd and diſcompos'd the two Houſes, who doubted not but Ireland was the Place of Strength to which his Majeſty was to retire, according to the ſecret Reſolutions taken with the Queen. The Parliament return'd a reſpectful Anſwer, and propos'd to raiſe 6000 Men under the Lord Wharton, for that Service, but the King denied his Commiſſion There's a haughty Air, and a dry commanding Stile in this King's Meſſages and Anſwers, which were good for nothing but to ſower Mens Minds, and is as unskilful in Politicks as it wou'd be in Phyſick, to apply Corroſives inſtead of Lenitives. To this muſt be added a Weakneſs, which is without Example. The King knew that the Parliament had diſcover'd the Contrivances of ſending the Queen to Holland, of his own Journey Northward, of his Queen's Favourites with the Iriſh, and his own Tenderneſs to that murderous Crew, and that the Parliament were *A.D.*1642. not ſo much afraid of them, as of the Deſigns he was forming againſt the Proteſtants in England; yet he offers to go to Ireland with an Army: He cou'd not be at the Head of one any where, but they wou'd be taken by the Parliament to be their moſt mortal Enemies; and it was very unlikely they would conſent to his tranſporting Forces to Ireland, where there were 40000 Enemies already Ireland. in Arms againſt them and their Friends. The Parliament told him ſo in plain Terms, when he made the Offer for Ireland, "That it cou'd be of no "Service, but prejudicial to the Proteſtants, by "whom he was ſuſpected, and advantageous to "the Papiſts, who boaſted of his Conſent, and "wou'd become more bold on his Arrival." Orleans owns his Correſpondence with the Iriſh Catholicks had ſome Appearance of Truth. The Truth is, the Diſtractions the King occaſion'd by his abandoning the Parliament, were a fatal Obſtruction to the Relief of Ireland. The two Houſes knew not how ſoon they ſhou'd want all the Power they could raiſe for Self-Preſervation, and that muſt perplex their Thoughts as to tranſporting Forces elſewhere. The King knew all the People of England had the Relief of their Brethren in Ireland at Heart: The Parliament minded him of it in all their Declarations; and this Offer to go himſelf, was to take off the Odium from him, but it did not ſucceed; 'twas viſible that he obſtructed all ſolid Meaſures prepar'd for relieving the diſtreſs'd Engliſh in Ireland, and that he never propos'd any Thing which was not either chimerical or dangerous. The Parliament were in Earneſt, as they ſhew'd with a Vengeance, when they had ſecur'd themſelves againſt their Enemies in England, and it was for that Security only, that they at any Time poſtpon'd the Succours, which with their whole Souls they wiſh'd in Ireland This is the natural Light this Affair ſtands in, and we ſhall ſay the leſs hereafter for what is now ſaid.

In the Act for the Iriſh Adventurers there was a Clauſe for leaving the Management of that War to the two Houſes; and another Clauſe beforemention'd, by which the King oblig'd himſelf not to give any Terms to the REBELS, or to make Peace with them without the Parliaments Conſent: Both which he did, at the ſame Time that in all his Speeches, Meſſages, Anſwers, &c. he has the Laws, and the Laws of the Land, almoſt in every Paragraph, in a Suppoſition that the People did not know how he had obſerv'd them, or that he had ever broken them: Upon this Act conſiderable Sums of Money were brought in; and ſays Ludlow, "The "Parliament neglected no Opportunity to carry "on ſo neceſſary a War. They procur'd ſome "Forces to be ſent from Scotland into the North "of Ireland; and they alſo diſpatch'd ſeveral Re- "giments of Engliſh thither, who were bleſs'd with "wonderful Succeſs againſt the Rebels." That General afterwards commanded in Chief in that Kingdom, but it ſeems was not ſo well acquainted with Affairs there, as Archdeacon Echard, who ſays, "The War was carry'd on by ſuch ſlow Steps, "that the Iriſh Rebels daily increas'd in Strength, "and by Rumours of the Parliament's Prepara- "tions, enlarg'd their Power. The Parliament "were willing to drive them to Extremity, out of "Revenge and Contempt, as a People eaſy to be "cruſh'd." We ſhall find the King's beſt Officers among them in the Courſe of our Hiſtory.

The King being ſettled at York, the reverend The King Hiſtorian tells us, "Moſt Perſons of Quality of at York. "that great County and Parts adjacent reſorted to "him, many Perſons of Condition from London, "ſome out of a Senſe of Duty and Gratitude, and "others out of Indignation againſt the Parliament; "ſo that in a ſhort time the Court appear'd with "Luſtre;" which is the more to be admir'd at, becauſe he owns preſently after, the moſt Illuſtrious

A.D.1642. were afraid, or aſham'd of being ſeen, for why elſe were they oblig'd to be Incognito. General Ludlow writes, "Several Lords, and others, affected to his Intereſt, reſorted to him with "Plate, Money, Horſes and Arms, amongſt "whom were many Papiſts, who, though to cover the King's Deſigns, they were forbidden to "come to Court, were yet privately encourag'd, "and daily liſted and arm'd; and as the Diſtance "of York from the Parliament was one Reaſon, ſo "its Nearneſs to Hull was another.

Hotham at Hull. At the ſame Time that the Houſe of Commons ſent to Colonel Goring, Governor of Portſmouth, to ſecure that Town, they diſpatch'd Sir John Hotham to ſecure Hull; both were faithful to them at firſt, and both at laſt baſely betray'd them. Mr. Hotham, Sir John's Son, poſted away thither before his Father, who had Orders to put a Garriſon of the Train'd-Bands neareſt the Place, into the Town, for the Security of the Magazine there. Mr. Hotham, who was alſo a Member of Parliament, ſtood up in the Gallery of the Houſe before he went, and ſaid, Fall Back, fall Edge, I will go down and perform your Commands. The Houſe of Commons had certain Information of the Deſign form'd againſt that Magazine and Town, and it was the Place of Strength the Lord Digby wou'd have had the King retire to, where he might receive Aſſiſtance from Abroad. They had Notice alſo, that the Earl of Newcaſtle was ſent by the King to poſſeſs himſelf of it, and was prevented only by the Parliaments and Hotham's Diligence.

Having mention'd the laſt Petition of the two Houſes to the King, which was preſented by the Lord Willoughby, the Lord Dungarvon, and Sir Anthony Irby, on the 26th of March, we muſt alſo ſay ſomething of his Anſwer, though they are all ſo diſagreeable, that one can't take much Delight in it: We are reſolv'd that no Streights or Neceſſities to which we may be reduc'd, ſhall ever compel us to do that which the Reaſon and Underſtanding that God hath given us, and our Honour and Intereſt with which God hath truſted us, for the Good of our Poſterity and Kingdoms, ſhall render unpleaſant and grievous to us. It was generally ſuſpected that the King, who heartily repented of the popular Acts he had paſt, intended to have them made null and void, on Account of a pretended Force upon him, when it was in his Power to do it. The Parliament ſpeak of it in this Petition; and in his Anſwer he ſaid, I defy the Devil to prove there was any ſuch Deſign. The Reverend Hiſtorian joins the Parliament with the Devil, which is more than the King himſelf did; and being falſe as well as ſcandalous, would have brought the Author into Danger of Sanderford's Puniſhment, if the Long Parliament had had the handling of him. The two Houſes nominated the Earl of Warwick to be Admiral of the Fleet in the Room of the Earl of Northumberland, who was indiſpos'd, and on whoſe Indiſpoſition and Recovery, Waller has a fine Copy of Verſes, of which this is the laſt Diſtich; ſpeaking of his Lordſhip, and his charming Siſter, the Counteſs of Carliſle.

With Courage guard, and Beauty warm our Age,
And Lovers fill with like poetick Rage.

This is the Lady who Warwick ſays had two Gallants, the Earl of Strafford, and Mr. Pym; and this Warwick is the ingenious judicious Author, whom Mr. Echard has copy'd almoſt Word for Word.

The King appointed Sir John Pennington to be Admiral; the ſame who forc'd the Engliſh Ships to join the French Fleet againſt the Proteſtants in Rochelle; more Fatality! He receiv'd a Petition from the two Houſes, that they might remove the Magazine from Hull to the Tower, where the Stores had been pretty well drain'd by the Supplies for Ireland: But the King, ſays Larrey, had no more Complaiſance for the Parliaments Requeſts, than they had for his; and being jealous of each others Intentions, from their mutual Refuſal, they now thought of nothing but War, which is a ſhort and plain State of the Caſe, and wou'd ſave hundreds of Pages in the Earl of Clarendon's Hiſtory!, where he gueſſes, conjectures and Subtilizes without knowing it, and is every where wretchedly copy'd by Echard. His Majeſty finding there was no way of ſatisfying the two Houſes and their Adherents, but by complying a little in the Buſineſs of the Militia, order'd the Attorney-General to draw up a Bill of the ſame Tenure with the Ordnance, only limiting the Time to a Year; which being offer'd to the Parliament, they took no Notice of it. Larrey proceeds, "But before they came to an open "Rupture, the King, who could not deceive the Parliament, endeavour'd to ſurprize the Gover- "nor of Hull, and coming into the Neighbour- "hood of that Town, accompany'd by ſome Gentlemen of the Country, and 300 of his Horſe- "Guards, he drew nearer and nearer, and ſent "Sir Lewis Dives to tell the Governor, Sir John "Hotham, he would dine with him, a Stratagem which had not the leaſt Proſpect of Succeſs, if his Majeſty had not before-hand made ſure of Sir John, which he was ſo far from having done, that Hotham hearing of his Approach, ſent three Meſſengers one after another, with an humble Petition to deſiſt, and come no nearer to the Town, where were at that Time, the 23d of April, St. George's Feaſt, the Duke of York, the Prince Elector, the Earl of Newport, the Lord Willoughby of Eresby, and other Perſons of Quality, whom the Mayor and Governor entertain'd with great Reſpect: Sir John Hotham having held a Conſultation with Mr. Pelham, a Member of Parliament, and Alderman of Hull, what to do in that Emergency, it was reſolv'd to draw up the Bridge, ſhut the Gates, and command the Soldiers to ſtand to their Arms round the Walls. His Majeſty about Eleven a Clock, advancing to Beverley Gate, call'd for the Governor, and commanded it to be open'd; but though he reiterated his Command, he could get no other Anſwer from Sir John Hotham, than I am intruſted by the Parliament to ſecure the Town for his Majeſty's Honour, and the Kingdom's Uſe, which I intend by God's Help to do. He deſir'd the King not to miſinterpret his Action, proteſting his Loyalty, and proffering if his Majeſty would be pleas'd to come in with the Prince, and twelve more, he ſhould be very welcome, otherwiſe he could not, without betraying his Truſt to the State, admit Entrance to ſo great a Guard. His Majeſty refus'd to enter without his whole Train. About one a Clock, the Duke of York, the Prince Elector, and the Lords who accompany'd them, went forth to the King, who departed not from the Gates till four a Clock, and then return'd an Hour after, when he gave Sir John Hotham one Hour to conſider what he did; who then giving the ſame Anſwer as he had done before, his Majeſty commanded him to be proclaim'd Traytor by two Heralds at Arms, which frighten'd Sir John Hotham as much as if it had been done by twenty. The King retreated to Beverley in great Confuſion, and the next Morning ſent a Herald, and others, with Offers of Pardon to Sir John, if yet he would open the Gates; but as yet he was deaf to Threats, or Flattery, and remain'd true to the Truſt his Country had depos'd in him: So the King return'd to York, and ſent a Meſſage to the Parliament, to demand Juſtice againſt Hotham, and that immediately the Magazine be deliver'd up to him; and till this be done, he will intend no other Buſineſs; to be in worſe Condition than the meaneſt Subject, not to enjoy his own; which is as Sophiſtical as the reſt. He was not in a worſe Condition. If the meaneſt of his Subjects had Poſſeſſion of the Weapons of ano-

Every one of the Declarations, Meſſages and Anſwers, are as eaſily confuted, but indeed they do not want Confutation. It is not doubted, if the King had poſſeſs'd himſelf of that Place of Arms, he would ſoon have rais'd Forces enough at Home, and have receiv'd them from Abroad, to have fallen upon the Parliament and their Friends, unprovided for War, and have deſtroy'd them, according to the Scheme in the Jeſuit Orleans's Revolutions, "To ſecure ſome Place "of Strength, meaning firſt Hull, ſays Acherley, "which was the ſole Motive of his Journey North-"ward, in order to get the Magazine of Arms; "and that in Caſe of Diſappointment, his Majeſty "ſhould go into Ireland, and never come to any "Accommodation with the Parliament." The French Jeſuit goes farther, and allows, that the King never intended to let any of the popular Acts he had paſs'd, continue as Laws: All Mankind believ'd, ſays he, That the King did not grant ſo much, but in order to revoke all; and that he underhand was preparing for War, that the Sword might cut all thoſe Knots he had made with his Pen. 'Twas the certain Information of this Scheme, and the Proſecution of it, which made the Parliament inſiſt ſo obſtinately on the Militia Bill; and it was the certain Deſign to purſue it, which made the King refuſe it with the like Obſtinacy. His Majeſty order'd the Expreſs from the Parliament to Hull to be way-laid; an illegal Act, and juſtifiable only in Time of open War: The Parliament, as they had good Reaſon, voted it a breach of Privilege, and RESOLV'D to defend their Privileges with their Lives and Fortunes: They juſtify'd Sir John Hotham, and order'd the Sheriffs and Juſtices of the Peace to ſuppreſs all Forces that ſhall be rais'd, or gather'd together againſt Hull, or to diſturb the Peace. Echard, who thinks as wildly as any one, outdoes himſelf in his Thought on this Occaſion, the Gentlemen of Yorkſhire wou'd have taken the Town of Hull with Yorkſhire Men; whereas in Truth, Sir John Hotham, by Virtue of his Warrants from the Parliament, ſummon'd the Train'd-Bands of that County to appear at Hull with their Arms; and when he had them there, he diſarm'd them, and turn'd them home again, according to Whitlocke. There is no following the Reverend Hiſtorian in any Part of his Hiſtory, where the Diſputes between the King and Parliament are in Queſtion; and here he takes particular Care to lay the whole Blame of the War on the two Houſes; War was too remote from the King's Thoughts; the King well ſaw the impending Storm. It is juſtly believ'd, that had the King, with the Forces of the Nobility and Gentry, boldly attack'd the Town, it had been ſurrender'd; and a few Lines after, Sir John Hotham was better able to take York, than the King to take Hull. Such a Head as this, was moſt equal to the Work he undertook, and the Cauſe he eſpous'd, which is, to make the Parliament the Aggreſſors in Words and Deeds; when there is nothing more notorious in Chronicle, than that this King, from the beginning of his Reign to the meeting of this Parliament, had ſuffer'd his Miniſters and the Laudean Biſhops to commit all Acts of Tyranny, Oppreſſion and Cruelty, under Colour of Courts of Juſtice, ſuch as the Star-Chamber, High-Commiſſion, Strafford's Northern-Court, &c. and that he had no Regard to the Rights, Liberties and Properties of the Free People of England, as appears by his Impriſonment of Members of Parliament, great Merchants, and eminent Citizens, by his violating their moſt ancient Privileges, and extorting illegal Taxes; yet as has been obſerv'd, and muſt be again, he ſpeaks of nothing more than the Fundamental Laws, the Laws of the Land, which in the Interpretation he intends the Sovereign Power, as it was corrupted and abus'd in his Adminiſtration, and not that Sovereign Power under which the Three Kingdoms have been ſo ſafe, ſo happy, and ſo glorious, ever ſince the Abdication of King James, the laſt Male Monarch of the Houſe of Stuart. The two Houſes take Notice in one of their Papers, of that malignant Party, who by falſe Colours and Pretenſions of maintaining your Majeſty's Prerogative againſt the Parliament, wherein they fully agree with the REBELS in Ireland, have been the Cauſes of all our Diſtempers and Dangers; and if the Lord Clarendon, and Mr. Echard, have not alſo maintain'd the Prerogative againſt the Parliament, I have done them much Wrong. *A.D.*1642.

The two Houſes order'd a Committee; the Earl of Samford, the Lord Willoughby of Parham, Sir Edward Ayſcough, Sir Chriſtopher Wray, Sir Samuel Owfield, Mr. Hatcher, to repair to the Counties of York and Lincoln, and Town of Kingſton upon Hull, for the Peace and Safety of the Kingdom; and they requir'd all Lord Lieutenants, and all other Officers and Magiſtrates, to be aiding and aſſiſting to them. The King wrote a Letter, dated the 5th of May, to the Sheriff of Yorkſhire, a truſty one, Sir Marmaduke Longdale, to forbid the muſtering of the Militia by Ordnance of Parliament; and if any did Muſter, he requir'd him to raiſe the Power of the County and ſuppreſs them: He alſo publiſh'd a Proclamation, forbidding the Relief of Hull; another Military Act, practis'd in War Time only, and in Sieges and Blockades; and every one knows, that to ſtarve a Town is as much making War againſt it, as to batter or ſtorm it: The Parliament are as yet in Peace, and 'tis to argue with Madmen and Idiots, that this is not the beginning of the War. Yorkſhire and Lincolnſhire Committee. King begins the War.

About a Fortnight before his Majeſty's March to Hull, the Gentry, Miniſters, and Freeholders of Yorkſhire, preſented a Petition to him, wherein, after very ſtrong Expreſſions of Duty and Loyalty, they pray him to declare ſuch fit Means and Expedients, as may take away all Diſtances and Miſunderſtandings betwixt his Majeſty and his great Council. The King, in his Anſwer, highly commended them for their Loyalty, in relying upon his Word for the Propagation of the Proteſtant Religion, and advis'd them to propoſe to the Parliament the ſettling the Militia as he would have it, which he ſaid was the fitteſt Means and Expedient to take away all Diſtances and Miſunderſtandings; but that was too groſs to take with them.

A Committee of the Houſe of Commons; Lord Fairfax, Sir Hugh Cholmley, Sir Philip Stapleton, Sir Henry Cholmley, and ſome of the beſt Gentlemen of Yorkſhire, was order'd to remain at York. They had deliver'd the Parliaments Anſwer to his Majeſty's Meſſage about Hull, which the King not liking, gave Orders they would return back; but they excus'd their Stay, becauſe commanded ſo to do by thoſe who employ'd them; and being Gentlemen of the beſt Remark in that County, they had ſurely as good Reaſon to reſide in it, as the Gentry to whom the King made a Speech the 12th of May, wherein he admoniſh'd them to take Heed leſt the Committee, their Countrymen, ſhould corrupt them, and told them, he was reſolv'd to have a Guard. It goes on gradually. To which theſe Gentry reply'd, They willingly concurr'd in his Majeſty's Preparations for a Guard, conſiſting of Perſons unqueſtionable in their Religion. The Reply was made for them, the King thank'd them particularly for excluding Papiſts. He muſt have a very mean Opinion of the People's Underſtandings, to think that wou'd paſs upon them. We muſt know, however, that this ſame Guard was not ſo well approv'd of by the Yorkſhire Gentlemen, as the Earl of Clarendon and Echard wou'd make us believe. Nor did they underſtand the York Committee.

*A.D.*1642. raiſing of it as the King underſtood it. They declar'd they wou'd not interpoſe in the Buſineſs of Hull, but wou'd ſerve him with their Lives and Fortunes as far as his Majeſty ſhou'd be pleas'd legally to enable them. In another Addreſs they ſaid, the beſt Advice they cou'd offer him, was to hearken to the Counſels of his Parliament. In another they beſought him to impart the Grounds of his Fears and Jealouſies to his High Court of Parliament, of whoſe moſt loyal Care and Affection to his Majeſty's Honour and Safety, and Proſperity of his Subjects and Dominions, they were moſt confident. They added in Behalf of thoſe Members of Parliament lately employ'd to attend his Majeſty from both Houſes, being all of them Gentlemen of Quality and Eſtate in this County, and truſted to ſerve in that moſt honourable Aſſembly; they humbly crave his Majeſty's Leave to expreſs their Confidence in their untainted Loyalty and Affection to his Majeſty to be ſuch, as his Majeſty may ſecurely admit their Attendance; and for their Fidelity they do all engage themſelves. Mr. Archdeacon affirms they continu'd at York in perfect Defiance of the King. The ſame Gentlemen told his Majeſty he might depend on the general Fidelity of his Subjects in that County without an extraordinary Guard; and there were but few Gentlemen or Freeholders who approv'd of the Guard of Horſe, knowing full well that 'twas only a Pretext to begin his Levies according to the Scheme of which they cou'd not all be entirely ignorant; ſo very falſe is what the Archdeacon tells us, that they generally and chearfully agreed. The Committee of Parliament in a Letter to their Principals inform them, that ſeveral thouſand Freeholders came to York and enter'd their Proteſt againſt concurring in a Guard; that the Committee of twelve Yorkſhire Gentlemen, who were appointed to give Anſwer to his Majeſty's Propoſition about it, were divided; ſix were for the Anſwer as deliver'd to the King, and ſix were for the Anſwer wherein they told his Majeſty he was ſafe without an extraordinary Guard; and this Anſwer the greater Part of the Gentlemen and Freeholders agree to. I will make no Excuſe for treating Echard almoſt as rudely as he treats the Lords and Commons in Parliament aſſembled, till I find ſomebody that can clear him of this audacious and incredible Falſity, They generally and chearfully agreed for a Guard. It conſiſted of a Troop of Horſe, of which the Prince of Wales was Captain, and a Regiment of Foot of about ſix hundred Men, which was the firſt Levy of Troops in the Civil War, and was juſtly taken to be the beginning by thoſe who did not allow the ſtarving of Hull to be a warlike Act. Mr. Acherley ſpeaks of it thus; Such a Body of Men might by an expeditious March, eaſily have enter'd the Houſe of Commons, and diſpers'd the UNARM'D Parliament, who look'd on that Proceeding as a clear Evidence of his Majeſty's Intentions to make War upon them, in Purſuance of the before-mention'd Scheme form'd in the King's Cabinet-Council at Windſor juſt before the Queen's Departure for Holland, as we read in Orleans. "If "this Scheme and Reſolution be admitted to be "true, ſays the judicious Acherley, then it is obvi- "ous that the Cauſe of the War was the Invita- "tion of the Scots Invaſions, and the End of it "the Puniſhment of the Inviters;" which muſt have caus'd a Deluge of the beſt Blood in England, and the reſcinding of the Acts of Reformation paſſed in this Parliament.

King begins his Levies.

Upon News of the King's levying Forces in Yorkſhire, the two Houſes voted, "That he intend- "ed to make War againſt the Parliament, contra- "ry to his Oath, and tending to the Diſſolution of "his Government; and that whoſoever ſhou'd "ſerve or aſſiſt him in ſuch Wars, ſhou'd be ac- "counted TRAYTORS by the fundamental Laws "of the Land; and that the ſame had been ad- "judg'd by two Acts of Parliament, 2 Rich. 2. Militia.

The Ordnance for the Militia having had the Sanction of both Houſes, the Lord-Lieutenants who were nam'd for the ſeveral Counties, were impower'd to act and appoint Deputy-Lieutenants; the Lord Paget Lord-Lieutenant of Buckinghamſhire, nam'd Mr. Hampden, Mr. Goodwyn, Mr. Greenville, Mr. Tyrrel, Mr. Winwood, and Mr. Whitlocke, to be his Deputy-Lieutenants; and by their Names only we may know that the Gentlemen of the beſt Characters eſpous'd the Cauſe of the Parliament: For tho' many Gentlemen of Diſtinction deſerted that Cauſe out of a lawleſs Deſire to lord it over their fellow Subjects, or out of a vain Ambition for Titles and Dignities, or out of baſe Envy and Jealouſy of the leading Senators, whoſe illuſtrious Virtues gave their weak Eyes the Jaundice; yet the moſt ſober, the moſt wiſe, and moſt religious, were ſteady in their good Engliſh Principles both as to Church and State. The Lord-Keeper Littleton was not only confident in his Opinion for the Legality of this Ordnance, but accepted of the Lieutenancy of two or three Counties, nam'd his Deputies, and often ask'd the Clerk of the Houſe of Lords for his Deputations, commanding him to deliver them to one of his Servants, which accordingly was done. He alſo agreed to the ſeveral Forms of thoſe Deputations, and never made the leaſt Objection to the Ordnance as againſt Law and antient Uſage. Of the ſame Opinion were thoſe great Lawyers Serjeant Maynard, Serjeant Glyn, Mr. Grimſton, Mr. St. John, and Mr. Selden, who all accepted of Deputations from the Lord Lieutenants, and continu'd in the Parliament Service.

The King reſolving to adjourn Eaſter Term from London to York, the Parliament voted it to be illegal, and order'd the Lord-Keeper not to iſſue Writs or Proclamation for that Purpoſe. The Court at York ſhew'd in their Conduct that they matter'd not how prejudicial any of their Counſels were to the Publick, or how little beneficial to themſelves, if the Parliament were anger'd or diſoblig'd by them.

Parliament Declaration May 19.

On the 19th of May the two Houſes publiſh'd a large Declaration much to the ſame Effect as the former were, mentioning that the Rebellion was countenanc'd in Ireland by the evil Counſellors about the King; that the proclaiming the Iriſh Traytors, had been deferr'd from October to January, and then but forty Copies order'd to be printed, nor any of them to be publiſh'd without the King's Order; whereas the Proceedings againſt the Scots, and proclaiming them Traytors were very ſharp. This was very barefac'd; and it is aſtoniſhing that Perſons who pretended a Zeal for the Proteſtant Religion, ſhou'd take Arms for the Support of a Government which did ſo much to ſupport that horrid Rebellion.

The King repeated what he had ſaid before to evade this Charge, and wrote to the Council in Scotland to acquaint them with the State of his Affairs in England; to which he receiv'd a dutiful and affectionate Anſwer, with a Petition from ſeveral Noblemen and Gentlemen, full of Zeal and Loyalty to his Service; which the Parliament hearing of, took a Courſe to turn the Ballance, and within eight Days after the Scots Council declare their earneſt Deſires both to King and Parliament to join in a perfect Union, and humbly deſire the King to hearken to his beſt and moſt unparallel'd Council. They diſſuade him from a perſonal Journey to Ireland, and pray that a Mediation be at Home before the Breach be wider. In the Cloſe they manifeſt their true and hearty Affection to the Parliament of England, proteſting to do nothing contrary to them in their Privileges. A Multitude of People at Edinburgh hearing of his Majeſty's Letter to the Council there, and of the Anſwer to it, petition'd the Scotland.

*A.D.*1642. the Council not to meddle by any verbal or real Engagement for the King againſt the Parliament of England; which gave great Encouragement to their Friends in both Kingdoms.

Order about Arms and Soldiers going to York.

On the 28th of May the Parliament order'd that all Sheriffs, Juſtices of Peace, &c. within one hundred and fifty Miles of York, ſhou'd make Stay of all Arms and Ammunition carrying to York, and apprehend the Conveyers; and that all Sheriffs do ſuppreſs all Forces coming together by the King's Commiſſion, and all Perſons to aid them. The King in return forbids Obedience to any Ordnance of Parliament concerning the Militia, and ſummons the whole County of York to meet him at Heworth-Moor at a certain Day, which the Parliament declare to be againſt Law, and forbid Obedience. He told the Yorkſhire Men, we cannot but declare our ſelf moſt heartily ſorry to find ſuch Separatiſts and Schiſmaticks, who preſume againſt the Law; againſt which no Proteſtant Prince ever preſum'd ſo much as his Majeſty to foment new Doctrines and Diſciplines. The King did not expect that a Puritan or Presbyterian wou'd draw a Sword for him; but conſidering the Bent of the Nation turn'd that Way, where was the Policy of ſpeaking againſt them to the Men of Yorkſhire, where they abounded as much as in any Part of England? Beſides, as this is meant of the Puritans, there is not a Babe in Divinity but knows that the Doctrine of the Holy Scriptures, and the Diſcipline of the Apoſtolical Biſhops, ſuch as Titus and Timothy, which they only profeſs'd according to their primitive Purity, are many hundred Years older than the Romiſh Hierarchy and Idolatry, which, as Echard tells us, were rival'd by Laud. The King in a Declaration of his, deſcends to a Reflection which has ſtill more Poverty in it, and that is the imputing the Madneſs and Rage of ſome German Enthuſiaſts, not only to thoſe Diſſenters in England who go under the Denomination of Baptiſts, who have that Dutch Enthuſiaſm in Abhorrence as much as Laud's Superſtition, but alſo to the whole Parliament of England. Can we with Safety commit the Militia into their Hands, who in all Probabilty would be no ſooner poſſeſs'd of it, than they wou'd revive that Tragedy which Mr. Hooker relates of the Anabaptiſts in Germany, who talking of nothing but of Faith and of the true Fear of God, and that Riches and Honours were Vanity, at firſt upon the great Opinion of their Humility, Zeal, and Devotion, procur'd much Reverence and Eſtimation with the People; after finding how many Perſons they had enſnar'd with their Hypocriſy, they began to propoſe to themſelves to reform both the Eccleſiaſtical and Civil Government. By which is underſtood, that all the Votes and Declarations of the Parliament tending to the reforming of Abuſes in Church and State, of which we ſhall ſee preſently the King himſelf has confeſs'd enough to ſhew the Neceſſity of a Reformation, were nothing better than the Effects of the Hypocriſy and Fury of the Rabble at Munſter. I do not repeat his Majeſty's Anſwers and Declarations at large, for they will not bear it; they are ſo full of Evaſions, Colourings, Concealings, Aſſertions, and Denials, poſitive and arbitrary, that one can learn little by them of the Merits of the Cauſe; and when Mr. Hyde comes to have the penning of them, they are ſo full of Words, or as Warwick ſays, ſo redundant, we are loſt as in a Labyrinth. Mr. Archdeacon tells us with his uſual Conſiſtence, The Leaders in the Parliament were confident there wou'd be no War, therefore prepar'd for it accordingly both with Men and Money. This Preparation was the muſtering the Train'd-Bands of London in Finsbury-Fields before the Members of both Houſes of Parliament, who were there treated by the City. The King immediately ſent for Major-General Skippon, who appear'd at the Head of the Militia, to attend him at York, but the Parliament voted that he ſhou'd attend their Service as Captain of the Guards which did Duty near the Two Houſes; and if Guards were neceſſary, ſurely the Attendance of the Captain muſt be of equal Neceſſity; and the ſending for him cou'd be done with no other Deſign than to increaſe the Jealouſies of the Parliament, and turn all Hope into Deſpair. The reverend Hiſtorian highly reſents the Parliament's Orders to ſeize one Beckwith, who was in a Plot to deliver Hull to the King, but he ſinks that he was a Papiſt, and as my Author adds, a great Favourite at Court. The Town was to be fir'd in ſeveral Quarters upon a Sign made from Beverley Minſter; and while the Townſmen were buſy'd in putting out the Fire, two thouſand of the King's Forces were to aſſault it in ſeveral Places, and the Parliament's Officer, with whom Beckwith correſponded, and who diſcover'd the Treaſon, was at the ſame time to open a Gate. Mr. Archdeacon, whoſe Hiſtory is ſo well ornamented with the Ridiculum, aſſures us it was a very ridiculous Thing to take up Beckwith, and not to take up Hotham; but Beckwith was protected by the Court at York, and the Serjeant who came for him and other Delinquents, was us'd worſe than the Committee of the Parliament who reſided there, and were hiſs'd when they read any thing from the Lords and Commons; at which I do not wonder, for it muſt be ſuch ſort of Creatures who wou'd take Arms in the Defence of arbitrary Power, Superſtition, Idolatry, and Profaneneſs. If afterwards Men of a better Character join'd with them, it was out of Caution, Ambition, Jealouſy, or Vanity, and for want of making a right Uſe of their Underſtanding. Some of the Courtiers, the Lunsfords probably, ſaid openly, Let the Parliament Men look about them, ſome of 'em will ſoon be ſhorter by the Head. One Hurſt a Retainer to the Lord Crofts, inſulted the Committee, and was rather encourag'd than puniſh'd.

Major-General Skippon.

Ld-Keeper Littleton goes to York.

The Lord-Keeper Littleton, who had been a main Promoter of the Militia Bill, being requir'd to deliver up the Seal to one Elliot who was ſent from York on purpoſe, comply'd with the Order, and the next Day follow'd Elliot himſelf to York. When he was upbraided with Abjection in ſurrendring his Office which the Parliament wou'd have ſupported him in, he excus'd himſelf on account of an Oath he had privately taken before the Seal was deliver'd to him, that he wou'd ſurrender it to the King at Demand; an odd ſort of Oath, which ſhew'd ſome Foreſight at leaſt of the future Difference between the King and the two Houſes. The Deſertion of the Keeper, as Echard wou'd have us believe, threw the Parliament into Diſtraction: This great Man left them for their Exorbitancies. All which is of a Piece, and unworthy a Scholar at Weſtminſter. He did not leave the Parliament for Exorbitancies, but for fear of being queſtion'd after he had ſo tamely parted with the Seal; and he had himſelf been a principal Promoter of the Militia Buſineſs, which was the greateſt Exorbitancy the Parliament was ever guilty of. Whitlocke ſays the King and Court did not regard him.

Parliament Deſerters.

Parl. Chron. 106.

By the Deſertion of ſeveral Lords and Commons at Weſtminſter, the Court at York became numerous. Ludlow has told us what ungenerous Sentiments thoſe Deſerters were acted by; to which we have added the Envy of ſome Members to the Superiority of others in the Favour of the Two Houſe; yet nothing can be falſer than that there was not a fifth Part of the Houſe of Commons, nor above twelve Peers; for at that Time, about the Middle of June, there were four hundred Members of the Houſe of Commons attending the Service of the Houſe in Parliament or in the Country, or abſent with Leave; and in the Upper Houſe above thirty Peers. The King himſelf who magnify'd his Intereſt in the Number of his Attendants, did not pretend they were greater in Tale, but

A.D.1642. in Honour, Fortune, Wiſdom, Reputation, and Weight. It might have been added, in Heighth, Breadth, Complexion, Shape, &c. The Compariſon is too mean for Hiſtory, and as much without Decency as Foundation. The Names of Northumberland, Bedford, Hampden, Hollis, &c. ſufficiently ſhew the Vanity of it. I am ſenſible this is trifling, but I was led into it by a very great Trifler, and by Declarations, Meſſages, Hiſtories, and Characters. The People, ſays Echard, were every Day recovering from their ſuperſtitious Reverence to the Two Houſes, and grew every Day ſenſible of their Duty to the King. This Duty throughout all their Hiſtories, is the ſame with that Allegiance which the Subjects owe to Sovereigns that make the Law the Meaſure of their Government; which how King Charles the Firſt did, how his Father and his two Sons did, has and will be ſeen from one End of this Hiſtory to the other, eſpecially in the following nineteen Propoſitions ſent to the King at York, as the ſureſt Means to prevent a Breach of the Peace.

Nineteen Propoſitions.

1. " The King's Miniſters and Counſellors to " be approv'd by Parliament.
2. " Privy-Counſellors to ſign the Opinion they " give at the Council-Board.
3. " Great Officers of State to be approv'd by " Parliament.
4. " As alſo the Government of the King's Chil- " dren,
5. " And their Marriages.
6. " The Laws againſt Papiſts to be executed.
7. " No Popiſh Lord to vote in Parliament.
8. " A Reformation in the Church and Li- " turgy.
9. " The Militia Ordnance to be confirm'd.
10. " All Members of Parliament who have " been diſplac'd during this Seſſion, to be reſtor'd.
11. " All Privy-Counſellors and Judges to take " an Oath to maintain the Petition of Right.
12. " All Officers plac'd by Parliament, to hold " their Places quam diu ſe bene geſſerint.
13. " Delinquents to be puniſh'd.
14. " A general Pardon with certain Excepti- " tions.
15. " Forts and Caſtles to be diſpos'd of by " Parliament.
16. " The King's new Forces to be disbanded.
17. " His Majeſty to enter into Alliance with " all reform'd States for the Recovery of the Pa- " latinate; a Clauſe the Parliament always had at " Heart, and all their Enemies treated with Neglect " and Contempt.
18. " The Lord Kimbolton and the Five Mem- " bers to be clear'd.
19. " No Peer to ſit hereafter in Parliament " without their Conſent.

The French Jeſuit ſays theſe Propoſals were very ſawcy, but the following Expreſſions at the end of them have no Sawce at all in them: Theſe humble Requeſts being granted to us by your Majeſty, we ſhall endeavour, as we ought, to regulate the Revenue of your Majeſty, and to increaſe it more and more in ſuch ſort, that it ſhall ſupport the Dignity Royal with Honour and Abundance, beyond whatever the Subjects of this Kingdom allow'd to the Kings your Majeſty's Predeceſſors. We will alſo put the Town of Hull into ſuch Hands as your Majeſty ſhall pleaſe with the Approbation of Parliament, and will give a good Account of the Munitions of War, and of the Magazine. To conclude, we ſhall chearfully do our Endeavours to give unto your Majeſty Teſtimony of our Affection, Duty, and Faithfulneſs to preſerve and maintain your Royal Honour, the Greatneſs and Safety of your Majeſty and your Poſterity. This according to Echard was receiv'd with great Indignation, it being much more eaſy to diſdain than to anſwer. However, the Indignation was not ſo great, but that his Majeſty in the Reply he made to it, allow'd and admitted many of the legal Rights which juſtly belong'd to every one of the three Eſtates, King, Lords, and Commons; and ſays the learned Lawyer, one wou'd have thought that Declaration which was ſo plain and honourable, might have been the Foundation for a good Agreement. It may be wonder'd why the Lord Clarendon took no notice of ſo bright a Part of the King's Anſwer, unleſs the Omiſſion infer ſomebody's Inſincerity, the King's or his own; and thus I am not the only Perſon who ſays the Book call'd Clarendon's Hiſtory is not ſincere. Mr. Archdeacon calls the Propoſitions unheard-of. But the ſame learned Author who condemns the Lord Clarendon for Inſincerity, adds, The Omiſſion in Echard of that material Part, is not diſagreeable to the reſt of his Miſrepreſentation; for that Hiſtorian has ſpar'd no Pains to repreſent his Majeſty's DEPARTING from the Rules of Law to an arbitrary Power to be in all Things RIGHT, and the Parliament's Proceedings to reduce that arbitrary Power, to be in all Things WRONG; whereas this Royal Declaration was a contradictory Judgment proceeding out of the King's own Mouth, whereby moſt of the Steps of his own Government before this Parliament, ſtand condemn'd as illegal; and yet Echard has rack'd his Invention to honour and even adore the one, and diſparage the other with the moſt affecting Epithets, as far as his Capacity and Elocution extended; for his Praiſe is the moſt nauſeous Flattery, and his Diſpraiſe the moſt ſtupid Malice which ever dropp'd from ſo voluminous an Hiſtorian. Mr. Acherley, as ſober and judicious a Writer as any in our Time, charges Echard with racking his Invention to abuſe the Lords and Commons of England; which I think is the worſt Sort of Falſhood, and he ſpeaks not much better of Clarendon, which I hope is ſome Excuſe for the honeſt Liberty I have taken and ſhall take with both of them. Mr. Acherley has collected ſome of his Majeſty's Confeſſions quite contrary to the Lord Clarendon's and Mr. Echard's Hiſtories, which are thus prov'd to be falſe by King Charles the Firſt's Account of himſelf: He admitted that before this Parliament he had departed from the known Laws to an arbitrary Power, and that great Miſchiefs had grown from the Exerciſe of that arbitrary Power, and that the Preſſures and Sufferings of his Subjects had proceed d from the long Intermiſſion of Parliaments; and therefore his Majeſty had reſolv'd, without putting any Gloſs upon his former Commands, which the Earl of Clarendon and Mr. Echard put for him in almoſt every Paragraph of their Hiſtories, or endeavouring to make any Excuſe for his Miniſters Buckingham, Strafford, Laud; and he promis'd that the Meaſure of his Juſtice and Favour by way of Reparation, ſhou'd far exceed the Oppreſſions and Sufferings his good Subjects had undergone. Yet in all his Meſſages, Anſwers, Declarations, Proclamations, there are no Expreſſions repeated with more Tautology than the Laws, the Laws of the Land, the fundamental Laws, tho' thoſe Laws had been ſo much invaded and abus'd, as by the King's own Confeſſions; yet himſelf, or the Penman of thoſe Papers, endeavour'd to impoſe upon the People that the King had kept to the Letter of them, and was now forc'd to take Arms in their Defence.

While his Majeſty was careſſing the Yorkſhire Gentry and Freeholders, and liſting them in his Troops, the Parliament order'd all Deputy-Lieutenants to be preſent at Muſters, purſuant to Warrants iſſu'd by the Lord-Lieutenants of the ſeveral Counties. They alſo made an Order for bringing in Horſes and Arms, Money and Plate, for the Defence of the King and Parliament, and for preſerving the publick Peace: This was after his Majeſty had commanded Commiſſions of Array to be iſſu'd in moſt Parts of England, which is another beginning of the War on his Side. His Commiſſion for Leiceſterſhire was directed to the Earl of Huntington, the Earl of Devon, Henry Haſtings Eſq; Son to the Earl of Huntington, Sir Henry Berkley,

The Houſe of Commons upon the Queſtion, voted the Commiſſion to be againſt Law, againſt the Liberty and Property of the Subject. This did not hinder theſe Array-men, who underſtanding there was a Magazine of Arms and Ammunition laid up at Leiceſter by the Earl of Stamford Lord-Lieutenant of the County, order'd Mr. Haſtings the Sheriff to ſeize it. Accordingly he came to Leiceſter with a good Troop of Horſe under Pretence of guarding the Judges at the Aſſizes, which the Committee of Parliament in the North having Notice of, Information was given to the Two Houſes, who order'd three Companies of Foot to be rais'd for the Defence of the Magazine. The Captains nominated for this Employment, were Major Gray, Dr. Baſtwick, and Captain Ludlow the General's Brother, who repar'd to Leiceſter to raiſe their Companies, but before they had compleated them, the King with all his Cavalry, conſiſting of about two thouſand Horſe, arriv'd at Leiceſter, againſt whom three Companies being no way ſufficient to defend the Town, the three Officers reſolv'd only to ſecure the Place where the Magazine lay; which not being large enough to receive above one Company, Major Gray remain'd there with his Men, and Dr. Baſtwick and Captain Ludlow diſpers'd theirs, and ſet forwards for London, but had not rode many Miles before they were ſeiz'd by the Sheriff's Troop, brought back to Leiceſter, and from thence ſent to the common Goal at York; where, according to the Cavalier manner, they were cruelly treated. Theſe were the firſt Priſoners, and the King's Men took them. Major Gray capitulated, and the Magazine was ſent to the ſeveral Parts of the County for which it was provided.

Ludlow, 29.

The Parliament, who by no means wanted Intelligence, had early Intimation of the Queen's carrying off the Crown Jewels to pawn them in Holland, againſt which they paſs'd a Vote, declaring all ſuch as brought Money into England which was borrow'd upon them, or paid any Bill upon that Account, to be Promoters of the War intended by the King, and to be Enemies to the State.

A Committee was appointed to take Care that all Votes and Orders of the Houſe ſhou'd be divulg'd, diſpers'd, and publiſh'd; which Committee were Sir Walter Erle, Sir Peter Wentworth, Sir Samuel Rolle, Arthur Goodwyn Eſq; Mr. Pury, Mr. Noble.

Committee for Votes & Orders.

The Houſe of Lords took into Conſideration the Deſertion of ſeveral Peers to the King at York, and voted an Order for their Appearance on Pain of Delinquency. A Summons was ſent to them, and they return'd an Anſwer the 4th of June, ſubſcrib'd by Northampton, Devonſhire, Dover, Monmouth, Rich, Andover, Grey of Ruthen, Coventry, Capel; wherein they told the Houſe of Lords, they hop'd no Character wou'd be fix'd upon them but what became Men of Honour to hear. The Houſe of Commons impeach'd them for deſerting the Parliament, and refuſing to return upon Summons, and the Lords paſs'd Sentence againſt them not to ſit or vote in that Houſe during this Seſſion of Parliament, not to enjoy parliamentary Privilege, and to ſtand committed to the Tower during the Pleaſure of the Houſe. The Houſe of Commons laid a Mulct of an hundred Pounds upon every one of their own Members who abſented themſelves from the Service of the Houſe; ſo deſirous were they to have their Aſſembly full, and the Senſe of the Nation to be as general as poſſible; and ſo far from uſing Artifices to leſſen their Number, and pack a Company for private Ends, as the Archdeacon more than once intimates with equal Modeſty and Truth.

A.D.1642.

The Commiſſioners of Array beginning their Work in the Country, and putting the People in Motion, the Parliament quicken'd the Execution of the Ordnance for the Militia, which in a great Meaſure fruſtrated the Deſigns of the Array-Men, who, if they had ſucceeded, wou'd ſoon have got a Power together with the King at the Head of it, which wou'd have diſpers'd the Parliament, and conſequently have utterly deſtroy'd the Conſtitution, as was the Queen's Deſign, which the King did not diſlike. Orleans ſays, "The Queen was zealous for reſtoring the "Catholick Religion, full of that Spirit which "warms the Blood of abſolute Monarchs. A li- "mited Authority ſeem'd to the Queen no better "than Servitude, which caus'd her to make the "utmoſt Efforts to reſcue the King her Husband "from it. She always had a Nuntio with her; ſhe "openly correſponded with the Catholick Lords; "ſhe ſtood up with Heat for every Thing that "regarded the Church. The King gave her full "Liberty, and ſupported her, which made it ſuſ- "pected he was no thorough Proteſtant; and the "Zeal with which he promoted the Archbiſhop's "Deſign, gave his Enemies good Ground to ac- "cuſe him of being a Catholick. What can be plainer? "The Queen is reſolv'd to eſtabliſh Po- "pery and arbitrary Power:" The King ſupports her in it; the Archbiſhop has a Deſign too againſt the Proteſtant Religion, and the King promotes it; the French Jeſuit who wrote his Hiſtory in Concert with King James, tells us ſo; and if we had an hundred other Proofs of their Reſolution and Deſign to alter Religion and Government, one might take Father Orleans's Words for it.

The ill Deſign of the Court.

On the 19th of June the Two Houſes reſolv'd, that all thoſe who are Actors in putting the Commiſſion of Array in Execution, ſhall be deem'd Diſturbers of the Peace of the Kingdom, and Betrayers of the Liberty of the Subject. We have mention'd the firſt Attempt to diſturb the Peace and betray the Peoples Liberties, which was made by Mr. Haſtings in Leiceſterſhire. The ſame Commiſſion was begun to be executed in Cambridgeſhire, but the County ſuppreſs'd it, and petition'd the Parliament for Arms to ſtand on their Defence againſt that malignant Part.

Parliament.

Sir Richard Gurny Lord-Mayor of London, had been ſo much flatter'd by the Courtiers for his Loyalty, that he gave himſelf up entirely to them, and proclaim'd the Commiſſion of Array notwithſtanding he had been warn'd to the contrary by the Houſe of Lords, who committed him to the Tower for his Contempt, and depriv'd him of his Mayoralty. The Ordnance for the Militia took Effect in the City under the Management of Sir John Wollaſton, Alderman Gibs, Alderman Towſe, Alderman Warner, and other Magiſtrates, the moſt wealthy and eminent Citizens. The King to obſtruct them ſent for Sir John Wollaſton and Alderman Gibs to attend him at York, but the Parliament commanded their Attendance at London, and declar'd it was againſt the Laws of the Land, for which his Majeſty declares himſelf a Champion, to command any of his Subjects to attend him, but only ſuch as are bound by ſpecial Service; which I am ſure is agreeable to common Senſe, if not to common Law.

London Militia.

The Earl of Northampton was very officious with his Commiſſion of Array in Warwickſhire, but to as little Purpoſe as Sir Richard Gurny in London, for the Militia Ordnance being executed there by the Lord Brook, no leſs than eight hundred Horſe and two thouſand Foot appear'd to ſupport it. Upon which the Earl of Northampton dropp'd his Commiſſion, Earl of Northampton.

A.D.1642. miſſion, and made Haſte back to the King at York.

Cheſhire. In Cheſhire, Earl Rivers, a Papiſt, who had lately been an Occaſional Conformiſt, taking the Oath of Allegiance to qualify him to do Miſchief, impriſon'd ſeveral Perſons for not obeying his Commiſſion of Array; and the Papiſts were grown ſo preſumptuous in thoſe Parts, by the Countenance of the Lord Rivers, and Sir Thomas Aſton, that they demanded the Re-delivery of their Arms, which had been taken from them according to Law; but the Ordnance of the Militia being put in Execution, above three Fourths of the County fell in with it. All theſe Attempts, the great Proviſion made for War by the Queen and Cavaliers in Holland, are with Echard only Evidences that the King never intended to break the Peace. It was a Matter of Wonder, ſays that wiſe Man, and ſtill remains Matter of Cenſure, that the King never put himſelf into a Poſture of Defence: He had indeed rais'd Horſe and Foot in Yorkſhire, and was preparing to beſiege Hull: He had try'd what he cou'd do with Commiſſions of Array, to ſet the People every where in Arms; which not ſucceeding as it was hop'd, Mr. Archdeacon wonders that he did not do what he could not do better than he did. He is perfectly well vers'd in the Cant of the Court Declarations, the Law, the Laws of the Land, the Fundamental Laws; and not only the King, who confeſs'd that he had been breaking of them ſixteen Years, but all the Lords and Gentlemen who made ſo glorious an Appearance at York, were ſuch, who by regular Obſervance of the Laws, had render'd themſelves unblameable to the People, by whoſe Repreſentative a great Number of them lay under Impeachment for the breach of them. I am not at all ſurpriz'd at that prodigious Falſity, where he informs us, that the Parliament collected eleven Millions Sterling only out of London, Middleſex and Eſſex, by their Order for bringing in Money and Plate; the whole Sum collected by them ſince their Seſſion, being but 1,267,326 Pounds: A Man that cou'd believe eleven Millions were rais'd in London, and two Counties, muſt be well acquainted with the Caſh and Stock of the Nation, and very well deſerve our Attention to what he reports. He confirms it by another Falſity, that the Lecturing Preachers accurs'd all thoſe that did not bring in their Plate and Money. This Order was made the 10th of June, and was introduc'd with the Cauſe of it, the levying Forces, and iſſuing Commiſſions of Array by the King, which oblig'd the two Houſes to provide for their Safety, and the Preſervation of the publick Peace. The Security of the Parliament, which was their own, and the Intereſt at eight per Cent, brought in Treaſure enough in a few Days, to anſwer their preſent Occaſions.

The ſending for the Aldermen of London, was back'd with a Letter to forbid the Citizens lending Money: His Majeſty's Counſellors cou'd not but know that all theſe Letters expos'd his Authority, which cou'd not have its due Weight, while 'twas exercis'd in Defiance of the Parliament.

Letters intercepted by the Parliament. In the mean Time Letters were intercepted coming from Holland, in which 'twas ſaid, There are Fourſcore Gentlemen ready to tranſport themſelves to York; that much Money had been got upon the Jewels, and all ſorts of Arms of Proof were provided, in order to preſerve the Quiet of the Kingdom, and defend the Privileges of Parliament, as was the Cant at York; that Prince Rupert was ſhipping Horſe, and one Lightfoot, a Merchant, had bought 15000 Pounds of Powder, and was buying Match; that one Jewel was pawn'd for 40000 Guilders; that in a Ketch belonging to one White of Dover, there were many Fats of Match, with Proviſion of War; that Prince Rupert, Prince Maurice, Lord Denby, Lord Digby, Oneal the Iriſh Traytor, Sir Lewis Dives, Colonel Wilſon, Colonel Cockram, and that brave Captain Hyde, were ready to imbark, being very jocund, and had in their Cups made Dividends of the Parliament Mens Lands. A Letter from General Wilmot to Mr. Crofts, was alſo intercepted, wherein he wrote him the naked Truth, and ſpoke the Sentiments of his Heart; by which one may ſee, how the Cavaliers deluded one another with falſe Reports, and vain Hopes; the King is become the Favourite of the Kingdom: His Enemies are not able to raiſe an Army: Indeed here lies the Jeſt, for they will be follow'd juſt enough to forfeit their Eſtates, which I have heard you ſay often, were better beſtow'd on ſome of us; and without doubt 'twas with this View, that the Appearance was ſo glorious at York; that ſo many Lords and Gentlemen deſerted the Country Intereſt, and embark'd with the Court. Yeſterday, continues Wilmot, the Houſe ſent for Berkley, Aſhburnham, and my ſelf, but the King gave the Meſſenger a ſhort Anſwer, and an Officer or two gave him a ſhort Cudgel, ſo he return'd to London with his Arm in a Scarf, like a fine Gentleman: It muſt be own'd the Cavaliers were very good at Cudgelling, when they had Liquor and Number on their Side. They are like to have their Bellyfuls of it in a little while. A.D.1642.

Lords at York. The King being ſurrounded with ſuch a ſhining Circle of Lords, we are told their Lordſhips were deſir'd to ſign a Paper, containing the Particulars of ſome Affronts they had receiv'd in the Tumults at London, as good Reaſons for their Abſence; but theſe Lords having the next Day thought better of it, deſir'd the Paper might not be publiſh'd, and ſome of them declar'd if it was, they would diſown it; which ſhews us how little Regard was had to ſtrict Truth in thoſe Papers: For if what the Court had prepar'd for their Lordſhips to ſign, had been ſtrictly true, they needed not to have diſown'd it, nor to have been afraid of its being ſeen. Echard, without entring into any ſuch ſcrupulous Conſiderations, tells us, the Paper wou'd have been of ſovereign Uſe, if the Lords had not repented of their ſigning it, and would have ſuffer'd it to have been made Publick: But to make ſome Atonement, they enter'd into an Engagement the next Day, To obey no Orders nor Commands, but what were warranted by the known Laws of the Land. As for Inſtance, the Ordnance for the Militia, which was declar'd to be the Law of the Land, by the Lord Keeper Littleton, who was the firſt Peer who ſet his Hand to this contradictory Agreement; in which was added, the Defence of his Majeſty's Perſon, Crown and Dignity; the true Proteſtant Religion, eſtabliſh'd by the Law of the Land, the Liberties of the Subject, the Privileges of Parliament: The Subſcribers were, Lord Keeper Littleton, Duke of Richmond, Marquis of Hertford, Earl of Lindſey, Earl of Cumberland, Earl of Huntington, Earl of Bath, Earl of Southampton, Earl of Salisbury, Earl of Dorſet, Earl of Cambridge, Earl of Briſtol, Earl of Weſtmorland, Earl of Berkſhire, Earl Rivers, Earl of Newcaſtle, Earl of Dover, Earl of Carnarvon, Earl of Newport, Lord Mowbray and Matravers, Lord Willoughby of Eresby, Lord Howard of Charlton, Lord Newark, Lord Paget, Lord Chandos, Lord Falconbridge, Lord Powlet, Lord Lovelace, Lord Saville, Lord Dunſmore, Lord Seymour, and the nine Lords expelled the Houſe of Peers, for deſerting their Duty in Parliament. They alſo ſign'd a Paper, wherein they profeſs'd before God, That the King had no Intention to make War upon the Parliament; which we alſo have ſhewn already, and ſhall ſhew again and again, before the Year is out. The Earl of Salisbury was ſo ill ſatisfy'd with this Service, that he left York the next Day, and was readmitted to his Seat in Parliament.

His Majeſty, to enable him to go through with the Deſign he had on Foot, offer'd the Security of his

Mr. Archdeacon has a very clear way of expreſſing himſelf; the King was ſo far from being in a Condition to make War, that he had not one Poſt, the Earl of Newcaſtle having, ſays he, juſt ſecur'd that Town upon the Tyne, for his Majeſty's Uſe; and juſt then the Ship Providence arriv'd from Holland, with Powder, Arms, Artillery great and ſmall, to let the World ſee the King had no Intention to make War; ſo immediately after theſe Stores were brought to York, he granted Commiſſions for raiſing Regiments of Horſe and Foot, and made the Earl of Lindſey General of his Army, Sir Jacob Aſhley Major-General; all which was before the Parliament voted the raiſing an Army, or declared a General; and was a very plain Proof that the King was determin'd for War, and that the Parliament was not. They wanted not early Information of every Step that was taken at York, nor Wiſdom to guard againſt it. To that End they order'd the Earl of Warwick to ſecure the Fleet, as is already hinted; the King wrote to the Earl, to deliver it up to Pennington, another ſuch truſty Perſon as Lunsford, which was obey'd like the Letter to the Londoners, to lend no Money. His Lordſhip writing to Mr. Pym, ſaid, "I reſolv'd, "however, not to defer taking on me the Charge "committed to my Truſt, wherein God hath "made me hitherto ſo ſucceſsful, but to continue "it till it ſhall be revok'd by the Authority which "entruſted me; which having declar'd to my "Captains at a Council of War, all of them unanimouſly and chearfully took the ſame Reſolution, excepting five, who were the Rear-Admiral, Captain Fogg, Captain Barley, Captain Slingsby, "and Captain Wake, who at firſt pretended to "ſtand in their Defence againſt me, only Captain "Barley came in and ſubmitted. The next Morning I weigh'd Anchor, and caus'd the reſt of my "Ships to do ſo. All Things being in a Readineſs to attack thoſe who ſtood out, Sir John "Mennes, the Rear-Admiral, and Captain Fogg, "came in to me, but Slingsby and Wake refus'd "ſtill, whereby I let fly again over them, and "ſent them word I had turn'd up the Glaſs, and "if in that Space they came not in, they muſt "look for me aboard them: My own Boat, and "moſt of the Boats in the Fleet, went with the "Meſſage, and their Anſwer was ſo peremptory, "that my Maſter and Sailors grew impatient, and "though they had no Arms at all, enter'd the "Ships in a Moment, took hold of the Shrouds, "ſeiz'd the Captains, ſtruck their Yards and Top-"maſts, and brought them in to me." All this was doing, while the King was privately reſolving to take the Fleet into his own Hands, which the Parliament had publickly reſolv'd to take into theirs. Mr. Archdeacon gives us a tedious Account of the private Reſolution, which being a Reckoning without one's Hoſt, is equally vain and impertinent; Doubtleſs had Sir John Pennington been there, the greateſt Part of the Fleet had been preſerv'd for the King. The Truth is, he ſtaid all the while at Dover, to ſee whether any of the Ships wou'd receive him as Admiral: But all the Commanders ſign'd a Writing, That they would readily obey the Earl of Warwick, and not deſert the Parliament. Which Writing his Lordſhip ſent to the two Houſes, and ſoon after took the Lyon, a Ship of 42 Guns, which had in her Company a little Ship, loaden with Gunpowder and Ammunition for his Majeſty's Uſe. The King reclaim'd the two Ships, but the Earl refus'd to part with them.

Earl of Warwick and the Fleet.

His Majeſty, to give further Proof of his peaceable Intentions, ſet out from Beverley on the 6th of July, with 3000 Foot, and 1000 Horſe, to beſiege Hull. Pray obſerve, as yet there was no Army voted to be rais'd, nor no General in Nomination for the Parliament. The Lord Willoughby of Eresby, and Sir Thomas Glenham, were detatch'd from the King's Army with 200 Men, to cut off all Supplies from Barton upon Humber. Sir John Hotham, Governor of Hull, drown'd the Country about the Town, and ſent the Parliament Information of the Siege with which he was threatned. The two Houſes order'd two Men of War to Hull, the Captains of which were to obey Hotham, and publiſh'd a Declaration, that they would make good the Damage the Country receiv'd by Drowning it, and ſatisfy and protect all Perſons that ſhould convey Supplies to the Town. The Cavaliers burnt the Town Mills, but not without Loſs of ſome Men from the Cannon ou the Walls. However this is not to be deem'd a War, burning of Mills not being Bloodſhed. The Earl of Newport was wounded in one of the Skirmiſhes between the Beſiegers and the Beſieged. Now it was that Beckwith's Plot, before-mention'd, was diſcover'd, which ſo enrag'd the Inhabitants, that they took Arms almoſt to a Man, for the Defence of the Place. About the latter end of July, Sir John Meldrum ſally'd out with 500 Men, who being very well known to the Train'd-Bands in the King's Army, the latter refus'd to Fight, and the reſt of the Forces that were with them took to their Heels, leaving 30 of their Company behind them Priſoners, but two only were kill'd. Sir John Meldram made another Salley with 60 Horſe, and 300 Foot, who drove away thoſe of the Cavaliers who were neareſt the Town, kill'd 21, and took 15; after which he advanc'd to Aulbie, about four Miles from Hull, where the King's Magazine was kept in a Barn; Sir John vigorouſly attack'd the Guard, who made ſmall Reſiſtance; and being moſtly Train'd-Bands, threw away their Arms, and fled to their ſeveral Homes. This Loſs oblig'd the King to give over all Thoughts of reducing Hull, and to remove the Seat of the War which he had begun, into the Heart of the Kingdom. To cover this Diſgrace at Hull, the Lord Clarendon, and Echard after him, tell us a long Story of the Lord Digby's correſponding with Hotham to betray the Town. He came from Holland in a Bark, which was taken, and carry'd into Hull, where he made himſelf known to the Governor Sir John Hotham, and ſo debauch'd him by his Perſuaſions and Flatteries, that Hotham commenc'd that Treaſon, for which he afterwards ſuffer'd, though he cou'd not accompliſh it, for the brave Sir John Meldrum, Lieutenant-Governor of the Town, could not be corrupted; and indeed it is aſtoniſhing, that ſo many gallant Men, in Appearance and Character, were ſo liable to Corruption, and cou'd be tempted by vain Titles, and imaginary Honours, to deſert the beſt Cauſe in the World, that of Religion and Liberty, and eſpouſe the worſt, abſolute Lawleſs Power, Superſtition and Perſecution. The Townſmen of Hull were zealouſly engag'd with Meldrum, and the Earl of Warwick appearing in Sight with the Fleet, the King no ſooner ſaw the Admiral's Flag than he thought it was high Time for him to march off.

A.D. 1642. The King before Hull. Hull beſieg'd by the King.

The Parliament being not to be perſuaded by all theſe peaceable Diſpoſitions, that there was no War intended againſt them, RESOLV'D on the 12th of July, that an Army be forthwith rais'd for the Safety of the King's Perſon, Defence of both Houſes of Parliament, and of thoſe who have obey'd their Orders and Commands, and preſerving of the true Religion, the Laws, Liberty and Peace of the Kingdom: RESOLV'D, That the Earl of Eſſex ſhall be General: RESOLV'D, That in this Cauſe, for

The Parliament raiſes an Army.

Earl of Eſſex made General.

A.D.1642 for the Safety of the King's Perſon, &c. as before, This Houſe will live and die with the Earl of Eſſex, whom they have nominated General: RESOLV'D, That a Petition be fram'd to move his Majeſty to a good Accord with his Parliament, to prevent a Civil War: To which Reſolution the Lords agreed, and the Earl of Holland, Sir John Holland, and Sir Philip Stapleton, were order'd to repair to Beverley, and preſent the Petition to his Majeſty. The Earl of Bedford was voted General of the Horſe, and a Declaration was made upon it, ſhewing in many Particulars that the King had begun the War.

Earl of Bedford General of the Horſe.

The King began the War.

1. " By Mr. Haſtings oppoſing the Sheriff of " Leiceſter in the Execution of his Office, to keep " the Peace, with 200 Foot, and 100 Horſe.

2. " By putting a Garriſon of Soldiers into New- " caſtle, under the Earl of that Name, who was " order'd to ſeize Hull, and would have ſeiz'd it, " had not the Parliament prevented it.

3. " By fortifying the Mouth of the River Tyne, " to intercept the Coal Trade between Newcaſtle " and London.

4. " By ſending for, and receiving Artillery, " Gunpowder and warlike Stores from Holland.

5. " By warlike Preparations in Yorkſhire, iſſu- " ing Commiſſions for raiſing Regiments, and " naming Officers of the Army, in which are ſe- " veral Papiſts, and other Perſons of deſperate " Fortune, ready to execute any Violence, Rapine " and Oppreſſion. Troops of Horſe are ſent into " Lincolnſhire, who have driven the well-affected " People from their Dwellings. Horſes are taken " away from the Owners by Force, Acts of Ho- " ſtility are committed, Proviſions are reſtrain'd " from coming to Hull, and an Army ſent to be- " ſiege it. They conclude, The WAR being by " his Majeſty thus BEGUN, the Lords and Com- " mons in Parliament held themſelves bound in Con- " ſcience to raiſe Forces for the Defence of their " Religion, Rights, Liberties and Properties, in which " they deſire the Concurrence of all well-diſpos'd " Perſons." With whatever Confidence the Archdeacon tells his Readers that the Parliament began the War, it is notorious that all thoſe Articles are true, and that the King actually began it with the Siege of Hull; he inveſted the Town with his Army, ſays Larrey, he laid Siege to it in Form, and open'd the Trenches. Again, This firſt Enterprize of the Royal Army, preſag'd but indifferently for the King: Again, The King's Troops firſt took the Field.

Marſton a malignant Clergyman.

There was not at this Time wanting a great Number of Laudean Clergy, who though they durſt not preach ſo openly againſt the Rights and Liberties of the People, as when Laud was at their Head, yet they could not forbear expreſſing their Rage againſt thoſe who aſſerted and defended them. One Marſton, a Parſon in Canterbury, was brought to the Bar of the Houſe of Lords, for ſpeaking ſcandalouſly of the two Houſes, ſaying, He would ſtab the Hearts Blood of thoſe who oppos'd the Kentiſh Petition againſt the Militia BILL, That the Parliament cozened and cheated the Country, and that there would be Bloodſhed in England before Midſummer Day, and there was within three Weeks of it; for which Sayings he was ſentenc'd to be depriv'd of all his Eccleſiaſtical Livings and Dignities, to be incapable of any for the future, and to be impriſon'd in the Gatehouſe during their Lordſhips Pleaſure.

Petition at Beverley.

The Earl of Holland, Sir John Holland, and Sir Philip Stapleton, deliver'd the Parliament's Petition to the King at Beverley, wherein they pray'd him to disband his Forces, recall his Commiſſions of Array, and return to his Parliament. But he refus'd it all, purſuant to the Scheme reſolv'd on by the Queen's Cabinet Council at Windſor, to proſecute the accuſed Members with War, and Force of Arms; and while he prepar'd for it, to deny all Particulars that could poſſibly be deny'd, to the Parliament, which is what the Reverend Hiſtorian calls his firm Reſolution; and his Majeſty in his Anſwer does not a little confirm the juſt Fears of the Parliament, that he intended to reſcind all the good Acts to which he had given the Royal Aſſent, during their Seſſion; for he ſaid, He had never conſented to any Thing ſince the beginning of the Parliament, which had been prejudicial to him, but he had been promis'd he ſhould receive no Damage from it, and yet he always found himſelf miſtaken. A very frank Confeſſion that he thought himſelf injur'd by the popular Acts he had paſs'd, and might right himſelf by Arms, he would be no more ſwagger'd into Conceſſions, ſays the Earl of Clarendon; which as Mr. Acherley obſerves, implies as if his Majeſty's Sentiments were, that the former Acts had been extorted; and the Opinion of the People was become almoſt general, that thoſe Acts of his Majeſty's Juſtice and Favour, without the ſecret Operation of the Scots Encampment in England, had never been obtain'd; and that therefore thoſe arbitrary Powers, call'd his Majeſty's Rights and Prerogatives, would, whenever the Force could be reſum'd, be remov'd. This Belief being ſo general, was there any other Safety under Heaven for the Parliament and People of England, but that of the Militia, in the Hands of thoſe they could truſt? For beſides all the open Acts of Violence which have been juſt mention'd, and all the warlike Preparations in England and Holland, Mr. Acherley ſpeaks of Negotiations with the Pope's Nuntio to procure 40000 Men from the Kings of France and Spain; of a Treaty with the King of Denmark, which was unqueſtionable, for 6000 Muskets, and 1500 Horſe-Arms, 20 Pieces of Artillery, and as many Troopers as wou'd agree with the Daniſh Affairs. Directions were given for landing them at Newcaſtle, ſecur'd for that Purpoſe by the Earl of that Name, or Holy-Iſland, which laſt Place was deſcrib'd as the fitteſt Harbour in England, having an excellent Road in and out, and a ſtrong Fort, under the King's Command. After all theſe known Truths had been render'd unqueſtionable, with what Conſcience could the Author of the Hiſtory of the Rebellion, and Mr. Echard, endeavour to impoſe on their Readers a Belief that the Parliament drove on furiouſly to a War, and the King never thought of it, till he was almoſt ſurrounded by their Armies? Mr. Archdeacon tells us, the King had no Money. Whitlocke, he was furniſh'd with Money upon the pawn'd Jewels, and by Contributions from the Cavalier Lords and Gentlemen, and a Loan from Oxford Univerſity, who have never been behind-hand when any ſuch good Work has been going forward. The Maſters and Fellows of all the Colleges in Cambridge, ſent their Plate to the King at York; ſo anxious were thoſe Reverend Gentlemen for the Preſervation of the publick Peace; Many wiſhing, ſays Fuller, that every Ounce was a Pound. The Parliament look'd on it as an Act unjuſt in it ſelf, and dangerous in its Conſequences; for the preſent Maſters and Fellows were only Fiduciaries, not Proprietors of the Plate, to keep and uſe, but not to diſpoſe of it: The Univerſity took not this into Conſideration. The Dominion of the Laudean Clergy was in Danger, and a Church Reformation threaten'd. Nothing but the King's abſolute Power could prevent it, and the Maintenance of it warranted any Injuſtice. His Majeſty did not enquire into the Title of the Maſters and Fellows to that Plate, but the Parliament brought the Univerſity to a Reckoning for it afterwards; Dr. Beal, Dr. Martin, and Dr. Sterne, Maſters of St. John's, Queens and Jeſus College, were brought to London, and impriſon'd in the Tower for their Activity in the Plate Buſineſs, as was Dr. Holdſworth, the Vicechancellor, for printing the King's Declaration, contrary to a Vote of the two Houſes. A Conſiſtory being held at Cambridge, they were requir'd to contribute to the Parliament, as they had done to the

*A.D.*1642. King, but they refus'd it, and ſome of the Fellows were impriſon'd in St. John's College. Dr. Robert Pink Warden of New-College Oxon, and Vice-chancellor of that Univerſity, was very buſy there in forwarding the Commiſſion of Array, which the honeſt Townſmen did not approve of, and for which he was afterwards apprehended and committed Priſoner to the Gatehouſe at Weſtminſter; ſo zealous were our two famous Univerſities for abſolute Monarchy and Biſhop Laud's Hierarchy, and ſo little Concern had they for the Preſervation of the true Proteſtant Religion, and the Rights, Properties, and Liberties of their Fellow Subjects. Learning never flouriſh'd long but with Liberty, and their being inſenſible of ſo invaluable a Bleſſing, was a ſure Preſage of the Dearth of it which ſucceeded.

From Beverley the King remov'd to Leiceſter, where he courted the Inhabitants, but proclaim'd the Earl of Stamford Traytor; he might as well have been proclaim'd an Hermaphrodite. Where was the Treaſon in obeying the Call of his Country, and preparing to defend it from Violence and Injuſtice? The two Houſes vindicated him by a Declaration for removing the County Magazine, and ſetting Guards about it; and return'd an Anſwer to a Meſſage from the King peremptorily requiring the Town of Hull to be immediately ſurrender'd to him, and the Parliament to remove their Seſſion to ſome other Place where he might reſide ſafely. The Two Houſes juſtify'd their keeping Hull "for the Security of Religion, the Rights "and Liberties of the People, all which they ſaw "in imminent Danger, but no Reaſon why his "Majeſty ſhou'd require the adjourning of the "Parliament, ſince the Loyalty and Fidelity of the "City of London, and the honeſt Care of the Two "Houſes, render the uſual Place as ſafe for his Roy"al Perſon as any." Thus, ſays Echard, they denounced War, which his Majeſty had only whiſper'd in Yorkſhire, by raiſing an Army, laying Siege to Hull, &c. We have mention'd Sir Richard Gurny, whom he calls the BRAVE Lord-Mayor, and affirms he was put out of his Office contrary to the Laws of the Land, and Alderman Pennington choſen Mayor contrary to the Rules of Election, and by the Noiſe and Clamour of the RABBLE; which to ſay the worſt we can of it, is as falſe as any Thing in his Hiſtory: For the Rules of Election were exactly obſerv'd by Pennington, but Sir John Cordel whom the Cavalier Faction put up againſt him, had many Voters who had never before been ſeen at Elections, and were not on the Livery; theſe with clamorous Voices, to uſe my Author's Words, cry'd out a Cordel, others were for Alderman Towſe a worthy grave Citizen; but the moſt numerous and hearty Votes were for Alderman Pennington, who had more Voices than Towſe, and Towſe more than Cordel. Yet the reverend Hiſtorian very modeſtly aſſerts he was choſen by the Clamour of the Multitude; and that Judge Mallet was another Object of the Parliament's Severity, who for refuſing to read their Orders, was diſgracefully taken off the Bench at Kingſton Aſſizes. This was particularly charg'd againſt him; yet the Author's next Words are, he was kept Priſoner in the Tower two Years without any particular Charge againſt him. Another particular Charge was his promoting the Commiſſion of Array in Kent. When he was ſeiz'd, he produc'd the King's Letter for his Protection, which was not likely to do him much Service when his Majeſty had begun the War.

Alderman Pennington choſen Ld-Mayor.

Judge Mallet impriſon'd.

The two Parties King and Parliament have now appeal'd to the Sword; the natural Conſequence of which was, that each of them wou'd give the Law where they had Power to do it, as far as was neceſſary for their Preſervation. Yet the Earl of Clarendon, and after him Echard, are perpetually holding up their Hands in Aſtoniſhment, that the Two Houſes ſhou'd dare to do or ſay any thing contrary to the Authority Royal, which is with both of them the only Law of the Land. The Parliament have declar'd that Authority to be exercis'd in Breach of the Truſt for which it was repos'd; and yet theſe two renown'd Hiſtorians are amaz'd at their Impudence in oppoſing it, after they had raiſed an Army to defend themſelves againſt the Violence with which they were threaten'd by it: For the Clouds began now to riſe in the South as well as the North; Goring whom they had ſent to Portſmouth to ſecure that Town for them, prov'd a Traytor, deſerted their Service, and declar'd for the King. The Parliament immediately order'd the Earl of Warwick, who was return'd from Hull, to place a Guard of Ships, and hinder all Supplies to Portſmouth by Sea, while the Train'd-Bands block'd it up by Land. Goring's Men found Means to make their Way thro' them by Night, and to plunder Portſey-Iſland. The Lord Wentworth ſally'd out with ſixty Horſe, and took a Piece of Ordnance which the Parliament's Soldiers had left in that Iſland. In another Salley Colonel Goring and the Lord Wentworth advanc'd to the very Court of Guard in the Blockade; but being receiv'd very warmly, they retir'd with the Loſs of three Men, one Glover, and a Servant to Mr. Weſton Brother to the Earl of Portland, were two of the ſlain, Winter their Guide was taken. This was about ten Days before the King ſet up his Standard, and the Place held out againſt the Parliament's Forces near a Month. It was then ſurrender'd to Sir William Waller upon Articles. Sir William Waller, Sir Thomas Jervaiſe, Sir William Lewis, and Colonel Hurrey took Poſſeſſion of it for the Parliament. The Governor Colonel Goring, the Lord Wentworth, Mr. Lewkner, Mr. Weſton, and their Party, having Liberty to depart and to diſpoſe of their Effects. Goring embark'd for Holland, but ſoon return'd to the ſame Service in England, and became one of the moſt famous and moſt hated of the King's Generals.

Portſmouth.

The Parliament having voted all the Commiſſioners of Array Traytors, the King did the ſame by the Earl of Eſſex and all the Colonels and Officers of his Army, which ſtill remain'd quiet in and about London.

Earl of Eſſex proclaim'd TRAYTOR.

On the 12th of Auguſt the King publiſh'd his Proclamation and Declaration very large, ſetting forth what he had done in Favour of the People, and for the Satisfaction of the Deſires of the Parliament; then the evil Actions of the Parliament againſt him; and in all juſtifies his own, and condemns the Parliament's Proceedings. His own are thus repreſented by General Ludlow upon his rejecting the NINETEEN Propoſitions, "He was "reſolv'd to ſteer another Courſe, preſuming he "might obtain as good Terms as theſe if reduc'd "to the laſt Extremity; and that if his Arms ſuc"ceeded according to his Hopes, his Will might "paſs for a Law, purſuant to the Opinion of thoſe "who thought no way ſo likely to render his Au"thority abſolute, as the making a War upon his "People." The King at the ſame time requir'd all Men to repair to his ROYAL STANDARD at Nottingham on the 22d of Auguſt, which, he ſaid, all good Subjects were oblig'd to attend. Let the King govern according to Law, or contrary to Law, let him do what he will, let his Subjects ſuffer what they can, they are not good Subjects unleſs they ſacrifice their Lives for him. Excellent Logick!

King.

The Two Houſes finding there was no Safety for the Conſtitution but in a defenſive War, proceeded in the forming of their Army; the Earl of Pembroke was made Lieutenant-General of the Foot, the Lord Kimbolton a Lieutenant-General, Sir John Meyrick and Sir William Balfour Major-Generals.

Parliament Generals and Colonels.

The Lord Roberts, the Lord St. John, the Lord Rochford, the Lord Grey, the Lord Willoughby, the

A.D.1642. the Earl of Peterborough, the Earl of Stamford, the Lord Wharton, the Earl of Mancheſter, the Lord Brook, the Lord Fielding, Mr. Hollis, Mr. Hampden, Sir Henry Cholmley, Sir William Conſtable, Sir Philip Stapleton, Sir William Waller, Sir Samuel Luke, Colonel Grantham, Sir Arthur Haſlerigge, Colonel Fiennes, Colonel Goodwyn, And other Members of both Houſes; whom the Reader may put into the Scale with thoſe Gentlemen whom his Majeſty valu'd himſelf upon for their Quality and Weight.

Before the Royal Standard was erected, the King in a Declaration recapitulated, ſays the reverend Hiſtorian, the inſolent and rebellious Acts of the Houſe of Lords and Houſe of Commons, when there had not been the leaſt Pretence of Rebellion in any Acts of the Two Houſes, except to reſiſt an unlawful Power be to rebel. A rare Doctrine for the People of England at this Day, a rare Complement to be addreſs'd to his late ſacred Majeſty King George the Firſt, a rare Piece of Service to the Conſtitution; for which, to the Shame of his Patrons, the Hiſtorian met with other Kinds of Rewards than he deſerves. If I knew the Names of thoſe who recommended him to his late Majeſty, they ſhou'd live as long as this Work with the Scandal of it; and the Excuſe they gave for it, that they did not know what was in his Book, and were ſorry for what they had done, ſhou'd not preſerve their Memory from the due Animadverſion of Hiſtory. The Parliament, ſays he, were now proclaim'd REBELS, and we are now entring upon a dark Scene of Miſery, a calamitous Seaſon, uſher'd in by Prodigies and ſtrange portentous Sights ſeen in the Air, as Musketeers, harneſs'd Men, and Horſemen moving in the Clouds in Battel-Array, and attacking each other in ſeveral furious Poſtures. A Man that's capable of writing ſuch Stuff as this, muſt have an immenſe Capacity for ſound Reaſon and Argument. He has pick'd up a fine Cauſe, and the Cauſe has pick'd up a fine Hiſtorian; which has the beſt of it, the Hiſtorian or the Cauſe, I can't ſay.

Fights in the Clouds out of Echard.

Lilly erected a Figure upon the erecting of his Majeſty's Standard, under an evil Conſtellation, which he deſcribes thus in his Obſervations on King Charles's Life and Death; "The Heralds or at "leaſt thoſe who were then with the King, were "ignorant how and in what Manner to ſet up the "Standard Royal; they therefore hung it out in "one of the Turrets or Upper-Rooms of Not-"tingham-Caſtle within the Caſtle-Wall, where "King Richard III. ſet up his Standard. His Ma-"jeſty diſlik'd his Standard as plac'd within the "Caſtle; he ſaid it was to be plac'd in an open "Place, where all Men that wou'd might freely "come unto it, and not in a Priſon: They there-"fore carry'd it at his Command without the Ca-"ſtle, towards or into the Park there adjoyning, "into an open Place and eaſy of Acceſs. When "they came to fix it in the Ground, they per-"ceiv'd it was a meer Rock-Stone; ſo that they "with Daggers and Knives made a Hole for the "Standard to be put in, but all wou'd not ſerve. "Men were enforc'd for the preſent to ſupport it "with the Strength of their Arms and Bodies, "which gave great Occaſion to ſome Gentlemen "there preſent, to give a very ſad Judgment on "the King's Side, and to divine long beforehand "that he wou'd never do any Good by Arms. I "have alſo heard that in eight or ten Days he had "not thirty attended the Standard or lifted them-"ſelves."

We have ſpoken of the King's Averſion to the Londoners, whom he now charges with thoſe Tumults which he ſaid oblig'd him to leave Whitehall and the Parliament for ever. That this Charge is not fair, will appear by what follows; and that the Author of Eikon Baſilike, is no fairer than other Authors on the ſame Side, read William Lilly upon it; "Whereas the Writer of the King's Portraiture "complains, that the Inſolency of the Tumults was "ſuch, that his Majeſty's Perſon was in danger in "the Streets: This is a very great Untruth, for "notwithſtanding his Majeſty dined in the City "that Day he requir'd the Five Members of the "Citizens, yet he had no Incivility in the leaſt "Meaſure offer'd unto his Perſon, only many cry'd "out as he paſs'd the Streets, Sir, Let us have our "juſt Liberties, we deſire no more; unto which he "ſeveral Times anſwer'd you ſhall. An honeſt "Citizen, as I remember, threw into his Coach "a new Sermon, the Text whereof was, To thy "Tents O Iſrael. Indeed the Citizens, unto their "immortal Honour be it ſpoken, did with much "Reſolution protect the Five Members, and many "thouſands were willing to ſacrifice their Lives in "Defence of the Parliament." This Clarendon and Echard repreſent as the beginning of the Rebellion, and it is much the ſame in Eikon Baſilike; of the Veracity of which, one may from thence have a juſt Conception. It was not the Londoners only whom the King was diſpleas'd with, the Seamen had ſhewn their Zeal for the Proteſtant Religion and Engliſh Liberties, in refuſing to ſerve under Pennington againſt the Rochellers; they now alſo did the ſame in offering their Service to defend the Parliament, and particularly the Five Members; which his Majeſty being told of, ſaid, I wonder how I loſt the Affection of thoſe Water-Rats; and this Saying being reported among them, 'tis no wonder the Earl of Warwick ſoon after ſo eaſily got Poſſeſſion of the Fleet, he being exceedingly belov'd by the Sailors.

London not tumultuous.

After the Standard was ſet up at Nottingham, with a moſt thin Appearance of Soldiery, and Omens more ominous than all Mr. Archdeacon's impoſſible Viſions in the Air, as its tumbling down again, and the gloomy Looks of the People, as if the Standard was going to be hang'd inſtead of being erected: The Royal Army march'd to Coventry, but, ſays Echard, the King found the Gates ſhut againſt him to his great Surprize; whereas every Man who knew any thing of the Matter, would have been ſurpriz'd if he had not found them ſo ſhut; for his Undertakings were not ſo very well lik'd as to make wiſe Men fond of his Company. The Train'd-Bands of Nottingham refus'd to march out of their County, and the Townſmen of Nottingham wou'd not let any Part of their Magazine be taken from them. However, his Majeſty ſent to Coventry to let the Inhabitants know he intended to come and reſide with them ſome time, requiring them to provide Billets for his Army. The Mayor, Aldermen, and chief Citizens return'd for Anſwer, That his Majeſty ſhou'd be moſt welcome in Perſon, but they wou'd not permit his Soldiers to enter their City; for which my Author aſſures us he threaten'd to lay it in a Heap of Rubbiſh. What Surprize then cou'd he be in to find Entrance deny'd to his Army, who endeavour'd to force it, and fir'd ſeveral Pieces of Ordnance againſt the Town. One Shot beat down Part of the Lady Hales's Houſe in the Whitefryars, killing the Lady herſelf and an old Gentlewoman who had five Years lain bed-ridden. The Townſmen aſſiſted by three hundred Men from Buckingham, fir'd on the Cavaliers, who in their Retreat had their Rear attack'd and ſo roughly dealt with, that they were forc'd to leave ſome of their Ordnance behind them. The Parliament had made timely Preparations for the Relief of Coventry, the Lord Brook, the Lord Say, the Lord Grey, Colonel Hampden, Colonel Hollis, Colonel Cholmley, with ſix thouſand Foot and three hundred Horſe, were on the March for that Purpoſe. The Archdeacon tells us they were but one thouſand two hundred, and that the King's General Wilmot was blam'd for ſuffering them to advance without attacking them, which he might eaſily have done, and it wou'd have

The Lord Brook and the other Parliament Officers, took up their Quarters at Southam; and if the Royaliſts had attack'd them, they wou'd have had ſome Advantage by the Number of their Horſe one thouſand four hundred, whereas the Parliament Cavalry exceeded not three hundred; but the latter were ſuperior in Foot, and the Lord Brook having march'd towards Dunſmore to meet the Enemy, and the Earl of Northampton coming in ſight of them, the Parliamentarians prepar'd for Battel, Hampden's Regiment leading the Van. The Lord Brook had ſeven or eight Pieces of Ordnance, with which he cannonaded the Cavaliers with ſo good Effect, that the Earl of Northampton's Foot ſoon quitted the Field, and his Horſe follow'd their Example. There were about twenty kill'd, and twelve taken Priſoners of the Royaliſts, among the latter were Captain Legg who commanded a Troop of Horſe, and Captain Clarke. The Lord Brook took his Cannon alſo, but did not purſue him for want of Cavalry; or this Action, tho' little talk'd of, might have been deciſive, the King having ſo ſmall an Army with his Standard, it muſt have been ruin'd by the Loſs of ſo conſiderable a Body of it. The Parſon of Southam, a Man of evil and diſſolute Converſation, in the Words of the Chronicle, had his Houſe full of the King's Soldiers before the Lord Brook came, for which his Lordſhip order'd it to be ſearch'd, and there was found Store of Ammunition, Saddles, Muskets, Powder, &c. which were all ſeiz'd together with the Prieſt: and we ſhall find many more of his Cloth and Character engag'd in this Quarrel, for which the Archbiſhop of Canterbury was ſo well provided, that his Palace at Lambeth being ſearch'd, there was diſcover'd a Magazine of Arms ſufficient for five hundred Men. The Parliament had Information of an hundred and twenty Pieces of Cannon ſmall and great, that lay near the Water-Side four Miles below Graveſend, and they order'd a Troop of Horſe to ſecure them, as alſo to ſearch Cobham-Hall, where they met with ſome Reſiſtance; but having forc'd their Entrance, they found in it five Cartloads of Arms and Ammunition; freſh Inſtances that the Cavaliers never had the leaſt Thought of War till they were forc'd to it by the Roundheads.

Somerſet Militia.

The Ordnance for the Militia was put in Execution in Somerſetſhire by Colonel Popham, Colonel Pyne, Sir Thomas Wroth, Sir John Horner, Mr. Cole, Mr. Aſh, Mr. Hippeſley, Mr. Sandford, Mr. Harbyn, Mr. Strode, and other principal Gentlemen, Deputy-Lieutenants of that rich and ſpacious County; to oppoſe whom the King ſent the Marquis of Hertford Governor of the Prince, with Orders to execute the Commiſſion of Array; in which he was vigorouſly aſſiſted by the Lord Powlet, Sir John Stawel, Sir Ralph Hopton, Mr. Smith, and other Gentlemen, who procur'd a ſort of Petition from ſome of the County to hinder the Execution of the Militia Ordnance. Accordingly Sir Ralph Hopton arreſted Mr. Strode for High-Treaſon, and Mr. Smith behav'd with ſo much Inſolence, that both he and Sir Ralph were expell'd the Houſe of Commons, and ſent for as Delinquents, as were alſo Sir Francis Dodington, a ſcandalous Miniſter, and five or ſix others, who took Care to keep out of the Way. The Marquis of Hertford proclaim'd the Commiſſion of Array at Wells, and got together five hundred Horſe, Sir John Stawel join'd him with a Regiment of Horſe, and Sir Ralph Hopton and others brought in ſo many Men, that they form'd a little Army, on which the King built much of his Hopes. But the County at that Time Proteſtant and ſober, was for the moſt part againſt them, excepting thoſe Gentry and Peaſantry who had oppos'd the putting down Revels and Riots. Colonel Popham and his Brother Captain Edward Popham, Sir John Horner, Mr. Aſh, &c. were deſir'd to gather a Force, and drive the Array-Men out of Somerſetſhire, who had already begun to plunder the Houſes of all thoſe that were not of their Faction. Sir John Horner, moſt zealous in the Cauſe of the Reform'd Religion and Liberty, whoſe Merits and Memory do Honour to his Name, arm'd his Servants and Tenants, and his Neighbours took Arms to aſſiſt him. Being thus provided he march'd to Chewton, where he join'd Colonel Alexander Popham and his Brother Captain Edward Popham afterwards Admiral. Colonel Popham Grandſon to the Lord-Chief-Juſtice, ſet a like Example to his Poſterity, as did gallant Sir John Horner in a vigorous Oppoſition to an abſolute Monarchy and a perſecuting Hierarchy. He brought with him about a thouſand Men beſides his own Regiment of Militia, that of the Eaſtern Diviſion of the County. To them came Mr. Aſh, and ſoon after Sir Edward Hungerford and ſeveral Gentlemen from Briſtol, with Reinforcements, who altogether made a Body of four thouſand Men, and encamp'd on Mendip in ſight of Wells, whither the Array-Men retir'd after they had plunder'd Shepton, and were very welcome to Pierce the Biſhop, and his Cathedral Clergy. Colonel Popham, Sir John Horner, the reſt of the Gentlemen who headed the Militia, and their whole Army, lay all Night on the Hill, reſolving to fall on the Enemy the next Day; Sir John Horner had a Furze-Buſh for his Bed, as they all had; and the brave old Knight, animated with a true Engliſh Spirit of Liberty, was wont to ſay, His Furze-Buſh was the beſt Bed he ever lay on. The Marquis of Hertford and his Men of Array did not like the Neighbourhood of the Militia, whom they ſaw on the Hill, and ſent to treat. Sir John Horner's Men were impatient to fall on them, and chaſtiſe them for their Rapine and Inſolence at Shepton-Mallet, and wou'd allow the Marquis and his Followers but an Hour's time to conſider of the Terms they ſent; which the Lord Hertford employ'd in cauſing his Soldiers to march off as quietly as they cou'd, himſelf, Sir Ralph Hopton, Sir John Stawel, Sir Francis Dodington, and the reſt of the Cavalier Gentry, making the beſt of their Way to Shireburn, a Manor which had been Sir Walter Raleigh's, and then Car Earl of Somerſet's, and was now in Poſſeſſion of the Earl of Briſtol. Horner's Men having waited beyond the Time appointed for an Anſwer, and receiving none, enter'd the City of Wells without Oppoſition, except from the ill Tongues and ill Conduct of the Cathedral Company of the Minſter; for which, according to my Author, they met with ſome Knocks and Loſs. At the other End of the County Sir William Portman, Mr. Coles, Mr. Pyne, and others, enter'd Taunton with a Body of Horſe and Foot, where, in one Houſe, Mr. Brown's a Papiſt, they found ſixty Men's Armour. In Alderman Skinner's Houſe twenty Arms, and in the Houſe of one Tucker Steward to the Biſhop of Wincheſter, who is Lord of that and ſeveral adjacent Manors, an hundred Mens Armour for Horſe and Foot, twenty Barrels of Powder, fifty great Saddles, and Shot of all Sorts, which Biſhop Curle had provided as a Proof that no body had ever thought of making War for Church and King, till the Earl of Eſſex was on the March.

At Bridgwater was found good Store of Arms and Ammunition, and the like at Glaſtenbury, Ilcheſter, and Ilminſter. Mr. Baſſet and Mr. Barret ſearch'd Bath, and in all were diſcover'd Arms for one thouſand eight hundred Men, one hundred and fifty great Saddles, twenty-five Horſes for Service, and ten thouſand Pounds ready Money ſtor'd up in the Houſes of Delinquents and ſuſpected Perſons, which were all lodg'd in the Caſtle of Taunton. Ludlow mentions an Action between the Militia-Men and the Array-Men at Martial's Elm on Poldon Hill, which is ſaid to have been the firſt in this War, but we have ſeen otherwiſe in the

Courſe

A.D.1642. Courſe of the Hiſtory. Thus was this populous trading County ſecur'd for the Parliament; but thro' the Corruption of the leading Men, and the Inconſtancy of the People, ſo many deſerted this Cauſe afterwards, as gave great Trouble to the well-affected in thoſe Parts. Thoſe Deſerters were not the Horners, the Pophams, the Harbyns, the Hippeſleys, the Wroths, who continu'd in the Intereſt and Service of their Country.

Meſſage. His Majeſty's Affairs promiſing ſo ill in the beginning of the War, his Followers prevail'd on him to ſend a Meſſage to the Parliament by the Earls of Southampton and Dorſet, Sir John Colepepyr, and Sir William Udal, with Propoſals of a Treaty, but couch'd in ſuch Terms as ſhew'd it to be the Effect of Fear, and not a Deſire of Peace. The two Houſes took it ſo, and return'd for Anſwer, That in ſetting up of his Standard againſt them, he had put the Two Houſes of Parliament, and in them the whole Kingdom, out of his Protection; therefore until he recall'd his Proclamations whereby the Earl of Eſſex, both Houſes of Parliament, and all their Adherents, are declar'd TRAYTORS, and until he had taken down his Standard, he had put them into ſuch a Condition, that by the fundamental Privileges of Parliament, the publick Truſt repos'd in them, or with the general Good of this Kingdom, they cou'd not give him any other Anſwer. Anſwer. This the reverend Hiſtorian calls unheard-of Inſolence, and is in a Rage at their refuſing to let the Deſerters who brought the Meſſage ſit in either Houſe of Parliament. The King ſaid that he never intended to declare the Parliament TRAYTORS, but if Proclamations of Traytors be recall'd by them, he will recall his and take down his Standard. King's Reply. The two Houſes voted that the Arms of the Parliament for the Religion, Laws, and Liberties of the Kingdom, ſhall not be laid down till Delinquents be left to Juſtice, that their Eſtates may diſcharge the Debts of the Commonwealth; than which nothing cou'd be more juſt and equal, that thoſe who were the Cauſe of the Diſtemper might pay for the Cure. Votes. Echard makes this Vote to ſubject all the Eſtates in England to the Power and Pleaſure of the Parliament, who wou'd declare whom they pleas'd to be Delinquents. A vile Suggeſtion! which the whole Tenor of the Hiſtory diſproves; for they had often declar'd who were the Delinquents, all thoſe evil Counſellors who had counſelled the King to govern as he had done againſt Law and Juſtice, during fifteen Years Intermiſſion of Parliament, all thoſe who had been active Judges in thoſe cruel and unjuſt Courts, the Star-Chamber and High-Commiſſion; all thoſe who had countenanc'd the Tyranny of the Laudæan Hierarchy, Superſtitions, Innovations, Profanation of the Sabbath, &c. all thoſe who had executed the Commiſſions of Array, which put the Parliament under a Neceſſity to oppoſe Force with Force for their own Preſervation, and the Preſervation of the Laws, Rights, and Liberties of the People. Thoſe and many more ſuch Offenders about the King made a whole Hoſt, and there cou'd be no Safety for the Innocent while the Guilty remain'd unpuniſh'd. The Parliament were ſo moderate, that in the Article of Exception, which was the fourth of their Directions to the Lord-General the Earl of Eſſex, there were but few nam'd to be excepted by him out of any Pardon he was impower'd to grant Delinquents. Excepted Perſons. The Earl of Briſtol, Earl of Cumberland, Earl of Newcaſtle, Earl of Caernarvon, Earl Rivers, Duke of Richmond, Secretary Nicholas, Lord Viſcount Falkland, Lord Viſcount Newark, Mr. Endymion Porter, Mr. Edward Hyde; the latter is ſaid to be the Author of the Hiſtory of the Rebellion; and having been excepted out of every Pardon, propos'd by the Lords and Commons of England, no doubt he wou'd be extremely impartial and candid in his Hiſtory and Characters of them. It is not to be ſuppos'd that the Parliament excepted Mr. Edward Hyde, and Mr. Endymion Porter, out of Greedineſs for their Eſtates, whatever they might have in View by the Viſcount Newark's and Secretary Nicholas's Manors and Manſions. A.D.1642.

The Parliament according to the reverend Author, wax'd ſo proud, that they ſeiz'd on all Perſons of Quality whom they did not like; and if they were Abettors of Tyranny and Superſtition, the Parliament never lik'd them. They impriſon'd them with all Circumſtances of Cruelty and Inhumanity; and then he names the Lord Montague of Broughton. But he does not tell us he was a notable Malignant, as another Hiſtorian ſtiles him; and that his Priſon was only the Houſe of his own Daughter the Counteſs of Rutland, as his own Warwick informs us. By Delinquent and Malignant, the Language of thoſe Times, are to be underſtood Perſons who endeavour'd to introduce arbitrary Power as well Eccleſiaſtical as Civil, and to ſacrifice the Privileges of Parliament, and the Rights, Properties, and Liberties of the People to the King's Will and Pleaſure, and under him to their own. In what Fury is Mr. Archdeacon, when he ſpeaks of the Parliament's pious Deſign of reforming the Clergy; the Wildfire was kindled by the Mouths of their Preachers, who had driven the moſt learned from the Pulpits; and moſt of whom had really been ſo driven by Laud and his perſecuting Brethren. Many were much ſet againſt the Biſhops, ſays Dr. Calamy, by obſerving Men of Parts and Piety ſilenc'd, while inſufficient and vicious Men, the very ſame whom Echard means by the moſt learned, were encourag'd and preferr'd. This is not the only falſe Repreſentation in his and the Earl of Clarendon's Hiſtories, concerning the ſober Miniſtry who ſided with the Parliament. Dr. Calamy again; It hath indeed been aſſerted that it was the ſeditious Preachers who ſtirr'd up the People, and were the Cauſe of all the Commotions, which is a notorious FALSITY; many indeed there were who diſcover'd their Diſlike of the Book of Sports and bowing to Altars, and diminiſhing Preaching, and ſilencing Miniſters, and were glad that the Parliament attempted a REFORMATION; which was a Death Stroke to Echard's moſt learned Clergy, whom it drove out of the Pulpits; but very few even of theſe ſtirr'd up to War. The Parliament who we are told had juſt rais'd Eleven Millions by voluntary Contributions, are now, as he tells us, in ſuch Diſtreſs three or four Months after, that they voted all who wou'd not contribute ſhou'd be diſarm'd. There was ſo little need of Compulſion, not on account of Mr. Archdeacon's Eleven Millions, but the People's Readineſs to bring in their Wealth, that many voluntarily offer'd great Sums as a Gift and not a Loan, particularly the Lady Rumney of London ſent two thouſand Pounds as a free Gift to Guildhall; and other Ladies and Gentlewomen did not ſtick to part with their Jewels and Plate for the Service of the Parliament; Women of inferior Rank bringing in their Rings and Bodkins as ſo many Mites to the Publick Treaſury. A few Members of the Houſe of Commons excus'd themſelves, and wou'd not contribute, as Sir Sidney Montagu, and Mr. Fountaine the Lawyer, who for reflecting on the Contributions were both impriſon'd; but Fountaine contributed afterwards, and enrich'd himſelf by his Practice on both Sides. Contributions to the Parliament.

Before the King left Nottingham, his two Nephews Prince Rupert and Prince Maurice came to him, and had Commands given them in his Army. I do not repeat all the King's Meſſages nor the Parliament's Anſwers; both the one and the other have very thin Diſguiſes, but the latter are more plauſible and popular, and it cou'd not be otherwiſe. The King cou'd when he pleas'd have given the Parliament a reaſonable Security for their Religion, Liberties, and Properties; the Parliament cou'd not give themſelves up to his Will and Pleaſure, Prince Rupert, Prince Maurice.

*A.D.*1642. ſure, without not only betraying the Truſt the People had repos'd in them, but utterly deſtroying the Conſtitution in Church and State: For as to the Law, the Laws of the Land, and the fundamental Laws, in almoſt every Paragraph of the King's Speeches, Meſſages, Declarations, and Anſwers, we have obſerv'd already it muſt provoke Mirth or Indignation in all Men of Thought, who had ſeen and felt how ſhamefully they had been broken ever ſince this Royal Houſe reign'd in England, if their Memories were of ſo long ſtanding: And what a Jeſt muſt it be now to read the King's Meſſages, wherein he wou'd make the People believe while he was drawing into Wales, ſtill farther off from the Parliament, he was extremely deſirous to be with them. The Two Houſes reply'd, that the Oppreſſions, Rapines, and Murders, which had been committed upon his good Subjects, were but ill Tokens of a real Diſpoſition to Peace; that they ſought nothing but their Religion, Liberty, and the Tranquility of the Kingdom; that the Parliament might be ſecur'd from the open Violence and ſubtle Practices of a wicked Party who had long plotted their Deſtruction. They complain'd that Iriſh TRAYTORS and REBELS were admitted to his Preſence, Grace, and Favour; which is not to be deny'd without Bluſhing; and if he wou'd return to his Parliament without his Forces, they wou'd ſecure his Royal Perſon, Crown, and Dignity, which is not to be queſtion'd: The Conteſt not being now with the King's Perſon, but with his Government; not with the Monarchy, but with the Miniſtry; and the protecting Delinquents ſpiritual and temporal, was certainly the fatal Obſtacle to Peace, and the Cauſe of all the enſuing Calamities both to King and People.

King's March and Speech.

From Nottingham the King remov'd to Derby, thence to Stafford, thence to Wellington, where he made a Speech to his Army, and thence to Shrewſbury. In his Speech he mention'd again his good Intentions to govern by the known Laws of the Land, which gave Comfort and Satisfaction to the Welſhmen on the Marches, and Life and Encouragement to the Soldiers, who by liſting under Lunsford, Goring, &c. ſhew'd they had a great Concern upon them about the Laws of the Land. The Lord Clarendon, and my reverend Author after him, aſſure us theſe Borderers thought the King's Word a greater Security to them than an Act of Parliament. They liv'd ſo far off, that probably they had never heard of the Nature of that Security, and had ſo little to pay, that they knew not what was meant by Loans, Benevolences, Ship-Money, and the like. Mr. Acherley ſpeaking of this ridiculous Buſineſs, ſays, The noble Author's Story of it is ſo mean and inſipid, as to be far from coming from the Pen of that exalted Genius, without fixing an Imputation upon Shropſhire-Men, as if they were a People of much Zeal and little Knowledge; which is to put them in the ſame Predicament as they appear'd to be in after Sacheverel's Condemnation. The reverend Hiſtorian adds, his Majeſty convinc'd all the antient Britons that he was the Father of his Country. One is tempted to ſay it may as well be taken in a literal as a figurative Senſe. Indeed we meet with Things ſo mean and inſipid, as Mr. Acherley obſerves, in both Clarendon and Echard, that 'tis impoſſible to obſerve always the Gravity and Decency of Hiſtory. The Borders of Wales are ſo far from Whitehall, that the Borderers might be eaſily convinc'd of a Thing which they knew nothing of. The Petition from Cornwall, ſign'd among the reſt by Vicars and Curates; and that from Cumberland ſpeak in the ſame Tone: And Mr. Acherley gives us the Reaſon for it, ſo natural, ſo eaſy to be conceiv'd, that 'tis not poſſible it cou'd have eſcap'd any Writer whoſe Conception was eaſy and natural. Thoſe on whom the Parliament's Repreſentations prevail'd, were generally People of the Midland Counties, and the Traders in the Southern Parts of the Kingdom, who had ſmarted moſt by the arbitrary Acts of Power, ſuch as Seizures of their Goods, Proſecutions for Ship-Money, Loans, Tonnage and Poundage, Fines and Puniſhments in the Star-Chamber and Foreſt Courts, at the Council-Table by Martial Law, illegal and irremedial Impriſonments. Theſe People being the richeſt as well as the moſt numerous Part, we muſt remember his Majeſty's Weights and Scales were invigorated by that eternal and irreconcileable Enmity im planted in human Nature againſt Oppreſſion, which makes Men rack their Inventions to free themſelves from it whenever Time offers the Means. Thoſe on whom the King's Repreſentations prevail'd, were generally his Subjects in the fartheſt Parts of the Nation, in Wales, Cornwal, Cumberland, &c. who were the leaſt ſenſible, and had been the leaſt afflicted with the late Preſſures and Suffrings under the King's Exerciſe of arbitrary Power after the departing from the known Laws; which his Majeſty has ſaid an hundred times he is forc'd on a War to defend. The Counties neareſt London, as Middleſex, Eſſex, Kent, Surrey, Hertfordſhire, Buckinghamſhire, Bedfordſhire, Huntingtonſhire, Suffolk, Norfolk, never admitted of any of his Gariſons, or never for any Time worth ſpeaking of. They had long groan'd under the Preſſures and Sufferings mention'd by the learned Lawyer, and cou'd not be convinc'd by Speeches, nor be perſuaded by Declarations, that the King who had govern'd for fifteen Years together contrary to the known Laws, was at the End of that Term making War in Defence of them. Tho' the King had other Perſons about him beſides Machiavels, yet they were cunning enough to ſee that the Inhabitants of the Counties neareſt to London wou'd not do his Buſineſs, therefore they drew him firſt towards the Northern Counties, and then to the Borders of Wales, where the Ignorance and Poverty of the People had defended them againſt the Oppreſſions by Taxes, and the Proſecutions in the Spiritual Courts.

The Earl of Eſſex rendezvous'd his Army at St. Albans, where he muſter'd about 16000 Horſe and Foot. He was attended by ſeveral Members of both Houſes of Parliament, and a Multitude of People crowded the Way as he march'd to wiſh him Victory. A Committee accompany'd him to take Subſcriptions for Loans, to order Matters concerning Delinquents and Malignants, and conſider of the Good of the Army. The Parliament's Directions to their General before-mention'd, were, 1. To reſtrain all Prophaneneſs in the Army. 2. To fight the Army with the King, and reſcue his Perſon, the Prince, and Duke of York, from thoſe about him. 3. To preſent their Petition to his Majeſty, and if he ſhall pleaſe to withdraw himſelf from the Army, then to cauſe thoſe Forces to disband and to guard the King in his Return. 4. To declare Pardon for thoſe who lay down their Arms taken up againſt the Parliament, except thoſe I have elſewhere named, particularly Mr. Hyde, who in his Hiſtory, if it was his, boaſts of the Malignancy of his Family; and indeed he was one of the firſt who was ſet a-part for Juſtice.

Lord-General at St. Albans.

His Inſtructions.

The Cavalier Spirit breaks out often in the Courſe of this Conteſt, to the Terror of all ſuch as had any Sentiments of Pity or Humanity. Dr. Baſtwick, and Captain Ludlow, who had been taken at Leiceſter, were order'd to be try'd for their Lives; but the two Houſes ſending a Meſſage to Judge Heath, that they would cauſe two for one to be hang'd, if thoſe Gentlemen were executed, a ſtop was put to that bloody Deſign.

Dr. Baſtwick, Captain Ludlow.

Among the many brave young Gentlemen who offer'd their Service to the Parliament, were Mr Fiennes, Mr. Fleetwood, Mr. Ludlow, whom we have elſewhere ſpoken of, Mr. Rich, Mr. Roſwel, &c. who with Major-General Harriſon, Colonel Thomlinſon, Colonel Twiſleton, Major Whitby, and others, to the Number of 100, form'd a Troop of Life-Guard for the Lord General, under the Com-

Lord General's Life-Guard.

*A.D.*1642. Command of Sir Philip Stapleton. The Earl of Eſſex detach'd Colonel Eſſex to poſſeſs himſelf of Worceſter, where the Cavaliers had a Garriſon, which had been admitted by the Mayor, without Conſent of the Citizens. Theſe were reinforc'd by Prince Ruport, who engag'd the Parliament Forces in that Neighbourhood, before the General cou'd advance ſo far. This Engagement, call'd the Fight at Powick, was on the 22d of September, and is reckon'd the firſt Fight in the Civil War. Echard deſcribes it as a moſt glorious Action on the King's Side; but General Ludlow, who was preſent, relates it otherwiſe. There are but two or three Falſities in the Reverend Hiſtorian's Relation of this Fact; as that of Prince Rupert's Handful of Men, when he was ſuperior in Number; that this Party was the Parliament's beſt Men, when Ludlow aſſures us, they knew not the Difference between Wheeling and Running; and the two Houſes of Parliament order'd a Day of Thankſgiving for this Victory at Powick. In the Account of Battels and Skirmiſhes, I ſhall almoſt always quote my Author; and at the End of it ſhew how Echard falſifies it; for there is not one Action during the whole Courſe of the War, which the Earl of Clarendon and he have not repreſented otherwiſe than the Fact was, according to the Report of the faireſt Writers.

Powick Fight.

The King increas'd his Army to 22000 Men at Shrewsbury: The Gentry of Wales, and the Marches, being much better able to ſupply him with Men than with Money, which was brought him from Oxford; ſome collected at London, and ſent thither; and ſome rais'd by the Contributions of the Colleges and Halls, contrary to the Univerſities ſolemn Promiſe to Whitlocke, who with the Lord Say, and a Body of Militia, had viſited it; and had Whitlocke's Advice been taken, it had been Garriſon'd for the Parliament, before any of the King's Forces ſhew'd themſelves in thoſe Parts.

The King refuſes the Petition from Eſſex.

Prince Rupert ſtaid at Worceſter, only while he cou'd draw off his Troops and Baggage; and he had not been gone many Hours, before the Earl of Eſſex enter'd the City with the main Body of the Army; from thence he ſent to Shrewsbury for a ſafe Conduct, and free Acceſs to his Majeſty, he having a Petition from the Parliament to deliver to him: His Lordſhip addreſs'd to the Earl of Dorſet, who wrote back that the King's Anſwer was, He wou'd receive any Petition that ſhould be preſented to him from his Parliament, and give free Acceſs to thoſe that ſhould bring the ſame; but he would not receive any Petition out of the Hands of any TRAYTOR. After which way of Thinking, he cou'd receive no Petition at all; for he had declar'd the Earl of Eſſex, and all his Adherents, Traytors; which included the Parliament of England, who had voted to live and die with the Earl, and all the People who adher'd to them.

Parliament ſend Envoys Abroad.

The two Houſes now deſpairing of an Accommodation without War, ſent Agents to Foreign Parts, to inform Princes and States of the Neceſſity they were under to take Arms for their Preſervation, and to remove the Prejudices which his Majeſty's Ambaſſadors had rais'd againſt them. To Holland they ſent Mr. Strickland, an obſcure Gentleman, ſays Echard; whereas he was as conſpicuous, as being a Member of Parliament, and of one of the beſt Families in England could make him. Mr. Strickland inform'd the States-General, that the Parliament contended for nothing but to enjoy the Benefit of the ancient and fundamental Laws of the Kingdom, which had been all violated by his Majeſty's aſſuming a Power to govern contrary to them, by his arbitrary Will and Pleaſure, and by his endeavouring to make himſelf an abſolute Lord, and his Subjects ſlaviſh Vaſſals; that they acted purely on the defenſive Part, and had continually invited the King to return to his Parliament, offering to be obedient according to the Law of the Land, but his Majeſty obſtinately ſtood out againſt Treaty and Peace. The learned Lawyer proceeds, "The "Parliament produc'd, and ſhew'd to the foreign "Potentates, the Preambles of ſeveral Acts of Par- "liament, to which the King had lately given the "Royal Aſſent: By which it did appear, that the "ſeveral Inſtances of his Miſgovernment did there- "by ſtand not only acknowledg'd, but by himſelf "condemn'd." Yet the whole Drift of the Hiſtory, which goes by the Earl of Clarendon's Name, is to prove that thoſe very Things were juſt and laudable which the King himſelf condemn'd. "This Evidence ſo far prevail'd on them, eſpeci- "ally the King of Denmark, that his Majeſty was "forc'd to order Cockrain, his Reſident at Copen- "hagen, to preſent a Memorial to that King, in "which he apologiz'd for making the Conceſſions "the Parliament had inſiſted upon. In ſhort, all "the foreign Potentates either deny'd, or fail'd to "ſend the King Aſſiſtance; objecting that his Ma- "jeſty needed none, for he had in his own Hands "Means to relieve himſelf; which was to return "to his Parliament, and conform his Government "to the Laws of his Kingdom; in Defence of "which, his Majeſty proclaims every-where he has taken Arms: And the Earl of Clarendon and Mr. Echard every where proclaim, he had never broken them.

*A.D.*1642.

The Earl of Eſſex ſtaid at Worceſter ſeveral Days, in Expectation of a ſofter Anſwer; all which Time the King improv'd, by increaſing his Army, and gathering Contributions. From Shrewsbury he march'd to Bridgnorth, having, ſays Echard, not one Papiſt a Field-Officer in his Army, but Sir Arthur Aſton, which is as true as his Truths generally are. Had he never heard of Major-General Webb, Sir William Vavaſor, Major-General, Sir Edward Widdrington, Sir Henry Gage, Sir Thomas Tildeſley? but what need I name more, I have before me a Liſt of ſome Hundreds of Lords, Knights and Gentlemen, Colonels, Lieutenant-Colonels, Majors and Captains, all Papiſts, and Sufferers in their Perſons and Purſes, for his Service. The Papiſts themſelves publiſh'd it in King Charles the Second's Reign, as an Argument for Favour to them and their Religion, on the Score of this Merit.

King's March.

Papiſts in his Army.

At Killingworth Caſtle, as the King was pointing out to this Center, Judge Heath ſate upon a Commiſſion of Oyer and Terminer, to attaint the Earl of Eſſex of Rebellion and Treaſon; an uſeleſs Provocation, which render'd thoſe contemptible who affected to make themſelves terrible by it. Mr. Echard aſſures us, the King had but 6000 Foot, 2000 Horſe, and 1000 Dragoons, when he came to Bridgnorth, and that afterwards his Army was much inferior in Number to the Parliaments; whereas we read in a Letter ſign'd by Colonel Hollis, Sir Philip Stapleton, Colonel Ballard, Sir William Balfour, Sir John Meldrum, and Mr. Charles Pym, and addreſs'd to the Speaker of the Houſe of Commons, that their Number was 18000 Foot, and 4000 Horſe and Dragoons, when the two Armies engag'd in the Vale of Redhorſe, under Edgehill, near Keinton in Warwickſhire, October the 23d.

Edgehill Fight.

General Ludlow having been in this Battel alſo, let us follow his Relation of it. Sunday Morning about nine a Clock, ſome of the Enemies Troops were diſcover'd upon Edgehill. Our Forces had been order'd that Morning to Quarters of Refreſhment, having had but little Reſt for 48 Hours. This Order was immediately countermanded. The Enemy drew down the Hill, and we into the Field. The beſt of our Field-Pieces were planted on our Right Wing, guarded by two Regiments of Foot, and ſome Horſe: Our General commanding to Fire upon the Enemy, it was done twice, on the Part of the Army where it was reported

*A.D.*1642. ported the King was. The great Shot was exchang'd on both Sides for the Space of an Hour, by which Time the Foot began to engage; and a Party of the Enemy being ſent to line ſome Hedges on our Right Wing, thereby to beat us from our Ground; they were repuls'd by our Dragoons, without any Loſs on our Side. The Enemies Body of Foot, wherein the King's Standard was, came within Muſket-ſhot of us; upon which we obſerving no Horſe to encounter withal, charg'd them with ſome Loſs from their Pikes, though very little from their Shot; but not being able to break them, we retreated to our former Station; whither we were no ſooner come up, than we perceiv'd that thoſe who were appointed to guard the Artillery, march'd off: And our Captain, Sir Philip Stapleton, wiſhing for a Regiment of Foot to ſecure the Canon, we of the Life-Guard promis'd to ſtand by him in Defence of them, cauſing one of our Servants to load and level one of them, where a Body of Horſe appear'd advancing towards us from that Side where the Enemy was; we fir'd at them with Caſe-ſhot, but did them no Miſchief, our Gun being overloaded, and planted on high Ground, which happen'd very fortunately; this Body being part of our Army commanded by Sir William Balfour, who had bravely charg'd into the Enemies Quarters, and nail'd ſeveral Pieces of Cannon, and we did not diſcern the Signal he made us of being Friends. The Earl of Eſſex order'd two Regiments of Foot to attack the Body which we had charg'd before, and where the King's Standard was, but they cou'd not break it, till Sir William Balfour attack'd them in the Rear, at the Head of a Party of Horſe, and we marching down to take them in Flank, they broke, and ran away toward the Hill. In this Action was killed Sir Edmund Varney, Standard-Bearer, Who engag'd on that Side, not out of any good Opinion of the Cauſe, as Ludlow was inform'd by a Perſon of Honour, but from a Senſe of a Duty which he thought lay upon him, in reſpect of his Office, and Relation to the King. Colonel Maurice, Lieutenant-Colonel Herbert, and other principal Officers, were then killed, and many Colours taken, as well as the Standard, which Colonel Middleton, then a Voluntier, took and diſplay'd in Token of Victory; but a ſtrong Party of Horſe coming upon us, we were oblig'd to retire with our Standard; and having brought it to the Earl of Eſſex, he mov'd it twice or thrice above his Head, and then deliver'd it to his Secretary, Mr. Chambers, from whom it was taken by one Captain Smith, a Papiſt, whom with two more, had diſguis'd themſelves with Orange-colour'd Scarfs, the Lord General's Colours, and pretending it was unfit that a Penman ſhould have the Honour to carry the Standard, took it from him, and rode with it to the King, for which Action he was made a Knight Banneret. After this there was no other Engagement on either Side, only a few great Guns continued to fire upon us from the Enemy, 'till towards the cloſe of the Day we diſcover'd a Body of Horſe marching from our Rear on the Left of us, under the Hedges, which we of the Life-Guard firſt perceiving to be the Enemy, we advanc'd towards them, fell upon their Rear, and did good Execution. This was the Right Wing of the King's Army, commanded by Prince Rupert, who taking Advantage of the Diſorder that our own Horſe had put our Foot into, who had open'd their Ranks to ſecure them in their Retreat, preſs'd upon them with ſuch Fury, that he put them to Flight: And if the Time he ſpent in plundering the Waggons had been employ'd in taking the Advantages which offer'd themſelves in the Place of Battel, it might have prov'd more ſerviceable to the carrying on of the Enemy's Deſigns. Inſtead of which, Prince Rupert fell upon the Waggoners, Carters, Labourers, Pioneers, and others, unarm'd, among whom many Women were ſlain, and this Slaughter was the greateſt in the Parliament Army, according to the Lord Brooke's Speech to the Citizens in Guild-hall. Ludlow adds, The Night after the Battel, our Army quarter'd on the ſame Ground the Enemy fought on the Day before. Another writes, "Our "Army being thus wholly poſſeſs'd of the Ground "which the Enemy choſe to fight upon, and ſo "clear Maſters of it, that none dar'd to diſpoſſeſs "them of it, we ſtood there all Night till next Morn-"ing." Sir Faithful Forteſcue betraying his Truſt, and going over to the King's Party with his Troop in the beginning of this Battel, was a great Diſcouragement to the Parliamentarians; but their good Heart and good Cauſe recover'd that Fault. The Falſities in Echard's Hiſtory of this Battel are, 1. The Number of the King's Forces five or 6000 leſs than the Parliament's. 2. The Number of the Slain 5000, which were not above 2500. 3. Sir John Smith's Valour, by which he got the Royal Standard and Knighthood, whereas it was deliver'd to him by Miſtake and Surprize, without ſtriking a Stroke. 4. The Victory was on the King's Side. Whitlocke ſays, the Parliament Army had the Victory, though but a ſmall one. 5. The Diſorder in the Faces of the Earl of Eſſex's Men, the great Dejection of the common Soldiers. Ludlow writes, we hop'd we ſhou'd have purſu'd the Enemy, who were marching off as faſt as they could; but inſtead of that, for what Reaſon I know not, we march'd to Warwick: Indeed the Earl of Eſſex's Conduct on that Occaſion, was much diſapprov'd. He had receiv'd a Reinforcement of 4000 Men, under Colonel Hampden, and Colonel Granthem, and might have cut the Cavalier Army to Pieces; inſtead of which, ſays General Ludlow, he let the King march off as if Maſter of the Field, as the Lord Clarendon, Warwick and Echard, ridiculouſly repreſent it. Some impute this Neglect to his Deſire of lengthening out the War, and conſequently his high Command in it; which Conjecture ſeems to have ſome Probability in it. Others tell us, the Parliament Army wanted Reſt and Refreſhment, which they had been without eight and forty Hours. The principal Officers ſlain on the King's Side, were the Lord General, the Earl of Lindſey, the Lord George Stuart, Brother to the Duke of Richmond, Sir Edmund Verney, Colonel Munro, and one of the Lunsfords: Among the Priſoners were the Lord Willoughby of Eresby, Sir Thomas Lunsford, Sir Edward Stradling, who were ſent to Warwick Caſtle. Of the Parliament Officers were ſlain, the Lord St. John, and the brave Colonel Eſſex: Among the Priſoners were Colonel Walton, a Member of Parliament, and Captain Auſtin, an eminent Merchant of London, of whom the laſt died through the hard Uſage he met with in Oxford Goal. Captain Wingate, before-mention'd, who was taken at Powick, was ſo near Death through the like hard Uſage, that had he not made his Eſcape, weak and languiſhing as he was, 'tis ſuppos'd he could not many Days have ſurviv'd the Enemies Cruelty. There is nothing ſtrange in that Cruelty: A humane Tyranny is Contradiction in Terms; lawleſs, arbitrary Power admits not tender compaſſionate Sentiments; Rage is its Guide, and Torture and Death its Diverſion; and whoever were capable of eſpouſing ſuch a Cauſe, muſt with it eſpouſe all its Conſequences, Rapine, Slaughter and Deſolation: Whereas Liberty inſpires all its Lovers with Benignity and Benevolence, and ſoftens the Mind at the ſame Time that it enlarges it.

Parl. Chron. P. 196.

The Reverend Hiſtorian affirms, that the Lord St. John's laſt Words were, I did not intend to be againſt the King, but wiſh him all Happineſs. Ludlow ſays, He declar'd at his Death full Satisfaction and Chearfulneſs to lay down his Life in ſo good a Cauſe. The Parliament Officers who diſtinguiſh'd themſelves in this Battel, were the Earl of Eſſex, the Lord St. John dies of his Wounds.

A.D.1642. the General, Sir William Balfour, the Earl of Bedford, the Lord Brook, Colonel Hollis, Colonel Ballard, Sir Philip Stapleton, the Lord Grey, Major Hurrey, Captain Draper, Sir Arthur Haſelrigge, Captain Cromwell, whoſe Name is remember'd in the Chronicle with thoſe other Heroes: But Echard is poſitive that He abſented himſelf from the Battel, and obſerving from the top of a neighbouring Steeple, the Diſorder the Right Wing ſuſtain'd from Prince Rupert, he was ſo terrify'd, that ſlipping down in Haſte by a Bell-Rope, he tookHorſe, and ran away with his Troop. If we had not ſuch a Cloud of other Witneſſes of this Hiſtorian's Judgment and Sincerity, this wou'd be enough to let us into his Character. The News of Edgehil Fight came to London the next Day: The firſt Man that brought it, having been in that Part of it where Prince Rupert had the better, made Report accordingly, that the King was Victorious. Other Meſſengers ſoon brought other Advice, that the Earl of Eſſex had routed the King's Army, kill'd and taken many, and gain'd a compleat Victory; which News was almoſt as much too good, as the other was too bad. The King went ſtill farther, and order'd a Day of ſolemn Thankſgiving for a Victory which he did not obtain. There is nothing ſtrange in this neither, that thoſe who had by an Edict enjoin'd the Profanation of the Lord's-Day, ſhou'd make a Mock-Holyday, and profane even that with diſſembled Prayer; in the Form of which for this Thankſgiving, it was ſaid, Thy Hand alone, thou God of Hoſts, hath diſpoſed of Victory to thy Servant the King; accompliſh the great Work thou haſt begun for us; not unto us, but unto thee, O God, we give the Praiſe; continue theſe Bleſſings on the Head of our Sovereign and his Army; continue the Fear and Conſternation thou haſt already caſt upon the Hearts of thoſe who have Rebelliouſly riſen up againſt him; make them ſee, that to fight againſt him, is to fight againſt Heaven; it is not to be written or read without Trembling: God the Searcher of Hearts, knew the Pride, Vanity, Ambition, Luſt and Cruelty of thoſe Hearts thus addreſſing to an Omniſcient, Omnipotent Being, for a Bleſſing on lawleſs deſpotick Power, on Superſtition and Prophaneneſs, in Oppoſition to Law, Liberty and Reformation. We ſhall find more ſuch Forms of Prayer on the like Occaſions. The Victory for which the King and his Followers give God the Praiſe, is thus deſcrib'd by Colonel Hollis, and other Colonels, in their Letter to the Speaker; Mr. Lenthall, The King's Foot are either ſlain, or moſt of them run away, and we ſhou'd have purſu'd them, but that we muſt of pure Neceſſity refreſh our Men. Beſides the Thankſgiving, his Majeſty publiſh'd a Declaration after his VICTORY againſt the REBELS, which is all of a Piece; he ſays, He is ſatisfy'd there are a far greater Number of Papiſts in the Parliaments Presbyterian Army, than in his own: Theſe Papiſts had every Day Mr. Marſhal, Mr. Aſh, Mr. Manton, Mr. Obadiah Sedgwick, Mr. John Sedgwick, Mr. Wickens, and ſeveral other Presbyterian Miniſters to preach to them, and pray with them; to exhort them, as they did in the heat of this Battel, to ſtand to it, and fight for their Religion, Laws, and Chriſtian Liberties. Beſides the Papiſts already mention'd, the Parliament charg'd the King with granting Commiſſions to Sir Nicholas Thornton, Sir Thomas Howard, Sir William Riddel, Sir William Gerrard, Sir Cecil Strafford, the Lord Herbert, Mr. Smith of Aſh, Mr. George Wray, Mr. Edward Gray of Morpeth Caſtle, Mr. Lancelot Evrington of Denton, Mr. Lancelot Holtby, Mr. Clifton, Mr. William Malton, Mr. Anderſon, moſt of them of the Lancaſhire and Northern Counties, and with entertaining ſome that were actually Iriſh REBELS, as the Lord Taaf, Sir John Dungan, Colonel Fitz Williams, and Dr. Meara, who having been indicted for the Rebellion in Ireland, fled that Kingdom, and was appointed Phyſician to Prince Rupert. His Majeſty ſaid further in his Declaration, That as to the Charge of his raiſing an Army againſt the Parliament, the Scandal was ſo ſenſeleſs, none of his Subjects cou'd believe it; a Thing ſo very apparent, was ſcarce worth mentioning in the Declarations. Echard had told us, there were about 5000 Men kill'd on both Sides; and three Days after the Fight, he tells us there were but 300 of the King's Soldiers miſſing; the Lord Brook told the Londoners, not above two or three Hundred Soldiers, Waggoners, Labourers, and Women, were kill'd on the Parliament Side; which ought to be mention'd, to ſhew the Errors that lye in our way, and require our utmoſt Care to avoid them.

The King's Thankſgiving Prayer.

King's Declaration.

The Parliament in their Anſwer to the the King's Declaration, ſay, They find it full of Scandals and Invectives againſt them, without any Ground or Colour of Truth; as indeed that about the Papiſts is notoriouſly ſo in Fact and Reaſon; a Charge, ſay they, contrary to Senſe and Policy, that they who have rais'd an Army for the juſt Defence of their Privilege and Liberties, and of the true Proteſtant Religion, ſhould make Uſe of the Papiſts, the only Enemies of them all, to be the Inſtruments and Means to protect them. Salmonet, a French Popiſh Hiſtorian, engag'd on the ſame Side with the Lord Clarendon and Mr. Archdeacon Echard, furniſhes them with ſeveral ſuch Truths as theſe: Several Catholick Prieſts were found amongſt the Dead on the Parliament Side; for they had not only two Companies of Walloon Papiſts, and other Catholicks in their Army, but had done what they could to engage Sir Arthur Auſton in their Service; the ſame whom Echard names as the only Popiſh Field-Officer in the King's Wing. The King prov'd that the Parliament had more Papiſts than he in their Troops, and that they endeavour'd to gain over all the Catholicks, by a Promiſe to repeal all the Laws againſt them. The two Houſes fully anſwer'd what was ſaid in the King's Declaration of the Kingdom's being govern'd by a Faction of ten or twelve Men, of Browniſts and Anabaptiſts being in their Army, and the like; but I have not Patience to repeat all that was ſaid in this Paper War; though I muſt needs ſay, there are on the King's Side much Aſſertion and Haughtineſs, and much Truth and good Senſe on the Parliaments, which probably I ſhall never be requir'd to prove, becauſe it is ſo eaſy to do it.

Parliament's Anſwer.

His Majeſty made General Ruthen a Scotchman, General of his Army; and in his March to Oxford, took in the Lord Say's Houſe at Broughton, Banbury Caſtle, and two or three ſmall Garriſons, which were not Tenable. The Falſities in the Archdeacon's Hiſtory are aggravated by the Abuſe of the moſt ſacred Terms, as God, Providence, and the like; which are apply'd to Facts which either never happen'd, or not in the manner he repreſents them. At Oxford, the only City in England which was entirely at the King's Devotion, he was receiv'd by the Univerſity with the greateſt Acclamations of Joy; to whom is to be imputed the Integrity and Fidelity of the Place; which were equal to the Fidelity and Integrity of the Hiſtorian. Whitlocke, who was at Oxford with the Lord Say about a Month before, tells us, they were viſited by the Mayor, Aldermen, Vice-Chancellor, Heads of Houſes, and Proctors, who proteſted all of them their Duty to the Parliament, their Deſires of Peace, and engage themſelves not to act any Thing againſt the two Houſes, nor to ſend their Plate to the King; which they did a Day or two after, to ſhew their Integrity. The Lord Say had then with him 3000 Horſe, Foot and Dragoons; and Whitlocke, as I have hinted, blames him very much for not ſecuring the Place, as well as the Plate, which wou'd have prevented his Majeſty's making it his Place of Arms, and Capital Garriſon, within three Days March of London, near which City Prince Rupert

King takes Broughton, Banbury, and Oxford.

A.D.1642. immediately made Incurſions; and the Parliament order'd the Earl of Eſſex to bring up the Army, as well to Recruit it, as to be near them, if the King ſhould offer to give them any Diſturbance; and obſerving the King had by a formal Commiſſion, impower'd Sir William Gerrard, Sir Cecil Trafford, Charles Townly, Eſq; Thomas Clifton, Eſq; Chriſtopher Anderton, Eſq; John Clausfield, Eſq; and other Popiſh Gentlemen, to take Arms with their Tenants and Servants againſt the Parliament, Scots. the two Houſes reſolv'd to ſtrengthen themſelves by the Presbyterian Intereſt, as the King did by the Popiſh; accordingly they deſir'd Aſſiſtance of the Scots, purſuant to the Act of Pacification.

Apprentices. They alſo publiſh'd a Declaration for the Encouragement of Apprentices that would liſt in their Service, who were to have the Time they ſo ſerv'd allow'd in their Apprenticeſhips, which was the beſt way of Recruiting the Earl of Eſſex's Army.

Earl of Eſſex. That General was honourably receiv'd at Weſtminſter the 7th of November, and preſented with a Gratuity of 5000 Pounds by the Lords and Commons, who did alſo Declare and Publiſh to the laſting Honour of the ſaid Earl, the great and acceptable Service which he hath done the Commonwealth, and they ſhall be ready upon all Occaſions to expreſs the due Senſe which they have of his Merit, by aſſiſting and protecting him, and all others under his Command, with their Lives and Fortunes, to the utmoſt of their Power: This to remain upon RECORD in both Houſes of Parliament, for a Mark of HONOUR to his Perſon, Name and Family, and for a MONUMENT of his ſingular Virtue to all Poſterity. Echard endeavours to make a Jeſt of this glorious Monument to his Merit, though it is more valuable than all the fulſome Panegyricks in the Earl of Clarendon's Characters; 'tis the Voice of his Country, and thoſe Panegyricks only the Flattery of the Hiſtorian.

Militia. The Train'd-Bands of London were reinforc'd with part of the Train'd-Bands of the aſſociated

Aſſociated Counties. Counties, Middleſex, Eſſex, Kent, Suffolk, Hertfordſhire, Buckinghamſhire, for the Security of the City; and a ſtrong Garriſon, under the Command of Colonel Ven, was ſent to Windſor Caſtle. Outworks were rais'd, and ſeveral Pieces of Ordnance planted upon them. Many diſaffected Perſons were taken up in the City of London, as Sir George Whitmore, Sir William Acton, Sir Henry Garraway, and Reading. Sir John Cordel, Aldermen; and nothing was omitted that could be thought of for the Safety of that Metropolis. The King being advanc'd as far as Reading, from whence Mr. Martin, the Governor, had withdrawn the Parliament Garriſon on the Approach of the Royal Army; the News of it, according to Echard, threw the Parliament and City into a terrible Pannick; and again into a new Conſternation; ſo without further Conſideration, they diſpatch'd a Meſſenger to the King, to deſire a ſafe Conduct for a Committee of Lords and Commons to attend him with a Petition. This Pannick and Conſternation, are the Birth of his ſeeming Fancy, or that of the Viſionary Authors whom he ſlaviſhly copies. The Parliament were indeed uneaſy at the wrong Step that was taken by their Army's retreating to Warwick, and not purſuing the King, whoſe Troops their General might eaſily have diſpers'd, after he had been reinforc'd with 4000 Men: But their Deſire of a ſafe Conduct proceeded not from Fear, it was to prevent the Effuſion of Blood, and reſtore the publick Peace.

First Treat. At a Conference of the two Houſes three Days before the Earl of Eſſex return'd to London, the Earl of Northumberland acquainted the Commons, that the Committee for the Safety of the Kingdom had ſome Thoughts of Propoſitions to be made to his Majeſty, but were of Opinion to acquaint firſt his Excellency with their Intentions; who return'd them for Anſwer, That he believ'd the Committee had ſuch Reaſons for thoſe Propoſitions as were laid on ſure Grounds; but withal he hop'd, they had no Thoughts of any Weakneſs of his Army, or that the Courage of thoſe who ſtood it ſo ſtoutly in the late Battel, wou'd fail them, if nothing but a ſecond Encounter muſt decide the Matter. Both Houſes agreed to ſend Sir Peter Killegrew to his Majeſty, then at Reading, to deſire a free Acceſs for their Commiſſioners, the Earls of Northumberland and Pembroke, Sir John Evelyn, the Lord Wainman, and Sir John Hippeſley. The King told Sir Peter, he would grant a ſafe Conduct to any ſuch as he had not proclaim'd TRAYTORS; and then excepted againſt Sir John Evelyn. Sir Peter Killegrew was again ſent to his Majeſty on his former Errand, and the King again gave him the ſame Anſwer. The great Spite againſt Sir John, was for his impeaching the Lord Digby; and the Proclamation in which he was declar'd a Traytor, was thought to be publiſh'd on Purpoſe, it being wet from the Preſs when it was firſt ſhewn. And Sir Peter Killegrew, had been kept Priſoner 24 Hours by Prince Rupert, to hinder his delivering the Meſſage 'till the Proclamation was printed: At laſt Sir John Evelyn's earneſt Sollicitations prevail'd with the Parliament to leave his Name out of the Commiſſion, that it might not retard the Peace which they all ſo much deſir'd. Mr. Pierrepoint being added to the Commiſſioners, they carry'd the Petition to Colebroke, and preſented it to the King the 11th of November. His Majeſty appointed them to attend him at Windſor Caſtle with their Propoſitions, and deſir'd the Treaty might be ſpeeded: But in the midſt of theſe peaceable Diſpoſitions, and when the Parliament depended entirely on the Faith of the Treaty; the King, as General Ludlow writes, " taking the Advantage of " a very thick Miſt, march'd his Army the very " next Day, November the 12th, within half a Brentford " Mile of Brentford, before he was diſcover'd, de- Fight. " ſigning to ſurprize the Earl of Eſſex's Train of " Artillery, which was then at Hammerſmith, the " Parliament and City; which he had certainly " done, if two Regiments of Foot, and a ſmall " Party of Horſe that lay at Brentford, had not " with unſpeakable Courage oppos'd his Paſſage, " and ſtopp'd the March of his Army moſt part " the Afternoon; during which Time the Army that quarter'd in and about London, drew together, which ſome of them, and particularly the Life-Guard, among whom was Ludlow, had Opportunity the ſooner to do, being at that very Inſtant drawn out into Chelſea Fields to Muſter, where they heard the Vollies of Shot that paſs'd between the Enemy and the Parliaments little Party. The Diſpute continu'd ſome Hours, till the latter were ſurrounded with Horſe and Foot; and then being overpower'd with Numbers on every Side, many brave and gallant Men having loſt their Lives upon the Place, the reſt choſe rather to commit themſelves to the Water, than to thoſe that were engag'd in ſo treacherous a Deſign; where many Officers, as Major Quarles, and Captain Lacy, and private Soldiers were drown'd, and ſome taken Priſoners. However, the Enemy's Deſign was by this Means defeated, and they diſcourag'd from any further Attempt that Night. The Parliament were ſo alarm'd with the Danger and Treachery of this Enterprize, that they us'd all poſſible Diligence to bring their Forces together, ſo that by eight a Clock the next Morning, the Lord General had an Army of 20000 Horſe and Foot drawn up upon Turnham-Green, and Part of their Army which lay at Kingſton, was marching to them by way of London. The Enemy drew out a Party of theirs towards the Hill at Acton, which the Earl of Eſſex order'd ſome Troops to attack, and they forc'd them to retire in Diſorder to their main Body. And hereupon, ſays Ludlow, in the Opinion of many judicious Perſons, we loſt, as at Edgehill, a favourable

A.D.1642.

A.D.1642. favourable Opportunity of engaging the Enemy with great Advantage, our Number exceeding theirs, and their Reputation being utterly loſt in the laſt Attempt. Whitlocke ſays, "Some of the King's Party did af-"terwards confeſs, if they had fallen upon them "then, they had probably broken them." This Action in Time of Treaty was ſo ill reſented, that the Parliament voted they wou'd have no Accommodation. The Falſity of the Archdeacon's Hiſtory of this Fight, conſiſts more in the Reflection than Fact. He ſays, many are of Opinion IF the King's Army of about 12000 Men, had attack'd the Parliament's of about 20000, it had preſently given way. Another Falſity is, that Dr. Downing and Mr. Marſhal, two Army Chaplains, gave Abſolution to thoſe Soldiers who had been taken Priſoners at Brentford, and broke their Words by liſting again in the Parliament Army, after they had promis'd to bear Arms no more againſt the King. He ſays gravely they did it for the better recuiting their Army with thoſe 500 Priſoners, which in Fact were but 150, tho' the City of London was pouring out Men, as we read in Ruſhworth; and it was hardly worth while for the two Miniſters to abſolve them of Breach of Faith when they were ſo little wanted; which added to the Rarity of Presbyterian Abſolution, makes very merry Hiſtory.

Parliament Petition. His Majeſty retreated to Reading, where he receiv'd a Petition from the two Houſes, who it ſeems were in a little better Temper than when they voted no Accommodation, to deſire him to return to his Parliament with his Royal, not his martial Attendance: That Religion, Laws, and Liberties might be ſettled by their Advice, finding by a ſad and late Accident, he was environ'd with ſuch Counſels as rather perſuaded a deſperate Diviſion, than join'd in a good Agreement with his Parliament. The King in Excuſe of that ſad Accident at Brentford, ſaid he had ſent a Meſſenger to give Notice of it; and as to any intended Surprize and Sack of London, he diſown'd it, and added, probably God Almighty wou'd not have given ſuch a Bleſſing to our Journey, as to have aſſiſted us ſo by Land and Water, as with leſs than a third Part of our Foot, and with the Loſs but of ten Men, to beat two their beſt Regiments out of both Brentfords; for all the great Advantage of their Works in them, to kill him who commanded in chief, and kill and drown many others, to take 500 Priſoners, &c. if he who is the Searcher of Hearts and Truth itſelf, had not known the Innocency of our Heart; and the Bleſſing of God upon this Action, will we doubt not clear us; and God ſo bleſs our future Actions, as we have deliver'd the Truth. Notwithſtanding theſe ſolemn Appeals, and theſe boaſted Evidences of God's Bleſſing, the Fact is otherwiſe; the Number of the King's Forces at Brentford Fight was treble to that of the Parliament, and inſtead of loſing ten Men only, the King loſt more than the Parliament, as one of their Author's writes; At laſt our Numbers and Proviſion increaſing continually, Prince Robert and his Crew of Robbers, were forc'd to fly, being beaten back from their Ground with great Slaughter. Again; notwithſtanding all thoſe firſt Diſadvantages, the Loſs at this bloody Bickering was moſt conſtantly reported to be far more on the Enemy's Side than on ours, at leaſt three to one. Ruſhworth tells us there were but 150 Priſoners taken. The beſt Proof of the fair Intention by attacking the Parliament's Forces in Time of Treaty, is what his Majeſty ſays; It may appear by my not purſuing my Victory at Brentford; when he had juſt before ſpoken of his great Diſadvantage by the Superiority of the Earl of Eſſex Army in Number, and by his giving Order to his own Army to march off before he had Notice of Forces from London. It is very likely that 24000 Men which the Earl muſter'd the next Day at Turnham-Green, cou'd gather together and his Majeſty have no Notice of it. One Hiſtorian ſays his Army was forc'd to fly.

Parl. Chron. 215.

Ludlow, Thoſe Perſons who were againſt the Earl of Eſſex's purſuing the King, well knew the Enemy to be in a flying and not in a charging Condition: Yet his Majeſty declares ſolemnly to the Parliament and the whole World, that he did not attack the Earl of Eſſex, to prove that he intended nothing at all by ſurprizing the Parliament's Forces at Brentford. Mr. Acherley remarks that Brentford Fight was while there was a Treaty depending, and after the Two Houſes had order'd their Army to forbear Hoſtilities; on which Account it was call'd a perfidious Part, as bad as maſſacring the Parliament's Forces, who were reſting under a Treaty as they thought ſecure. Orleans makes a ſorry Excuſe for it; he thought he no way tranſgreſs'd the Treaty, being ſcarce commenc'd. It is not to be doubted but the King's Army wou'd not have fallen upon the Earl of Eſſex's Troops in Brentford, had they not depended upon ſome Advantage by the Security they were in; and then how muſt it ſhock one to read in his Majeſty's Anſwer, that God had given a Bleſſing to that very perfidious Part which the learned Lawyer ſpeaks of.

A.D.1642.

Earl of Newcaſtle

The Earl of Newcaſtle aſſociated ſeveral Counties in the North of England for the King, as Northumberland, Cumberland, Weſtmorland, Durham, with the Town of Newcaſtle upon Tyne, which was too great a Power for the Lord Fairfax with the divided Forces of Yorkſhire to cope with; and that Power was the more dangerous, for that the Earl's Army was full of Papiſts Officers and Soldiers. This formidable Combination between the Papiſts and their Abettors againſt the Religion and Laws of England, cou'd not but allarm the Scots, and diſpoſe them to lend a willing Ear to the Deſires of the Parliament for their Aſſiſtance; and ſo ſtrong an Aſſociation put the Two Houſes upon taking the like Method.

Occaſions the Scots entering England.

The Lord Fairfax, Sir William Brereton, Sir William Waller, Lord Grey of Groby, Earl of Manchester, Earl of Denbigh, Major-General Brown, Sir Thomas Middleton, were order'd to aſſociate Yorkſhire, Cheſhire, Hampſhire, Leiceſterſhire, Eſſex, and the Eaſtern Counties, Shropſhire, Berkſhire, North-Wales, &c.

About the ſame time Colonel Skippon was made Major-General of the Army, and due Care was taken to ſupply the Earl of Eſſex with all Neceſſaries.

His Majeſty garriſon'd Reading, and made Sir Arthur Aſton a Papiſt Governor; from thence he remov'd to Oxford, where Mr. Edward Hyde his Chancellor of the Exchequer had more Leiſure to draw up Declarations than the People found to read them. Warwick owns his Language and Stile were a little too redundant; and tho' he made plain the Deceitfulneſs of the Parliament, yet a wiſe Lord ſaid of him, our good Pen will harm us, with Multiplicity and Wantonneſs of Words. I obſerv'd this in every Paragraph of the Hiſtory of the Rebellion; and it is amazing that ſo voluminous a Hiſtory without one good hiſtorical Quality, ſhou'd have impos'd on the World above twenty Years: But that Impoſition is wearing off to make room for Sincerity and Truth.

P. 196.

P. 197.

The reverend Hiſtorian informs us that the two Houſes, "Tho' they ſeem'd ſo deſirous of a Peace, "ſeverely proſecuted all ſuch as really endeavour'd "it; not one Word of which is true. It is obſerv'd, "that their Partiality and Injuſtice was ſo notori-"ous, that there was no Rule or Meaſure of Right "in any Matter depending before them; every Word of which is falſe, and is ſo ſelf-evident, that there needs no Proof of it. Again; The Two Houſes found themſelves preſs'd for Want of Money, and forc'd it from the Citizens by Impriſonment, Diſtreſs, and the late violent Methods; which is as true as the reſt. Such as refus'd to obey their Ordinances for Contributions, were dealt with as the Law directs in Caſes of Refuſal to pay Taxes.

*A.D.*1642. But the Londoners in general contributed chearfully, inſomuch that the Parliament now deſiring a Loan of 30000 Pounds, they ſuddenly advanc'd 60000 Pounds, and reſolv'd there ſhou'd be no Want of Money if the Earl of Eſſex was oblig'd to carry on the War. 'Tis worth obſerving what a ſtrong Appetite the Cavaliers had to Blood: For not content with ſpilling it in an unnatural War, they wou'd fain have fed it by Form of Law; and to that End Heath one of their Judges was order'd to try Captain Lilburne, who had been taken at Brentford for High-Treaſon at Oxford, which was as fooliſh as it was cruel. The Parliament had more Priſoners than they, and cou'd make Repriſals on Delinquents when they pleas'd, which a little right Thinking wou'd have taught them. But they went on till Notice was given them, that if any one was put to Death for having been in the Parliament's Service, they wou'd inflict the like Punihment on ſuch Priſoners as were or ſhould be taken by their Forces; which the wiſe Heads at Oxford might eaſily have foreſeen, and not have ſhewn their Teeth when they durſt not bite. His Majeſty publiſh'd a Declaration againſt the Two Houſes raiſing Money by Ordnance, which he had done before, and with as good Succeſs; but he thought to ſucceed better in the Affair of the Sheriffs which he nominated for the ſeveral Counties of England, whether they were in his Poſſeſſion or not, which was done with a double Deſign, the one to exerciſe the Authority Royal, the other to authorize them to receive a Tax of 400000 Pounds, which had by Act of Parliament been made payable to the Sheriffs, and by them to be return'd to the Places of Receipt in the ſaid Act ſpecify'd; but the Houſe of Commons RESOLV'D, That all thoſe that preſum'd to exerciſe the Office of High-Sheriff without Conſent of Parliament, ſhou'd be ſummon'd to appear as Delinquents to anſwer ſuch Matters as ſhou'd be juſtly alledg'd againſt them. The Author of the Chronicle aſſures us many of theſe Sheriffs appointed by the King were Papiſts, and all of them univerſally Perſons very ill-affected, and fit for any Deſign.

Parl. Chron. 220.

Cavaliers for Blood.

Farnham taken.

About the ſame time the Two Houſes were inform'd that Sir William Waller had taken Farnham Caſtle, and in it Mr. Denham High-Sheriff of Surrey, Captain Hudſon, and ſeveral Perſons of Note, with a great Booty of Money, Arms, and Ammunition. Sir William Brockam the new High-Sheriff of Kent, was ſeiz'd by Sir Michael Liveſay, with his Commiſſion under the Great-Seal, ſeveral Writs, Proclamations, and other ſuch Ware, all which he ſent to the Parliament. The Sheriff of Devonſhire Sir Edmund Forteſcue, was taken by a Detachment from the Garriſon of Plymouth, and ſent up to London, together with Sir Edward Seymour, Edward Seymour Eſq; Mr. Baſſet, Colonel Champernoun, Captain Pomeroy, Captain Bidlake, Captain Peter Forteſcue, Mr. Barnes, Mr. Shepton Clerk of the Peace, Major Firman, Robert Warren Eſq; Thomas Shipcot Eſq; and other Gentlemen, who had Cannon with them, and had great Things in their Heads if they cou'd have accompliſh'd them.

Briſtol.

Marlbo-rough.

The City and Caſtle of Briſtol had been ſecur'd for the Parliament by Colonel Eſſex with a Party of 1500 Foot and 500 Horſe before Edge-Hill Fight. Sir William Waller took Wincheſter, where the Lord Grandiſon and Commiſſary Wilmot commanded for the King. Theſe with the Lord Digby had juſt taken Marlborough, and committed ſuch Cruelties and Robberies as render'd their Names infamous and odious. But what better cou'd be expected from ſuch Leaders and ſuch Soldiers, the Corruption of the corrupt Part of the Kingdom? Digby return'd with his Plunder to Oxford. Grandiſon and Wilmot advanc'd to Wincheſter, near which City Sir William Waller, who was ſent out after them, found them drawn up to receive him with an equal Number of Forces, which he drove into the Town, and purſu'd them to the Walls, where Colonel Brown ſoon made a Breach, and entering the Place, bravely ſeconded by the other Officers, the Cavaliers were forc'd to retire into the Caſtle, where they ſurrender'd at Diſcretion, and the Town was given the Soldiers to pillage, the Townſmen having made as much Oppoſition to the Parliament's Soldiers as the Royaliſts. What was Matter of great Scandal to the latter, was the breaking the Organ Pipes in the Cathedral dedicated to one St. Swithin, whoſe Sainſhip was owing to a Miracle of his in piecing together a whole Basket of broken Eggs. The Cathedral Men took in great Dudgeon, that the Honour of this famous Saint ſhou'd be thus expos'd, and his Organ Pipes turn'd into Bagpipes. It muſt be remember'd that during the whole Courſe of the War, there was no Cathedral Town but what bore its Teſtimony againſt the Defence of the Laws, Rights, and Liberties of the People, and thought Devaſtation and Blood a poor Sacrifice to Superſtition and arbitrary Power.

Parl. Chron. 227.

Sir William Waller having garriſon'd Wincheſter, proceeded to Chicheſter, and took it.

Sir Will. Waller.

Chiche-ſter.

We left the Marquis of Hertford at Shireburn, where he was beſieg'd by the Earl of Bedford, whoſe Troops being moſtly Train'd-Bands, ſoon grew weary of the Length of the Siege, and return'd to their Homes. The Earl with the Remainder remov'd to Yeoville expecting Supplies; but the Marquis being reinforc'd with 100 Horſe and 200 Foot ſent him by Mr. Rogers High-Sheriff of Dorſet, order'd Major Bampfield with a Detachment of 400 Horſe and 200 Foot, to fall upon the Earl of Bedford's Rear. Theſe advanc'd to Babel-Hill within a Mile of Yeoville, where, tho' with great Diſadvantage of Ground, they were attack'd by the Parliament Forces, and put to Flight: Major Bampfield was taken Priſoner, Captain Huſſey kill'd; but the Execution was not very great, the Royaliſts making the beſt Uſe of their own Heels and their Horſes. In this Action Captain Ayſcough, Captain Balfour, and Captain Thomſon, diſtinguiſh'd themſelves on the Parliament's Side. The Marquis of Hertford receiving Information that the Lord Brook was advancing to join the Earl of Bedford, and renew the Siege of Shireburn, and being diſhearten'd at Bampfield's Defeat, he quitted the Caſtle and eſcap'd to Minehead in Diſguiſe, together with the Lord Pawlet; from whence the Marquis paſs'd over into Wales, leaving behind him the Earl of Bath, Sir Henry Berkley, Sir Ralph Sydenham, Sir Francis Dodington, Sir Hugh Pollard, and other Gentlemen, who were taken Priſoners by the Earl of Bedford's Forces, and ſent to London. A ſmall Addition of Force wou'd then have ſecur'd the Weſt for the Parliament. Theſe Events happen'd before the Battel of Edge-Hill.

Marquis of Hert-ford.

Earl of Bedford.

Yeoville Skirmiſh.

In Cornwall the Lord Mohun was very active againſt the Parliament, having refus'd to attend the Houſe of Peers upon Summons. The Earl of Bath had done the ſame, and the Lord Capel gave Power to the Marquis of Hertford to receive all his Rents in the Weſtern Parts of England, which were very conſiderable at and about Wrinton in Somerſetſhire, for maintaining the War againſt the Parliament, which he had deſerted. The City of Exeter was garriſon'd by the Citizens, and twenty-five Pieces of Ordnance mounted on the Walls. The Earl of Bedford while he was ſuperior in Force to the Royaliſts, kept Dorſet, Devon, and Somerſet pretty well in Awe, but for want of due Supplies he cou'd not ſuppreſs the oppoſite Party, who eſpecially in Cornwal and Devon picqu'd themſelves on Cavalier Notions of Loyalty, and center'd Religion in Forms and Ceremonies, without being at much Pains to know more, or know better than their Vicars or Tutors taught them; ſo they took hold of the firſt

Opportunity

Opportunity to deliver themſelves from their Deliverers, to reject the Authority and Protection of the Parliament, and give themſelves up abſolutely to the abſolute Power of the King, ſupported by the moſt bloody and ravenous Part of his Majeſty's Army under Goring and Greenvile.

North. In the North the Parliamentarians could not make Head againſt the Cavaliers. The Earl of Cumberland commanded there for his Majeſty, before the Earl of Newcaſtle had form'd his Army, and had proclaim'd the following Gentlemen Traitors for not joining with him: The Yorkſhire Gentlemen proclaimed Traytors. Lord Fairfax, Sir Thomas Fairfax, Sir Edward Loftus, Sir Matthew Bointon, Sir Henry Forbes, Sir Thomas Maleverer, Sir Richard Darby, Sir Chriſtopher Wray, Sir Henry Anderſon, Sir John Savile, Sir Edward Rodes, Sir Hugh Cholmley, Sir John Hotham, Sir Thomas Remington, Sir Thomas Norcliffe, John Hotham, Eſq; Thomas Hatcher, Eſq; William Liſter, Eſq; John Legard, Eſq; John Dodſworth, Eſq; John Waſtel, Eſq; John Perce, Eſq; William White, Eſq; Thomas Robinſon, Eſq; John Robinſon, Eſq; Arthur Beckwith, Eſq; Thomas Stockdale, Eſq; and ſeveral others; which the Parliament reſenting, did the ſame by the Earl of Cumberland and his Array Men. The Lord Fairfax being ſenſible that when the Earls of Cumberland and Newcaſtle had joined Forces, the Parliament's would not be a Match for them in Yorkſhire, concluded a Neutrality for that Province with Mr. Bellaſis the King's Commiſſioner; but the Parliament diſſolved that Agreement, as not being made with their Conſent; and the Lord Fairfax, his Son, and their Adherents, made a very gallant Defence againſt the Earls of Newcaſtle and Cumberland, who had an Army almoſt as great as the King's, till the Scots came to their Aſſiſtance, and drove the Cavaliers out of the

Cawood. North. Capt. Hotham took Cawood Caſtle from Archbiſhop Williams, who fled to the King, notwithſtanding he had been ſo ill uſed by him; and his Uſage was not much better afterwards. Sir Hugh Cholmley and Sir Matthew Bointon joining Forces, fell upon Col. Slingsby at Gisborough, routed his Party of 600 Horſe and Foot, and took himſelf and 140 of Howley. his Men Priſoners. Sir Thomas Fairfax ſeiz'd the Lord Savile's ſtrong Houſe at Howley, and found in it 500 Men, with Store of Arms and Ammunition. Sir William Savile and Major Beaumont made their Eſcape before the Houſe was taken.

Tadcaſter. Mr. Archdeacon, with his wonted Sincerity, aſſures us, the Earl of Newcaſtle drove the Lord Fairfax and his Lieutenant-General, Capt. Hotham, out of Tadcaſter; which little Action has alſo its Share of Falſity, and I will repeat what the Lord Fairfax ſaid of it, to confirm the Reader in his Judgment of the Reverend Author's Fair Hiſtory, when he Fairf. Mem. writes of the Cavaliers. "I ſent to Capt. Hotham to bring up the Forces to Wetherby, "which being done, and the Earl of Newcaſtle's "Army come in Sight, we drew our Men into "the innermoſt Part of our Quarters, where "we had raiſed ſome Breaſt-Works for our "Musketeers, and there the Fight began about "Eleven a Clock, and ſo continued a ſharp "Diſpute till about Nine a Clock in the E-"vening the 10th of December, in which Time "there was at leaſt 40000 Musket-Shot diſ-"charged on both Sides, and great Numbers "of Cannon-Shot. The Enemy had once Part "of the Town, beaten our Men, and plac'd "ſome of their Companies in two or three "Houſes, which did much indanger us. But "in the End our Men with great Courage for-"ced them out again, recovered and burnt "the Houſes, kill'd many of the Enemies "that were there placed, and in Concluſion the "Enemy retired, leaving very many of their "Men dead, and very great Numbers wound-"ed." The Reader may depend upon it that all his Relations of Fights, Skirmiſhes, and Sieges are of a Piece with this.

The Lord Strange, ſoon after Earl of Derby, Lanca began the War in Lancaſhire, by the Murder ſhire. of one Richard Percival, a Dealer in Linnen about Mancheſter, which Town he beſieged Manche- with an Army of 3000 Foot, and 200 Dragoons, ſter. moſt of them Lancaſhire Papiſts. He had with him three Pieces of Ordnance, and poſſeſs'd himſelf of Salford, parted from Mancheſter only by the River: But the Townſmen, with the Aſſiſtance of Mr. Holland of Denton, Capt. Booth, Son to Sir George Booth, Capt. Ratcliffe, Mr. Aſhton of Middleton, Capt. Bradſhaw, Mr. Egerton of Shaw, Mr. Erid, and their Tenants, defended the Place, defenceleſs as it was for Want of Walls, againſt the Lords Strange, Molineux, Col. Evers, Sir Edward Earl of Fitton, Mr. Leigh, and their little Army, who Derby. were obliged to retire, after ſeveral inſolent Summons and Aſſaults. The Earl of Derby, Parl. then Lord Strange, was impeached for the Mur- Chron. 174. der of Percival, and would have ſuffer'd if the Parliament could have come at him, as they did afterwards. 'Tis ſaid his joining with the Papiſts againſt the Proteſtants ſhorten'd his Father's Days, who died while his Son was before Mancheſter.

The Reader will obſerve that it is impoſſible to purſue the Thread of this Hiſtory in due Order of Time; There being Action in ſeveral Parts of the Kingdom, and the Parliament ſitting at the ſame Time at London, it would confound Civil and Military Matters, and one Action with another too much to obſerve a Chronological Succeſſion of Things. Moſt of the Civil Part conſiſts in Declarations, Letters, Meſſages, and Anſwers, which have been mention'd in their proper Place.

About a Month before the Battle at Edgehill the Lords and Commons paſs'd an Ordinance againſt Stage-Plays, Interludes, &c. as expreſſing Laſcivious Mirth and Levity; in which they have ſince exceeded all Bounds of Virtue and Good Manners, and have not only met with Encouragement, but the Actors and Managers of them have been favoured and careſs'd, as if they had not in all Ages and all Nations been look'd upon and treated as profligate and ſcandalous.

The Univerſity of Oxford, when the Lord Say and his Men were there, apprehending that his Lordſhip would have done what Whitlocke adviſed, and what he in Prudence ought to have done, wrote a long Letter to the Earl of Pembroke, their Chancellor, elected upon Laud's Impeachment, to hinder a Garriſon being left there, or Soldiers ſuffered to come amongſt them; which they knew they had deſerved from the Parliament for harbouring Delinquents, and refuſing to ſend them to London upon Summons, as Sir John Biron and others. The Lord Pembroke, in his Anſwer, writes thus: If you had deſired my Aſſiſtance, I ſhould willingly have contributed my beſt Endeavours for your Safety and Protection; but your own unadviſed Counſels and Actions have reduced you to the Straits you are now in, and in Diſcretion you might have foreſeen, that the admitting of Cavaliers, and taking up Arms, could not but make the Univerſity a notorious Mark of Oppoſition againſt the Parliament, and therefore to Lord Pembroke's Letter to Oxford Univ.

be oppoſed by it. If you had contain'd your ſelves within the decent modeſt Bounds of an Univerſity, you might juſtly have challeng'd me if I had not perform'd the Duty of a Chancellor. I am ſorry you have brought theſe Troubles upon your ſelves, &c. The chief Man in taking up Arms was Dr. Robert Pink, Warden of New College, and Deputy to the Chancellor, but diſplac'd by him for this and other Offences. The King's coming here was Matter of great Joy; This learned Militia have not a little valued themſelves upon it in eloquent Addreſſes, and other Diſcourſes; whoſe Eloquence has not however kept them from Oblivion.

Ireland. 'Twas impoſſible for the Parliament to do as much for the Relief of Ireland as was neceſſary, and as they would gladly have done, had they not been diverted by the Care of their own Preſervation: But they did what they could, and were as forward to aſſiſt the Proteſtants in that Kingdom as the King was backward. Several Regiments had been tranſported to Ireland, and had given a great Check to the Rebels. Stores of Ammunition, Artillery, and all Sorts of warlike Proviſions, were ſent thither from Time to Time, and in greater Plenty than Men or Money, tho' they had both in greater Proportion than the Danger the Parliament were in at home could well bear. How his Majeſty behav'd appears by a Letter from the Earl of Leiceſter, Lord-Lieutenant of Ireland, to the Earl of Northumberland, complaining of the Delay he met with at Court, then at York, which retarded his going into that Kingdom, and particularly as follows. "The King being

Earl of Leiceſter's Letter to Earl of Northumberland about it.

"informed that there were certain Draught "Horſes provided for Ireland, ſaid, I muſt "needs have them for my own Uſe. I did "humbly beſeech him not to take them away "from his own Service in Ireland, for which "they were bought, and beſides what I ſaid "my ſelf, I made Means by others to ſave the "Horſes, ſo that I heard no more of it for ſome "Time: But then his Majeſty ſaid again; I "muſt needs have thoſe Horſes, and would have "you ſend for them. I repreſented that the "Parliament might take it very ill, in regard "the Horſes were bought with their Money, "and for the Service of poor Ireland. There"fore I did beſeech him not to take them, or "would ſecure me from being an Inſtrument "in what I conceived would much hurt his Af"fairs, and that I being truſted by the Parlia"ment, could not do it my ſelf, nor conſent "that any other ſhould do it, being a Breach "of Truſt. Notwithſtanding which, the King "ſent Mr. Endimion Porter and Sir George Hay "to me ſeveral Times to the like Purpoſe; but "I return'd the ſame Anſwer, adding, I could "not do it, and be an honeſt Man. However, "his Majeſty gave one Errington, who ſerv'd "me, a Warrant to fetch the Horſes. Erring"ton told me of it, I forbad him, and told him, "if he did it, he muſt not expect to have any "thing more to do with me; adding, I doubt"ed not the Parliament would hang him for "ſtealing the Horſes. Errington ſaid, his Ma"jeſty had commanded him upon his Allegiance "to execute the Warrant." Accordingly he went away without the Earl of Leiceſter's Conſent or Knowledge, and ſeiz'd the Horſes at Cheſter. In theſe Letters, that is, the Earl of Pembroke's to the Oxford Men, and this of the Earl of Leiceſter to the Earl of Northumberland, there is the honeſt Face of Truth. In every Letter, Speech, or any the like thing, in the Lord Clarendon's Hiſtory, there is Waſh and Paint, and Fact bury'd or hidden under a Heap of Words with ſo much Formality and Affectation, that if what is ſaid had been true, the Manner of ſaying it muſt be nauſeous and tireſome to Perſons who have ever ſo little Knowledge of right Thinking and Speaking.

Pardon. Three Days after the Battle of Edgehill, the King, to prepare the Citizens of London for his Reception when he could make his Way thither, ſent his Pardon to that City and Weſtminſter, excepting Alderman Fulke and Capt. Manwaring, and all thoſe Perſons whom he had before excepted. But I do not find that thoſe who were not excepted had any more Benefit, or took more Notice of it than thoſe that were. Another ſuch Pardon was offer'd to Kent, excepting Sir Michael Liveſay and Thomas Blount, Eſq; and ſome other general Exceptions, and it had the like Succeſs.

An Aſſeſſment. At the latter End of November, the Lords and Commons publiſhed an Ordinance for aſſeſſing all ſuch as had not contributed towards raiſing Horſe and Arms, the Aſſeſſors to be appointed by Iſaac Penington, Eſq; Lord-Mayor of London, Sir John Wollaſton Alderman, Alderman Towſe, Alderman Warner, Alderman Andrews, Alderman Chambers, Alderman Fulke, Sir Thomas Soame Alderman, and the Money paid to Sir John Wollaſton, Alderman Towſe, Alderman Warner, and Alderman Andrews. Againſt which Ordinance, his Majeſty publiſh'd a Declaration, wherein Care is taken to tell all thoſe who wonder'd at it, for 'tis exceſſive long and verboſe, that the Anabaptiſts and Diſſenters joining with vicious and debauch'd Perſons of deſperate Fortunes, had turn'd out godly, pious, and painful Divines, and put in ſchiſmatical, illiterate, and ſcandalous Preachers, who fill'd the Pulpits and Churches with Blaſphemy. The Strength of the Argument and the Beauty of the Style ſeem to be Mr. Hyde's. The Penman of theſe Papers ſhews very little Art, but what there is, conſiſts chiefly in turning the Phraſes in the Parliament's Declarations, ſuch as godly, pious, painful Divines, on one Side, and illiterate ſcandalous Preachers on the other, againſt them. The Aſſeſſment was not a Penny the worſe for this Declaration. Another was put out by the King againſt the Parliament's Ordinance for the Receipt of Cuſtoms, and with the ſame Succeſs. But both Sides did hardly ever let any of the like Papers go unanſwer'd.

We have mentioned an Agreement made between the Gentlemen of Yorkſhire for a Neutrality in that County, the like was done in Cheſhire, the Lord Kilmurry, Sir Orlando Bridgman, for the King; Col. Marbury, and Henry Maynwaring, Eſq; for the Parliament, who diſſolved this Agreement, as they had done that in Yorkſhire.

Staffordſhire and Warwickſhire were empower'd by a particular Declaration of both Houſes of Parliament to aſſociate, and the following Commiſſioners were appointed to manage that Aſſociation.

Sir Peter Wentworth, William Pureſoy, Eſq; Godfrey Boſvile, Eſq; John Barker, Eſq; William Jeſſon, Eſq; Mayor of Coventry, John Hales, Eſq; Anthony Stoughton, Eſq; Thomas Boughton, Eſq; William Colemore, Eſq; George Abbot, Eſq; Thomas Baſnet, Alderman.

For Staffordſhire and City of Litchfield. Staffordſhire.

A. D. 1643. Subſcription.

In the Beginning of the following Year, the Parliament publiſh'd a Declaration, ſhewing the Neceſſity of a preſent Subſcription for Money and Plate for further Supply of the Army, wherein they urge the very great Danger the Nation is in from the many Thouſands of profeſs'd Papiſts bearing Arms againſt the Parliament, which Papiſts have plunder'd, robb'd, pillag'd, and murder'd many of his Majeſty's good Proteſtant Subjects, and their Armies encreaſe by the Acceſſion of many Popiſh Commanders from Foreign Parts, arriving with Arms at Newcaſtle, where it is notoriouſly known the Earl does lay very great Impoſitions upon all Coal-Ships for London. Much Money and Plate were brought in upon this Declaration, by which the Publick Faith was engag'd to pay it with 8 per Cent. Intereſt.

London petition to the King.

The Citizens of London ſent a Petition to the King at Oxford, deſiring his Majeſty, as the two Houſes had done, to return to his Parliament with his Royal, not martial Attendance; to which were added great Profeſſions of Loyalty. This Petition was deliver'd by Sir George Clarke, Sir George Garret, Aldermen, Mr. Bateman, Mr. Peter Jones, Mr. Rhemes, Mr. Henly, Commoners: To which his Majeſty return'd an Anſwer, that could have no other Effect than to exaſperate thoſe Minds, which before were only four'd a little. He told the Citizens, He look'd on them as Perſons groaning under the ſame Burthens, and aw'd by the ſame Perſons who begot the late Tumults, and the ſame Army which gave Battle to him; That he cannot be ſafe at London, while the LAWS OF THE LAND ('tis almoſt in every Paragraph) are ſo notoriouſly trampled under Foot; That Contributions have been rais'd there for the maintaining of an Army, who have given him Battle with a Deſign to murder him and his Children; That he can have no Hope while Alderman Pennington, their pretended Lord-Mayor, Ven, Fowke and Manwaring, commit ſuch Outrages as to receive the Money the Citizens brought them. He then offer'd them Pardon, if they would deſert the Parliament, and ſolemnly declare, they will defend the KNOWN LAWS OF THE LAND. But if they ſhould contribute Money, ſuffer Men to be rais'd, or pay Tonnage and Poundage, every ſuch Perſon muſt expect the ſevereſt Puniſhment the LAW can inflict; and his Majeſty will ſeize upon any Part of his Eſtate within his Power for the Support of his own Army, rais'd for the Defence of the LAW, ſince he has given Aſſiſtance to the Rebels, which by the KNOWN LAWS, &c. And he hopes they will join with him in Defence of the LAW. This terrible Anſwer being written down, was ſo grateful to the Council at Oxford, that they adviſed the King to ſend a Meſſenger, Mr. Heron, to London, on purpoſe to ſee it delivered, for fear the Aldermen and Common-Council Men, who came to preſent the Petition, might ſink the Anſwer, or leave out ſome of the Beaux Endroits, the beautiful Places of it. It is eaſy to ſee that the Air of it proceeded from ſome vain Hope of the Succeſs of a Plot to betray the City to the Cavalier-Army, the very Thought of which makes my Blood ſhudder, conſidering what a Crew the Goring's, the Wilmot's, the Greenvill's, the Lunsford's, the Digby's, had with them. The Parliament being inform'd of Heron's coming, appointed a Committee of both Houſes to be preſent when the Anſwer was deliver'd to the Lord-Mayor, Aldermen, and Common-Council, by Heron himſelf, for no Body elſe would venture or deign to read it. After the reading it, the Earl of Mancheſter complain'd of the wounding Aſſertions in it caſt upon Perſons of ſuch eminent Affection in their City. His Lordſhip ſaid the Parliament own'd themſelves equally intereſted, and would ſtand by them with their Lives and Fortunes. Then Mr Pym made particular Replies to the ſeveral Parts of the King's Anſwer, and at the End of every Period of his Speech the Acclamations were ſo loud, that he was often ſilenc'd. He clos'd it thus: Worthy Citizens, you ſee what the Parliament will do for your Lord-Mayor and you. Upon which they cry'd out, We will live and die with them, we will live and die with them. Thus had Henry Heron, Eſq; his Majeſty's Meſſenger, a very fine Opportunity to inform himſelf of the Reaſon his Majeſty had to call the governing Part of the City a Faction only, and the Well-affected to the Parliament a pack'd Crew of Browniſts, &c. one of whom, according to the Evidence of Mr. Archdeacon Echard, hop'd ſhortly to waſh his Hands in the King's Blood; but that Miniſter of Juſtice, the Lord-Mayor, refus'd to iſſue a Warrant againſt him; which, if it had been true, deſerv'd to have been remember'd to his Infamy; but as it is invented, the Infamy ſticks to the Inventor.

King's Anſwer.

Read, and a Committee preſent.

We muſt not forget that on the 16th of January the Houſe of Commons made an Order, probably on Heron's coming to London, That if any Agent or Servant to any Perſon that bears Arms againſt the Parliament, ſhall preſume to come to Weſtminſter, or reſide about London, he ſhall forthwith be apprehended as a Spy, and proceeded againſt accordingly. They alſo inhibited the Oxford Carriers from travelling, and all other Means of conveying any kind of Proviſion from London to Oxford, or elſewhere to the King's Army, which is rail'd at as very barbarous; as if in Time of War to diſtreſs an Enemy every Way was not cuſtomary, and according to Law Martial.

Order about Spies and Carriers.

Nothing ſeems to me more ſtrange in the Progreſs of this Hiſtory, than the publiſhing of ſo many Proclamations and Declarations at Oxford, none of which had ever any Effect but in the King's own Quarters. His Majeſty now ſent a Letter to the Sheriffs and City of London, which declar'd, that the Lord-Mayor was no Lord-Mayor, and requir'd the Citizens to take hold of him, Ven, Fulke and Maynwaring; which was too hard a Piece of Service to be perform'd at that Time, eſpecially after the Parliament had forbidden the reading of that Letter: In which the King mentions one Browne, a Woodmonger, as a mutinous Fellow, fit alſo to be laid hold on; whom I alſo mention, becauſe he is the very ſame Perſon whom this King's Son made a Knight and Baronet, and who was moſt buſy in hanging the Members of this Parliament after the Reſtoration.

Sir Ralph Hopton's Zeal for the King's Service increaſing in Proportion to his Hatred to the Parliament, who had ſent him to the Tower for ſome licentious Speech in their Houſe; he, who had been a noted Puritan, got a Company together in Cornwall to diſturb the Peace of the Weſt. With theſe he march'd into Devonſhire, where his Followers robb'd, plunder'd, ſpoil'd and

They therefore appointed all Subſcriptions and Contributions*, which were to be rais'd in that County, to be there expended for the Defence of it, and not ſent to London, and made the following Gentlemen Commiſſioners for the Lieutenancy and Aſſeſſments: Earl of Stamford, Sir John Horner, Sir Francis Popham, Sir Thomas Wroth, Sir George Farwell, Alexander Popham, Eſq; Hugh Rogers, Eſq; John Aſh, Eſq; Henry Sandford, Eſq; Richard Cole, Eſq; John Pyne, Eſq; John Fraunces, Eſq; John Hippeſley, Eſq; John Harrington, Eſq; William Strode, Eſq; Henry Henley, Eſq; James Aſh, Eſq; William Seaborn, Eſq; William Long, Eſq; John Preſton, Eſq; Chriſtopher Walker, Eſq; John Pike, Eſq; Thomas Hippeſley, Eſq;. I mention the Gentlemen's Names, to ſhew how impartial the Earl of Clarendon is, where he ſays, all the Gentlemen of Somerſetſhire, of eminent Quality and Fortune, were on the King's Side, except Sir John Horner and Mr. Popham. But tho' the Parliament had ſo well provided for the Tranquillity of this large and populous County, they had too many Enemies in it to preſerve it from Waſte; and the Cavaliers under Goring and Greenville, from Cornwall and Devon, made ſuch terrible Irruptions into it, that they are to this Day the Subject of Diſcourſe and Abhorrence.

When Archdeacon Echard comes to the paſſing of the Bill for aboliſhing Epiſcopacy, the Falſities are, that the much greater Majority of the Members of the Houſe of Commons who voted for the Bill, were really againſt the Bill, and that there were but five Lords for it, which is left to the Faith of the Reader. One of thoſe five Lords, the Lord Viſcount Say and Sele, made a notable Speech in the Houſe of Peers, too long to be incerted intire, but Part of it may help us a little in our Conjecture why that auguſt Aſſembly gave their Aſſent to the Bill: Their proper Excellency is Spiritual, the Denial of the World, with the Pomps and Preferments and Enjoyments thereof; this they ſhould teach and practiſe: But when they, contrary thereunto, ſeek after worldly Excellency, like the great Men of the World, and to rule and domineer as they do, contrary to our Saviour's Precept, Vos autem non ſic: But it ſhall not be ſo amongſt you; inſtead of Honour and Eſteem, they have brought upon themſelves, in the Hearts of other People, that Contempt and Odium which they now lie under; and that juſtly and neceſſarily, becauſe the World ſeeth that they prefer a worldly Excellency, and run after it, and contend for it, before their own; which being ſpiritual, is far more excellent; and which being proper to the Miniſtry, is that alone which will put a Value and Eſteem upon them that are of the Calling. Is it not prodigious, that the Hiſtorian, who is himſelf of the Spiritual Calling, ſhould be as inſenſible of all theſe Sentiments, as if they were not Chriſtian and Spiritual? How elſe could he be in a Rapture when Dr. Juxon rode in Triumph through the City of London with the Lord High Treaſurer's White Staff in his Hand; and doubtleſs he was as well pleas'd when Dr. Robinſon was breaking the Grand Alliance as Ambaſſador at Utrecht. The Lord Say proceeds; As theſe Things hurt themſelves in their Conſciences and Credit, ſo have they, and if they be continued ſtill, will make them hurtful to others. The Reaſon is, becauſe they break out of their own Orb, and move irregularly: There is a Curſe upon their leaving of their own Place. What follows is an Allegory, which, if it had a Place in the Lord Clarendon's Hiſtory, would have been extoll'd for its Beauty, Magnificence and Truth. The heavenly Bodies, while they keep within their own Spheres, give Light and Comfort to the World; but if they ſhould break out, and fall from their regular and proper Motions, they would ſet the World on Fire: So have theſe done; while they kept themſelves to the Work of the Miniſtry alone, and gave themſelves to Prayer and the Miniſtry of the Word, according to the Examples of the Apoſtles, the World receiv'd the greateſt Benefits by them, they were the Light and Life thereof; but when their Ambition caſt them down, like Stars from Heaven to Earth, and they grew to be advanced above their Brethren, I do appeal to all who have been verſed in the ancient Eccleſiaſtical Stories, or modern Hiſtories, whether they have not been the Common Incendiaries of the Chriſtian World, never ceaſing from Contention one with another about the Precedency of their Sees and Churches, excommunicating one another, drawing Princes to be Parties with them, and thereby caſting them into bloody Wars. Their Ambition and intermeddling with ſecular Affairs, hath been the Occaſion of ſhedding more Chriſtian Blood than any thing elſe in the Chriſtian World: And this no Man can deny that is vers'd in Hiſtory. The Reverend Hiſtorian muſt by his Character be vers'd in Hiſtory, and he has himſelf compil'd an Eccleſiaſtical Hiſtory, without one Syllable that is in the leaſt like this, and conſequently it muſt be miraculouſly ſincere and impartial. Another Hiſtorian, contrary to his Repreſentation of the Matter, tells us in his homely Way, Biſhops were voted down Root and Branch, Nullo Contradicente, for which there were Bonefires and Ringing of Bells all over the City of London.

Parl. Chron. p. 150.

About the latter End of January a Party of Cavaliers made an Attempt on the Parliament's Quarters at Henly, where Major-General Skippon's Regiment of Foot, and another Regiment were juſt enter'd, after a long fatiguing March, and were diſpers'd in ſeveral Places for the Convenience of Reſt and Refreſhment. It was Nine a Clock at Night before the Soldiers were quartered, and about Two in the Morning the Enemy from Reading, conſiſting of about 1000 Horſe, came furiouſly upon them, crying out, The Town is ours, The Town is ours. But as they rode along the Lane towards the Town, Capt. Samuel Turner, who commanded the Guard, order'd a Canon which was planted againſt it to be fir'd: 'Twas charg'd with Musket-Ball, and did great Execution; yet the Enemy's Horſe puſh'd forward, till hearing ſome of the Parliament's Soldiers cry out very loud, Fire the Reſt of the Ordnance, they were put into a Terrible Fright, and Flight too, as Capt. Turner phraſes it, in a Letter to his Brother. He adds, I believe they were ſo bit, they will ſcarce brag of their Victory, which they are ſo apt to do. A Truth Mr. Echard might eaſily have obſerv'd, with as much Pleaſure as I have done, the Royaliſts, in every Relation, boaſting they were Victorious, and by taking their Words for it, he has turn'd the Gravity of Hiſtory into Merriment.

Leeds taken by Sir T. Fairfax.

About the ſame Time Sir Thomas Fairfax made himſelf Maſter of the large Town of Leeds in Yorkſhire, where Sir William Saville commanded with a Garriſon of 1500 Foot, and 500 Horſe and Dragoons. Sir Thomas Fairfax

A. D. 1643. had about nine Troops of Horſe and Dragoons, 1000 Musketeers, and 3000 Club-men: So well affected was the Yorkſhire Peaſantry to this gallant Officer and his Cauſe. Sir Thomas ſent a written Summons to Sir William Savile to ſurrender the Place to the Parliament; Sir William anſwered, En Cavalier; he never took Notice of ſuch frivolous Tickets. Sir Thomas had with him Sir William Fairfax, Sir Henry Fowlis, Capt. Mildmay, and other Perſons of Diſtinction. He order'd Sir William Fairfax to begin the Aſſault, which was done ſo vigorouſly, and Sir William was ſo well ſeconded by Sir Henry Fowlis, Sir Thomas Norcliffe, Capt. Forbes, Capt. Briggs, Capt. Frankland, and other brave Officers, who ſet an Example to the Soldiers, that they drove the Enemy before them, and enter'd the Town Sword in Hand with the Loſs but of 40 Men on both Sides, Sir Thomas Fairfax reſtraining the Soldiers from Slaughter and Pillage. He took 500 Priſoners, many Arms, ſome Cannon, and much Ammunition. Sir William Savile, and other Cavalier-Commanders, fled ſoon after the Fight began by ſecret Ways towards Pontefract, and their Men ſtole away by Degrees as faſt as they could. Savile was very near being drown'd as he croſs'd the River, and Major Beaumont was drown'd. This Succeſs ſo terrify'd the Enemy that they immediately abandon'd Wakefield, Shirburne, and Pontefract: But the Garriſons that were there ſtrengthen'd the Earl of Newcaſtle's Army, which he drew into York, either to ſave that City or to prepare for the Queen's coming with all Sorts of Supplies from Holland, her Standard being ſent before by Goring. What a fine Army that Earl's was is ſeen by a Deſcription of it in a Letter from the Lord Fairfax to the Speaker of the Houſe of Commons. The Strength of the Enemy will be found to conſiſt much of Papiſts, and Popiſhly affected, which in Fact was the main Strength of the Royal Army, the Earl of Newcaſtle granting Commiſſions for raiſing Men to Papiſts for the moſt Part. I ſend herewith the Names of twelve Recuſants, to whom he has of late granted Commiſſions: Sir John Middleton, Sir Philip Hungate, Sir Walter Vavaſor, Mr. Robert Trapps, Mr. Waterſon, Mr. Stephenſon, Mr. Andes, Mr. Bretton, Mr. Twenge, Capt. Sare, Mr. Tindal, Capt. Granger. Which Courſes have ſo advanced Popery, that in York, where many Recuſants are ſettled, Maſs is ordinarily ſaid in every Street, and ſuch Affronts offered to the Proteſtants and their Miniſtry, as few do reſort to Church, &c. Yet how full are the Royal Declarations of Fighting for the True Proteſtant Religion. Echard has given us the Character of this noble Earl after the Lord Clarendon, which is as happy as the reſt of the Characters as to Likeneſs and Nature. He lov'd Monarchy, as it was the Foundation of his own Greatneſs; the Church, as it maintain'd the Splendor and Security of the Crown. Is not this exquiſite Nonſenſe? How does the Church maintain the Splendor of the Crown? And what does the Engliſh Tongue mean by the Crown, but the Sovereign Power limited by the Laws as in the Conſtitution of England? The Splendor of that Power is maintain'd by maintaining the Rights, Liberties, and Properties of the People, which is the Glory of the Prerogative; and how has the Church done that ever ſince Archbiſhop Laud was at the Head of it? He ſays further the Earl lov'd Religion, as it inforc'd Order and Obedience to arbitrary Power, Superſtition, and the Laudæan Hierarchy; for at that Time he could mean nothing elſe by the Church. There is one Thing in the Earl of Newcaſtle's Character which is true, and on that Score deſerves particular Obſervation; he had a Tincture of a Romantick Spirit, which he acquir'd by his Study of Poetry; for there were ſome Years ago ſeveral Plays of his extant, if they may be call'd Plays, without one Word of Wit or good Senſe, and hardly equal to his Wife's, who alſo printed a Folio or two of Plays and Poems. The Earl of Clarendon ſays he underſtood Horſemanſhip, but if he could ride no better than he could write he would have made but an ordinary Hero for a Romance. So remarkable was that romantick Air of his, that his Declarations were drawn in the Style of the Knight of the Oracle, and I doubt not the Lord Clarendon lik'd them not the worſe for that, his own being very puffy and much ſwoln. The Lord Fairfax in one of his Anſwers, takes Notice of the Earl of Newcaſtle's Knight-Errantry, without following the Rules of an Amadis de Gaul, or the Knight of the Sun, which the Language of the Declaration ſeems to affect, &c. Mr. Archdeacon ſpeaks alſo of his Amours with the Muſes, with whom the Earl was in Love almoſt to Diſtraction; but the Nymphs were unmerciful, and never granted him one Favour, unleſs it was in beſtowing upon him an illegitimate Son of theirs, Sir William Davenant, to be Lieutenant-General of his Ordnance. As I have not Patience enough to enter far into Clarendon and Echard's Characters, I hope this Digreſſion will be excus'd.

After the Treaty of Colnbrook had been broken by the treacherous Action at Brentford, the Parliament did not think of another till ſome Weeks after, when their earneſt Deſire to ſee Peace reſtor'd to this diſtracted Kingdom, put them upon a ſecond Attempt for a Treaty, and Propoſitions were prepar'd to be offer'd to the King at Oxford, where before their Commiſſioners arriv'd, the King held a Council of War about the Beginning of February, by whom that grand Affair was debated, Peace or War. The noble Earl of Briſtol, Father of the noble Lord Digby, made a Speech, wherein there is a very handſome Panegyrick upon Slavery to encourage the Continuance of the Civil War. In Spain, where the long Time as I reſided there as Ambaſſador, afforded me Privilege to be well acquainted with the State of that Kingdom, in no Age or Record can ſcarcely be found mention of inteſtine or Civil Wars, till theſe very Years, when all the World labours with Diſſentions. This is falſe in Fact, the Reaſon is, becauſe they are truly Subjects, and their Sovereign truly a Sovereign. The Earl of Dorſet, who had been long enough in the Court at Oxford to be weary of ſuch Counſels, anſwer'd the Earl of Briſtol's Speech about Spain; That is, as I underſtand it, the Subjects are ſcarcely remov'd a Degree beyond Slaves, nor the Sovereign from a Tyrant. His Lordſhip ſaid ſomething alſo which is ſo generous and reaſonable, that I have often wonder'd it did never enter into the Heads and Hearts of thoſe evil Counſellors whom the Parliament had declar'd Delinquents, and to ſave whoſe hated Lives, they baſely ſuffer'd their Royal Maſter to loſe his own; for if they had been given up to Juſtice, the Cauſe of the preſent War, all Conteſt had been over before a Drop of Blood had been ſpilt; but Mr. Edward Hyde, Mr. Endymion Porter, &c. inſiſted upon it eternally, that he could not give them up to Puniſhment, without a Diminution of his Abſolute Power, which they always imag'd to him as the very Apple of the Crown's Eye. See what the Earl of Dorſet, who ſuffer'd as much as any Man in the King's Cauſe, ſaid upon it: The Parliament only declares againſt Delinquents, ſuch as they conjecture had miſcounſelled his Majeſty, and been the Authors of theſe Tu- mults in the Common Wealth; but this Declaration of theirs, except ſuch Claims can be prov'd againſt them, is of no Validity; the Parliament will do nothing unjuſtly. There is no Meaning at all in the Lord Clarendon's Hiſtory, if he does not every where mean, that the Parliament would do nothing juſtly. Here is the Evidence of the Earl of Dorſet againſt the falſe Repreſentations in the Hiſtory of the Rebellion, and more authentick cannot, I think, be expected. Again; The Parliament will not condemn the Innocent, and certainly innocent Men need not fear to appear before any Judges whatſoever. He who ſhall for any Cauſe prefer his private Good before the publick Utility, is but an ill Son of the Common Wealth. Generous Sentiments! There is not one ſo juſt and ſo rational in all that voluminous Hiſtory. If the Lord Clarendon and the other Delinquents had been capable of them, how ſoon might an End have been put to the Miſeries of the Kingdom, and Peace and Proſperity have taken Place of Devaſtation and War.

In the Beginning of February the King's Forces got the moſt conſiderable Victory which they could yet reaſonably boaſt of. We have mention'd the Marquis of Hertford's paſſing over from Minehead to Wales, where he rais'd Forces and march'd with them to Worceſter, from thence to Burford, and from thence he went to Oxford to deſire that Cirenceſter might be reduc'd, not only to enlarge his Quarters, but to facilitate his raiſing Contributions in Glouceſterſhire and Wiltſhire. Cirenceſter in the Beginning of the Troubles was ſecur'd by the Militia and Townſmen, who roſe againſt the Lord Chandos, who after he deſerted the Parliament, would have poſſeſs'd it for the King; but he was glad enough to eſcape without his Coach, which the Townſmen broke to Pieces. It was then garriſon'd for the Parliament, and the Earl of Stamford's Regiment, with about 1000 Militia, defended it againſt the Marquis of Hertford. But Prince Rupert coming to the Marquis's Aſſiſtance with 4000 Horſe and Foot, they both made an Army of near 7000 Men; and the Prince making a vigorous Attack, firſt on the Barcon, and then on the Town, carry'd it on that Side, while the Earl of Caernarvon made an unſucceſsful Aſſault on the other, till Prince Rupert's Troops attack'd the Parliament's in the Rear, as the Earl of Caernarvon did in the Front, and ſo became Maſters of the Place, which was plunder'd and waſted in ſo horrible a manner, that Echard himſelf is aſham'd of it, and owns it was juſtly made uſe of to improve the Character of Pride and Cruelty on the King's Side: So ſcandalous, that the Reader could not have had Patience with it, had not ſufficient Revenge been taken before the End of the War. Prince Rupert took 1100 Priſoners, who, according to that fair Writer Whitlocke, were led in much Triumph to Oxford, where the King and Lords look'd on them, and too many ſmil'd at their Miſery, being ty'd together with Cords almoſt naked, beaten and driven along like Dogs. Among them were two Miniſters, and ſeveral Officers of good Account, as alſo a proper handſome young Man, of a very white Skin, where it could be ſeen for the Blood of his Wounds; he not being able to go, was ſet naked upon the bare Back of a Horſe, his Wounds gaping, and his Body all over bloody. The Lord Commiſſioner Whitlocke was ſtruck with ſo much Horror at the Report of this Cruelty, which the King ſaw without the leaſt Emotion, that he tells us the Story at large: Yet the young Man ſate upright upon the Horſe with an undaunted Courage and Countenance, and when near the King, who did not expreſs any Compaſſion for him, a brawling Woman cry'd out to him, Ah you traiterly Rogue, you are well enough ſerv'd. He, with a ſcornful Look towards her, anſwer'd, You baſe Whore, and inſtantly drop'd off dead from the Horſe in Sight of his Majeſty, whoſe Preſence increaſes the Horror one conceives at the Image of this worſe than Cannibal Cruelty. But indeed ſuch Barbarities had been practis'd in the Star-Chamber Court, &c. in Time of Peace, that it is no Miracle to find the like barbarous Acts continu'd by the like Agents in Time of War. His Majeſty was at laſt ſo ſenſible of Prince Rupert's Cruelties, that he wrote a Letter to him to give a Check to them but not with ſo good Effect as was then wiſh'd for.

An inſolent Triumph at Oxford.

The Parliament, in a juſt Senſe of the Calamities of the Nation, which were owing to their Sins, publiſh'd an Ordinance exhorting all his Majeſty's Subjects to the Duty of Repentance, as the only Remedy for theſe Calamities; but in Truth, ſays Mr. Archdeacon, their Devotion was a Libel on the King and the Church. By Libel there, is meant a Lye, a Thing infamouſly falſe, to the Detriment of Church and King. Are the wicked Prophanations of the Lord's Day by Sports and Gamings, formerly encourag'd by Authority, a Lye or a Libel, they being the Words of the Ordinance? Is the conniving at, and almoſt tolerating Idolatry, a Libel? Is the high Contempt of God's holy Ordinances a Libel? Are the Multitudes of Papiſts and their Abetters in Arms, a Lye or a Libel? Are all Sorts of Uncleanneſs, Luxury, and Exceſs in Eating and Drinking, Vanity, Pride, and Prodigality in Apparel, Envy, Contention, and unnatural Diviſion, Oppreſſion, Fraud, and Violence, a Libel? But Repentance being a Puritan Word, muſt needs give Offence to ſuch as ſet their Hearts intirely upon Abſolution.

The Earl of Stamford having with a little too much Precipitation made an Irruption into Cornwall, where Sir Ralph Hopton had been a long Time making up an Army, was obliged to retire into Devonſhire, and gave Hopton an Opportunity to fall upon Ruthen, Governor of Plymouth, at Leskard, where the Earl of Stamford was to have joined him. But theſe two Bodies being divided, were eaſily put to Flight one after the other. Ruthen made his Eſcape by Sea to Plymouth, and Stamford retir'd firſt to Taviſtock, and thence to Exeter. The moſt remarkable Thing in Mr. Echard's Hiſtory of this War, is, that Sir Ralph Hopton's Men went to Prayers before the Skirmiſh at Leskard. Both Sides had got ſo little in this Diſpute, that they grew alike weary of it, and agreed upon a Ceſſation of Arms in Cornwall and Devonſhire, leaving the Strong Holds ſtill in Poſſeſſion of the Parliament.

About the ſame Time, the Beginning of February, Sir William Brereton, with a Party of 150 Men, defeated Sir Thomas Aſton, who had with him 400 Cavaliers near Nantwich in Cheſhire, and Sir John Seaton, with a ſtrong Party of the Parliament's Forces, aſſaulted and took the Town of Preſton in Lancaſhire, where he made 200 Officers and Soldiers Priſoners, among whom were ſeveral Papiſts of Note, as Mr. Anderton of Clayton, Major Purvey, who had been in the Iriſh Rebellion, Dr. Weſtby a Phyſician. Sir Gilbert Houghton fled to Wiggan, and Mr. Townly of Townly, a Name that has hardly been out of any Popiſh Rebellion ſince the Reformation, got off with much Difficulty. 2 Preſton,

A. D. 1643. Preſton, was kill'd in the Aſſault, ſo zealous for the Cauſe, that he was wont to ſwear, He would fire the Town, and his own Houſe firſt, before he would give it up. From hence Major Birch was ſent to Lancaſter, which was immediately ſurrender'd to him.

The Lord Brooke having clear'd Warwickſhire of all Oppoſition, enter'd Staffordſhire, of which County he was alſo Lord-Lieutenant; but underſtanding the Earl of Cheſterfield, with about 300 Men was at Litchfield, he intended firſt to diſlodge them, and march'd thither with about 1200 Men. He arriv'd before the Town on the 1ſt of March, and after ſome hot but ſhort Service he drove the Lord Cheſterfield into the Cloſe, a Place which by the Strength of the Walls and otherwiſe was much more defenſible. While his Soldiers were giving the Aſſault, and particularly at St. Chad's Church adjoining to the Cloſe, the Lord Brooke being withdrawn into a Houſe to give Directions, as he was looking out at the Window for that Purpoſe a Musket Ball ſtruck him near the Left Eye, of which he immediately dy'd. His Soldiers inſtead of being diſcourag'd, were animated by Revenge, and Sir John Gell bravely ſupply'd his Place. They aſſaulted the Cloſe ſo vigorouſly, that they got to the Wall, which they were preparing to blow up, and continue the Storm, when the Cavaliers cry'd out for Quarter, which was granted, and the Place yielded, with Store of Arms, Money, &c. Here the Earl of Cheſterfield, his Son, and ſeveral other Perſons of Condition were taken Priſoners; and here too the Zeal of the Cathedral Men met with the ſame Reward as at Chicheſter. But the Parliament's Forces had ſcarce been a Month in Poſſeſſion of the Town and Cloſe, before Prince Rupert gave them a Viſit. He had juſt taken Birmingham, near which was a ſmart Encounter between ſome of the Horſe from Birmingham and a Party of the King's, in which the Earl of Denbigh was mortally wounded, and ſoon after dy'd. The Prince having joined his Troops with the Earl of Northampton's and Col. Haſtings, advanc'd to Litchfield, and before the City was put into a good Poſture of Defence, he attack'd and enter'd it. The Cloſe held out a Fortnight after, and then the Prince having by a Mine blown up Part of the Wall, the Parliament's Soldier's ſubmitted upon Terms, and were allow'd to march out with Bag and Baggage under a Convoy to Coventry. The Falſity in Echard's Account of the Lord Brooke's Expedition againſt Litchfield is, that he enter'd it without any Reſiſtance. Ruſhworth tells us there was ſome hot Service; and the poor Reflections of the Lord Brooke's hearing a Sermon at Coventry before he march'd to Litchfield, are not much mended by Archbiſhop Laud's Obſervations, which turn the Musket Ball into a Judgment: It being ſhot by a Clergyman's Son, and upon St. Chad's Day, a precious Monk in the Reign of Wulpher King of Mercia, to whom that Cathedral has the Honour to be dedicated.

Sir John Gell having recruited his Forces deſign'd to march towards Stafford, and Intimation was given to Sir William Brereton to draw that Way. The Earl of Northampton, Col. Haſtings, and other of the King's Commanders who lay at Stafford, being advertiſed of Gell's Approach, march'd out to meet and give him Battle, which they did on the 19th of March upon Hopton Heath, by ſome call'd Salt Heath. The Earl charg'd with much Bravery, and was as bravely receiv'd, both Parties fighting with true Engliſh Courage: But after two or three Hours ſharp Engagement, the Parliamentarians growing weak, and ready to be utterly defeated, Sir William Brereton happen'd to come in to their Relief, with a conſiderable Body of Horſe and Dragoons, and falling furiouſly on the Rear of the King's Forces, while Sir John Gell with his reanimated Troops, ply'd their Front, cut off many of them, among whom the Earl of Northampton fighting valiantly was ſlain, and his Forces retreated into the Town of Stafford, Gell and Brereton keeping the Field. Thus does Ruſhworth tell the Story, and it appears by it that the Archdeacon's Account of it is falſe in almoſt every Line He ſays Gell and Brereton were join'd when the Fight began; whereas that Junction was when the Fight was almoſt ended; That Gell's Forces were double in Number to the Earl's, Gell having but 1500 Horſe and Foot, and the Earl of Northampton had 1000 Horſe only. He ſays Gell was ſo totally routed, that he had ſcarce a Horſe left in the Field; whereas Sir William Brereton came to his Aſſiſtance before the Royaliſts could break his Horſe. He adds, Sir Thomas Byron charg'd Gell's Foot with good Execution; and we are told, that by the timely coming in of Sir William Brereton, 'ere the Battle was ended, Sir John Gell obtain'd a glorious Victory, and drove his Enemies quite out of the Field. The Reverend Hiſtorian affirms, that the Royaliſts thought fit to forbear any further Action, but what conſiſted in running away, and had all the Enſigns of Victory, except the King's Standard, and ſome other Enſigns carry'd off and kept by Sir William Brereton. Echard again; A greater Victory would have been an unequal Recompence for the Loſs of the Earl, of whoſe Party were ſlain but 25 Men. The Chronicle tells us, at leaſt 140 of the Cavaliers were kill'd, and among them Mr. Spencer Lucy, Mr. Ferdinando Stanhop, Capt. Baggot, and other Gentlemen. But what is falſer ſtill than all the reſt, is where he ſays above 200 of the Parliamentarians were kill'd and wounded. The Chronicle tells us, the Victory was obtain'd with the Loſs only of 8 or 10 Parliamentarians. I have inſtanc'd the many Falſities in the Archdeacon's Relation of this Fight to ſave my ſelf the Trouble of doing the like again on the like Occaſions, for moſt of his and the Lord Clarendon's Accounts of Actions are of this Kind, and they erect Trophies of Victory for the Cavaliers in the very Fields where they were ſhamefully beaten. He would not let us know that about the Earl of Northampton's Neck, and in his Poeket, were found a Crucifix and an Agnus Dei, as was teſtify'd by two Witneſſes vivâ voce in Parliament, who were preſent when thoſe Popiſh Trinkets were found about him. Neither would he inform us of the Recompence this Lord's Son met with for his Father's Services, and that the King gave away from him the Rangerſhip of a Foreſt which his Father held; and when Endimion Porter minded his Majeſty of the Earl of Northampton's loſing his Life for him, and preſs'd him to give it to the young Earl, the King reply'd, Hath the Earl done more than became him to die for his King? No doubt it is the higheſt Honour when the King is fighting in the Defence of his Country.

Hopton Heath Fight.

There is ſomething Merry enough in what follows of the Reverend Author's grave Hiſtory: The Lord Herbert, a bigotted Papiſt, having all South Wales committed to his Care, at his own Charge, and other Catholick Friends, raiſed a little Army of 1500 Foot, and 500 Horſe, with which he advanced, and ſet down before Glouceſter. The King did the ſame ſoon after, with an Army of 2000 Men, and with not much better Succeſs. Sir William Waller came ſuddenly denly on the Lord Herbert's Army of Welch Men, at ſight of whom, according to Echard, they threw down their Arms without giving or receiving a Blow, and cry'd Quarter. Waller took 1300 Foot, and 8 Troops of Horſe, upon which the Hiſtorian makes this very wiſe Reflection. If the Money which was laid out upon the Welch Forces had been employed to the Kings beſt Advantage, it might have put an End to the War next Summer. How better could it have been employ'd than in raiſing Forces! Unleſs the two Houſes of Parliament, their General the Earl of Eſſex and his Army could have been brib'd with it. There would then have been no more War in England, but what was carry'd on by Practors and Paritors. He could not tell this pitiful Story without ſome Falſities. Ruſhworth informs us, There were ſo many Blows given and taken, that 500 Welch Men were ſlain on the Spot. The Lord Herbert was not then at Oxford, but in the Battle, and with Difficulty made his Eſcape thither. Sir William Waller a Week before this had taken Malmsbury, where Colonel Lunsford's Brother was Governor. Waller was beaten off at the firſt Attack, but at the ſecond the Garriſon deſired Parley and yielded upon Quarter.

Yorkſhire.

We muſt now look into the Affairs of the North, where the King's had a good Aſpect. Though his Majeſty had not many profitable Employments to diſpoſe of at preſent, yet he had at preſent Honours and Titles, which had a mighty Influence on the Vanity of the Country Gentry; Sir Ralph Hopton was created Lord Hopton of Stratton in Cornwall; and doubtleſs Sir Hugh Cholmley had the ſame Honour in View, when he deſerted his Country which he had ſo zealouſly ſerv'd, and deliver'd up Scarborough Caſtle to the Royaliſts. He remain'd uncorrupted till the Queen landed in Yorkſhire, and after that 'twas obſerved two Trumpets came upon one Day to Scarborough from Colonel Goring and Sir Francis Mackworth, Commanders for the King, under Pretence of exchanging Priſoners, Sir Hugh from that Time often magnify'd the Earl of Newcaſtle's Forces, and undervalued the Earl of Eſſex's and Lord Fairfax's. He complain'd that the Parliament ſlighted him, and from Diſguſt fell into Treaſon, and betrayed the Town and Caſtle committed to his Charge. The ſame Diſguſt had had the ſame Effect in Devonſhire, where Sir George Chudleigh, who had ſerv'd the Parliament very ſucceſsfully, revolted to the King. But Echard will have it, that the Wound in theſe Gentlemens Conſciences, made by their taking Arms in Defence of the Proteſtant Religion, the Rights and Liberties of the People, caus'd them to apply the beſt Remedy to it, which was to turn to the other Side, and fight for Arbitrary Power, Superſtition, and a Laudæan Hierarchy, which they had ſo ſtrenuouſly oppoſed.

The Queen lands at Burlington.

About the Middle of February the Queen landed at Burlington Key in Yorkſhire, the Earl of Newcaſtle having drawn his Army that Way for her Safeguard. Four of the Parliament's Ships were at the Mouth of Newcaſtle Harbour, whoſe Captains having Notice of her Arrival weigh'd Anchor, and came before Burlington, where they ſhot at the ſmall Veſſels that were landing the Military Stores. Some of the Bullets reach'd into the Town near the Houſe where her Majeſty lay for her Repoſe, ſo that ſhe was forc'd to remove thence to a more ſecure Lodging behind a Hill. Echard avers, The Ships ſhot directly at the Queen's Houſe; and that her Lodging behind the Hill was a Ditch. He adds, the Parliament Ships would not have deſiſted, but for ſome Threats from the Dutch Admiral, which is falſe, and fooliſh to a Prodigy, for the Dutch had not a Power equal to the Parliament's; and it is not likely that the Admiral of two or three Ships would have dar'd to inſult the Commadore of a Squadron of the Parliament's, eſpecially when the States had juſt before ſtopp'd one of the Ammunition Veſſels, which the Queen was to have brought with her. As ſoon as the Lord Fairfax heard of her Majeſty's Arrival he ſent Sir William Fairfax with a Letter to her, offering to be her Guard, but ſhe refus'd his Offer, and put her ſelf under the Protection of the Marquiſs of Newcaſtle.

A. D. 1643.

During theſe military Actions, the Treaty of Peace was renew'd at Oxford. The Parliament's Commiſſioners were the Earl of Northumberland, Earl of Pembroke, Earl of Salisbury, Earl of Holland, Lord Wenman, Lord Dungarvon, William Pierrepont, Eſq; Sir William Armine, Sir John Holland, Sir William Litton, Bulſtrode Whitlocke, Eſq; Edmund Waller, Eſq; Richard Winwood, Eſq; But I do not find that all theſe Commiſſioners acted. The Parliament appointed Mr. John Ruſhworth, Mr. Michael Welden, Mr. John Corbet of Grays Inn, and Mr. James Standiſh to attend the Commiſſioners as Meſſengers, and the King order'd Paſſes for them. I do not ſee any of the Commiſſioners Names in this Negotiation, which was carried on by writing, but the Earl of Northumberland, Sir John Holland, Sir William Armine, Mr. Pierrepoint, and Mr. Whitlocke. Others of them might be there, as particularly, Mr. Waller was, for when his Majeſty gave them Audience firſt in Chriſt Church Garden, and they had the Honour to kiſs his Hand in turn, according to their Quality, Mr. Waller being the laſt, the King ſaid to him, Though you are the laſt, yet you are not the worſt, nor the leaſt in my Favour. Mr. Whitlocke obſerves, "The Diſcovery of a Plot then "in hand at London, to betray the Parlia- "ment, wherein Mr. Waller was engaged with "Challoner, Tompkins, and others, did ma- "niſeſt the King's Courtſhip to Mr. Waller to "be for that Service." After the Commiſſioners had kiſs'd the Prince's Hand, as well as the King's, the Earl of Northumberland read the Propoſitions to his Majeſty with a ſober, ſtout Carriage, and being interrupted by the King, he ſaid ſmartly, Your Majeſty will give me Leave to proceed, the King anſwer'd, I, I, and ſo the Earl read them all through. The Propoſitions were to disband his Army, and return to the Parliament, to leave Delinquents to Trial, and Papiſts to be diſarm'd, to paſs a Bill for aboliſhing Biſhops, and ſuch other Bills as ſhould be preſented for Reformation, Recuſants to abjure Papacy, to remove malignant Counſellors, to ſettle the Militia as the Parliament deſir'd, to prefer to Offices ſuch as the Parliament ſhould name, to take in all that were put out of the Commiſſions of Peace; a Bill to vindicate the Lord Kimbolton and the Five Members, and to enter into an Alliance for the Recovery of the Palatinate. The Intereſt of the Queen of Bohemia and her Royal Family, were never forgotten by this Proteſtant Parliament: As if they foreſaw that the Security of our moſt Holy Religion, and the Rights, Properties, and Privileges of their Succeſſors and Poſterity, would one Day depend intirely on the Protection of that illuſtrious Houſe; and thoſe good Sentiments have ever ſince inſpir'd all true Engliſh Men with the ſame Zeal and Affection, and will, we hope, inſpire them as long as this Parliament for the preſent Proteſtant Succeſſion.

A. D. 1643. Nation has a Name. Other Propoſitions were for a general Pardon, with ſome few Exceptions, Newcaſtle, Digby, &c. Members of Parliament to be reſtor'd to their Offices, and to have their Loſſes repair'd. The King anſwer'd with Propoſitions of his own. The firſt of which made void whatever the Parliament had, or ſhould ask of him. To have his Magazines, Towns, Ships, Forts, and all his Revenues, immediately reſtor'd to him; to recall what was done againſt LAW, and the King's Right; always ſuppoſing, that whatever the Parliament did in defence of their and the People's Rights, Properties, and Liberties, was againſt LAW, and that whatever the King had done or ſhould do was his Right. All Power claim'd by Order of Parliament to be diſclaimed. His Majeſty will conſent to the Execution of all Laws concerning Popery, provided there be a Bill for preſerving the Common Prayer. The Commiſſioners were by their Inſtructions ty'd down to treat with the King himſelf, who had commonly with him Prince Rupert, the Lord Keeper Littleton, Earl of Northampton, the Lord Chief Juſtice Banks, and ſeveral Lords of the Council. The Commiſſioners often debated Matters till Midnight, and upon one of the moſt material Points preſs'd his Majeſty ſo home with good Reaſons and Arguments, that he ſaid he was ſatisfy'd, and promis'd to give them his Anſwer in writing according to their Deſire the next Morning: Upon which the Commiſſioners went to their Lodgings, full of joyful Hopes to receive the promis'd Anſwer the next Morning, which being given, would have conduc'd to a happy Iſſue of the Treaty. They had his Majeſty's Word for it, ſays Whitlocke. But inſtead of that Anſwer then, he gave them a Paper quite contrary to what had been concluded, and very much tending to the Breach of the Treaty. The Commiſſioners humbly expoſtulated it with his Majeſty, preſſing him, upon his Royal Word, and the ill Conſequences which they fear'd would follow upon his new Paper. But he told them, he had alter'd his Mind, and that the Paper he now gave them was his Anſwer. And to their great Grief they could obtain no other. Some of his own Friends, of whom the Commiſſioners inquir'd touching this Paſſage, inform'd them, That after they were gone from the King, and that his Counſel were alſo gone away, ſome of his Bed-Chamber, and they went higher, hearing from him what Anſwer he had promis'd, and doubting that it would tend to ſuch an Iſſue of the Treaty as they did not wiſh, they being rather for the Continuance of the War, never left preſſing, and perſwading his Majeſty till they prevail'd with him to change his former Reſolutions, and to give Order for his Anſwer to be drawn as it was now deliver'd.

The Treaty had continu'd near ſix Weeks, when his Majeſty ſent this Meſſage to the Houſe on the 12th of April. That as ſoon as he was ſatisfied in his firſt Propoſition, which was every Thing, to diſarm the Parliament, and remain himſelf in Arms, for what elſe is his having all the Revenues of the Kingdom, the Tower, Portſmouth, Hull, and, in a Word, all the ſtrong Towns, Forts and Caſtles, put into his Hands, as he demanded. As ſoon as the Members of both Houſes ſhould be reſtor'd, and that his Majeſty and both Houſes might be ſecured againſt tumultuous Aſſemblies, which he conceiv'd could not otherwiſe be done than by adjourning the Parliament to ſome Place twenty Miles from London, his Majeſty would conſent to diſband his Army, and return to the Parliament. This Meſſage being intimated to the Commiſſioners, they diſſwaded the ſending of it as that which, they fear'd, would break off the Treaty, it being very improbable, that the Houſes would adjourn, and leave the City of London, their beſt Friends, and Strength, and put a Diſcontent upon them. Yet was the King prevail'd with to ſend it, and the two Houſes upon Receipt of it immediately recall'd their Commiſſioners, April the 15th. as the ſmalleſt Politician in the ſmalleſt College at Oxford could not but have foreſeen. Whitlocke has not told us, what it was that gave his Majeſty Satisfaction, nor whether the material Point was the Militia, or the Biſhops Bill, probably it was the latter, and is ſunk by the Earl of Angleſey, who publiſh'd his Memorials, that nothing might appear in Defence of that Bill, which carry'd with it ſo much Conviction as to ſatisfy the King, whoſe Inflexibility, and the Influence his Queen and evil Counſellors had over him are here moſt apparent. A. D. 1643.

Some Weeks before this Treaty broke up, the Earl of Loudun, Chancellor of Scotland, and Mr. Henderſon, one of the chief Members of the Aſſembly of the Kirk, came to Oxford. The Earl of Loudun came to offer the Mediation of the Conſervators of the Peace in Scotland, for compoſing the Differences between the King and the Parliament. Mr. Henderſon brought a Petition, which the Lord Clarendon and Mr. Echard find Wit enough to make merry with for theſe Terms in it, The Lord Jeſus Chriſt. The Work of the Lord. Unity of Religion. The Lord of Heaven and Earth. Abuſe of the Goſpel. Idolatry, Superſtition. Day of Viſitation, &c. There is not the leaſt Appearance of Wit in either of their Hiſtories, unleſs they catch at ſuch Religious Phraſes, which having been long profan'd by Ridicule, are perfect Jeſts with them. Let us now ſee what our Scots Brethren ſay for themſelves, "Our great Grief "and Apprehenſion of Danger is not a little in- "creas'd, partly by the Inſolence and Preſump- "tion of Papiſts, and others diſaffected to the "Reformation of Religion, who though for "Number and Power they be not conſiderable "amongſt us, yet through the Succeſs of the "popiſh Army in Ireland, and the Hopes they "conceive of the Prevailing of the popiſh Ar- "mies, and Prelatical Faction in England, they "have of late taken Spirit, and begun to ſpeak "big Words againſt the Proteſtant Religion." They then complain of the Earl of Newcaſtle's Army in their Neighbourhood full of Papiſts, Officers and Soldiers, as infamous for their Treaſons and Conſpiracies againſt Princes and Rulers, as for their known Idolatry and ſpiritual Tyranny. This, and the like Paſſages, are repreſented as Farce by thoſe two Hiſtorians, who did not enough conſider their Talents and their Subject, when they affected to be witty on what would ſo little bear it, had they had more Wit to ſpare. The King's Anſwer to the Complaint about Papiſts gives one full Satisfaction, as to his good Intentions with reſpect to the other Parts of the Petition, for in Excuſe of his arming that idolatrous Race, his Majeſty ſays, the Parliament had arm'd more Papiſts than he, and that 20 or 30 Papiſts had been found in a Troop or Company of their Army when taken Priſoners; nay, ſome of them ſuch Papiſts, that he had himſelf refus'd to employ them, which I think is ſufficient to ſhew us, of what Spirit, and what Truth the Oxford Anſwers, Declarations, and Meſſages were. The Lord Loudun's Offer of a Mediation was refus'd, and ſo was his Requeſt, that there might be a Parliament in Scotland. And Mr. Henderſon could get no better

Scots Commiſſioners at Oxford.

A. D. 1643. Answer than the Propoſition of a Synod regularly choſen according to the LAWS, by which was meant a Convocation, and what that means in the Caſe of Reformation needs not to be further explain'd here. The King was ſo far from permitting the Scots Commiſſioners to go to London, that they were told they would be murder'd on the Way if they attempted to go thither without his Licence. One may eaſily imagine what will be the Iſſue of diſmiſſing theſe Gentlemen in this Manner, and that when they came home their Principals would enter upon other Meaſures for their Preſervation, ſince their Application to the King had been ſo ineffectual. The Oxford People were ſo afraid of their applying to the Parliament, that, as we have ſaid, they were threaten'd to be aſſaſſinated if they went that Way.

Reading taken by the Earl of Eſſex.

There being ſo little Hope left of an Accommodation, the Two Houſes order'd their General to beſiege Reading, to ſtreighten the Garriſon of Oxford, and prepare the Way for the Reduction of that City, from whence frequent Inroads were made into the adjacent Counties, as particularly that of the Earl of Cleveland, Lord Chandos, Lord Crawford, Sir John Biron, and others, to the Number of 1200, who pillag'd, plunder'd and waſted the County of Buckingham, as by a Letter which Sir John Wittewrong and Sir Thomas Tyrrel wrote to Col. Hampden and Col. Goodwyn, to be communicated to the Parliament, dated the 16th of May. "They mur-
" der all who make any Reſiſtance: One Wo-
" man big with Child, who could make no Re-
" ſiſtance, they cut in Pieces: What Houſhold-
" Goods they cannot carry off, they deſtroy:
" They ſweep the Paſtures of Cattle; and that " no Cruelty might be left unexercis'd, they " have this Day fir'd a Village call'd Swam-
" burne in ſeven Places, and guarded the Fire
" ſo carefully, with all their Forces divided into
" ſeveral Parts, that no Neighbour durſt venture
" to come to quench it." The Earl of Eſſex came before Reading two Days after the Parliament had recall'd their Commiſſioners from Oxford. The Earl of Eſſex's Army conſiſted of 15000 Foot and 3000 Horſe; and Sir Arthur Aſton, the Popiſh Governor, who afterwards join'd the Rebels in Ireland, had a Garriſon of 3000 Men well provided for a Siege. The Lord General ſent a Summons to the Governor, who return'd an haughty Anſwer, and the Artillery began to play on the great Fort upon Caverſham Hill, where the Beſiegers continu'd to make their Approaches, and a Shot of theirs beating down a Stack of Chimneys, one of the Bricks fell upon the Governor's Head, which wounded him ſo much, that he was diſabled, and kept his Chamber. His Succeſſor, Col. Fielding, wanting Powder, as it was ſaid, hung out a Flag of Truce. While the Treaty was depending, the King in Perſon, with Prince Rupert, Prince Maurice, &c. having drawn together a conſiderable Body, advanc'd from Wallingford towards Reading to raiſe the Siege. But the Lord Roberts and Col. Berkeley's Regiments, which were poſted at Caverſham Bridge, ſtop'd the Paſſage of the Royal Army, and compell'd them to retire with Loſs: Yet in the Time of this Skirmiſh they at another Place got an Opportunity to convey over the River into the Town a Quantity of Powder. However the Treaty went on, being in a manner concluded before, and Fielding alledg'd he could not in Honour recede from it; ſo the Articles were ſign'd April the 27th, to ſurrender the Town, to have free Paſſage to Oxford, to deliver up the Earl of Eſſex's Deſerters; and accordingly the next Day the Garriſon march'd out. But, ſays Ruſhworth, "one " of their Waggons was pillag'd by Eſſex's Men,
" and ſome of them had their Hats and Swords
" taken away or exchang'd; General Eſſex
" was much offended, and in Perſon beat and
" ſlaſh'd the Soldiers for ſuch their violating the
" Articles." Here was one Waggon plunder'd, and ſome Hats chang'd, but under Pretext of making Repriſals for this one ſolitary Waggon and a few old Hats, the Cavaliers ſack'd the City of Briſtol when it was afterwards taken by Prince Rupert. Echard in Defiance of Truth aſſures us, moſt of the Waggons were plunder'd, the Soldiers not only abus'd, but many of them diſarm'd. He ſays not a Word of the Occaſion of it, as in Ruſhworth: The Garriſon were themſelves in Fault, there being one Waggon diſcover'd which had 140 Muskets in it, directly contrary to the Articles of Surrender, and this exaſperated the Parliament Soldiers, who were alſo put out of Humour by being reſtrain'd from plundering the Town, which they were in Expectation of had they carry'd it by Storm. The King was much incens'd at Fielding for yielding up the Place, and he was condemn'd to loſe his Head by a Council of War, but obtain'd a Reprieve. His Majeſty by Proclamation broke that Article of the Treaty of Surrender, which oblig'd the Governor to deliver up Deſerters; and Mr. Archdeacon gives a moſt pleaſant Reaſon for it: The Soldiers out of Conſcience had left the Parliament's Godly Army to ſerve in the King's more Godly one, and the poor conſcientious Men ought not to have been put out of the King's Protection. Thus he tells us in the ſame Page, that Major General Chudleigh out of Conſcience deſerted the Earl of Stamford's Army, and join'd himſelf with that pious Gentleman Sir Richard Greenvile, and the other religious Gentry of Cornwall. I am ſenſible that this Gaiety is not within the Decorum of Hiſtory, but really the grave Aſſertions in the Earl of Clarendon's and Mr. Echard's, which are the very Reverſe of Fact and Reaſon, provoke Mirth, and would make even a Thucydides merry. Chudleigh had been taken Priſoner by Deſign, as Ruſhworth informs us, at the Battle of Stratton in Cornwall by Sir Ralph Hopton, who had there beaten the Earl of Stamford much better than the Earl had beaten him before at Oakhampton; and while he was a Priſoner proper Means were us'd to work upon his Conſcience, the ſame doubtleſs as were practis'd upon Sir Alexander Carew, the two Hothams, and others; Promiſes of Honours and Offices, which in all Times have carry'd with them Conviction in Minds capable of Temptation and Perfidy.

Queen.

We are now to return to the North, where we left the Queen and her little Army, of which ſhe declar'd her ſelf General, and march'd thence to join the King, having with her 3000 Foot and about 2000 Horſe and Dragoons, with 6 Pieces of Cannon. The King met her at Edgehill in the Beginning of July, and ſhe carry'd off ſo many Men with her, that the Marquis of Newcaſtle's Army when divided was not ſo formidable as it had been in the Northern Parts. Sir Thomas Fairfax attack'd thoſe at Wakefield, being 3000 Foot and 400 Horſe, and gain'd a compleat Victory, which Echard takes no Notice of. Sir Thomas Fairfax, as himſelf tells the Story, with 1200 Foot and about 800 Horſe, advanc'd to Stanley, where they beat up the Enemy's Quarters, and took about 20 Troopers and Dragoons Priſoners. About Four a Clock in the Morning, May the 21ſt, Fairfax's Soldiers came before Wakefield, and beat the Enemy's Horſe into the Town. His Foot with unſpeakable Courage drove the Cavalier Foot after them, and aſfaulted the Town in two Places, Wrengate and Norgate. The Diſpute laſted an Hour and an half, and Fairfax's Men having taken a Cannon and turn'd it upon the Enemy, Paſſage was open'd to them into the Town at Norgate, and almoſt at the ſame Time at Wrengate. Sir Thomas with the Horſe clear'd the Street where General Goring was taken Priſoner by Lieutenant Alured, Brother to Capt. Alured a Member of Parliament; yet three Troops of Horſe ſtood in the Market-Place, as alſo Col. Lambton's Regiment of Foot, which had but juſt enter'd the Town. Sir Thomas ſent a Trumpet to them with Offer of Quarter upon laying down their Arms, which they refuſing with Scorn, Major General Gifford a Parliament Officer fir'd a Piece of their own Ordnance upon them, and the Horſe falling in at the ſame Time, the Cavaliers were beaten out of the Town, and Sir Thomas Fairfax became intirely Maſter of it. Here were taken about 40 Officers, the Chief of them General Goring, Sir Thomas Bland, Lieutenant-Colonel St. George, Lieutenant-General Macmoyler, Major Carnaby, Capt. Legard, Capt. Lambton, Capt. Benſon, 27 Colours of Foot, 3 Cornets of Horſe, and 1500 common Soldiers, a great Number of Arms and Store of Ammunition. There were not above 7 Men kill'd on the Parliament Side, and the Number of Priſoners being almoſt equal to their Forces, Sir Thomas put them into Places that were more tenable than Wakefield.

The two Hothams Traytors.

We have ſpoken of the Deſertion of Sir Hugh Cholmley, and are now to mention that of Sir John Hotham and his Son Capt. Hotham. Sir John had been tamper'd with by the Lord Digby, who lay conceal'd in Hull with his Privity; but he withſtood the firſt Temptation, tho' it ſufficiently prepar'd him for another. The elder Hotham had had frequent Differences with the Lord Fairfax, the Parliament's General, in Yorkſhire, to whom he was unwilling to ſubmit, expecting that Command himſelf, by overvaluing his taking Poſſeſſion of Hull. The Parliament, who were pleas'd with the Lord Fairfax's Conduct, hearing of Hotham's Behaviour towards him, had Thoughts of putting another Governor into Hull unleſs he made the Lord Fairfax more eaſy, which Sir John ſuſpecting, reſolv'd to keep his Government by betraying his Truſt, and declaring for the King. The Parliament had Spies about him, and Warning enough of his and his Son's intended Treaſon; ſo they order'd Sir John Meldrum to apprehend Capt. Hotham, who was ſeiz'd and ſent Priſoner to Nottingham Caſtle, but made his Eſcape. Sir Matthew Boynton, a very honeſt worthy Gentleman, Brother-in-law to Sir John Hotham, had Inſtruction to have an Eye upon him and his Son too, and to endeavour to preſerve the Town if he perceiv'd it in Danger. In the Interim the Mayor of Hull receiv'd Information of a Plot to betray it, which he preſently communicated to Sir Matthew Boynton and ſome of the Aldermen, and it was reſolv'd to arm the moſt zealous of the Townſmen for the Preſervation of the Peace: Accordingly 1500 Men were in a few Hours got in Readineſs, and with ſo much Privacy, that they ſeiz'd on the Commanders of the Main Guard, particularly Capt. Hotham, before any Notice was taken of them. They then ſeiz'd on the Magazine, the Ordnance, on the Walls, the Guards at the Gate, the three Block-houſes, and the Caſtle. Thus in an Hour's Time they ſecured the whole Town without one Drop of Blood. Sir John Hotham got out of his Houſe, and meeting a Man riding into the Town, made him alight, mounted his Horſe, and rode thro' Beverly Gate, the Guard having had no Order to ſtop him; but being purſu'd, he quitted the Road and turn'd down to a Ferry, intending to have paſs'd over into Holderneſs. He there miſs'd the Boat, and was forc'd to ride on to Beverley, whither Sir Matthew Boynton's Man was now got before him with a Letter to his Son Col. Boynton, acquainting him with the Plot, and Order to apprehend him, which he did, taking hold of his Horſe's Bridle as he enter'd the Town., and obliging him to alight. He ſent him to Hull, from whence he was ſoon after convey'd to London by Sea together with his Son, and both impriſon'd in the Tower. The Parliament were very well pleas'd with the good Service done on this Occaſion, and publiſh'd a Declaration to indemnify Thomas Raikes, Eſq; Mayor of Hull, Sir Matthew Boynton, Sir William St. Quintin, Sir Richard Darley, Sir John Bourcher, Sir William Alliſon, Lancelot Roper Alderman, Nicholas Denman Alderman, John Barnard Alderman, William Pople Alderman, John Penroſe, Gent. and Robert Johnſon Clerk, for what they had done in that acceptable Service to the King and Parliament.

A. D. 1643.

I do not repeat all the King's Meſſages, they being moſt of them pretty long, and drawn as if they were intended not to have any Effect at this, upon News of the Victory at Stratton in Cornwall, wherein his Majeſty gave the Parliament an Account of the Strength of his Army, and the Plenty of his Ammunition, as ſure Tokens of his Inclinations to Peace, and requires them, as they will anſwer to God, himſelf, and the World, that they would remember by whoſe Authority, and to what End they met in that Council. Was it not very eaſy to anſwer, that they ſate there then by their own Authority, it being not in his Power to diſſolve them but by their own Conſent, and that their End was to prevent for the future the Injuſtice and Oppreſſion of the Adminiſtration for 16 Years paſt, to ſecure their own Privileges, and the Rights, Liberties and Properties of the People, Spiritual and Temporal, which had been ſo often invaded and violated. This, ſays Echard, put the Parliament in a Fury. Their Clergy blew their Trumpets louder than ever, if that could be poſſible. If there was not a Sort of Witchery in the Caſe, theſe People would not ſo often touch upon Things which are ſo eaſily turn'd againſt them, nothing being better known than that the Sermons of Sibthorp, Pocklington, Beal, Montague, Maynwaring, for arbitrary Power, Superſtition, and Perſecution, were the real Cauſe of the Calamities which enſued. Had he never read this Speech in Parliament: " My Lords, it is a Saying of Gregory " the Great, that when Antichriſt comes, Præ- " paratus eſt exercitus Sacerdotum, there is an " Army of Prieſts to receive him. This is fulfill'd " in our Time, for certainly this Army of Prieſts " doth many Ways advance the Deſign and Plot " of Popery for the Subverſion of our LAWS " and Government. Our LAWS and Popery " cannot ſtand together, but either Popery muſt " overthrow our LAWS, or our LAWS muſt " overthrow Popery. But to overthrow our " LAWS, the PRIESTS muſt overthrow Parliaments, and to overthrow Parliaments, they " muſt overthrow Property; they muſt bring " the Subjects Goods to be arbitrarily diſpos'd " of, that ſo there may be no Need of Parlia- " ments. This hath been done by Dr. Maynwaring, Dr. Beal, &c, have been Queens of England who have loſt their Heads. He informs us, This Action is without Precedent, and extreamly ſurprized the World, which is not true. The World talkt of ſuch a Thing a Year before, and the Commons made a ſolemn Declaration againſt it. But ſince that, in the Words of Ruſhworth, "She had been "very induſtrious, whilſt in Holland, to furniſh "the King with Arms, Ammunition and Mo-"ney, and being now at the Head of a conſider-"able Army at York, ready to march South-"ward, the Houſe of Commons reſolv'd to im-"peach her Majeſty of High Treaſon, and Mr. "Pym was ſent up to the Lords on that Meſſage.

Queen impeach'd.

"Accordingly he did impeach her, promiſing in "the Name of the Commons to bring in parti-"cular Articles." The Queen, in a Letter to the Marquis of Hamilton, writes him, The Houſe of Commons hath declared me Traytor, and carry'd up their Charge againſt me to the Lords. This I aſſure you is true, but I know not yet what the Lords have done upon it, God forgive them for their Rebellion. They have no other Word amongſt them, when the Privileges of Parliament, the Rights and Liberties of the People, and the Defence of them, are in queſtion. To ſpeak the Truth of them is to aſperſe, to oppoſe their Oppreſſion and Violence to rebel. The Queen's harbouring of Prieſts, employing Papiſts, ill counſelling the King, and her unpopular Conduct, had been long a general Complaint, which ſhe depending perhaps on foreign Support too much, ſlighted, and upon her being impeach'd the People ſhew'd their Reſentment, by inſulting her Chapel, driving away the Jeſuits and Friers, breaking the Organs, throwing down the Altars, and pulling down the Croſs in the Burying Place. If theſe Marks of their Hatred were too outragious, ſays Larrey, her ſecret Practices gave Occaſion to the Outrage. What we read in another Author takes off ſomething of the Surprize Mr. Echard put us into at her Impeachment.

the Oxford Doctors: Oh moſt merciful God, we render thee all Praiſe and Thanks, for that thou haſt been pleaſed to extend thy Hand of Deliverance unto the Perſon of our gracious Queen, That thou haſt made her an Inſtrument of ſo much Good to this Kingdom, and brought her ſafely hither; Lord, make the King and his People daily more and more happy in her, that as by thine eſpecial Favour ſhe is already become the Mother of ſo many hopeful Princes, ſo ſhe may be daily fruitful in the Addition of more Bleſſings to us, through Jeſus Chriſt our Lord. If every Word of this is not Blaſphemy, in the Mouth of a Proteſtant, ſenſible of the Idolatry of her Religion, and her ſecret Practices to eſtabliſh it, we are then to be taught what the Meaning of the Word is, and what the Nature of the Sin.

About the ſame Time that the Earl of Eſſex took Reading, Sir William Waller having routed and diſpers'd the Welch Forces, march'd from Glouceſter to Hereford with 3000 Horſe and Foot, and ſome Artillery. Coming before that City he ſummon'd it, but receiving a ſlight Anſwer from the Governor, Colonel Herbert Price, he order'd the Cannon to fire upon the Gates, through one of which a Ball pierc'd and kill'd a Lieutenant within it with ſome Men. This ſo frighted the Cavaliers, that moſt of the Garriſon abandon'd the City at another of the Gates, and the reſt yielded upon Quarter. Here were taken the Lord Scudamore and his Son, Colonel Herbert Price, Sir Richard Cave, Lieutenant Colonel Coningsby, Mr. Coningsby, Sir Walter Pye, Sir William Crofts, Sir Samuel Awbry, Major Dalton, Dr. Rogers, Dr. Godwyn, Dr. Evans, and ſeveral others, who were ſent to Glouceſter.

A. D. 1643.

Sir William Waller takes Hereford.

Briſtol had ſupply'd Sir William Waller with part of his Forces, and while he was ranging thus in Glouceſterſhire and Herefordſhire, a Plot was form'd to betray that City to Prince Rupert. The chief Plotter was one Mr. Robert Yeomans, a Merchant, who Echard tells us, was a Man of great Reputation, and had been High Sheriff the Year before. As I have by me a Manuſcript Hiſtory of that City, which I may hereafter publiſh, I have acquainted my ſelf much better with the Affairs of it than it can be ſuppos'd he has done. Yeomans was indeed the youngeſt Sheriff in the Mayoralty of Mr. John Locke, Merchant, and far from being a Perſon of diſtinguiſh'd Reputation. George Bowcher his Fellow Plotter, was drawn in by him, as were Mr. William Yeomans, Mr. Edward Dakers, Mr. Arundel, Mr. Teague, Thomas Barret, Cutler, John Nickens, Trunk-Maker, Ephraim Goody, Goldſmith, Mr. Millard, John Collins, Mr. Brent, Robert Blackborough, Captain Cole, Mr. John Throupe, one Cowly a Quack, Green an Attorney, John Peſtor, Thomas Stephens, Matthew Stephens, Nathaniel Street, Tiler, Henry Ruſſel, and others. On Monday the 7th of March in the Night, Prince Rupert, Prince Maurice, and the Lord Digby, with 4000 Horſe and 2000 Foot, were to advance to Durdam Down, half a Mile from the City on Glouceſter ſide, and the Conſpirators engag'd to ſieze Froom Gate under St. Michael's Hill and Newgate for their Entrance. Blackborough, one of the Plotters, liv'd near Froom Gate, and was to give Paſſage to the King's Forces through his Garden. Notice was to be given the Conſpirators, by tolling a Bell at St. Nicholas, St. John, and St. Michael Churches. The Bell at St. Nicholas was a Token to thoſe that were to attack the main Guard near the Croſs and Tolſey. The Bell at St. John's was Notice to thoſe that were to ſieze Froom Gate, and the Bell at St. Michael's was a Token to Prince Rupert's Men without the City on Glouceſter ſide, to act all together. The Conſpirator's were to be diſtinguiſh'd by white Tape in their Hats. According to Agreement about 50 of them met arm'd at Mr. Yeoman's Houſe, expecting to be join'd by a Multitude of Butchers from the Shambles near St. Nicholas's Gate and other Raſcality at the High Croſs, at the upper End of High Street, fronting that Gate. They were there to ſieze the main Guard, and poſt a ſtrong Body at St Nicholas Gate to hinder Aſſiſtance from that part of the City which is on the other Side of the Bridge, in Somerſetſhire. Robert Yeomans, who was to be a Colonel in the King's Service, undertook to move with this Part as ſoon as St. Nicholas's Bell toll'd. Bowcher was to head the Party that was to ſieze Froom Gate, at the Telling of St. John's Bell, in which he was to be aſſiſted by the Seamen

Plot at Briſtol.

A. D. 1643. from St. Auſtin's Back. Then was the Bell at St. Michael's on the Hill to toll, and the Royaliſts immediately to draw down to Froom Gate and Blackborough's Garden, while others of the Conſpirators broke open the Houſe of Humphrey Hooke, Eſq; Mayor of the City, murder'd him and his Family, and ſeizing the Keys of the City Gates, open'd them to their Confederates. Parl. Chron. 278. Thoſe Citizens who had not the white Tape Mark, and certain other Marks, were to be maſſacred and plunder'd. It was not above an Hour or two before this Conſpiracy was to be executed, when a poor Man came to the Guard at the Bridge foot, and ſaid, he ſaw ſome Men go into Yeomans's Houſe at 12 a Clock at Night. Yeomans being a ſuſpected Perſon, a Party of Horſe and Foot was ſent to inveſt his Houſe, where they forc'd Entrance, and found the Men in Arms, whom they preſently apprehended and carry'd to the Caſtle. Bowcher being alſo a ſuſpected Perſon his Houſe was ſearch'd at the ſame Time, and a like Company found there in Arms. Both Yeomans and Bowcher had increas'd the Suſpicion againſt them, by their not hanging out Lights, as Colonel Fiennes the Governor had commanded the Citizens to do. Prince Rupert advanc'd according to the Scheme projected, but hearing no Tokens, and apprehending the Plot was diſcover'd, he quitted Durdham Down, where he had waited 3 or 4 Hours for them, and drew as near as Brandon Hill with ſome Horſe, but after a Shot or two of Cannon from the City Works he retir'd. In Yeoman's Houſe was found this Writing, All Inhabitants of the Bridge, High-ſtreet and Corn-ſtreet, keep within your Doors upon Peril of your Lives. All other Inhabitants of this City who ſtand for the King, let them forthwith appear at the High Croſs with ſuch Arms as they have, and follow their Leaders. The Parliament having Information of the Diſcovery of the Plot, and Seizure of the Plotters, order'd Clement Walker, Eſq; Advocate to the Council of War, Colonel Fiennes, William White, Eſq; Richard Cole, Eſq; &c. to exhibit Articles of High Treaſon againſt them, and proceed by Law Martial. The Court ſat at the Lady Rogers's Houſe. The Fact was very plainly prov'd upon them, and Robert Yeomans and George Bowcher were condemn'd to be hang'd before the main Guard, which Sentence was executed the 30th of May, notwithſtanding the impotent Menaces of the Earl of Forth, the King's General, to hang up Mr. George, Mr. Stephens, and Captain Huntly, Priſoners taken at Cirenceſter, if thoſe two Conſpirators ſuffer'd. But Colonel Fiennes and Mr. Walker ſent them Anſwer, that they would in ſuch caſe execute Sir Walter Pye, Sir William Crofts, and Colonel Coningsby, who were taken in open REBELLION, and actual War againſt the King and Kingdom. His Majeſty himſelf wrote a Letter to the Mayor, the two Sheriffs of Briſtol, William Colſton, Eſq; and Henry Creſwick, Eſq; wherein he told them, that the hanging of Yeomans and Bowcher would call down the juſt Vengeance of God, and bring perpetual Infamy on the City, he therefore will'd and commanded them to raiſe all the Power and Strength of the City to reſcue them. There is no End of Wonderment at theſe Letters, for could any one ſuppoſe that the Mayor of Briſtol, a Puritan, would enter into a War with the Governor Fiennes, a Presbyterian, to attempt a Thing that could end in nothing but Slaughter or the p. 259. Gallows. Warwick, for they are alike, ſays Dakers, was hang'd too, but it is a Falſity. Parl. Chron. 283. There was a Day of Thankſgiving kept for this Diſcovery at Briſtol; the Parliament alſo order'd Thankſgivings for it; and what is very extraordinary, the King too order'd Thankſgivings at Oxford for Prince Rupert's Deliverance from this Conſpiracy, which it was ſaid there was a mock one contriv'd by Fiennes to draw that Prince and his Cavaliers into a Snare, and then under Colour of receiving them cut them to pieces. A. D. 1643.

Another Plot broke out the very Day that Yeomans and Bowcher were hang'd at Briſtol, to betray the City of London to her avow'd Enemies, the Cavaliers. Mr. Waller, one of the fineſt Genius's of his Age for Poetry but an ordinary one for Politicks, was at the Head of this Conſpiracy; his Brother-in-Law Mr. Tompkins, Clerk of the Queen's Council, Mr. Challoner a wealthy Tradeſman in Cornhill, Mr. Blinkhorn of Covent Garden, and others, enter'd into the Plot, after having taken an Oath of Secrecy, to ſeize the King's Children, to ſecure ſeveral Members of both Houſes of Parliament, particularly the Lord Say, the Lord Wharton, Mr. Pym, Sir Philip Stapleton, Colonel Hampden, Colonel Strode, as alſo the Lord Mayor of London, Sir John Woolaſton, and the Committee of Militia, under pretence of bringing them to a legal Trial. To ſeize upon the Outworks which had been rais'd from St. James's to Hide Park Corner, Piccadilly, St. Giles's, Pancraſs, Grays Inn Lane, Holloway Road, Newington and Hoxton. To ſeize the Magazines, Gates, and other important Places of the City, the Tower, and let in the King's Army, whoſe Luſt was ſo ſtrong after the Plunder, to reſiſt and obſtruct all Payments of Parliament. Mr. Waller being brought acquainted with Mr. Challoner by Mr. Tompkins, propos'd to him, to make a Party in the City of the Moderate Men to ſtand in the Gap between King and Parliament, and bring them to a Reconciliation, without which Party there was no Hopes to unite them. Challoner ſaid, Sir, If I could aſſure you of three Parts of London, none of them ſhould ſtir unleſs we had the Countenance of the Lords and Commons. Mr. Waller reply'd, You ſhall have to countenance this Buſineſs the whole Houſe of Peers, except three or four, and divers of the Houſe of Commons. Mr. Waller was the Mouth of thoſe Peers and Commoners. He told Challoner what Converſation he had, or pretended he had with thoſe Lords and Commons, and Challoner told Blinkhorn, Abbot, Luntloe, King, and other Citizens. Among all the Falſities in the Hiſtory of the Rebellion, and the Archdeacon's Hiſtory, there is none that has ſo good Proof againſt it as this, That the Plot was only to petition for a Peace, Tompkins and Challoner at the Gallows confeſſing it was a treaſonable Deſign. Tompkins ſaid his Suffering was juſt; and Challoner, I confeſs I now die juſtly. The Lord Clarendon and Echard will not allow that theſe poor Gentlemen, who were juſt going to be hang'd for this fooliſh Buſineſs, as Tompkins call'd it, ſpoke the Truth. I can ſee no real Cauſe, ſays the Lord Clarendon very gravely, but thoſe who dy'd for it, own'd themſelves there was a real Cauſe, and that they dy'd juſtly. The like Aſſertion is not in any Hiſtory, or other Writing in being, and it is a great Comfort to have his Lordſhip's fine Characters confirm'd by ſo fine a Remark. The firſt Diſcovery of the Plot was made by Mr. Roe, Servant to Mr. Tompkins, who having over-heard ſome of the Conſultations, imparted the Subſtance of them to Mr. Pym, who acquainting the Parliament with it, a Committee, Mr. Pym, Sir Henry Vane, jun. Mr. St. John, and Mr. Glyn, were appointed to inquire into the Conſpiracy, which they trac'd Waller's Plot.

A. D. 1643. several Days and Nights to find out the Conſpirators, and when the Matter was ripe, the Two Houſes had a Conference upon it, and a Declaration of it was drawn up by their Order, to be printed and read in all Churches and Chapels. In Tompkins's Cellar was found a Commiſſion from the King under the Great Seal of England, to Sir Nicholas Criſp, Sir George Stroud, Sir Thomas Gardiner Recorder of London, Sir George Binion, Richard Edes, Eſq; Marmaduke Roydon, Eſq; Thomas Brown, Eſq; Peter Paggen, Charles Jennings, Sir Edward Charlton, Robert Abbot, Andrew King, William White, Stephen Bolton, Robert Alden, Edmund Foſter, and Thomas Blinkhorn, of London, Gentlemen, to raiſe Forces, Horſe and Foot, to arm, muſter, conduct, order, lead and govern, to raiſe Money for the clothing, arming, furniſhing and paying them, to ſlay and to deſtroy the Friends to the Parliament, I ſee no real Cauſe, ſays Lord Clarendon, and I do not know many Sayings of his better grounded. This Commiſſion was brought from Oxford by the Lady Aubigney, and one may by that ſee what good Uſe the Ladies made of the Parliament's Civilities towards them. Haſel one of the King's Meſſengers, went to and fro between London and Oxford with Accounts of the Conſpirators Proceedings, and the King's Approval of them. One of his Inſtructions was, that they ſhould ſettle at Oxford, Qua forma Regiminis, what Sort of Government ſhould be ſet up when the Parliament was deſtroy'd, which is ſomething more than a Petition for Peace, mention'd by the Earl of Clarendon as the Sum of this Deſign. Mr. Alexander Hampden was another Agent, and probably he had ſuffer'd as well as Challoner and Tompkins, had not his Sickneſs prevented his Trial. The Conſpirators Tompkins, Challoner, Blinkhorn, Abbot, &c. were try'd by a Council of War in Guildhall, where were preſent in Court 22 Colonels of the City and the Lord General's Army, the Earl of Mancheſter Preſident. The Evidence and the Confeſſion of the Priſoners gave full Satisfaction as to their Guilt, ſo theſe four receiv'd Sentence of Death, Abbot and Blinkhorn were repriev'd, but Tompkins was executed over againſt Fetter-lane End in Holborn near his own Houſe, and Mr. Challoner over againſt the Royal Exchange, both dying very penitent, and ſenſible of their Wickedneſs in ingaging in this curſed Conſpiracy; tho' their Wickedneſs in plotting is not ſo great, conſidering their Penitence, as that of the Hiſtorian, who with equal Impenitence and Falſhood turns this Plot upon the Parliament, as if it had been a Contrivance of theirs to bring a Scandal on the King, who indeed was deeply concern'd in it, as appears by the abovemention'd Commiſſion to ſlay and deſtroy the Parliament and all their Friends and Adherents. A French Popiſh Hiſtorian, who however is more modeſt than either the Author of the Hiſtory of the Rebellion or the Archdeacon, ſays, The particular Inclinations his Majeſty always had to ſave the Blood of his Subjects, his earneſt Deſire to ſtop the Effuſion of it on ſo many Occaſions, and his great Tenderneſs to his poor People, ſhews ſufficiently that he had no manner of Knowledge of ſuch a Deſign, to kill and deſtroy, tho' he had granted a Commiſſion for it under his Broad Seal. The Lord Clarendon ſays there is nothing in the World clearer than that the Commiſſion had no Relation to Tompkins, tho' it was found in his Cellar; and he ſaid at the Gallows he was glad it was diſcover'd, for it might have occaſion'd very ill Conſequences, and Challoner own'd at his Death he knew of it, as in Ruſhworth 326, 327. What Conſciences muſt theſe Men have, and what Heads, to affirm Things to be falſe, the Truth of which was ſo eaſily prov'd? Mr. Archdeacon aping the Lord Clarendon, I cannot ſay right or wrong, for it is always wrong, tells us, The Parliament ſubtlely join'd Sir Nicholas Criſp's Commiſſion and Waller's Projects together, and enviouſly moulded them into one Plot. What occaſion was there for ſubtlely joining and moulding a Thing that was moulded and join'd to their Hands? Echard goes on very ſagely and gravely, Plots are the dark Parts of Hiſtory, Plants of quick Growth with ſmall Roots and Branches, almoſt inviſible in their Cauſes, but viſible in their Effects. Theſe very formal and impertinent Reflections are not however his own, for the Strength of his Genius does not ſeem to exert it ſelf in Reflecting. Was the Broad Seal an inviſible Part? Was a Commiſſion to raiſe Men and Money, Horſe and Arms, to ſeize Magazines, and kill and maſſacre, a ſmall Branch? It is not worth Animadverſion, for one cannot tell which is moſt predominant here, the Falſhood or the Nonſenſe. This Plot has no Darkneſs in it, 'tis confeſs'd, tho Cauſes were as viſible as the King's impatient Deſire to be Maſter of the City could make it, and the Effects were to guard againſt the like Treaſon for the future, by a new ſolemn Engagement or Covenant to be enter'd into by all the good People of England. The Preamble to it was, Since there has been a Popiſh Deſign to ſubvert the Proteſtant Religion, and a Popiſh Army to ſupport that Deſign, and a treacherous and horrid Plot lately diſcover'd, &c. I A. B. will not conſent to lay down Arms ſo long as Papiſts, now in open War againſt the Parliament, be protected againſt Juſtice. The Reverend Hiſtorian declares here that the Preamble was void of Truth, and thus gives the Lie to the Houſe of Lords and Houſe of Commons; yet ſome ſqueamiſh People have thought I have offended againſt Decency, when I have charg'd him and the Lord Clarendon with ſaying Things void of Truth: Tho' it is monſtrous to think I may not take the ſame Liberty with Hiſtorians who write falſly, as they both take with the moſt auguſt Senate in the World in Arms for the Defence of their own and the People's Religion, Rights, Privileges and Liberties. If the Papiſts had no Deſign to ſubvert the Proteſtant Religion, if there was no Plot to ſeize the City and diſperſe the Parliament, then the Preamble was void of Truth, and on that Iſſue I leave it. The chief Plotter, Mr. Waller, appeal'd from the Council of War to the Houſe of Commons, of which he was a Member, and being brought to the Bar, made one of the moſt eloquent and moving Speeches that is in our or any other Language, ancient or modern. He begins with a Confeſſion of that Crime which the Lord Clarendon and Mr. Echard deny with incredible Reſolution; for can one believe that two Men ſhould know more of a Matter than the Man who is to die for it, and yet confeſſes it. His Speech began thus; I acknowledge it a great Mercy of God, and a great Favour from you, that I am once more ſuffer'd to behold this Honourable Aſſembly. I mean not to make uſe of it to ſay any thing in my own Defence by Juſtification or Denial of what I have done; I have already confeſs'd enough to make me appear worthy not only to be put out of this Houſe, but out of the World too. The Lord Clarendon has it over and over again, I can ſee no real Cauſe which the Criminal who expects Sentence of Death to paſs upon him, did ſee and own that he ſaw. I am not ſurpriz'd at Echard's repeating ſuch prodigious Paſſages, for had the Extravagance of that Parti-

Mr. Waller.

A. D. 1643. Partiality been greater, and the Falſhood of it been ſtill more notorious and ſelf-evident, he would have run away with it as with an ineſtimable Treaſure coming out of ſuch a Storehouſe as the Hiſtory of the Rebellion, where we alſo read, and in the Archdeacon's Hiſtory too, that Mr. Waller brib'd the Miniſters of the Goſpel who came to pray with him, to ſpeak a good Word for him to the Houſe of Commons, which will not bear Remark. He clos'd his Speech thus; Sir, not to trouble you any longer, if I die, I ſhall die praying for you; if I live I ſhall live ſerving of you, and render you back the Uſe and Employment of all thoſe Days you ſhall add to my Life. By this pathetick Speech and other Artifices, ſays Echard as falſly as ever Man ſaid any thing, he prevail'd not to be try'd by a Council of War, p. 571. Ruſhworth, p. 330. The Houſe of Commons proceeded to expel him, ſo being LEFT TO THE COUNCIL OF WAR, he was condemn'd to die. Should a Man with ſuch a Falſity in his Mouth accuſe very religious and pious Divines of Vile Sayings, of taking great Sums for their Prayers, of Hypocriſy and Bribery. But ſo it is, and the Inſenſibility with which he repeated ſuch Stuff after the moſt partial and profligate Writers, will doubtleſs render all Reproof ineffectual. Mr. Waller had a Reprieve from the Lord General Eſſex, and after about a Year's Impriſonment, paying a Fine of 10000 Pounds, which, ſays the Lord Clarendon, the Parliament wanted, he was diſcharg'd and travell'd into France. Is not the Hiſtorian's Reflection there on the Parliament's Poverty very diſcreet and courtly, conſidering what a flowing Treaſury his Majeſty had at Oxford? There are ſeveral Parts of the Hiſtory of the Rebellion as merry as this, and one cannot help laughing, as much as it is below the Dignity of Hiſtory, Larrey having read what the Earl ſaid of kneading and joining, which Echard calls moulding and joining two Plots together, thought it very ridiculous. " 'Tis of little Im" portance whether Criſp's Commiſſion was a Se-
" quel of Waller's Conſpiracy, as Ruſhworth
" writes, or a ſeparate Enterprize from either,
" as the Lord Clarendon affirms, tho' it ſeems
" not at all to agree with the Commiſſion's be" ing found in Tompkins's Cellar." Mr. Waller was forc'd to ſell an Eſtate of 1000 Pounds a Year
Dr. Birch. to clear off this Fine and Charges. Dr. Birch, who marry'd his Daughter, in a Manuſcript Account of his Life, ſaid, " He conferr'd with ſome
" Loyal Citizens and others about recovering the " City into the King's Intereſt, in which he was
" betray'd by his Siſter Price and her Presbyte" rian Chaplain Mr. Good, who ſtole ſome of his " Papers; and if he had not ſtrangely dream'd
" the Night before he was ſeiz'd that his Siſter
" betray'd him, and thereupon burnt the reſt of " his Papers by the Fire left in his Chimney, he " had certainly loſt his Life for it." Now to get a Petition, as the Lord Clarendon poſitively aſſerts the Deſign was, is no hanging Matter. This ſmall Scrip of Hiſtory by Dr. Birch, ſhews us what Sort of Hiſtorians our moſt famous Doctors make: He tells us the Presbyterian Miniſter was a Thief, and builds his Story on a Dream. Mr. Echard cannot but be pleas'd to ſee his own Manner of Writing confirm'd by that of Dr. Birch.

Waller accus'd the Earl of Portland and the Lord Conway of being privy to the Deſign, and they were impriſon'd for ſome Time; but it not being clearly prov'd they were diſcharg'd.

His Majeſty publiſh'd a Proclamation at Oxford, June 20. forbidding all Perſons to obey the Orders of the Two Houſes. We muſt note that theſe Proclamations had no Currency any where but in the King's own Quarters; but the Penman Sir Edward Hyde was extremely enamour'd with his florid Stile, and took infinite Pleaſure in writing Proclamations and Declarations with a Fluency of Words, which paſs'd off as they were, like ſo much Air. Sir Philip Warwick informs us that Mr. Hobbes thought his Verboſeneſs and Flouriſhes did more Hurt than Good. I had taken Notice of this Vice in his Language before I knew that it was the Opinion of Warwick and Hobbes. In this Proclamation was an Offer of a general Pardon, with ſome Exceptions in it; as, Robert Earl of Eſſex, Robert Earl of Warwick, Edward Earl of Manchеſter, William Lord Say and Sele, Sir Francis Popham, Sir John Hotham, Sir Arthur Haſelrigge, Sir Henry Ludlow, Sir Edward Hungerford, Alexander Popham, Eſq; Nathaniel Fiennes, Eſq; John Pym, Eſq; William Strode, Eſq; Henry Martin, Eſq; Alderman Pennington, Capt. Ven; neither of whom, as I can find in Hiſtory, ſhew'd any Diſpoſition to be at the Charge of the Broad Seal for a Pardon, tho' his Majeſty threaten'd to proceed againſt them as guilty of High Treaſon by the KNOWN LAWS OF THE LAND, which are twenty Times mention'd in this Proclamation, and have been a thouſand Times broken in this Reign by upper and lower Officers.

Exceptions to the King's Pardon.

About a Month before, a Proclamation was publiſh'd at Oxford in Favour of the Clergy, wherein it is ſaid that ſeveral Miniſters have been ſequeſter'd for preaching the Word of God according to its Purity, of which Hundreds of Inſtances might be taken out of the Regiſters of Laud, Wren, and other ſuch Prelates, for not teaching Sedition, for not fomenting this unnatural War, for not ſowing Sedition again, for not acting contrary to the Word of God, &c. Wherefore the King forbids any one to take their Places, or touch their Tithes. Where the Cavaliers were Maſters, no Body was ſuffer'd to take any thing from them but themſelves; but where the Parliamentarians, this Proclamation did them no more good than Goring's Bleſſing would have done. Before we enter further upon the Military Actions of this Year, we muſt remember the Civil, and we find the Parliament proceeding with great Calmneſs and Wiſdom in the Latter, and with as much Diligence and Vigour in the Former, as the Circumſtances of the Times would permit.

They paſs'd an Ordinance about the Beginning of April for ſequeſtring the Eſtates of all notorious Delinquents, and another for the ſpeedy raiſing and levying of Money throughout the whole Kingdom of England and Dominion of Wales, for the Relief of the Common-Wealth, and the Taxing ſuch as have not at all contributed or lent Money, or not according to their Eſtates and Abilities. The Preamble to this Ordinance having ſet forth the Miſeries the Nation endured by the Army the King had rais'd to make War againſt his Parliament, and the Ruin that would be inevitable, unleſs the Army rais'd by the Parliament was ſupported, it is further ſaid, " which ſaid Army cannot be maintain'd
" without great Sums of Money, yet for raiſing
" ſuch Sums, by Reaſon of his Majeſty's with" drawing himſelf from the Advice of the Par" liament, there can be no Act paſſed with his
" Majeſty's Aſſent, albeit there is great Juſtice
" that the ſaid Money ſhould be rais'd; Be it
" therefore ordain'd by the Lords and Commons,
" that all thoſe who have not contributed, &c. as
" in the Title, ſhall be aſſeſs'd;" and Commiſſioners

The County of Oxford is omitted, the King's Forces being in Poſſeſſion of it. As this is the firſt Precedent of appointing Commiſſioners of Taxes in every County, as is done lately for the Land-Tax, at leaſt it is the firſt that comes ſo near to the late Practice; and this being the moſt compleat Liſt extant, for all others are imperfect, I doubt not it will be acceptable to the Reader; and the Poſterity of thoſe Gentlemen who have preſerv'd true Proteſtant and Engliſh Principles in their Names and Families, will be pleas'd with ſo honourable a Succeſſion. As for thoſe who have degenerated, and there will be ſome found in ſeveral Counties, it is to be hop'd that the Goodneſs of the Cauſe, and the Example of their Anceſtors, will wean them from Bigottry and Faction, and make them as good Engliſhmen and as good Proteſtants as their Fathers were before them.

All this while was the War carrying on in ſeveral Parts of the Kingdom by Skirmiſhes, Surpriſes, Rencounters, without much Damage to either

A. D. 1643. either Side, tho' it muſt be confeſs'd that what Advantage there was fell moſtly to the King's Share in this Year's Diſpute. The Garriſon of Oxford made frequent Sallies even within a Mile of the Earl of Eſſex's head Quarters, which were about Thame. Prince Rupert cut off a Regiment or two at Poſtcomb and Chinnor. He alſo fell upon a Body of Parliamentarians in Chalgrave Field, Buckinghamſhire, where a warm Action commenc'd, and ended in the Rout of the latter, who were betray'd by Col. Hurry a Deſerter. In this Engagement Major Gunter was ſhot dead, and Col. Hampden mortally wounded; Capt. Sheffield and many Officers and Soldiers were taken Priſoners. Some adviſed Mr. Hampden not to go upon that Party, he having no Order for it; but, ſays Whitlocke, his Courage did put him forward. He adds, He was a Gentleman of the moſt ancient Extraction in the County of Bucks, Hampden of Hampden; his Fortune large, his natural Abilities great, his Affection to publick Liberty and Applauſe in his Country, expos'd him to many Difficulties and Troubles, as in the Buſineſs of the Ship-Money and the Loan; and now in Parliament, where he was a moſt active and leading Member. He ſpoke rationally and ſubtlely, and often propos'd Doubts more than he reſolv'd. He was well belov'd in his Country, where he had a great Intereſt, as alſo in the Houſe of Commons. He dy'd of his Wounds a Week after the Engagement, about the 24th of June, and was lamented by every good Man in the Nation. His Character is univerſally acknowledg'd to be the brighteſt and pureſt of any Man's then living. Mr. Whitlock was his Neighbour and Friend, as good a Judge of Men as was then in England, and as well able to ſpeak in their Praiſe or Diſpraiſe; yet we ſee in how few Words, with what Simplicity and Sincerity he leaves this ſhining Character to Poſterity. If it will not ſhine of it ſelf, it ſhall have no Ornament of Words or Fancy from him; and if the Earl of Clarendon's Pictures had been drawn with the ſame Integrity and Diſcretion, we had loſt above half of them in Number and Value. I ſhall ſpeak of them more at large elſewhere, and could prove very eaſily, that there is not one of them juſt, either in Beauty or Blemiſh. That all Likeneſs is loſt in a barren Superfluity of Words, and the Workings of a prejudiced Imagination, even where one may ſuppoſe the Drawing was his own. But that there has been more Dawbing in ſome Places, and more Dirt in others, put on by his Editors, is now inconteſtable. In the Character of this great and excellent Man, which we could wiſh had eſcap'd his Drawings, or the Drawings of thoſe clumſy Painters into whoſe Hands his Work fell, there is ſomething ſo very falſe and baſe, that ſuch Coin could only come from a College Mint. In a Word, what was ſaid of Cinna might well be apply'd to Hampden, he had a Head to contrive, and a Tongue to perſwade, and a Hand to execute any Miſchief: His Death therefore ſeem'd to be a great Deliverance to the Nation. There are not Words to expreſs the Infamy of this Slander and Impoſture, nor the unparallell'd Wickedneſs of thoſe Doctors, who foiſted ſo horrid a Reflection into that Character. The Perſon who did it was Mr. Edmund Smith of Oxford, Author of Phædra and Hippolitus, a Tragedy, who at his Death confeſs'd to the Gentleman in whoſe Houſe he dy'd, that among a great Number of Alterations and Additions which he himſelf made in the Hiſtory of the Rebellion, by Order of Dr. Aldrich, Dr. Atterbury, and Dr. Smalridge, ſucceſſive Deans of Chriſt-Church, this very Saying of Cinna, apply'd to Mr. Hampden, was one; and when he read it to one of thoſe Doctors, he clap'd him on the Back, and cry'd with an Aſſeveration, It will do. The Confeſſion Mr. Smith made, and the Remorſe he expreſs'd for being concern'd in this Impoſture, were his laſt Words. Probably before this Hiſtory is publiſh'd that Gentleman, or my ſelf by his Permiſſion, may have ſet this whole Matter in a clear Light, and the World will then ſee what a fair Way they were in to be impos'd on, perhaps for ever, if ſo worthy a Gentleman had not detected the Fraud. That the Ground-work of the Characters and Hiſtory was the Lord Clarendon's, is not to be doubted, from the Abundance of Words and Wantonneſs of Fancy; but that thoſe Additions and Alterations were made to flatter or abuſe Perſons and Things to keep Life in a languiſhing Cauſe, is now well known, and will be made appear. This Digreſſion muſt ſerve for all that might be ſaid here upon this Subject.

We have mention'd the Covenant fram'd on the Diſcovery of Waller's Plot, which was order'd to be tender'd by the Miniſters of Pariſhes to their Pariſhioners. One Grimes, Parſon of Ightam in Kent not only refus'd to take it himſelf, according to Order, but alſo to tender it to his Congregation. The Parliament being inform'd of it, ſent a Party of Horſe to bring him to London: But the Parſon was prepar'd to receive them, and having gotten a Rabble together with Halberts, Swords and Staves, pretended to ſtand out againſt the Troopers, who ſoon diſpers'd them, ſeiz'd Grimes, and carry'd him off. But the Mob aſſembled again as ſoon as the Party was gone, and rais'd a downright Rebellion againſt the Parliament, being encreas'd to 2000, and having got Fire-Arms amongſt them. Againſt theſe Col. Richard Brown was order'd to march with 600 Horſe and Dragoons, and 1200 Foot. He came up with them at Tunbridge, and they fir'd upon his Men, kill'd an Officer and ſeven Soldiers; upon which Col. Brown commanded his Forces to attack them, and their ſudden Flight prevented a great Slaughter; 200 were taken Priſoners, and the Town was plunder'd for harbouring and encouraging them. The Parliament had offer'd them Pardon if they would lay down their Arms, and to redreſs whatever Grievances they complain'd of, but they contemptuouſly refus'd it; and being routed, the Two Houſes paſs'd an Ordinance in Auguſt, impowering Commiſſioners to ſeize the Horſes and Arms, the Lands, Tenements, Goods and Chattels of theſe Rebels, and their Abettors; which Commiſſioners were Sir Henry Vane ſen. A Rebellion in Kent.

About the Time of the Diſcovery of the Plots to betray London, Briſtol, and Hull to the Cavaliers, there was a Conſpiracy to deliver up the City of Lincoln by Major Purefoy and his Brother, who were in the Parliament's Service there. Two thouſand of the Forces which the Queen had left at Newark in her Paſſage to Oxford, were to advance to the Gates, which the two Purefoys had engaged to open to them, and for that Purpoſe had admitted a ſmall Party of the Enemy, diſguis'd like Market-men, whom they conceal'd in the Dean's Houſe. The Mayor of Hull got Intimation of the Plot, and communicated it to the Governor of Lincoln, who ſeiz'd the the two Purefoys. However, the diſguis'd Cavaliers ſally'd out of the Dean's Houſe into the Town, and endeavour'd to ſeize the Magazine and maſter the main Guard till one Cannon only was fir'd upon them, which kill'd ſeveral of them, and the reſt threw down their Arms. The Forces from Newark hearing the Plot was diſcover'd made their Retreat. Not long after the Lord Willoughby of Parham with a Party of Horſe and Dragoons took Gainsborough, and made the Earl of Kingſton, Sir Jervaſe Scroop, and ſeveral other Gentlemen and Officers Priſoners, together with 250 common Soldiers. He found Treaſure in the Earl's Houſe, which held out a whole Day after the Town was taken. The Lord Willoughby underſtanding the King's Forces were gathering from Newark and other Places to recover Gainsborough, ſent away the Earl of Kingſton in a Pinnace to Hull, which a Party of Royaliſts on the Trent ſide ſpying they diſcharg'd their Muskets at her, and kill'd the Earl of Kingſton and his Man Savil in the Cabbin. The Pinnace got clear and paſt on to Hull. Colonel Cromwel hearing that the Lord Willoughby had taken Gainsborough, drew that way to reinforce him, and in his March met with Colonel Cavendiſh with a Party of the Earl of Newcaſtle's Army, which he entirely defeated, and ſlew the Colonel. He gives this Account of the Action himſelf in a Letter dated July 31.

" I march'd after the taking of Burleigh to " Grantham, and was join'd by the Lincolneers " at North Scarles, 10 Miles from Gainsborough. About a Mile and half from the Town " we met the Forlorn of the Enemy, who drove " a Troop of our Dragoons back to their main " Body. We advanc'd and came to the Bottom " of a ſteep Hill, which we could not well get " up but by ſome Tracts, and the Body of the " Enemy endeavour'd to hinder us, but we prevail'd and gain'd the Top of it. This was " done by the Lincolneers, who had the Van-" Guard. A great Body of the Enemy's Horſe " fac'd us there, at about a Muſket Shot diſtance, and a good Reſerve of a full Regiment " of Horſe behind it. We did what we could to " put our Men in good Order, and the Enemy " advanced towards us to prevent it and take us " at a Diſadvantage, but in ſuch Order as we " were we charg'd their great Body, I having " the right Wing: We came up Horſe to Horſe, " where we diſputed a pretty while with our " Swords and Piſtols, all keeping cloſe Order ſo " that one could not break the other. At laſt " the Enemy ſhrinking a little our Men ſoon " perceiv'd it, preſt in upon them and routed " their whole Body, ſome flying on one ſide " and others on the other of the Enemy's Re-" ſerve. Our Men purſu'd them with good " Execution about 6 Miles. I perceiving the " Reſerve ſtill unbroken kept back my Major " Whaley from the Purſuit, and with my own " Troop and two Troops more of my Regiment " we got into a Body. In this Reſerve was Ge-" neral Cavendiſh, who one while fac'd me, " another while fac'd four of the Lincoln Troops, " which were all of ours that engag'd the Re-" ſerve, the reſt being in Purſuit of thoſe who " fled. General Cavendiſh charg'd the Lin-" colneers and routed them. Immediately I " fell on his Rear with my three Troops, which " did ſo aſtoniſh him that he gave over the " Chaſe, and would have deliver'd himſelf " from me, but I preſſing on forc'd him down " a Hill, and below it drove the General and " ſome of his Soldiers into a Quagmire, where " my Captain Lieutenant ſlew him with a " Thruſt under his ſhort Ribs. The reſt " of the Body was wholly routed, not one " Man ſtaying on the Place." I have repeated Cromwel's own Words, to ſhew the unparallel'd Falſities in Echard's Account of this gallant Action. Colonel Bury had given Colonel Cavendiſh Quarter, and he was ſlain in cold Blood, throwing the Blood running from his Wounds in his Enemies Faces, like the Cannibal in Montaigne. Neither Echard nor his Original, knew that this had more of the Mamaluke and the Tartar in it than the Hero.

A. D. 1643.

This Victory was more than over-ballanc'd on the King's Side, by the Defeat of the Lord Fairfax on Atherton Moor, where he was engaged by the Earl of Newcaſtle, who was much Superior to him in Number. He had 500 Men kill'd. Many Priſoners and Pieces of Ordnance were taken by the Royaliſts. The Lord Fairfax with his ſhatter'd Forces retreated to Bradford, and thence to Leeds, the Earl of Newcaſtle purſuing him. At Leeds his Lordſhip heard of Hotham's Conſpiracy to betray Hull, he repair'd thither, and in his Paſſage was ſtopt at Selby by a Party of the Earl of Newcaſtle's Army, whom Sir Thomas Fairfax's Son held in Play, while his Father and his Attendants paſt the River. In this Skirmiſh Sir Thomas was ſhot in his Arm, and though he loſt much Blood he kept a Horſeback 20 Hours after; his Lady, who would accompany him, was taken in the Rout at Atherton riding behind Mr. William Hill an Officer, and his Daughter, not above 5 Years old, ſhe who was afterwards Dutcheſs of Buckingham, was alſo in the Retreat with him, riding in his Maid's Lap. Sir Thomas paſt the Trent and went to Barton, but had not been there a Quarter of an Hour before the Enemy came up with him. However, he made a ſhift to get a Ship-board under the Security of the Fire from the Ships Ordnance, and croſſing the Humber arriv'd at Hull, whether the Earl of Newcaſtle ſent his Lady in his own Coach with a Guard of Horſe, which Sir Thomas Fairfax ſays himſelf, Gain'd him more Reputation than he could have got by detaining a Lady Priſoner.

Memorial, p. 58.

The Earl of Newcaſtle being thus Maſter of the Field came before Gainsborough with 6000 Horſe and Foot, and having batter'd the Town with his Artillery, the Lord Willoughby ſurrender'd it on Terms to march with Bag and Baggage to Lincoln, whether the Earl of Newcaſtle follow'd him, had the Gates open'd to him, and plac'd a Garriſon there for the King.

Gainsborough retaken, and Lincoln by the Earl of Newcaſtle.

The Lord Fairfax was made Governor of Hull, and the Earl of Newcaſtle came before it with an Army of 16000 Horſe and Foot, Sir Thomas Fairfax had got together about 1500 Foot and 700 Horſe, with which he was poſted at Beverley, while the Earl of Newcaſtle was in Lincolnſhire, and with that little Body he was ſo troubleſome to the Garriſon and Neighbourhood of York, that the Enemy ſent for the Earl of Newcaſtle to return into Yorkſhire, though his Orders were to take in Boſton, from thence to enter the aſſociated Counties, to march through Eſſex to London, and block it up on that Side, while the King, who was Superior to Eſſex in Number, advanced, and did the ſame on Middleſex ſide. But Newcaſtle return'd to York and commenc'd the Siege of Hull, into which Sir Thomas Fairfax had thrown himſelf upon his Approach towards Beverley, though with ſome Difficulty. The Lord Newcaſtle laid down at a great Diſtance from Hull, the Sluices being let down, and the Country drown'd. Yet upon a Bank which was the Highway he approach'd ſo near as to ſhoot Cannon-ſhot at random into the Town, and for the moſt part hot Bullets, but by the Diligence and Care of the Governor, who caus'd

A. D. 1643. every Inhabitant to watch his own Houſe the Danger was prevented. Sir Thomas Fairfax's Horſe being uſeleſs in the Town he was ſent over with them into Lincolnſhire, to join the Earl of Mancheſter's Forces, and was receiv'd at his Landing by Major General Cromwel. Sir John Henderſon had got together a little Army of near 6000 Men, drawn out of the Garriſons of Newark, Gainsborough, Lincoln, moſt of them Cavalry. The Earl of Mancheſter's Troops were fuller though not ſo many in Number, and he led them on ſinging of Pſalms. Quarter Maſter General Vermuyden had the Forlorn, with 5 Troops of Horſe, and Colonel Cromwel the Van, ſeconded by Sir Thomas Fairfax. The Royaliſts Word was Newcaſtle, the Parliamentarians Truth and Peace, and they engaged near Horn Caſtle in Lincolnſhire the 19th of October. Vermeyden and the Dragoons gave the firſt Charge, and then Major General Cromwel charg'd with the Horſe, having received the firſt Fire from the Enemy's Dragoons. They gave him a ſecond Salutation within half Piſtol Shot. His Horſe was kill'd and fell down upon him, and as he roſe he was knock'd down again by the Gentleman who charg'd him, ſuppos'd to be Sir Ingram Hopton, but he got up and recover'd a poor Horſe in a Soldier's Hand and ſo mounted again. The Van of the Royaliſts Horſe being beaten back upon their Foot put them into Diſorder, and Mancheſter's Troops taking that Advantage fell in upon them and put them to flight, leaving their Dragoons who were now on foot behind them. Thus being totally routed Mancheſter's Men had the Purſuit, and did Execution upon them for ſeveral Miles. The Earl of Mancheſter's Foot did not come up till after the Horſe had done the Buſineſs. The Number of the Royaliſts ſlain were about 1500, among whom were Sir Ingram Hopton, Sir George Bolles, Lieutenant Colonel Markham, and other Officers. On the Parliament Side very few were kill'd, and none of Note. The Royaliſts had no Time to rally, being purſu'd as far as Lincoln. Neither were they ſuffer'd to reſt there, the Earl of Mancheſter following them thither the next Day, and finding them at work in fortifying the Cloſe he ſummon'd them to ſurrender, which they refuſing, he attack'd them gallantly with Horſe and Foot and carry'd the Place by Storm with very little Loſs. He found there 2500 Arms, 30 Colours, and 3 Pieces of Cannon; and theſe Succeſſes ſo ſoon one after another, gave a Check to the Marquis of Newcaſtle, as he is now to be call'd, whoſe Army was more terrible by the Noiſe they made than by their Actions. A few Days before this Victory the Earl of Mancheſter ſeiz'd the Town of Old Lynne, and planting Ordnance there much annoy'd the new Town: He made two Approaches, one by the Cauſeway that leads to the South, the other to the Eaſt Gate. The Beſieged ſally'd upon him and fir'd two Houſes in Gawood, intending to deſtroy the whole Town that he might not have Quarters there, but that Party was beaten back and the reſt of the Houſes preſerv'd. The Beſiegers ſummon'd in Pioneers from the Neighbourhood, and by Degrees brought their Approaches within half Musket ſhot, and had begun a Battery near that End of the Town next the Sea, reſolving to ſtorm it by Land and by Water, Boats and Ladders being provided for that purpoſe, which the Beſieged perceiving, they ſent to deſire a Parley, and a Treaty was agreed on, to be manag'd by eight Perſons of a Side: For the Earl of Mancheſter were Sir John Palgrave, Colonel Ruſſell, Colonel Walton, Mr. Philip Calthorp, Mr. John Pickering, Mr. Gregory Goſſet, Mr. John Spelman, and Mr. William Good. For the Town were Sir Hammond L'Eſtrange, Sir Richard Hovil, Mr. Clinch, Mr. Dereham, Mr. Pallet, Recorder, Mr. Hudſon, the Mayor elect, Mr. Leek, and Mr. Kirby. The Terms were ſoon concluded. They were honourable, and honourably obſerv'd. His Lordſhip took Poſſeſſion of the Place the ſame Night, and detach'd 500 Men to reinforce the Garriſon of Hull. But Care not having been taken in the Articles of Lynne to provide for Reparation of Damages to ſuch well affected Perſons in the Town as had been damnify'd by the Cavaliers, the Parliament impower'd Colonel Walton, who was made Governor of Lynne to examine into thoſe Damages and appoint Reparation accordingly.

Lynne taken.

We left the Marquis of Newcaſtle in a vain Enterprize againſt Hull; he lay near a Month about the Place without making any conſiderable Approach, and the Lord Fairfax the Governor having receiv'd a Reinforcement, made a Sally out of the Town on the Marquis's Trenches, the very ſame Day that Sir John Henderſon was routed at Newcaſtle. The Lord Newcaſtle drew out moſt Part of his Army to relieve them, but the Lord Fairfax's Men charg'd them ſo reſolutely that they poſſeſt themſelves of his Cannon, and purſuing their Advantages put the Enemy to a total Rout, upon which he rais'd the Siege and return'd again to York. Theſe are the Actions of which the Lord Clarendon ſays, Few Days paſt without Blows between Newcaſtle and Fairfax, in which the Parliament Forces had uſually the worſt. And to ſhew his Impartiality further, he ſays not a Syllable of the Rout at Horn Caſtle, nor of the Marquis of Newcaſtle's being driven from before Hull, which Mr. Archdeacon phraſes very finically, The Lord Newcaſtle thought it neceſſary to withdraw. Thus it is through both of their Hiſtories, the Cavaliers are always charging firſt. If the Parliamentarians are worſted they run, if the Royaliſts they withdraw, which is extreamly puerile, and by no means the Mark of Talents proper for Hiſtory.

Marquis of Newcaſtle driven away from before Hull.

The Succeſs of the Parliaments Forces in Yorkſhire and Lincolnſhire, was abundantly made up to the King by the taking of the moſt important Place in England, the City of London only excepted, for Prince Rupert with an Army of 20000 Horſe and Foot coming before Briſtol, and the Summons being refus'd, laid Siege to it, and the next Day gave a fierce Aſſault, but was beaten off. He continu'd his Attacks with great Reſolution, and was as reſolutedly reſiſted, till Colonel Waſhington gain'd the Outworks, and made a Breach in the Walls, which Captain Langrige was to have ſecur'd with his Troop of Horſe, but there was ſome Failure in that Service, and Colonel Fiennes the Governor ſubmitted to a Parley, which brought on a Treaty that was ſoon concluded, and the City ſurrender'd on Articles, The Officers to march out with full Arms, Horſes, Bag and Baggage, the Foot Soldiers without their Arms, the Troopers with their Horſes and Swords, the Parliaments Friends in the City to have free Liberty, with their Wives, Families, Goods, Bag and Baggage, to depart the Town with the Governor and Forces, all the Citizens to be ſecur'd from Plundering and all other Violence. Not one of which Articles was kept, but all of them broken in the moſt outragious and ſcandalous Manner, Colonel Fiennes was try'd and condemn'd by a Council of War, but afterwards repriev'd, and ſerv'd no more in the Army. Prince Rupert came before the City on the Eve of St. James, the great Briſtol taken by Prince Rupert.

A. D. 1643. Fair Day, and had it ſurrender'd the 27th of July.

Some Days before this Sir William Waller had beaten up the Cavalier Quarters at Wells, and diſpers'd Sir James Hamilton's Regiment, which ſo provok'd the Royaliſts, that they gather'd what Forces they had in thoſe Parts together in a Body and reſolv'd to drive Sir William out of Bath. He order'd Major Dowel with 300 Horſe and Foot to ſecure the Paſs at Ford Bridge, but he was beaten off, 10 of his Men kill'd, and two Hammer Pieces taken. On the 4th of July Waller drew out his Forces upon Landſdown expecting the Enemy, who advanc'd the next Day. Sir Arthur Haſlerigge, Colonel Carr, Major Dowel and Captain Butler, charg'd them with 400 Horſe, but were gallantly receiv'd, and forc'd to retreat, though in good Order, till they were relieved by Colonel Burghill, between whom and the Royaliſts the Fight was maintain'd for two Hours, and then the Parliaments Foot growing weary a Supply was ſent, which conſiſting of new rais'd Men preſently gave ground, and Colonel Burghill was ſhot through his right Arm. The King's Party charg'd up very furiouſly, which prov'd to the Advantage of the Parliament's, for now both Armies being on the Plain, and Waller exceeding the Cavaliers in Horſe as much as they exceeded him in Foot, had the better Opportunity of fighting. The Battle grew hot on both Sides, and continu'd ſo many Hours till Night parted them, each ſide pretending to the Honour of a Victory, which Echard, after his uſual Way, puts out of all Doubt; and if we will not allow him ſuch Victories his Hiſtory will be the moſt barren of Triumphs of any that ever was written. There's a Trophy erected on Landſdown, a Mile from Bath, in Honour of that brave Gentleman Sir Bevil Greenvile of Cornwal, who was ſlain in this Fight, and thoſe of his Poſterity who have been ennobled have taken their Title of Viſcount or Baron from this Landſdown, in Remembrance of the Glory their Anceſtor acquir'd here. On the King's Side were alſo kill'd Lieutenant Colonel Ward, and Major Lower. On the Parliament's Side Major Straughan a Scots Gentleman, a Lieutenant and two Cornets. The Number of the Slain is ſo variouſly reported that there is no fixing it. Waller thought himſelf ſo much a Victor, that having refreſh'd his Men a Day or two at Bath, he follow'd the King's Forces to the Devizes, where Sir Ralph Hopton ſhut himſelf up with the Foot, no great Sign that he was Victorious at Landſdown, while Prince Maurice and the Marquis of Hertford carry'd away moſt of the Horſe to Oxford. Waller made an Aſſault upon the Town, and Sir Ralph deſir'd a Parley and Ceſſation for two Hours, but Sir William Waller's Terms not being accepted of, both Sides again took to their Arms, and Waller was preparing for a general Aſſault when he heard that the Lord Wilmot and the Earl of Carnarvon with 2000 Horſe, were advanc'd within 2 or 3 Miles of the Devizes, upon which, inſtead of keeping his Ground, which was advantagious againſt Cavalry, he ſuddenly drew off July 13th, without Drum or Trumpet to Roundway Down, where his Horſe, raſhly led on by Sir Arthur Haſlerigge, gallop'd up Hill, leaving the Foot to be attack'd by Sir Ralph Hopton. Haſlerigge charg'd the Cavaliers in a diſorderly Manner, and was conſequently put to a diſorderly Retreat, yet with the Help of their Reſerve his Troops rally'd and ſtood a ſecond Charge, but were then totally routed. Wallers's Foot made a better Reſiſtance, but the Lord Wilmot's Horſe coming upon them they were intirely defeated, flung down their Arms and fled. The King's Forces took 4 Pieces of Cannon, abundance of Arms, and many Priſoners, Sir William Waller, Sir Arthur Haſlerigge, Colonel Popham, Colonel Strode, and other Commanders, eſcap'd to Briſtol, 25 Miles off, where they could not ſtay long, for that City was ſurrender'd a Fortnight after. Waller repair'd to London, and notwithſtanding this Diſaſter, owing chiefly to ill Conduct, he was highly carreſs'd, and Means concerted to raiſe him another Army.

In this Confuſion of Affairs Civil and Military, 'tis impoſſible to obſerve the due Order of Things and Times. While the one Party is making War with Succeſs in the North of England, the other does the like in the Weſt. Four or five Towns are beſieging at once by both Sides; the Parliament are buſy'd in Debates and Counſels at Weſtminſter, the ſame are the King and Court at Oxford, we are therefore compell'd to antedate and poſtpone Events, as it ſerves beſt to clear Matters in the ſeveral Parts of the Kingdom where they happen'd. The Parliament's Affairs are repreſented by Clarendon, Warwick, Echard, and that Sort of Writers, as in a deſperate Condition, though they themſelves were far from any ſuch Apprehenſions, and knowing that the Scots were preparing to march an Army to their Aſſiſtance, the Confidence of the Cavaliers was more ridiculous than terrible to them, which Confidence they did not only mix with their Mirth over their Cups, but with their Devotion, and thank'd God for Victories they either never obtained, or had at the ſame time Loſſes which over ballanc'd them.

Earl of Eſſex writes to the Parl. about Peace.

The Parliament Army under the Earl of Eſſex had ſuffer'd much by Sickneſs, which had leſſen'd their Number, and Deſertion had not a little thin'd the Companies and Regiments, the Soldiers being diſguſted that they were reſtrain'd from plundering Reading, and had not received the 12 Shillings a Man they were promis'd in lieu of it. Their uſual Pay alſo did not come ſo regularly as at firſt, which putting them into an ill Humour, one may be ſure their General was not in a good one. He wrote a Letter to the Parliament from Great Brickhill, wherein he propos'd to ſend to his Majeſty to have Peace, and mention'd ſome of the Terms which Echard conceals, To bring the chief Delinquents to trial for having brought all this Miſchief to both Kingdoms, to have Religion, Laws and Liberties ſettl'd, &c. Terms which every Man in his Wits would have fallen in with. And in ſuch Caſe the Author of the Hiſtory of the Rebellion muſt have been brought to Trial, being always excepted in the Parliament's Indemnities as a chief Delinquent, and he has endeavour'd to take his Revenge of them in his Hiſtory. In caſe the King wou'd not comply with this, the Lord General deſir'd he might be mov'd to name a Day and Place for a Battle to decide the Matter at once, and put an End to the Cries of the poor People which are infinite. The Parliament return'd for Anſwer, "The "King by his laſt Proclamation, publiſh'd in the "Height of Exultation for the taking of Briſtol, "had caſt them out of his Protection, and there- "by made them uncapable to treat till that "Proclamation be recall'd. And that by their "late Covenant they were bound never to lay "down Arms ſo long as Papiſts, now in open "War againſt them, ſhall by Force be protect- "ed from Parliamentary Juſtice." They aſſur'd him of ſpeedy Recruits both of Men and Money, which they perform'd, and in about a Month's Time he muſter'd an Army of 15000 Men on Hounſlow Heath.

A. D. 1643. The Lords and Commons taking into Conſideration the Inconveniences which attended the Want of a Great Seal, paſs'd an Ordinance for making a new one, the Lord Littleton having, contrary to the Truſt repos'd in him and the Duty of his Place, ſecretly and perfidiouſly convey'd it away. The Commiſſioners appointed for keeping of this new Seal, were Henry Earl of Kent, Oliver Earl of Bolingbroke, Oliver St. John, Eſq; John Wylde, Eſq; Serjeant at Law, whom the Earl of Clarendon calls infamous, Samuel Brown, Eſq; and Edmund Prideaux, Eſq;

Book of Sports. The Parliament had ſome Time before paſs'd an Ordinance for burning the Book of Sports by the Hangman, and all Perſons who had thoſe impious Books, which injoin'd the Profanation of the Lord's Day, were order'd to bring them in to the Sheriffs of London and Middleſex, that they may be burned accordingly.

Printing. The Licentiouſneſs of Pamphlets requir'd the Wiſdom and Authority of the Parliament to reſtrain it. One Saltmarſh, a Miniſter, had ſaid in a Book of his, That all Means ſhould be uſed to keep the King and People from a ſudden Union: If the King would not grant their Demands, he ſhould be ſet aſide, and the Crown put upon another Head. Exceptions being taken againſt this in the Houſe of Commons, Mr. Henry Martin ſaid, I ſee no Reaſon to condemn Mr. Saltmarſh; it is better one Family ſhould be deſtroy'd than many. Sir Nevil Pool mov'd that Mr. Martin might explain himſelf, and he boldly anſwer'd, I mean the King and his Children. Upon which ſome Members upbraided him with his Amours, and ſeveral ſpoke ſharply againſt him, ſo he was committed to the Tower, but ſoon after releas'd, and re-admitted to his Seat in Parliament. However an Ordinance paſs'd to reſtrain the Licence of the Preſs, by which the following Licenſers were appointed in the ſeveral Faculties.

I mention no more of the 120 Divines, for theſe eminent Names will be ſufficient to prove that human Nature is not capable of a greater Frailty than this Aſperſion of the Earl of Clarendon's: Some of them were INFAMOUS in their Lives and Converſations, and moſt of them of very MEAN PARTS, if not of ſcandalous Ignorance, and of no other Reputation than of Malice to the Church. An Author capable of ſaying that, one may modeſtly ſay, is incapable of writing a true Hiſtory. Dr. Calamy reflects upon it very juſtly: "This is a very heavy "Charge upon ſuch a Body of Men as they were. "Tho' my Lord Clarendon was undoubtedly a "very great Man, yet this Cenſure won't recom-"mend his Hiſtory to Poſterity, who will be "hard put to it to find Men of more exemplary "Piety, and more eminent Miniſterial Abilities "among their Progenitors in any Age, than thoſe "were whom he endeavours at any rate to ex-"poſe. Who can give Credit to him as an Hi-"ſtorian, who ſhall repreſent ſuch Men as Dr. "Twiſſe, Biſhop Reynolds, Dr. Arrowſmith, "Dr. Tuckney, Dr. Lightfoot, Mr. Gataker, &c. "as Men of ſcandalous Ignorance," I am glad this groundleſs Reflection, ſo defil'd with Scandal, drop'd from the Pen of the Hiſtorian, it being a ſtrong Confirmation of the Liberty he took in the abuſive Part of his Characters in other Places, and having given Mr. Echard himſelf an Opportunity to own he is aſham'd of it, the Lord Clarendon perhaps is too ſevere. Every one of the Aſſembly-Men had four Shillings a Day allow'd for their Subſiſtence in London. When they met firſt July 1. Dr. Twiſſe preach'd the Sermon, and was choſen Prolocutor. He was look'd upon as a Divine the moſt able in Controverſy of any of his Time. Mr Roborough and Mr. Adoniram Byfield were appointed Scribes and Notaries, and the good Succeſs of the Synod was pray'd for by the City Miniſters. Their Place of Meeting was the Jeruſalem Chamber

A. D. 1643.

Chamber in the Deans Lodgings, Weſtminſter, and one of their firſt publick Acts was a Petition to both Houſes for a Faſt, to which the Parliament conſented, and Mr. Bowles and Mr. Newcomen preach'd before them. The King publiſh'd a Proclamation to countermand their Meeting, which had no other Effect, than to keep out Dr. Holdſworth, Dr. Hammond, Archbiſhop Uſher, Biſhop Brownrigg, Biſhop Weſtfield, Biſhop Prideaux, Dr. Sanderſon, Dr. Hacket, all excellent Men, and their Abſence was a great Loſs to the Aſſembly. Thoſe who ſat did not anſwer the general Expectation of the People. Dr. Calamy tells us, "They met with many "Difficulties. They were not only embarraſs'd "by the Diſſenting Brethren, but by the learn-"ed Mr. Selden, who often employed his un-"common Learning rather to perplex than clear "Matters that came before them." At which Mr. Archdeacon rejoices extreamly. After the Faſt was ſolemniz'd the Synod wrote Letters to the Reform'd Churches abroad, wherein ſpeaking of their Deſire for a farther Reformation in England, and the War that was rais'd to prevent it; they ſay, We doubt not but the ſaid Reports of the Miſeries under which the Church and Kingdom of England do bleed, and wherewith we are all ready to be ſwallow'd up, the Cup which the Righteous Lord hath given us to drink, is long ſince come to your Ears, and it is probable that the ſame Inſtruments of Satan and Antichriſt have endeavoured by their Emiſſaries to preſent us as Black as may be amongſt your ſelves, who by Falſhood and Lies endeavour every where to put fair Gloſſes upon their own bloody Deſign. The Hiſtory of the Rebellion is an intire Collection of thoſe Gloſſes. And to reproach our Struglings after a more thorough Reformation of Religion in the Church of England, according to the Word of God, and our juſt Defence of our Lives, Liberties and Religion, againſt their own cruel and unjuſt Violences. Again, How great a Hand this treacherous and bloody Generation amongſt us have long had in the Miſeries of other Reform'd Churches, in the Deſtruction of the Palatinate, and in the Betraying and Loſs of Rochelle; and how by ſeeming Overtures of Embaſſies and Treaties for their Relief, they have fomented, combin'd and increas'd their Calamities, is ſo well known by you all, and miſerably felt by ſome of your ſelves, that we need not ſpeak any Thing of them; and we ſuppoſe their inveterate Hatred againſt you all is ſufficiently manifeſted, in that Multitudes of them have refus'd to acknowledge any of you for Churches of Chriſt, becauſe you are not Prelatical, and thereby, as they conceive, want a lawful Vocation of Miniſters, &c. The Lord Clarendon particularly refus'd to acknowledge the French Proteſtants to be a Church, and was one of the Counſellors who diſſwaded King Charles the Second from going to the Reform'd Church at Charenton when he was in France. Theſe Letters were addreſs'd to The Reverend and Learned Paſtors and Elders of the Claſſes and Churches of the Province of Zealand, our much honoured Brethren. The ſame to thoſe of Holland, Eaſt Holland, Guelderland, Overyſſel, Utrecht, Frieſland and Groningen. To the Reverend and Learned Paſtors and Elders of the Church in the City and Republick of Geneva, our much honoured Brethren. The ſame to the Churches of Bern, Zurich, Baſil, Schaffhauſen. To the Reverend and Learned Paſtors and Elders of the Church at Paris, our much honoured Brethren. To the Reverend and Learned Paſtors and Elders of the Claſſes and Churches of Heſſen, our much honoured Brethren. The ſame to thoſe of Anhalt. And laſtly, To the Reverend and Learned Paſtors and Elders of the Churches of Hanaw, our moſt honoured Brethren. In theſe populous and potent Republicks and Principalities, there may by a modeſt Computation be about ſeven Millions of Souls. The Presbyterians of Bohemia, Tranſylvania, Poland, Sileſia, and Auſtria, and other Proteſtant Principalities and Cities of Germany were not written to. And the whole Body of the Presbyterians in England, Scotland, and Ireland, which at that Time was the Generality of the Britiſh Nation, or at leaſt was pretended ſo to be, even according to Echard, are not number'd. All theſe Nations in Mr. Archdeacon's Opinion, are Schiſmatical, and only thoſe of the Church of England, who thought and ſaid as Laud did, Orthodox, though they were not one in Twenty of thoſe Bodies of People. He tells us further, the King publiſh'd a Collection of ſeven Petitions to the Parliament, ſign'd by 482 Lords and Knights, 1740 Eſquires and Gentry, all of Note, 631 Doctors and Divines, I wonder they were not 6000, and no leſs than 44599 Freeholders of Name and Note, for the Preſervation of Biſhops and the Common Prayer. This is extreamly diverting, for the Falſity of it ſtands in the Front. He owns there were but ſeven Petitions, and we will ſuppoſe they came from ſeven of the largeſt Counties in England. There muſt then be to every one of theſe Counties 70 Lords and Knights, 250 Eſquires and Gentlemen, and 6000 Freeholders, all Men of good Name and Note, and not one Presbyterian among them. I doubt not the Reader will remember this, I was drawn into the Digreſſion by the Simplicity of the Calculation.

Their Letter to the Reform'd Churches.

Reform'd Churches.

After ſome Time of Sitting the Aſſembly of Divines preſented to the Parliament a Confeſſion of Faith, a larger and ſhorter Catechiſm, a Directory for the publick Worſhip, &c. of which ſome further mention will be made. The Annotations on the Bible aſcrib'd to this Synod are not their Work, but ſome of their Members aſſiſted in it, as Dr. Gouge, Dr. Reynolds, and the very Learned Gataker, who, ſays Dr. Calamy, is exceeded by no Commentator antient or modern.

Aſſembly of Divines.

After the taking of Briſtol, and his Majeſty's other Succeſſes in the Weſt, there were two Things publiſh'd at Oxford, A Form of Prayer for a Thankſgiving, and a Declaration addreſs'd to all his loving Subjects. There was alſo a Form of Prayer for the Victory in the North, I ſuppoſe at Atherton Moor, without taking any Notice of the Routs at Horncaſtle, and near Gainsborough, of the Loſs of Lincoln and Lynne, and of the Marquis of Newcaſtle's being driven off from Hull. Having ſpoken in their Form of Prayer of the notable Victory over the Rebels in the North, for they call Names in their Prayers, they ſay, O Lord, though our Sins cry loud hear them not, but look to the RIGHTEOUSNESS of our CAUSE, ſee the Seamleſs Coat of thy Son torn, the Throne of thine Anointed trampled upon, thy Church invaded by Sacrilege, and thy People miſerably deceiv'd with Lies. It is not to be repeated. Paganiſm has nothing ſo profane. See it, O God, as ſee it thou doſt, and vindicate what thou ſeeſt upon the Heads of thoſe who lead theſe Wretches. They call Names again, and the ſame Temper, the ſame Humility and Sincerity, are in all their Thankſgivings. The Declaration, if you can believe the Archdeacon, was much magnify'd as a moſt gracious and undeniable Inſtance of his Majeſty's Clemency and Juſtice, wherein he expreſs'd

King's Declaration and Form of Prayer.

A. D. 1643. preſs'd himſelf an Indulgent Father to the moſt Diſobedient Children. We ſhall ſee that preſently. He is pleas'd to leave the World to judge, Whether thoſe Men who are profeſt Enemies to the Eſtabliſh'd Church, who perſecute the Learned, Orthodox Miniſters, who vilify the Common Prayer, can be good Proteſtants; and whether they ought to ſuffer their Country to be waſted and ruin'd by the Malice and Cunning of thoſe State Impoſtors, who under Pretence of Reformation would introduce whatever is Monſtrous and Unnatural both in Religion and Policy, and therefore he requires Money, Plate, Men, Arms and Horſe, which may eſtabliſh a firm Peace. I have already hinted, that it is very eaſy to diſtinguiſh the Sophiſtry from the Argument in theſe Papers. Is any Thing more natural to Mankind than the Deſire of Liberty? Is any Thing more monſtrous than Tyranny and Idolatry? As to Malice, Cunning, State Impoſtors, and the like, they are Words to which no Ideas are annex'd, for we can have no Conception of the Malice of a Parliament, the Cunning of a Parliament, the Impoſture of a Parliament. One cannot ſuppoſe that theſe Papers were read any where, but in the King's Quarters, and where he could take the Money if it was not given him. The Archdeacon, who is the conſtant Teller in both Houſes of Parliament, aſſures us, there were but five Peers in the Upper Houſe who had any Inclination to continue the War. There was not one Lord nor Commoner at that Time, who was not for Peace on Terms of Security againſt future Oppreſſion. The Lords drew up Propoſitions which were very ſecure and good Grounds to treat upon, To Disband both Armies, to ſettle Religion by a Synod, and the Militia by a Bill, to the Satisfaction of King and Parliament, to puniſh Delinquents, and paſs a general Pardon. The Commons were not ſo forward to treat as the Lords. But after a VAST Debate, ſays Mr. Archdeacon, who is a fine Linguiſt, it was carry'd by 29 Votes. The Lord Mayor, Aldermen, and Common Council, petition'd againſt the Treaty, and expreſt themſelves ſo zealouſly for a vigorous Proſecution of the War, that the Houſe of Commons were inſpir'd with the ſame Zeal, gave the City Thanks for their Petition, Advice and Courage, and rejected the Propoſitions. The ſober Part of the City, according to Echard, diſcover'd great Averſion to this Petition, and to prove it, he brings out his ſober People, the Wives of the moſt ſubſtantial Citizens gather'd together in a tumultuous Manner, and in the ſame Manner they ran to the Parliament Houſe, crying out in the Sobriety of their Spirits, Peace, Peace. A very good Word in its right Conſtruction; but when by Peace is only meant the Carrying on of wicked Deſigns without Oppoſition, it is the worſt one can make uſe of. On the Change of the Miniſtry in the Days of Sacheverel and Harley, the Cry was Peace, Peace; and what was the wicked Deſign, but to break the Grand Alliance, to reſtore the exorbitant Power of France, to bring in the Pretender, and introduce Popery and Slavery? And what did theſe ſober Women mean by bawling out Peace, Peace, at this Juncture, but to reſtore the King to the Exerciſe of that abſolute Power to which he laid Claim before the Parliament met, and which is ſtill meant by the LAW, the LAWS OF THE LAND, THE KNOWN LAWS, &c. in Proclamations, Declarations, Meſſages and Anſwers. Theſe ſober, ſubſtantial Gentlewomen cry'd out alſo, Give us the TRAYTORS that we may tear them to Pieces. Give us that Dog PYM. It is really true, the Reverend Hiſtorian does ſay, They were of the ſober Party, and the Wives of the moſt wealthy Citizens, but after the firing of ſome Powder, and a little Drubbing from the Soldiers, they grew ſtill ſoberer, and all that had Houſes to go to return'd home. Theſe Ladies made the greateſt Army that ever appear'd in the City on that Side, which Mr. Archdeacon has happily eſpous'd. A. D. 1643.

Though his Account of the Siege of Glouceſter is as frail as his other Accounts, yet there being ſome pleaſant Things in it they muſt not eſcape us, after we have told the Fact as it was. On the 10th of Auguſt his Majeſty having march'd from Oxford to Briſtol came back and fac'd Glouceſter with 6000 Horſe and Foot in Tredworth Field, about a Quarter of a Mile off the Town, and about 2000 more fac'd it in Walham within Cannon Shot, the Main of the Army not being yet come up. His Majeſty ſent two Heralds at Arms with a Summons, promiſing to pardon the Citizens and the Soldiers, if they would ſubmit, and threatning all Calamities and Miſeries if they would not. Colonel Maſſey the Governor, with the Conſent of the Mayor and Aldermen, return'd the following Anſwer: Siege of Glouceſter.

WE the Inhabitants, Magiſtrates, Officers and Soldiers, within this Garriſon of Glouceſter, return our humble Anſwer, that we do keep this City according to our Oath and Allegiance to, and for the Uſe of his Majeſty and his Royal Poſterity, and do accordingly conceive our ſelves wholly bound to obey the Commands of his Majeſty, ſignify'd by both Houſes of Parliament, and are reſolv'd ſo by God's Help to keep this City accordingly. Sign'd,

This Anſwer was ſent by Major Pudſey and one Citizen, who preſented it to the King, and he receiv'd it without expreſſing either Choler or Indignation, though he ſeem'd to wonder at their great Confidence, and from what Hope of Relief it ſhould proceed, uſing theſe Words before the Meſſengers, Waller is extinct, and Eſſex cannot come. But Eſſex did come, and Waller was ſo far from being extinct, that he extinguiſh'd the King's Army at Alresford in Hampſhire ſome Months after. The Pleaſantry of Echard's Story is this: There return'd two Citizens from the Town with lean, pale and ugly Viſages, and in a Garb ſo ſtrange and unuſual that at once gave Mirth to the moſt ſevere Countenances. A Flouriſh of the Lord Clarendon's. And Sadneſs to the moſt chearful Hearts. Theſe without any Marks of Duty or good Manners, in a pert, ſhrill, fearleſs Tone, ſaid, They brought an Anſwer from the godly City of Glouceſter. Which is falſe, the Word Godly being not once named in their Anſwer. Major Pudſey who brought it, behav'd very gallantly in this Siege, and ſhew'd it was much eaſier to lampoon him than to beat him. He proceeds, this Indignity prompted Reſolutions of Revenge, which no doubt the Cavaliers would have taken if they could. It was on the other Side reſolv'd by the Governor and Council of War, that the whole Suburbs of the City, which were a third Part of it, ſhould be demoliſh'd, and 241 Houſes were accordingly burnt, pull'd down, and utterly deſtroy'd, beſides Barns, Stables, Out-houſes,

A. D. 1643. in all to the Value of 26000 Pounds, which was done the Night before the Cavaliers began their Attacks. The King's head Quarters were at Matſon on the Eaſt Side of the Town. Col. Maſſey order'd the Cannon on the Pen at Weſtgate to fire on the Body of Horſe in Walham, and oblig'd them to retire with Loſs. Lieutenant-Colonel Matthews, Capt. White, Capt. Blunt. Capt, Pury the younger, and Capt. Lieutenant Harcus, made a Sally at the North-gate, fell upon a Party at Watton, and brought 10 Priſoners into the Town. Soon after Capt. Nelmes ſally'd out at the ſame Gate towards Burnwood, and did ſome Execution; which Sallies gave the Beſiegers to underſtand, that they were not like to get Poſſeſſion of the Town eaſily. As ſoon as the Army began their Intrenchments, the Townſwomen and Maids wrought all that Afternoon in the Little Mead, fetching in Turf for repairing the Works in Sight of the King's Horſe. The Beſieg'd, for Want of Men, but 1400 in all to guard the City it ſelf, were forc'd to quit their Out-Works, at the Wine Yard and Two Sconces in the Iſle of Alney. The Royaliſts cut off the Pipes that convey'd the Water from Robin Hood's Hill to the City Conduits, and diverted the Water which drove the Corn-Mill. The Citizens contented themſelves with Pump and Severn Water, and us'd Horſe-Mills for their Corn. Sir William Vavaſor, a bigotted Papiſt, lay with his Welch Forces on the Weſt Side, and intending to join with others coming from Worceſter, he drew to the North Side. On the South lay Ruthen Earl of Brentford, the King's General, ſhelter'd from the Shot of the Town by a Riſing Ground. On the Eaſt Side Sir Jacob Aſhley was quarter'd with a ſtrong Brigade, and was ſhot in the Arm in one of the firſt Skirmiſhes. Many of the King's Commanders were Officers of the greateſt Skill and Experience, and his Army was encreas'd by the Arrival of two Regiments out of Ireland, commanded by Col. Myn and Sir William St. Leger. Theſe Regiments had been rais'd by the Parliament for the War againſt the bloody Iriſh Rebels; but now his Majeſty recall'd the Engliſh Troops in that Service to employ them againſt his Proteſtant Subjects in England. The King's Officers and Engineers made their Approaches and plac'd their Batteries with as much Advantage as was poſſible; nor were the Beſieg'd behind-hand in Courage and Dexterity, as appear'd in their Defences and frequent Sallies, which kept the Cavaliers waking by continual Alarms, and waſted and weary'd them. On the 12th of Auguſt Capt. Harcus ſally'd out thro' a Door made for that Purpoſe in a Brick-Houſe adjoining to the Town-Wall, on the South-Eaſt Part, and making a Bridge of Ladders over the Mote, fell ſuddenly into the Beſiegers Trenches in Gawdy Green, beat them out, took ſome Priſoners and Arms, with ſeveral of their Tools, and retreated without Loſs. The ſame Day Capt. Gray with 150 Musketeers ſally'd over the Works upon the Worceſter Forces at Kingſholm, march'd up to their Main Guard and burnt it, kill'd Capt. Rumney and nine Soldiers, took five Priſoners and ſome Arms, and retreated without Loſs. The Beſiegers planted two great Culverins of between 15 and 16 Pound Ball at the Eaſt Side, batter'd the Town-Wall, and ſhot ſeveral Shells into the Town without doing any Execution. The Beſieg'd lin'd their Walls from the South-gate to the Eaſt-gate, and the biggeſt Mortar-Piece which the Beſiegers had, ſaid to be the biggeſt in England, broke at the firſt Diſcharge. On Sunday Auguſt the 13th they planted three Pieces of Ordnance on their Battery at Gawdy Green; the Ball 15, 18, and 23 Pounders, from whence they fir'd briskly all that and the next Day; but as faſt as any Breaches were made, they were repair'd with Wool-Sacks and Earth-Baskets. On Tueſday the 15th of Auguſt, upon Intelligence that the Enemy was drawing Ordnance to Kingſholm, the Governor ſent out 150 Musketeers under the Command of Capt. Mallerie, who kill'd ſome Men, took ſome Priſoners, and fir'd the Cavaliers Quarters at the Margrets. The ſame Day Capt. Harcus, a very brave Officer, was ſlain as he was too venturouſly looking to ſee what Execution a Granado had done which he had flung into the Enemy's Trenches. On the 16th of Auguſt Capt. Criſp ſally'd with 150 Musketeers at the New Port, fell on the Royaliſts in their Trenches, kill'd above 100 of them, wounded many, drove them out of their Works, took their Spades, Shovels and Arms, and retreated without Loſs. This Day the King left the Siege and went to Oxford. Ruſhw. The next Day ſeveral Granades were ſhot into the Town, ſome of which fell upon Houſes. One in the open Street near South-gate, but a Woman coming by with a Pail of Water, threw the Water upon it, and ſo extinguiſh'd the Fuſee, that it did not break, but was taken up whole, and weigh'd 60 Pound. Auguſt the 18th the Beſiegers having planted four Pieces of Ordnance againſt the Acungate and Sconces adjoining, a Party of 400 Men, under the Command of Major Pudſey, Capt. Gray, Capt. Falkner, and Capt. Maſſy, ſally'd at the North-gate, having one Weaver, a ſtout Fellow in Capt. Pury junior's Company, for their Guide. Major Pudſey ſent Lieutenant Pincock with about 50 Musketeers over the Works, to give the Enemy a divertive Alarm by advancing up towards the Cannon. In the mean Time the Major got behind their Cannon and Breaſt-works, fell upon their Main Guard, kill'd two Cannoneers, ſeveral Officers and Soldiers, took a Lieutenant Priſoner, nail'd their Cannon, and retreated with the Loſs of two Men. This is the Earl of Clarendon's lean, pale, ugly viſag'd Man, with a ſhril Voice and old-faſhion'd Clothes. Capt. Baſſet took Lieutenant Tipper Priſoner, and this Day his Majeſty return'd from Oxford, where he had been to make up ſome Differences which had happen'd there in his Abſence. Saturday the 19th of Auguſt the Beſiegers, beſides their 3 Pieces of Ordnance at Gawdy Green, having now planted three more on the Eaſt Side of the Fryars Orchard near Rignal Stile, within leſs than Piſtol-ſhot of the Town-Wall, and two more on another Battery near the Euſt-gate, began to batter moſt furiouſly on both Sides of the Corner of the Wall next Rignal Stile, making above 150 Great Shot upon it, and threw ſeveral Shells into the Town, which only kill'd one Man and a Maid. A Shell fell upon Mr. Hartway's Houſe, broke thro' his Chamber over the Kitchen, and a Piece of it fell into the Kitchen Chimney, where three Women were ſitting, but neither of them receiv'd any Hurt. A few Houſes were ſomewhat damag'd by the Granades. On the 20th of Auguſt one Hatton a Cannoneer deſerted the Garriſon, and went off to the Enemy, a thing which did not often happen. Two Sallies were made the ſame Day; one of 200 Men under Capt. Stevenſon and Capt. Moore, in which by Accident 40 Musketeers of the Garriſon fell in with three Times the Number of the King's Forces, ſlew ſeveral of them, took Lieutenant Anderſon and Lieutenant Trapps Priſoners, and drove them back to a ſtrong Body of their Forces, after which they made their Retreat with the Loſs of two or three Men only. The other Party that

D. 1643. that ſally'd was commanded by Capt. Blunt and Capt. White, who paſs'd down Severne by Boat, and then march'd up to the Enemy's Quarters in Severne-ſtreet, beat them out of a Redoubt there, kill'd Major Wells who commanded the Guard, ſome Soldiers, and retreated with Loſs. Other Parties made Sallies the three following Days only to annoy the Enemy, without coming to any Engagement. On Thurſday the 24th of Auguſt, upon a Letter ſent into the Town that Mr. Bell of Sanctburſt and Mr. Hill of Tewksbury, both Lawyers, had ſomething of Importance to communicate, they were admitted within the Drawbridge at North-gate; their Buſineſs was to repreſent to the Town the great Strength that was againſt them, the Impoſſibility of Relief, the Miſeries the Country endur'd by Reaſon of their Obſtinacy, and therefore to perſwade them to yield while good Terms were to be had. The Governor and Magiſtrates ſhew'd they were Men of Temper and Diſcretion, in ſuffering theſe two officious Pettifoggers to harangue them thus, and not throwing them over the Walls to thoſe that ſent them. They gave them a ſhort Anſwer in the Negative, and they return'd like Fools as they came. The ſame Day the Beſiegers made ſeveral Shot with two Pieces of Ordnance newly planted at Lanthony. One Bullet, a 20 Pounder, came thro' a Chamber of the Crown Inn, carry'd away a Bolſter before it into a Window, and there ſlept in it. The Cavaliers alſo ſhot red hot Ball into the Town, but did little Damage. It rain'd this Day into their Trenches, which much annoy'd them. At Night the Beſieg'd diſcover'd a Fire upon Wainload's Hill, which gave them Encouragement, they having appointed a Perſon whom they had ſent out in Time for that Purpoſe, to ſignify to them by making a Fire there, if he heard of any Relief coming. The Royaliſts obſerv'd it, and left the Country ſhould do ſo too, and their Soldiers be diſcourag'd, they gave out it was a Stratagem of their own to tempt the Beſieg'd into ſome Ambuſcades. On the 25th of Auguſt the Beſiegers, beſides many Granades and great Stones from their Mortar-Pieces, ſhot above 20 fiery red hot Iron Bullets from 18 to 22 Pound Weight, which in the Night appear'd in the Air like what we call Shooting Stars. The Beſieg'd put out Lights on the College Tower to give Notice abroad of their holding out, which extremely vext the Enemy, and they levell'd their Shot at the Tower to deſtroy them. Capt. Pury, who had the Care of ſetting up thoſe Lights, looking towards Lanthony, from whence the fiery Balls came, was in great Danger from their Shot, but he continu'd with his burning Links, and receiv'd no Hurt. On the 26th and 27th of Auguſt the Beſiegers wrought hard in filling up the City Moat with Faggots, making a Gallery over the Head of their Trench to ſave themſelves from the Fire of the Town. They ſhot at the Beſieg'd from this Work, but did them little or no Harm, The Beſiegers on the 28th of Auguſt ſunk a Mine under Eaſt-gate, and the Beſieg'd countermin'd till they came to Springs, when they left off, ſuppoſing the Enemy would be forc'd to do the like. The next Day they undermin'd at the Eaſt Side of Fryars Orchard, to plant a Piece of Ordnance at the Bottom of the City Wall, and batter the Flank of the Enemy's Gallery, which they did with good Effect. They had Intelligence that Night from Warwick that the Earl of Eſſex and Sir William Waller were advancing to relieve them. On the two laſt Days the Beſieg'd turn'd out their Cattle to graze in the Little Mead, guarded by ſome Musketeers, and took them in at Night. The Beſiegers attempted to take them away, but were repuls'd. While the intrepid Maſſey, Governor of Glouceſter, the valiant Mayor, Major Ferrer, the Magiſtrates, Officers, Soldiers and Townſmen, were thus reſolutely defending the City, againſt the fierce and fiery Aſſaults of the Cavaliers, the Mace-Bearer and other fit Inſtruments for ſuch a villainous Buſineſs conſpir'd to kill the Governor, the Mayor, Chief Officers and Magiſtrates, and betray the Town to the King, but the Conſpiracy was diſcover'd, and the Conſpirators hang'd. The very learned and worthy Mr. Chillingworth was prevail'd upon to aſſiſt at this Siege, for which he invented certain Engines after the manner of the Roman Teſtudines cum Pluteis, with which the Beſiegers intended to aſſault the City between the South and Weſt Gate: They ran upon Cart Wheels with a Blind of Planks Musket Proof, and Holes for four Musketeers to fire out at, plac'd upon the Axle Tree to defend the Musketeers, and thoſe who thruſt the Engine forwards, with a Bridge before it. The Wheels were to fall into the Ditch, and the End of the Bridge to reſt upon the Town's Breaſt Works. Thus were ſeveral compleat Bridges got ready to enter the City; but the Beſieg'd, to prevent it, intended to have made another Ditch out of their Works, ſo that the Wheels falling thereon, the Bridge would have fallen ſhort off the Breaſt Work into the Weſt Moat, whereby Mr. Chillingworth's learned Deſign would have been entirely fruſtrated. It is great Pity to find the Name of ſo excellent a Perſon as Mr. Chillingworth among the Beſiegers of Glouceſter, not only on Account of his Vocation, which was to preach Piety, Purity and Peace, but on the Score of his Merit, his vaſt Learning and good Senſe, which were ſtrangely corrupted with falſe Notions of unlimited Obedience to unlimited Power. Davenant the Poet was alſo at this Siege, and receiv'd here the Honour of Knighthood, which if he deſerv'd no more for his Chivalry than he did for his Poetry, was a Dubbing thrown away. Auguſt the 30th the Garriſon kept a Faſt, and had two Sermons without any Diſturbance, only a Musket-Ball enter'd the Church, but did no Hurt. The next Day three Soldiers of Major Ferrer's Company crept along the Severn Bank, gave the Enemy an Alarm, and held them in Play almoſt an Hour. The Truth is, never were there more inſolent Fellows than the Beſieged in Glouceſter. They ſeem'd to War in Sport, and to treat the Beſiegers with the utmoſt Contempt, tho' a Royal Army, commanded by the King in Perſon, ſurrounded them. On the 1ſt of September ſome of the Beſieg'd crept out at a Hole made in the Dungeon at the Eaſt-gate, and came ſoftly to the Mouth of the Enemy's Mine, where one John Burnwood took a Board aſide which cover'd it, and fir'd, and flung a Shell into the Mine among the Cavaliers, who run out of it, crying, Arms, Arms. Burnwood and his Companions ſhooting at them as they were running, four of them were kill'd, and the Men of Glouceſter return'd the ſame Way they came. The next Day, September 2, both Sides were very active, the Beſiegers playing hard upon the Wall and the South Gate, and the Beſieg'd firing as briskly into their Trenches. A Party of Welch Men came up as far as the Town Ham, where they plac'd themſelves in a Ditch, and very valiantly fir'd upon ſome Maids and Workmen, who were fetching Turf out of the Little Mead, but the Gun at the Pen ſoon frighted them away, though it muſt be ſaid for them, that no other Cavalier Soldiers came nearer the Town than thoſe Welch Men. The Springs not hindering the Mine at the Eaſt Gate, the Beſieg'd

A. D. 1643. renew'd their Countermine, and as they were at Church, Sunday, Sept. 3d, they were inform'd the Beſiegers had planted ſtore of Cannon Baſkets at the Eaſt Gate, within leſs than half Musket Shot, and 'twas believ'd intended a Battery there upon the Springing of their Mine. The Miniſter diſmiſt the Congregation without a Sermon. They all fell to Work, Lining the Houſes over the Eaſt Gate, and making a ſtrong Breaſt-work croſs Eaſt Gate Street, but it was only a Cavalier Flouriſh. A Party of Horſe came almoſt within Musket Shot, but would not venture nearer. A Gun was fir'd among them from Captain Pury the Elder's Sconce, and a white Horſe was ſeen to drop, the reſt fled. This Afternoon a Paper was ſhot upon an Arrow into the City, on which was theſe Words written, You are to underſtand that your God Waller hath forſaken you, and hath retired himſelf to the Tower of London. Eſſex is beaten like a Dog. Yield to the King's Mercy in Time, otherwiſe, if we enter per Force, no Quarter for ſuch obſtinate Traytors and Rogues. This hiſtorical Billet has the ſame Spirit of Truth and Charity as their other Hiſtories have. One of the Townſmen return'd an Anſwer in honeſt, though bald Rhime.

Waller's no God of ours, baſe Rogues, ye Lie,
Our God ſurvives from all Eternity.

The Siege of Glouceſter rais'd. On Monday, Sept. 4th, the Beſieged obſerved two Fires on Wainload Hill, which they anſwer'd with Lights from the College Tower, blazing like ſo many Comets over the Royal Army, who began to diſcover their Intentions of raiſing the Siege. September the 5th was appointed for a publick Faſt in the Town, to be kept by ſuch as might be ſpar'd from Labour, and the Townſmen could now perceive the Beſiegers were marching off as faſt as they could. Their Carriages from Lanthony being drawn up Tredworth Field, and their Horſe and Foot marching after, their Rear Guard fir'd their Huts, and their Trenches were abandon'd. The Townſmen and Soldiers venturing out, burnt their Gallery and Cannon Baskets, and brought in Mr. Chillingſworth's Roman Engines. Thus, after the King had lain 26 Days before the City of Glouceſter he drew off, and made Room for the Earl of Eſſex to enter, which he did the 8th of September with a ſtrong Body of the Parliament's Army, and was receiv'd with as much Joy as one can imagine fill'd the Minds of People deliver'd from a revengeful and cruel Enemy. I have been more particular in this Siege than I ſhall be in any other, for that it was carry'd on by his Majeſty in Perſon, and gave a Turn to his Affairs, which was not ſo ſoon expected by the Parliament, then in their loweſt Condition during the whole War. It is ſaid the Queen hurry'd him on to this Expedition, which had the Succeſs of her other Counſels. He loſt 1000 Men before this City. The Loſs on the Parliament's Side was inconſiderable, not above 50 kill'd and taken. The Lord General Eſſex began his March the 25th of Auguſt from Colnbroke, to relieve Glouceſter. Prince Rupert, with the greateſt Part of the King's Horſe drew off to oppoſe him. About Biceſter 400 of his Men fac'd a Part of the Parliament's Army and skirmiſh'd, but were ſoon driven away. Scarce a Day paſt but there were ſome ſuch Skirmiſhes, Prince Rupert very narrowly watching the Earl of Eſſex's Motions to take Advantage of them. On the 4th of September a very ſmart Encounter happen'd near Stow in the Wold, where Prince Rupert attack'd him with 4000 Horſe, but could make nothing of it, and the News of his being repuls'd reach'd Glouceſter. On the 5th Eſſex advanc'd to Presbury Hill, where the Royal Army could ſee him, and they immediately began to make Way for him. He lay two Nights only in Glouceſter, and having furniſh'd it with all Neceſſaries he march'd to Tewksbury, near which he made a Bridge over the Severne, as if he deſign'd for Worceſter, and on a ſudden turn'd back upon Cirenceſter, where the Enemy had left two Regiments with moſt of their Stores, Ammunition and Proviſions, which were intended for an Army to be rais'd in Kent by Sir Nicholas Criſp, for which the Parſon of Ightam was preparing the Way by the Rebellion he began there, as is before mention'd. The Lord General enter'd Cirenceſter about one a Clock in the Morning, ſurpriz'd the two Regiments that were poſted there, drove Sir Nicholas Criſp and Colonel Spencer out of the Town, took 40 Loads of Proviſion, 6 Standards, 300 Soldiers, and 400 Horſes, but did not leave behind him thoſe Marks of Blood, Rapine and Deſtruction, which Prince Rupert left after he had taken the Place from the Parliament.

A. D. 1643. Earl of Eſſex relieves Glouceſter. Takes Cirenceſter.

There are abundance of fine Schemes in the Hiſtory of the Rebellion, to ſcatter all the Parliament's Armies, break up the Parliament, and ſhut the Doors of the two Houſes. Mr. Echard repeats them very gravely, as if there really had been ſomething in them. Thus the Earl of Newcaſtle is to enter Whitechapel, while the King enters Piccadilly, and being join'd at the Royal Exchange to do what they would with the City of London, and IF this had been done the King would not have met with that Diſgrace before Glouceſter. Of ſuch Matter are their excellent Hiſtories made up. From Cirenceſter the Earl of Eſſex march'd to Cricklade and Swinden, and the Van of his Army being almoſt over Awburn Chace, between Marlborough and Hungerford, a ſtrong Body of the King's Horſe fell upon their Rear Guard and routed them, forcing them to retire in Diſorder to the main Body, where they were again drawn up in Order, but the King's Horſe once more advancing, put their Enemies again into Confuſion, till Sir Philip Stapleton came in with freſh Forces and ſtopt them in their Career. Both Sides behav'd in this Engagement with true Engliſh Valour, which could not have been worſe employed than in the Slaughter of Engliſh Men. On the King's Side was kill'd the Marquis de Vieuville, who contrary to the Law of Nations, drew his Sword againſt the Parliament, to whom he came in an Embaſſy with the Prince of Harcourt, Ambaſſador of France, to mediate a Peace between the King and the two Houſes. This Breach of the Law of Nations is highly commended by Mr. Archdeacon, at the Expence of two or three Falſities, for he did not attend the Queen out of Holland, he was not taken Priſoner, he was not kill'd in cold Blood. All which that Reverend Hiſtorian plainly aſſerts. Quite contrary to which, he came over with the Ambaſſador of France, he wounded Colonel Kilſon in the Fight, and purſuing him with too much Obſtinacy was himſelf kill'd by him. The Lord Clarendon does not ſay he was kill'd in cold Blood. And Echard takes it from Salmonet a French Papiſt, and Orleans a French Jeſuit. My Author is a French Man too, but the Archdeacon may object againſt his Authority becauſe he was a Proteſtant. I have met with another Account of the Death of Vieuville, differing a little from Larrey. Here the Marquis of Vieuville was taken Priſoner, and had Quarter given him, but as he was marching away with the Officer that took him he ſuddenly drew out

There were Three other French Men, all of the Ambaſſador's Train, in this Engagement, Chartre, Perſan and Beaveais, and their Treachery was the Occaſion of the Ambaſſador's Negotiation proving Abortive, for the Parliament reſenting this Partiality would not hearken to his Propoſals, which was ſignify'd to him by the Earls of Stamford and Salisbury. He excus'd it as an imprudent Action, which could not be imputed to him, and for which the three Gentlemen living had been ſufficiently puniſh'd by the Death of one of their Companions. This gave no Satisfaction to the Parliament, and he was told in plain Terms, that they look'd upon him as no better than a Spy, and as one who deſign'd rather to foment the Troubles than appeaſe them.

Larrey. Hartcourt the French Envoy.

The Earl of Eſſex proceeding to Hungerford, carry'd with him the Corpſe of the Marquis de Vieuville, but order'd it to be deliver'd to thoſe the King ſent for it, paying 500 Pounds to his Soldiers. He there ſurpriz'd a Troop of the King's Horſe, and took up his Quarters in great Want of Proviſions. His Carriages not being come up, and the Country about him ſo ill affected, occaſion'd by the Neighbourhood to Oxford, that he could get nothing but by Compulſion. The whole Body of the King's Army had poſted themſelves off Newbury. On their right Hand they had the Advantage of the River Kennet, and on their left a Hill half a Mile from the Town, where they had planted their Ordnance, ſo that the Parliament's Forces had no Paſſage to them but what was expos'd to the Fire of their Cannon; however, the Earl of Eſſex finding his Soldiers were full of Mettle, and reſolv'd to force their Way, would not balk them, but led them on in Perſon, and firſt charg'd the Enemy with his own Regiment, as we are inform'd by Whitlocke, but the Reverend Hiſtorian directly contrary to this aſſures us, The precipitate Courage of the King's young Officers compell'd him to fight. The Earl of Eſſex's Regiment, and the Lord Roberts's Brigade of Horſe began the Battle about ſix a Clock in the Morning, Sept. 20th. It laſted with very hot Service till ten a Clock at Night. The Parliament's Forces beat the Enemy from all their Advantages, got the Hill from them, purſu'd them to Newbury, and out of the Town again, and though the King's Forces, eſpecially the Horſe, conſiſting moſtly of Gentlemen, made a gallant Reſiſtance, yet this Place being not proper for their Fight, they could not ſupport their Foot, who were every where beaten, and in the Night the King drew off his Ordnance and march'd away, leaving the Earl of Eſſex entirely Maſter of the Field of Battle, which he kept that Night and part of the next Day. When Night drew on the Enemy both Horſe and Foot ſtood in good Order on the farther Side of the Green where they fought, and the Earl of Eſſex expected another Engagement the next Day, but the King's Forces retreated by Night. The Parliament's had the Pillage of the Field. Both Parties perform'd with great Manhood and Animoſity, particularly the King's Horſe, who were however worſted. The Earls of Carnarvon and Sunderland, Colonel Morgan a Papiſt, who had rais'd a Regiment of Horſe, Lieutenant Colonel Houghton, Major Ewre, Major Leak, Captain Conſtable, Captain Wolſole, Captain Clifton, Captain Singleton, Captain Whittingham, Captain Symcots, Captain Molineux, the laſt Nine all Papiſts, were ſlain in the Fight. The Lord Viſcount Falkland, Secretary of State, in the Morning of the Day of Battle call'd for a clean Shirt, and daily ſhifting not being then the Mode, he was ask'd the Reaſon of it. He reply'd, If I am kill'd in the Fight they ſhall not find my Body in foul Linnen. Being diſſwaded by his Friends not to go to the Battle, as having no Call to it, his Office a Civil and not Military one, he ſaid to them, I am weary of the Times, and believe I ſhall be out of it before Night. As indeed he was, being ſlain in the Fight. Whitlocke cloſes this Story with a juſt and modeſt Character of this noble Lord, His Death was much lamented by all that knew him or heard of him, being a Gentleman of great Parts, Ingenuity and Honour, Courteous and Juſt to All, and a paſſionate Promoter of all Endeavours of Peace between the King and Parliament. Echard would have us take his Word for it, that the Earl of Clarendon's Character of this Great and Good Man is written with the Majeſty of an Hiſtorian. You will ſee how both the Earl and he underſtood the Majeſty of Hiſtory, by theſe few Words of this very Character concerning the Lord Falkland's Death; Had there been no other Brand upon this odious and accurſed Civil War than that ſingle Loſs, it muſt be moſt Infamous and Execrable. Can any Thing be more Majeſtick, Odious, Accurſed, Infamous and Execrable, in a Breath. It is moſt certain they neither of them knew better. Sometime before this Battle the King and Court being at Oxford, his Majeſty and his Attendants drew the Sortes Virgilianas. It was then a Cuſtom among the Learned, as it was among the Godly to dip for Texts of Scripture to be adapted to certain Purpoſes. The King's Sors Virgiliana was theſe Verſes of the IVth Book of Virgil's Æneis.

A. D. 1643.

Newbury Fight.

At Bello audacis populi vexatus & Armis,
Finibus extorris, complexu avulſus Juli,
Auxilium imploret, videatq; indigna ſuorum
Funera: Nec, cùm ſe ſub leges pacis iniqua
Tradiderit, regno, aut optatâ luce fruatur:
Sed cadit ante diem, mediaque inhumatus arena.

The King commanded Mr. Cowley to tranſlate them, but did not let him know the Reaſon of it, and he did it thus:

By a bold People's ſtubborn Arms oppreſt,
Forc'd to forſake the Land which he poſſeſt,
Torn from his deareſt Son, let him in vain
Beg Help, and ſee his Friends unjuſtly ſlain.
Let him to bold, unequal Terms ſubmit,
In hopes to ſave his Crown, and loſe both it
And Life at once. Untimely let him die,
And on an open Stage unbury'd lie.

MS. ante Warwick.

By Dryden more paraphraſtically, and more elegantly.

Yet let a Race untam'd, and haughty Foes,
His peaceful Entrance with dire Arms oppoſe,
Oppreſs'd with Numbers in th'unequal Field,
His Men diſcourag'd, and himſelf expell'd,
Let him for Succour ſue from Place to Place,
Torn from his Subjects and his Son's Embrace,
Firſt let him ſee his Friends in Battle ſlain,
And their untimely Fate lament in vain;
And when at length the cruel War ſhall ceaſe,
On hard Conditions may he buy his Peace.
Nor let him then enjoy ſupream Command,
But fall untimely by ſome hoſtile Hand,
And lie unbury'd on the barren Sand.

A. D. 1643.

It is ſaid King Charles ſeem'd concern'd at this Accident, and that the Lord Falkland obſerving it would likewiſe try his own Fortune in the ſame Manner, hoping he might fall upon ſome Paſſage that could have no Relation to his Caſe, and thereby divert the King's Thoughts from any Impreſſion the other might have made upon him. But the Place Lord Falkland ſtumbled upon, was yet more ſuited to his Deſtiny than the other had been to the King's, being the following Expreſſions of Evander upon the untimely Death of his Son Pallas, as Dryden tranſlates them:

O Pallas! Thou haſt fail'd thy plighted Word,
To fight with Caution, and not tempt the Sword.
I warn'd thee, but in vain; for well I knew
What Perils youthful Ardour would purſue.
That boiling Blood would carry thee too far,
Young as thou wert to Dangers, raw to War.
O curſt Eſſay of Arms! diſaſtrous Doom!
Prelude of bloody Field, and Fights to come.
Æneis XI.

The Loſs of Men was much greater on the King's ſide than on the Parliament's: 2000 Royaliſt were ſlain from the Time of Eſſex's Removal from Hungerford to the End of Newberry Fight. The Earl of Sunderland was not far from the King's Perſon when he was kill'd; as was alſo Col. Conſtable, and a great Number of Officers. On the Parliament's ſide were ſlain 500. Col. Tucker, Lieutenant Colonel White of Eſſex's Regiment, and a Captain of Horſe were the Chief. The City Auxiliaries were the hardeſt put to it, and diſtinguiſhed themſelves in this Battle: After which, Eſſex advanced towards Reading to refreſh his Men, and no Enemy appeared till he came to Theale, 4 Miles from the Town, where Col. Harvie, a Scotchman, fell upon his Rear with a Party of the King's Horſe, and a hot Skirmiſh enſued, in which 60 of Harvie's Men were ſlain, about 8 of the Parliament's, and the reſt of that Party retreating, the Parliament Army marched on to Reading, without Interruption. When the Reader has gone through this Hiſtory, will he not be ſurpriz'd to hear Echard tell him the King had conſiderable Marks of Victory; and the Lord Clarendon, to fleer at the Parliament; they made no Scruple to declare it a Victory Sir Philip Warwick, who is by no means ſo florid, but every whit as faithful an Hiſtorian as the Earl of Clarendon, owns the King was worſted; but his owning it does not ſignify much. The Defeat was too ſhameful and viſible to be diſputed. The Lords and Commons ſent a Committee to their General at Reading, to complement him, and congratulate his great Succeſſes. It muſt be own'd, that from his marching to relieve Glouceſter, to his Arrival at Reading, not much above 20 Days, he had done Wonders, conſidering the Difficulties he had ſtruggled with. His Army conſiſted chiefly of Militia, and beſides was not ſo numerous as the King's, who were ſpirited with ſeveral late Succeſſes. However he had obliged the King to raiſe the Siege of Glouceſter. He had ſurpriz'd two Regiments, and a great Magazine at Cirenceſter. He had engaged the Royaliſts in ſeveral Actions, and in the laſt obtained a Victory over them: All which gave new Heart to the Parliament and their Well Wiſhers; and the Condition of their Affairs grew daily better. The Lord General, with the Lord Gray, Sir Philip Stapleton and other principal Officers coming to London, were received with great Marks of Honour and Eſteem. The Houſe of Commons, with their Speaker, went to Eſſex Houſe to complement the General on his happy Succeſs and ſafe Return, and cauſed their Acknowledgment of it to be enter'd into their Journal. The Lord Mayor and Aldermen waited upon him in their Scarlet Gowns, and paid their Complements to him as the Protector and Defender of their Lives and Fortunes, their Wives and Children. Before this Iſſue of the Campaign, People were much terrify'd at the News of the Cavaliers frequent Succeſſes, in the Weſt eſpecially, which the Royaliſts magnify'd beyond all Bounds of Modeſty and Truth. Some great Perſons were ſo weak as to deſert the Parliament, when their Preſence and Aſſiſtance were moſt wanted. The Earl of Portland, the Lord Lovelace, the Lord Conway were never much depended upon, and their Abſence was not much lamented; but the Earls of Bedford, Clare and Holland had expreſt great Zeal and Alacrity in the Cauſe which the two Houſes were engaged in; and when it was known that they were in Oxford, it ſtruck a Damp on the Minds of many good Engliſhmen, which however did not laſt long; for thoſe three Lords had then an Opportunity to ſee ſo much of the Conduct of the Court, that they were ſatisfy'd it was not mended by reſiding at Oxford, ſo they left the King's Party again and returned to the Parliament. It is pretended that the cold Reception they met with there was the Reaſon of their Return: But the Earl of Holland ſaid, That after he heard of the Ceſſation with the bloody Iriſh Rebels, his Conſcience would not give him Leave to ſtay any longer with them at Oxford.

As the King apply'd himſelf to the Papiſts in Ireland, ſo did the Parliament to the Presbyterians in Scotland, who being our Brethren as Proteſtants, were very fit to be enter'd into Friendſhip with. The two Houſes had ſent the Earl of Rutland, Sir Henry Vane, junior, Sir William Armine, Mr. Darley and Mr. Hatcher, with two Miniſters, Mr. Marſhal and Mr. Nye, to Edinburgh, to treat with the Scots for Aſſiſtance. That Nation were themſelves alarm'd at the Strength of the Earl of Newcaſtle's malignant Army in the North, and wanted only the Forms to enter England with a ſtronger Army, and aſſiſt the Lord Fairfax. The Scots inſiſted upon aboliſhing of Epiſcopacy in this Kingdom, and that the Solemn League and Covenant ſhould be taken here: To which both Houſes agreed, and to advance 100,000 l. Sterling, for raiſing and maintaining 20,000 Scots, Horſe and Foot, to carry on the War, to ſecure the Religion, Laws, Rights and Liberties of both Nations, and bring Delinquents to Juſtice. The Scots were to have a Committee at Weſtminſter to act with a Committee of both Houſes with equal Authority as to the Management of the War. Echard is poſitive that they did not believe the Parliament would have ſwallowed the Covenant, be- Covenant.
cauſe they knew that moſt of the Lords were againſt the Presbyterian Government; whereas in Truth they did not, and could not know any ſuch Thing, for the Propoſal of taking it was no ſooner made to both Houſes than they both fell in with it more readily than with any other Ordinance which had yet paſt: And accordingly the Lords and Commons, and the Aſſembly of Divines took it with great Solemnity in St. Margaret's Church Weſtminſter, on the 25th of September, a double Holy-day; by the Earl of Eſſex's Return to London, and this religious Exerciſe, ſays Mr. Archdeacon with a Fleer, as he treats moſt Things that are really religious, and have not their very Eſſence in Form and Ceremony.
